The Goſpel according to St. JOHN.

CHAP. IX.

Ver. 1. AND as Jeſus paſſed by, &c.] The word Jeſus is not in the Greek text, but is rightly ſupplied by us, as it is in the Vulgate Latin, and as the word Chriſt is in the Perſic verſion; for of his paſſing from the temple, and by the multitude that were there, and on his way to the place he deſigned to make to, is this ſaid, as appears from the cloſe of the preceding chapter; though ſome think this is to be underſtood of his paſſing by at another time and place, ſince the preceding fact of the woman's being taken in adultery, and the diſcourſe of our Lord with the Jews, were quickly after the feaſt of tabernacles; whereas the following ones, both in this, and the next chapter, ſeem to be at the feaſt of dedication, ch. x. 22. which was ſome months after: but it may be, that the parable of the ſheep, tho' it runs in connexion with what is ſaid in this chapter, might be delivered then; or what follows, ch. x. 22. might be ſaid at the feaſt of dedication, when the parable, and what is related here, might be delivered before, ſeeing there is ſo very ſtrict a connexion between this, and the preceding chapter; and the Ethiopic verſion is very expreſs, rendering it, and departing from thence; that is, from the temple, at that time when the Jews took up ſtones to ſtone him: he ſaw a man which was blind from his birth; which man was an emblem of God's elect in a ſtate of nature, who being conceived in ſin, are tranſgreſſors from the womb, and ſo are alienated from the life of God thro' their ignorance and blindneſs: they are blind as to any true and ſpiritual knowledge of God in Chriſt; as to any true ſight of ſin, or ſenſe of their own eſtate and condition; and with reſpect to Chriſt, and the way of peace, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by him; and as to the Spirit, and the operations of his grace, and with regard to the ſcriptures, and the doctrines of the Goſpel: and as Chriſt ſaw this man firſt, and not the man him, for he was blind, ſo Chriſt firſt looks upon his choſen ones with an eye of love and mercy, as he paſſes by them, and both enlightens and quickens them, Ezek. xvi. 6, 8. He ſaw Matthew the publican firſt, as he paſſed along, and called him from the receipt of cuſtom to be a follower of him, Matt. ix. 10.

Ver. 2. And his diſciples aſked him, &c.] It may be that ſome of the twelve Apoſtles, or others of his diſciples, might put the following queſtion to him on ſight of this blind man, who by ſome means or another they knew was born blind: ſaying, maſter, who did ſin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind? the firſt of theſe queſtions, whether the man himſelf had ſinned before he was born, which might be the occaſion of his blindneſs, proceeds not upon the doctrine of original ſin, tho' the Jews then believed that; ſee the note on Rom. v. 12. ſince that was common to all men, and therefore could not admit of ſuch a queſtion; but either upon the notion of tranſmigration of ſouls into other bodies; and ſo the diſciples might aſk whether this man had ſinned in a pre-exiſtent ſtate when in another body, which was the reaſon of this blindneſs, or of his being put into a blind body. This notion Joſephus ſays [a] was embraced by the Phariſees; though, according to him, it ſeems, that they only underſtood it of the ſouls of good men; and if ſo, this could lay no foundation for ſuch a queſtion, unleſs theſe diſciples had given into the Pythagorean notion of a tranſmigration of all ſouls, which was to be known by defects, as blindneſs, &c. [b] or elſe this queſtion proceeded upon a principle received by the Jews, that an infant might do that which was faulty and criminal, and actually ſin in the womb; of which Dr. Lightfoot has given inſtances: the ſecond queſtion proceeds upon the methods which ſometimes God has taken with men, by viſiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the children; or, as the above learned writer obſerves, upon a notion the Jews had, that a child might ſuffer for what the mother did whilſt it was in the womb; or on another, which prevailed among them, that there ſhould be neither merit or demerit in the days of the Meſſiah; that is, that neither the good deeds, nor bad deeds of their parents, ſhould be imputed to their children, neither the one to their advantage, nor the other to their diſadvantage: and therefore ſince he the Meſſiah was come, they aſk, how this blindneſs ſhould come to paſs? what ſhould be the reaſon of it?

Ver. 3. Jeſus anſwered, neither hath this man ſinned, nor his parents, &c.] Not but that both were guilty of original ſin, and had committed actual tranſgreſſions; but Chriſt's anſwer is to be conſidered agreeable to the deſign of the queſtion; and the ſenſe is, that it was not any ſin that either of them had committed, whilſt he was in the womb, or previous to his birth, that was the cauſe of this blindneſs; otherwiſe, all ſuch irregularities and afflictions ariſe from ſin, and the fall of man, as does that ſpiritual blindneſs with which all mankind are attended: but that the works of God ſhould be manifeſt in him; that is, that Chriſt might have an opportunity of working a miracle in the cure of him, whereby it might appear that he is truly and properly God, the Son of God, and the Meſſiah; and ſo ſpiritual blindneſs, which has followed the fall of man, takes place in the elect of God in common with others, that the power of divine grace might be diſplayed in bringing them out of darkneſs into marvellous light.

Ver. 4. I muſt work the works of him that ſent me, &c.] This ſhows, that the works of God, that were to be manifeſt, were to be done by Chriſt: many were the works which the Father gave him to do, and which he undertook to perform; and therefore there was a neceſſity of doing them, as principally the work of redemption, by fulfilling the law, and ſatisfying juſtice: and beſides this, there were the preaching of the Goſpel, and doing of miracles, and among theſe was this of giving ſight to the blind, ſee Iſ. xxxv. 5. both in a natural and ſpiritual ſenſe: and with a view to this he ſpeaks of the works he muſt do, while it is day; while the day of life laſts, for in the grave there is no work nor device: the night cometh when no man can work; meaning the night of death, and of the grave, and ſuggeſting his own death hereby, that he had but a little time to be in this world, and therefore would make the beſt uſe of it, to do the will and work of his father that ſent him; and which ſhould be a pattern to us. This life is but ſhort, it is but as the length of a day; a great deal of buſineſs is to be done; and death is haſtening on, which will put a period to all working.

Ver. 5. As long as I am in the world, &c.] Which had been now two or three and thirty years; but was not to be much longer. I am the light of the world; ſee the note on ch. viii. 12. Tho' doubtleſs he ſaid this with ſome view to the cure he was about to perform, it being agreeable to his character and work, while he was in the world.

Ver. 6. And when he had thus ſpoken, &c.] In anſwer to the diſciples queſtion, and declaring his own work and office in the world, and the neceſſity he was under of performing it: he ſpat on the ground, and made clay of the ſpittle; the Miſnic doctors ſpeak [c] of, טיט נרוק, clay that is ſpitted, or ſpittle clay, which their commentators ſay [d] was a weak, thin clay, like ſpittle or water; but this here was properly ſpittle-clay, or clay made of ſpittle, for want of water; or it may be rather, through choice Chriſt ſpat upon the duſt of the earth, and worked it together into a conſiſtence, like clay: and he anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay; however, ſpittle, eſpecially faſting ſpittle, might be thought proper in ſome diſorder of the eyes, to be uſed, as it was by the Jews; ſee the note on ver. 16. yet clay was a moſt unlikely means of reſtoring ſight to a man that was born blind, which might be thought rather a means of making a man blind that could ſee. This may be an emblem of the word of God, the eye-ſalve of the Goſpel; which is a very unlikely means in the opinion of a natural man, who counts it fooliſhneſs, of enlightening and ſaving ſinners; and yet by this fooliſhneſs of preaching God does ſave thoſe that believe.

Ver. 7. And ſaid unto him, go waſh in the pool of Siloam, &c.] A fountain of this name is called Siloah, Iſ. viii. 6. and according to the Jewiſh writers, ſometimes Gihon [e]; and this they ſay [f] was without Jeruſalem, tho' near unto it: hither the Jews went at the feaſt of tabernacles [g], and drew water with great rejoicing, and brought it, and poured it on the altar; the waters thereof alſo the prieſts drank for digeſtion, when they had eat too much fleſh [h]; and this was likewiſe made uſe of to waſh in, in caſe of uncleanneſs. It is ſaid [i] of Benaiah, one of David's worthies, that "one day he "ſet his foot upon a dead toad, and he went down "to Siloah, and broke the pieces of hail, (or ice "congealed together) and dipped himſelf." This fountain was to the ſouth-weſt of Jeruſalem; and was, as Joſephus ſays, ſweet and large [k]; and from it were two water-courſes, upper and lower, 2 Chron. xxxii. 30. which ran into two pools; the one was called the pool of Siloam, which may be the ſame that Joſephus [l] calls the pool of Solomon, and is here meant, and which was ſituated on the ſouth of the wall of Sion, towards the eaſt; and the other was called the pool of Shelah, and which, in Neh. iii. 15. is called in our tranſlation, and in ſome others, the pool of Siloah. Now both the fountain, and the pool, were without the city; and yet we read of a Siloah in the midſt of the city [m]. This blind man was ſent, not to waſh himſelf all over, but only his face or eyes; and ſo the Arabic and Perſic verſions read, waſh thy face, the clay from it: this may be emblematical of the grace of the Spirit, ſometimes ſignified by water and waſhing, which accompanying the word, makes it effectual to the ſalvation of ſouls: which is by interpretation ſent.

This interpretation of the word Siloam does not determine which of the pools is meant, the upper or lower, Siloah or Shelah, ſince they both come from the word שלח, which ſignifies to ſend; but by the flexion of the word, the upper pool Siloah ſeems plainly intended, which was not ſo forenamed, as Nonnus ſuggeſts, from the ſending this man thither, but rather from the ſending forth its waters, which flowed ſoftly and gently for the ſupply of the city of Jeruſalem. Some think Chriſt gave this interpretation of it with a view to himſelf, as the ſent of God, the true Meſſiah; but the words ſeem not to be the words of Chriſt, but of the Evangeliſt, who interprets this word; wherefore they are left out in the Syriac and Perſic verſions, where ſuch an interpretation was needleſs. He went his way therefore and waſhed, and came ſeeing: he did as he was commanded; he was obedient to the directions and orders of Chriſt, tho' they ſeemed ſo unlikely to anſwer the end; and yet that was brought about thro' the divine power of Chriſt, which appeared the more in making uſe of ſuch unlikely means.

Ver. 8. The neighbours therefore, and they which before had ſeen him, &c.] For it ſeems the blind man was not a ſtranger, one that came out of the country to the city to beg; but a native of Jeruſalem, that had long lived in a certain neighbourhood in it, and was well known to be what he was; that he was blind: the Alexandrian copy, and one of Beza's exemplars, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, that he was a beggar; to which agree the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions: wherefore they ſaid, is not this he that ſat and begged? they particularly remark his begging poſture; he was not laid all along, as the lame man in Acts iii. 2. nor did he go from door to door, as others were uſed to do, but he ſat in ſome certain place, as blind men generally did; ſee Matt. xx. 30.

Ver. 9. Some ſaid this is he, &c.] It is the ſame man that was blind, and begged: others ſaid; in one of Beza's copies it is added no, and ſo read the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions; tho' they owned and ſaid, he is like him. This diſcourſe of the neighbours concerning the blind man reſtored to ſight, reſembles the talk that generally is among relations, acquaintance, and neighbours, when any one belonging to them is called by grace, and converted, ſaying, what is come to ſuch an one? is he mad or melancholy? he is not the man he was; he is ſcarcely the ſame; is it he, or another? what's the matter with him? but he ſaid, I am he; and ſo put an end to the diſpute between them, by his frank acknowledgment, that he was the blind man, and the beggar they before knew as ſuch: ſo perſons enlightened by the Spirit of God, and effectually called by his grace, are very free and ready to acknowledge what they were before converſion, what poor, blind, and miſerable, and contemptible creatures they were: Matthew owns himſelf to have been a publican; and Paul confeſſes he was a blaſphemer, a perſecutor, and an injurious perſon, and the chief of ſinners.

Ver. 10. Therefore ſaid they unto him, &c.] When the caſe was clear, and it was out of queſtion that he was the man: how were thine eyes opened? or made to ſee: they might well aſk this queſtion, ſince ſuch a thing was never known before, that one born blind received his ſight; and as great a miracle it is in grace, and as great a myſtery to a natural man, how one ſhould be born again, or be ſpiritually enlightened.

Ver. 11. He anſwered and ſaid, a man that is called Jeſus, &c.] Whom he had as yet little knowledge of, only by ſome means or another he had learned his name: made clay and anointed mine eyes, &c. ſee the notes on ver. 6, 7.

Ver. 12. Then they ſaid unto him, where is he? &c.] For Chriſt had withdrawn himſelf and was gone; whether on account of the Jews, who he knew would be irritated by this miracle, or whether to avoid all popular applauſe and glory, which he ſought not, is not certain; it may be on both accounts: this queſtion, however, was put, not out of good-will to Chriſt, but that they might apprehend him, and bring him before the Sanhedrim, for doing work on the ſabbath-day; and ſuch enmity there is in carnal men, at the converſion of ſinners, their acquaintance, inſtead of rejoicing at it: he ſaid I know not; for when he returned from the pool, Jeſus was gone: and ſo it ſometimes is, that when Chriſt has wrought a good work of grace upon the heart, he withdraws himſelf for a while, and the converted ſinner knows not where he is.

Ver. 13. They brought to the Phariſees, &c.] That is, to the Sanhedrim, which chiefly conſiſted of Phariſees; and ſo Nonnus calls them the prieſts and chief-prieſts: him that was aforetime blind; to be examined by them. And ſomething like this is the method uſed by carnal relations and friends, who when they have any belonging to them under a work of grace, have them to their learned doctors of a different religion, to talk to them, and diſſuade them from the ways of truth and godlineſs.

Ver. 14. And it was the ſabbath-day when Jeſus made the clay, &c.] Which was reckoned a violation of the ſabbath, ver. 16. and was one reaſon why they had the man to the Phariſees to be examined, and why they were deſirous of knowing where Jeſus was: and opened his eyes; by putting on the clay, and ſending him to waſh in the pool of Siloam: nor did the miracle, nor the good done to the man, excuſe with them, what they thought a breach of the ſabbath.

Ver. 15. Then again the Phariſees aſked him, &c.] Not that they had put any queſtion of this kind to him before; but they alſo, as well as the neighbours, enquired of him, how he had received his ſight; from whom, and by what means: he ſaid unto them, he put clay upon mine eyes, and I waſhed and do ſee. This account agrees with the matter of fact, and with that he gave to his neighbours: he did not vary as to the truth of the relation, but this is ſomewhat more conciſe and ſhort; and it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that the Phariſees had talked much with him before, which made it leſs neceſſary to be more particular; for he makes no mention of the name of Jeſus, nor of his making the clay, and the manner of it, nor of the pool of Siloam, or of his orders to go there and waſh; ſee the notes on ver. 6, 7.

Ver. 16. Wherefore ſaid ſome of the Phariſees, &c.] Or Sanhedrim, for they were not all of one mind, as appears by what follows: this man is not of God; meaning not the blind man, but Jeſus; and their ſenſe is, he is not ſent of God, he does not come from him to do his will and work, nor does he ſeek his glory, nor is he on his ſide, or for his intereſt; becauſe he keepeth not the ſabbath-day: this they concluded from his making clay of ſpittle, and ſpreading it on the blind man's eyes, which was contrary to the traditions of their elders:

one of whoſe rules and canons is [n], that "it is "forbidden to put faſting-ſpittle even on the eye-"lid on a ſabbath-day." An eye-ſalve, or a plaiſter for the eye, if it was put on for pleaſure, was lawful, but not for healing [o]: but if it was put on, on the evening of the ſabbath, it might continue on the ſabbath-day [p]. Others ſaid, how can a man that is a ſinner, or a ſabbath-breaker, do ſuch miracles? as curing a man born blind, the like of which was never heard: thoſe that reaſoned after this manner may be ſuppoſed to be Nicodemus and Joſeph of Arimathea. And there was a diviſion among them; even in the Sanhedrim, they could not agree about the character of the perſon that had done this miracle.

Ver. 17. They ſay unto the blind man again, &c.] After they had diſcourſed among themſelves, and could not agree about the author of the miracle, they turn to him that had been blind, who is called the blind man, becauſe he had been ſo, and aſk him his ſentiments of him: what ſayeſt thou of him, that he hath opened thine eyes? the queſtion ſeems, at firſt ſight, as if it was, whether Jeſus had opened his eyes or no; but by the anſwer it appears, that it required his thoughts of him, who hath opened thine eyes, as the Vulgate Latin and Perſic verſions read; or ſeeing, or becauſe he hath opened thine eyes, as the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions: he ſaid, he is a prophet; the Syriac and Perſic verſions read, I ſay, he is a prophet; or he is certainly a prophet, as the Arabic verſion. The Jews were wont to conclude a man's being a prophet from miracles wrought by him; ſee ch. vi. 14. and vii. 31. tho' it does not appear that he believed him, as yet, to be that prophet, or the Meſſiah, that was to come; ſee ver. 36.

Ver. 18. But the Jews did not believe concerning him, &c.] Not Jeſus, but the blind man; that he had been blind, and received his ſight: they imagined there was a fraud in the caſe, that it was a juggle between Jeſus and this man; that he was a man who had never been blind, but only had given out that he was, and pretended he had now received his ſight from Jeſus, on purpoſe to ſpread his fame, and induce people to believe he was the Meſſiah; and in this imagination they endeavoured to ſtrengthen themſelves and others: until they called the parents of him that had received his ſight; they ſent meſſengers to them, and ſummoned them before them, that they might examine them about this matter, hoping they might get ſomething out of them, which might detect the ſuppoſed fraud, and bring Jeſus under diſgrace.

Ver. 19. And they aſked them, ſaying, is this your ſon, &c.] The firſt queſtion they put was, whether the man that ſtood before them, pointing to him, was their ſon or no; whether they knew him by any marks to be their ſon, and would own him as ſuch: had they anſwered to this in the negative, they would have got an advantage againſt him, and would have convicted him of a lye, ſince he had given out that he was the ſon of ſuch parents; and proving ſuch a lye upon him, would at once have brought the whole affair into ſuſpicion at leaſt: they add, who ye ſay was born blind; this contains a ſecond queſtion, whether, if this was their ſon, he was born blind or no; and if he was not born blind, though he had been blind, it would have greatly leſſened the miracle: and beſides, they would have put other queſtions upon this, whether his blindneſs was real, and by what means it came. Next follows a third queſtion, how then doth he now ſee? By what means has he received his ſight? They might hope, that if he was their ſon, and was really born blind, that he had his ſight ſome other way than by Jeſus; or they might object this to his being born blind, as being a thing impoſſible, or at leaſt not credible that he ſhould ever ſee, was that the caſe.

Ver. 20. His parents anſwered them, and ſaid, &c.] What follows, which contains diſtinct anſwers to the ſeveral queſtions: and to the firſt they reply very freely, and with great confidence, we know that this is our ſon; for tho' his receiving his ſight made a conſiderable alteration in him, yet his features were the ſame; and there might be ſome marks in his body, which they were acquainted with, by which they knew aſſuredly he was their ſon: and if even the neighbours, tho' they diſagreed about him, yet ſome of them knew him to be the ſame perſon that had been blind and begged, then much more his parents; and even thoſe who ſaid it was not he, yet they owned he was like him: and with reſpect to the ſecond queſtion they anſwer, and that he was born blind; this they were ready to atteſt, and did atteſt.

Ver. 21. But by what means he now ſeeth we know not, &c.] As to the third queſtion they could ſay nothing to it, they were not preſent when the cure was wrought, and knew nothing of the matter, but what they had heard from their ſon, or from others, or both: or who hath opened his eyes we know not; they had heard that it was Jeſus, and their ſon had doubtleſs told them it was he; but ſince they could ſay nothing of their own perſonal knowledge, they choſe not to ſay any thing of him: he is of age; at man's eſtate, as with the Jews, one was, who was at the age of thirteen years, if he could produce the ſigns of puberty: and ſuch an one was allowed a witneſs in any caſe, but not under this age; nor if he was arrived to it, if the above ſigns could not be produced [q]. This man very likely was much older, as may be thought from the whole of his conduct, his pertinent anſwers, and juſt reaſoning: wherefore his parents direct the Sanhedrim to him for an anſwer to their third queſtion, aſk him, he ſhall ſpeak for himſelf; or of himſelf, as the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions render it: their ſenſe is, he is capable of giving an account of himſelf in this matter, and he will do it, and let him do it; put the queſtion to him, and a proper anſwer will be returned; and ſo they left the affair to be iſſued in this way.

Ver. 22. Theſe words ſpake his parents, &c.] Theſe were the anſwers they returned to the three queſtions put to them: and the reaſon why they anſwered in the manner they did to the third, was, becauſe they feared the Jews; the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, otherwiſe they were Jews themſelves: for the Jews had agreed already; the Sanhedrim had made a decree, either at this time, upon this account, or ſome time before, that if any man did confeſs that he was Chriſt; that Jeſus of Nazareth was the Meſſiah, he ſhould be put out of the ſynagogue; which was not that ſort of excommunication which they called נדוי, Niddui, a ſeparation from civil ſociety for the ſpace of four cubits, and which held but thirty days, if the perſon repented; if he did not, it was continued to ſixty days; and after that, in caſe of non-repentance, to ninety days; and if no amendment, then they proceeded to another excommunication called חרם, Cherem, or שמתא, Shammatha, whereby ſuch were anathematized, and cut off from the whole body of the Jewiſh church and people, called ſometimes the ſynagogue and congregation of Iſrael [r]; and this ſtruck great terror in the minds of the people; and this was what intimidated the parents of the blind man, being what is intended here. Tho' theſe are ſometimes put one for another, and ſignify the ſame thing; and he that was under the former of thoſe cenſures, is ſaid to be, מובדל מן ציבור, ſeparated from the congregation [s], a phraſe by which the word here uſed may be very well rendered: but in ſome things there was a difference between them; the one was without curſing, the other with; he that was under Niddui, might teach others the traditions, and they might teach him; he might hire workmen, and be hired himſelf: but he that was under Cherem might neither teach others, nor they teach him; but he might teach himſelf, that he might not forget his learning; and he might neither hire, nor be hired; and they did not trade with him, nor did they employ him in any buſineſs, unleſs in very little, juſt to keep him alive [t]; yea, the goods which he was poſſeſſed of, were confiſcated, and which they conclude ſhould be done from [u]Ezra x. 8. which may be compared with this paſſage; ſo that this greatly and chiefly affected them in the affairs of civil life, and which made it ſo terrible: for I don't find that they were obliged to abſtain from the temple, or temple-worſhip, or from the ſynagogue, and the worſhip of it, and which is the miſtake of ſome learned men: it is certain, they might go into places of worſhip, tho' with ſome difference from others; for it is ſaid [w], that "all that go into the temple, go in, in the right hand way, and go round, and come out in the left, except ſuch an one to whom any thing has befallen him, and he goes about to the left; (and when aſked) why doeſt thou go to the left? (he anſwers) becauſe I am a mourner; (to whom it is replied) he that dwells in this houſe comfort thee: (or) שאני מנודה, becauſe I am excommunicated; (to whom they ſay) he that dwells in this houſe put it into thy heart, (that thou mayeſt hearken to the words of thy friends, as it is afterwards explained) and they may receive thee." And it is elſewhere ſaid [x], that "Solomon, when he built the temple, made two gates, the one for bridegrooms, and the other for mourners and excommunicated perſons; and the Iſraelites, when they went in on ſabbath-days, or feaſt-days, ſat between theſe two gates; and when any one came in by the gate of the bridegrooms, they knew he was a bridegroom, and ſaid unto him, he that dwells in this houſe make thee chearful with ſons and daughters: and when any one came in at the gate of mourners, and his upper lip covered, they knew that he was a mourner, and ſaid unto him, he that dwells in this houſe comfort thee: and when any one came in at the gate of mourners, and his upper lip was not covered, they knew, שהיה מנודה, that he was excommunicated, and ſaid unto him, he that dwells in this houſe comfort thee, and put it into thy heart to hearken to thy friends." And it is afterwards alſo ſaid in the ſame place, that when the temple was deſtroyed, it was decreed that ſuch perſons ſhould come into ſynagogues and ſchools; but then they were not reckoned as members of the Jewiſh church, but as perſons cut off from the people of Iſrael, and ſcarce allowed to be of their commonwealth. And it may be further obſerved, that excommunication with the Jews was not only on religious accounts, but on civil accounts; on account of money, or when a man would not pay his debts, according to the decree of the Sanhedrim [y]. The twenty-four reaſons of excommunication, given by Maimonides [z], chiefly reſpect contempt of the Sanhedrim, and of the wiſe men, and breach of the traditions of the elders; ſometimes they excommunicated for immorality, particularly the Eſſenes, as Joſephus relates, who ſays [a], that ſuch who are taken in grievous ſins, they caſt them out of their order; and he that is ſo dealt with commonly dies a miſerable death; for being bound by oaths and cuſtoms, he cannot eat the food of others, and ſo ſtarves. The ſame is reported [b] by R. Abraham Zacuth: and ſometimes excommunication was for Epicuriſm, or hereſy, and ſuch they reckoned the belief of Jeſus of Nazareth, as the Meſſiah, on account of which this decree was made, and which continued with them; for not only this blind man was caſt out of the ſynagogue by virtue of it, but our Lord tells his diſciples, that they ſhould be ſo treated by the Jews after his death; and we find it remained in force and practice many hundreds of years afterwards. Athanaſius [c] relates of a Jew, that lived in Berytus, a city in Syria, between Tyre and Sidon, that an image of Chriſt being found in his houſe by another Jew, tho' unknown to him; and this being diſcovered to the chief-prieſts and elders of the Jews, they caſt him out of the ſynagogue. Sometimes this ſentence was pronounced by word of mouth, and ſometimes it was delivered in writing: the form of one is given us by Buxtorf [d], out of an ancient Hebrew manuſcript; and a dreadful ſhocking one it is; and is as follows: "according to the mind of the Lord of Lords, let ſuch an one, the ſon of ſuch an one, be in Cherem, or anathematized, in both houſes of judgment, of thoſe above, and thoſe below; and with the anathema of the ſaints on high, with the anathema of the Seraphim and Ophanim, and with the anathema of the whole congregation, great and ſmall; let great and real ſtripes be upon him, and many and violent diſeaſes; and let his houſe be an habitation of dragons; and let his ſtar be dark in the clouds; and let him be for indignation, wrath, and anger; and let his carcaſs be for beaſts and ſerpents; and let thoſe that riſe up againſt him, and his enemies, rejoice over him; and let his ſilver and his gold be given to others; and let all his children be expoſed at the gate of his enemies, and at his day may others be amazed; and let him be curſed from the mouth of Addiriron and Actariel, (names of angels, as are thoſe that follow) and from the mouth of Sandalphon and Hadraniel, and from the mouth of Anſiſiel and Pathchiel, and from the mouth of Seraphiel and Zaganzael, and from the mouth of Michael and Gabriel, and from the mouth of Raphael and Meſhartiel; and let him be anathematized from the mouth of Tzabtzabib, and from the mouth of Habbabib, he is Jehovah the great, and from the mouth of the ſeventy names of the great king, and from the

" ſide of Tzortak the great chancellor; and let him " be ſwallowed up as Korah and his company, with " terror, and with trembling; let his ſoul go out; " let the reproof of the Lord kill him; and let " him be ſtrangled as Ahitophel in his counſel; and " let his leproſy be as the leproſy of Gehazi; and " let there be no raiſing him up from his fall; and " in the ſepulchres of Iſrael let not his grave be; " and let his wife be given to another; and let " others bow upon her at his death: in this ana" thema, let ſuch an one, the ſon of ſuch an one " be, and let this be his inheritance; but upon " me, and upon all Iſrael, may God extend his " peace and his bleſſing. Amen." And if he would, he might add theſe verſes in Deut. xxix. 19, 20, 21. and it come to paſs when he heareth the words of this curſe, that he bleſs himſelf in his heart, ſaying, I ſhall have peace, though I walk in the imagination of mine heart, to add drunkenneſs to thirſt: the Lord will not ſpare him, but then the anger of the Lord, and his jealouſy ſhall ſmoke againſt that man, and all the curſes that are written in this book ſhall lie upon him, and the Lord ſhall blot out his name from under heaven. And the Lord ſhall ſeparate him unto evil, out of all the tribes of Iſrael, according to all the curſes of the covenant, that are written in this book of the law. There were many rites and ceremonies, which in proceſs of time were uſed, when ſuch a ſentence was pronounced, as blowing of horns and trumpets, and lighting candles, and putting them out: hence, trumpets are reckoned [d] among the inſtruments of judges. It is ſaid [e] of R. Judah, that being affronted by a certain perſon, he reſented the injury, and brought out the trumpets and excommunicated him: and they tell us [f], that Barak anathematized Meroz, whom they take to be ſome great perſon, with four hundred trumpets: and they alſo ſay [g], that four hundred trumpets were brought out, and they excommunicated Jeſus of Nazareth; tho' theſe words are left out in ſome editions of the Talmud. Now this was done in order to inject terror both into thoſe that were guilty, and alſo into the whole congregation of the people, that they might hear and fear; for the Cherem, or that ſort of excommunication which goes by that name, was done publickly before the whole ſynagogue, all the heads and elders of the church being gathered together; and then candles were lighted, and as ſoon as the form of the curſe was finiſhed, they were put out, as a ſign that the excommunicated perſon was unworthy of the heavenly light [h]. Very likely the Papiſts took their horrible cuſtom from hence of curſing with bell, book, and candle.

Ver. 23. Therefore ſaid his parents, he is of age, &c.] See the note on ver. 21.

Ver. 24. Then again called they the man that was blind, &c.] That had been blind. After they had examined his parents, and could get nothing from them for their purpoſe, they try a ſecond time what they could do with the ſon: and ſaid unto him, give God the praiſe; a phraſe uſed when confeſſion of ſin was required; ſee Joſh. vii. 19. and this may be the meaning of it here; confeſs this fraud and impoſture before the omniſcient God, the ſearcher of hearts, and in ſo doing glorify that perfection of his. One and the ſame word, ידה, ſignifies both to confeſs the truth of any thing, as a ſinful action, Prov. xxviii. 13. and to give thanks and praiſe to God for any mercy and bleſſing, Pſ. xlv. 17. Dan. ii. 23. Some take this to be the form of an oath, and that the Phariſees adjured the man by the living God, that he would tell the truth, and diſcover the cheat and colluſion uſed in this affair of receiving his ſight; and thought hereby to have deterred him from ſpeaking of this benefit he had received from Chriſt, eſpecially in ſuch a manner as to reflect any honour upon the author of it. Or the ſenſe may be, if this really is matter of fact, that thou waſt born blind, and haſt received thy ſight by the means of this man, give all the glory of it to God, to whom alone it is due, and not to him. God ſometimes works by wicked inſtruments, when the glory of what is done ought not to be aſcribed to them, but to him. We know that this man is a ſinner; this they concluded from his breaking the ſabbath, as they ſuppoſed; tho' they alſo aſperſed his character, and accuſed him of other things, yet falſely; ſee Matt. xi. 19. Luke xxiii. 2. nor could they prove one ſingle inſtance of ſin in him, tho' they expreſs themſelves here with ſo much aſſurance.

Ver. 25. He anſwered and ſaid, &c.] That is, the man who had been blind, who takes no notice of the confeſſion they preſſed him to, which is what he could not do; there being no colluſion in this caſe, he only replies to the reproachful character they had given of his benefactor. Whether he be a ſinner or no, I know not; or if he is a ſinner I know not, as the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, ſuggeſting, that he did not know he was a ſinner; he could not charge him with being one; nor could he join with them in ſaying he was a ſinner; nor did he think and believe he was: however, he was ſure he had done a good thing to him, and in that he was no ſinner; and what proof they had of his being one he could not tell: and be that as it will, adds he, one thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I ſee; as if he ſhould ſay, whatever charges you bring againſt the perſon that has done me this favour, which I am not able to anſwer to, you can't reaſon me out of this; this I am ſure of, that once I had no eyes to ſee with, and now I have, and that by the means of this man you reproach. And ſo it is with perſons enlightened in a ſpiritual ſenſe, whatever things they may be ignorant of, tho' they may not know the exact time of their converſion, nor have ſo much Goſpel-light and knowledge as others, or be ſo capable of expreſſing themſelves, or giving ſuch a diſtinct and orderly account of the work of God upon them as ſome can, nor diſpute with an adverſary for the truths of the Goſpel, or have that faith of aſſurance, and diſcoveries of God's love, and the application of ſuch great and precious promiſes as others have; yet this they know, that they were once blind, as to the knowledge of ſpiritual things, as to a ſaving knowledge of God in Chriſt, as to a true ſight and ſenſe of themſelves, their ſins and loſt eſtate, as to the way of righteouſneſs and ſalvation by Chriſt, or the work of the Spirit of God upon their ſouls, or as to any true and ſpiritual diſcerning of the ſcriptures, and the doctrines of grace in them: but now they are comfortably aſſured, they ſee the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin, the plague of their own hearts, the inſufficiency of their righteouſneſs to juſtify them before God, and the beauty, fulneſs, ſuitableneſs, and ability of Chriſt as a ſaviour; and that their ſalvation is, and muſt be of free grace; and that they ſee the truths of the Goſpel in another light than they did before, and have ſome glimpſe of eternal glory and happineſs, in the hope of which they rejoice.

Ver. 26. Then ſaid they to him again, &c.] Finding they could not bring him to deny the fact, or cauſe him to entertain an ill opinion of him that did it, they examine him again about the manner of it: what did he to thee? how opened he thine eyes? Theſe queſtions they had put before, ver. 15. and propoſe them again, in hope he would vary in the account, which they would not fail of improving againſt him; or that it would appear that he had not been really blind, at leaſt from his birth; or that Chriſt made uſe of ſome unlawful means, as magic art, which they were always ready to charge him with, and to impute his miracles to a diabolical familiarity and influence; and they would have been glad to have had ſomething to ſupport ſuch a calumny.

Ver. 27. He anſwered them, I have told you already, &c.] As he had, ver. 15. and ye did not hear; the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, and ye have heard; and ſo ſome copies of Stephens's; that is, an account had been given of the manner how his eyes were opened, and they had heard the account with their bodily ears, though not with the ears of their minds; and therefore, according to moſt copies and verſions, it is read, ye did not hear; did not regard it, or give credit to it; and ſo the Perſic verſion renders it, and ye have not believed; they would not believe the man had been blind, until they ſent for his parents; much leſs would they believe the account of his cure: wherefore would ye hear it again? once is ſufficient, eſpecially ſince the former account has been diſregarded and diſcredited: their view could not be their own information, but to baffle and confound the man, if they could. The Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions leave out the word again, and only read, wherefore would ye hear? what end can you have in it? of what avail would it be? or what purpoſe can be anſwered by it? will ye alſo be his diſciples? as many whom you call ignorant and accurſed people are, and as I myſelf deſire to be. This he might ſay either in an ironical and ſarcaſtic way; or elſe ſeriouſly, ſuggeſting, that if they were willing to examine into this fact, with upright views and ſincere intentions, that ſhould it appear to be a true miracle, they would become the diſciples and followers of Jeſus, then he would, with all his heart, relate the account to them over and over again, or as often as they pleaſed.

Ver. 28. Then they reviled him, &c.] Called him an impertinent, ſaucy, impudent fellow, for talking in this pert manner to them, the great Sanhedrim of the nation; or, as the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, they curſed him; they thundered out their anathemas againſt him, and pronounced him an execrable and an accurſed fellow: and ſaid, thou art his diſciple; for they looked upon it a reproach and ſcandal to be called a diſciple of Jeſus of Nazareth; tho' there is nothing more honourable than to be a follower of him the Lamb whitherſoever he goes: wherefore theſe Jews threw off what they thought a term of reproach from themſelves to the blind man; and perhaps they might ſay this to enſnare him, hoping that he would own himſelf to be a diſciple of Jeſus, and profeſs him to be the Chriſt, that they might, according to their own act, excommunicate him. The Vulgate Latin, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read, be thou his diſciple; if thou wilt, we deſpiſe the character; far be it from us that we ſhould be followers of him: but we are Moſes's diſciples. Thus they preferred Moſes to Chriſt, and choſe to be the diſciples of Moſes the ſervant, rather than of Chriſt the ſon; tho' indeed they were not the genuine diſciples of Moſes; for if they had, they would have been the diſciples of Chriſt, and believers in him, ſince Moſes wrote and teſtified of him: they might indeed be ſo far the diſciples of Moſes, or of his law, ſince they ſought for righteouſneſs and juſtification by obedience to his law. This was a phraſe in uſe among the Jews: ſo the Targumiſt[i] on Numb. iii. 2. ſays, "theſe are the names of the ſons of Aaron the prieſts, תלמידיא דמשה, the diſciples of Moſes, the maſter of the Iſraelites;" particularly the Phariſees, as here, claimed this title to themſelves: for it is ſaid[k], "all the ſeven days (before the day of atonement) they delivered to him (the high-prieſt) two of the diſciples of the wiſe men, to inſtruct him in the ſervice (of that day), who were, מתלמידיו של משה, of the diſciples of Moſes, in oppoſition to the Sadducees:" from whence it appears, that theſe diſciples of Moſes were of the ſect of the Phariſees, who aſſumed this character as peculiar to themſelves; ſometimes they call themſelves the diſciples of Abraham, though the deſcription they give of ſuch, by no means belongs to them; ſee the note on chap. viii. 39. They ſay[l], "whoever has three things in him, is מתלמידיו של אברהם, of the diſciples of Abraham our father, and who has three other things is of the diſciples of Balaam the wicked: he that has a good eye, (beneficence, or temperance, or contentment) a lowly ſpirit, and an humble ſoul, he is of the diſciples of Abraham our father; but he that has an evil eye, and a proud ſpirit, and a large ſoul (luſtful or covetous) is of the diſciples of Balaam." This laſt character beſt agrees with thoſe very perſons, who would be thought to be the diſciples of Abraham and of Moſes.

Ver. 29. We know that God ſpoke to Moſes, &c.] Out of the buſh, and told him who he was, and ſent him to deliver the children of Iſrael out of Egyptian bondage, and ſpoke the ten words, or law unto him, and by him delivered them to the children of Iſrael, and to whom he ſpake face to face, as a man does to his friend, and mouth to mouth, and not in dark ſayings; they mean, they knew that Moſes had his miſſion, commiſſion, and credentials from God: but as for this fellow; ſo they contemptuouſly called the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, we know not from whence he is; contradicting what others of them had ſaid, chap. vii. 27. They imagined they knew the country from whence he came, which they ſuppoſed to be Galilee, and the place where he was born, which they concluded was Nazareth; tho' in both they were in the wrong; and they knew his parents, Joſeph and Mary, and his brethren and ſiſters; but as to his divine filiation, they knew nothing of it; nor would they own his miſſion, commiſſion, and credentials to be from heaven; and pretended they had no reaſon to conclude they were.

Ver. 30. The man anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] Very appoſitely and pertinently, why herein is a marvellous thing; ſtrange and unaccountable, that ye know not from whence he is; that you learned doctors, men of ſagacity and penetration, ſhould not be able to diſcern that this man is of God, is a prophet ſent by him, and that there ſhould be any doubt from whence he comes, or from whom he has his commiſſion: and yet he hath opened mine eyes; which was ſo clearly and plainly the work of the Meſſiah, and to be done by him when he came, Iſ. xxxv. 4, 5. and xlii. 7.

[k] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 4. 1.

[l] Pirke Abot, c. 5. §. 19.

Ver. 31. Now we know that God heareth not ſinners, &c.] All mankind are ſinners, even God's elect; yea, ſuch who are truly gracious and righteous perſons; for there is no man without ſin; and God hears ſuch who cry unto him day and night; ſuch Chriſt came to ſave; for ſuch he died; and theſe he calls to repentance; and every penitent ſinner God hears: but by ſinners are meant notorious ſinners, ſuch in whom ſin reigns, who live in ſin, and particularly impoſtors. The man takes up the word the Jews had made uſe of, and applied to Chriſt, ver. 24. and ſuggeſts, that had Jeſus been a ſinner, that is, an impoſtor, God would not have heard him, or have aſſiſted him in doing a miracle, to ſupport an impoſture, or cover and encourage a fraud; but that he was heard and aſſiſted, was a plain caſe: whereas not only they, the learned doctors of the nation, but ſuch an illiterate man as himſelf knew, that notoriouſly wicked men, cheats, and deceivers, were not heard of God; and this was known from the ſcripture, and all experience; ſee Pſ. lxvi. 18. Iſ. i. 15. The Perſic and Ethiopic verſions read, I KNOW, that God, &c. but if any man be a worſhipper of God; fears the Lord, and worſhips him in ſpirit and in truth, both with internal and external worſhip: and doth his will; for it is not every one that ſays Lord, Lord, or draws nigh to God with his mouth, and honours him with his lips, that is a true and ſincere worſhipper of him; but he that does his will in faith, from a principle of love, and with a view to his glory: and him he heareth; for he is nigh to all that call upon him in truth; and ſuch an one the man intimates Jeſus muſt be; ſince it was out of all diſpute that God had heard him, and had bore a teſtimony to him.

Ver 32. Since the world began, &c.] Εκ τȣ αιωνος, from eternity, or never: the phraſe anſwers to מעולם, frequently uſed by the Jews [m], for never; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, it was never heard, &c. ſince time was: was it not heard, that any man opened the eyes of one that was born blind; as not any phyſician by any natural means, or art, ſo not any prophet in a miraculous way, no not Moſes himſelf; among all the miracles he wrought, which the Jews ſay [n], were ſeventy-ſix, and which were two more than were wrought by all the prophets put together, this is not to be found in the liſt of them, nor in the catalogue of miracles done by others. Eliſha indeed prayed to God to reſtore ſight to an army ſmitten with blindneſs; but then they were perſons who ſaw before, and were not blind from their birth. Wherefore it muſt follow, that Jeſus, the author of this miracle, muſt be greater than any of the prophets, even than Moſes himſelf, and has a greater confirmation of his miſſion from God, than either he or they had: and as this was a miracle in nature, it is no leſs a miracle in grace, that one born in the blindneſs and darkneſs of ſin, ignorance, and infidelity, ſhould have the eyes of his underſtanding opened, to behold divine and ſpiritual things.

Ver. 33. If this man were not of God, &c.] If he had not his miſſion, commiſſion, and credentials from God; if he had not been ſent by him, and had not authority from him, and was not aſſiſted by him, as man, or God was not with him, he could do nothing; or not do theſe things, as the Syriac verſion reads; that is, ſuch miraculous works; or, as the Perſic verſion, he could not do this miracle; open the eyes of a man born blind. His doing this is a full proof that he is of God, and comes from him.

Ver. 34. They anſwered and ſaid unto him, &c.] Being nettled, and ſtung at what he ſaid, and not able to confute his reaſoning; and it is amazing that a man that could never read the ſcriptures, who had had no education, was not only blind, but a beggar from his youth, ſhould be able to reaſon in ſo ſtrong and nervous a manner, and ſhould have that boldneſs and preſence of mind, and freedom of ſpeech before the whole Sanhedrim. Certainly it was God that gave him a mouth and wiſdom which theſe learned doctors could not reſiſt, and therefore reply in the following manner, thou waſt altogether born in ſins; meaning not in original ſin, as all mankind are, for this might have been retorted on themſelves; but having imbibed the Pythagorean notion of a tranſmigration of ſouls into other bodies, and of ſinning in a pre-exiſtent ſtate, or a notion of infants ſinning actually in the womb, and ſo puniſhed with blindneſs, lameneſs, or ſome deformity or another for it, they reproach this man, calling him vile miſcreant, ſaying, thou vile, ſinful creature, who came into the world covered with ſin, with the viſible marks of having ſinned, either in another body, or in the womb before birth, and therefore waſt born blind: and doſt thou teach us, holy, wiſe, and learned men! which breathes out the true phariſaical ſpirit they were poſſeſſed of, and which appeared in their anceſtors before them; ſee Iſa. lxv. 5. Luke xviii. 9. And they caſt him out; not merely out of the place where the Sanhedrim ſat, or out of the temple; this would have been no great matter, nor have made any great noiſe in the city, or have been taken notice of by Chriſt, or moved his compaſſion towards him; nor merely out of any particular ſynagogue, or was the excommunication called Niddui, which was a ſeparation for thirty days, and for the ſpace of four cubits only; but was what they call Cherem, which was a cutting him off from the whole congregation of Iſrael; an anathematizing him, and a devoting him to ruin and deſtruction: and now in part was fulfilled, Iſa. lxvi. 5. for this was done in pretence of zeal, for the honour and glory of God; and Chriſt appeared to the joy and comfort of this man, and to the ſhame and confuſion of thoſe that caſt him out, as the following verſes ſhew.

Ver. 35. Jeſus heard that they had caſt him out, &c.] For this being perhaps the firſt inſtance, of putting in execution the act, they had made, ver. 22. and was a ſtretching of that act; which only threatened with an ejection, in caſe any ſhould confeſs Jeſus to be the Meſſiah; which this man had not done as yet, only had ſaid he was a prophet, and that he was of God; it made a very great noiſe in the city, and the report of it was ſoon ſpread over it; and it became the talk of every one, and ſo Jeſus, as man, came to hear of it; though he as God, knew it the very inſtant it was done, and needed not any to make report of it to him: and when he had found him; not by chance, meeting him at an unawares, but ſeeking him; and knowing where he was, went to the very place, and found him in this piteous condition, abandoned by all mankind: this is an emblem of Chriſt's ſeeking after his choſen ones, both in redemption, and in effectual vocation, who are like ſheep going aſtray, and never come to, and lay hold on Chriſt, till he comes firſt, ſeeks after, and apprehends them: he ſends his miniſters and his Goſpel after them, where they are, and his Spirit into their hearts; yea, he comes himſelf, and enters there, and dwells in them by faith: he knows where they are, as he did Matthew the publican, Zaccheus, and the woman of Samaria; and even tho' they are at the ends of the earth; and he goes and looks them up, and finds them; and he finds them in a deplorable condition, in a deſert, in a waſte howling wilderneſs, hopeleſs and helpleſs, poor and miſerable, and blind and naked; in a pit wherein is no water; in the mire and clay of ſin; in the paw of ſatan, and under the power of darkneſs. He ſaid unto him, doſt thou believe on the ſon of God? the Perſic verſion adds, who hath healed thee: this ſuppoſes that there was a Son of God, or a divine perſon known by the Jews under this character, and that the expected Meſſiah would appear as ſuch; and that as ſuch, he is the object of faith, and therefore as ſuch, muſt be God, ſince a creature, though ever ſo much dignified, or with whatſoever office inveſted, is not the object of faith, truſt, and confidence, with reſpect to everlaſting life and happineſs: and it may be obſerved, that whenever Chriſt finds any of his people, he brings them to believe in him as the Son of God for righteouſneſs and life: he himſelf is the author of faith in them, as well as the object of it; and no doubt power went along with theſe words, creating faith in this man: this was a moſt proper and pertinent queſtion put to him in his preſent caſe, and ſuggeſts, that if he believed in the Son of God, it was no matter in what ſituation he was among men; ſince he would then appear to be a ſon of God himſelf by adopting grace, and ſo an heir of God, and a joint heir with Chriſt; would receive the remiſſion of his ſins, be openly juſtified in the court of conſcience, as well as of God, and be everlaſtingly ſaved: and this queſtion is put by Chriſt, not as tho' he was ignorant, whether he believed in him or no; for he knew from the beginning, who would, and who would not believe in him: he that knew whether Peter loved him or no, knew whether this man believed in him or no; but this he ſaid to draw forth the principle of faith, which was wrought in him, into act and exerciſe, and to direct it to its proper object. And this effect it had, as appears by what follows.

Ver. 36. He anſwered and ſaid, &c.] That is, he that was healed, as the Syriac verſion reads: who is the Lord that I might believe in him? which ſhows, that tho' he knew there was a Meſſiah expected, and he believed in him as to come, yet he knew not that he was already come, nor the particular perſon in human nature, who was the Meſſiah, and the Son of God; even tho' he had been cured of his blindneſs by him, and had vindicated him, and pleaded for him before the Sanhedrim, and had alſo ſuffered for him; which makes it appear, that Chriſt does many and great things for his people before they know him: nor does their intereſt in him, in his favour, and in the bleſſings of his grace, depend upon their knowledge of him, and faith in him; as likewiſe, that a man may plead for Chriſt, and ſuffer much for him, and yet be ignorant of him: however, there were in this man deſires of knowing Chriſt; he was not like thoſe in Job xxi. 14. and there was a readineſs in him to believe on him, as ſoon as he was pointed out to him; not that there is any natural diſpoſition in men to believe, or any readineſs in themſelves to it, or that it is of themſelves; nothing of this nature was in this man; but he having, by the power and grace of Chriſt, the principle of faith implanted in his heart, what he wanted was to be directed to the proper object of it, as he is in the next verſe.

Ver. 37. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, &c.] Giving him the tokens by which he might know him: thou haſt both ſeen him; not that he had ſeen him before now, with his bodily eyes; for he was blind when Chriſt anointed him, and ſent him to Siloam to waſh; nor when he came back, ſince Jeſus was gone, and he knew not where he was; but he had ſeen him, that is, he had perceived and felt the power of him in reſtoring him to ſight; and now he had ſeen him bodily, and did at this preſent time: but as this was not ſufficient to diſtinguiſh him from other perſons in company, he adds, and it is he that talketh with thee; in like manner he made himſelf known to the woman of Samaria, John iv. 26.

Ver. 38. And he ſaid, Lord, I believe, &c.] He immediately found faith in his ſoul, and that in exerciſe, moving towards, and acting upon Chriſt, as the Son of God, and true Meſſiah, for everlaſting life and ſalvation; and as ſoon as he did perceive it, he made an open and hearty profeſſion of it: and he worſhipped him; as God, with religious worſhip and adoration, not only truſting in him, but aſcribing honour, glory, and bleſſing to him, which are due to God only, and not a creature.

Ver. 39. And Jeſus ſaid, for judgment I am come into this world, &c.] The Syriac verſion reads, for the judgment of this world I am come; and with which agrees the Ethiopic verſion, for the judgment of the world, I am come into the world; and the Arabic and Perſic verſions ſtill more expreſsly, to judge this world, or the world am I come; which ſeems contrary to what Chriſt elſewhere ſays, John iii. 17. and xii. 47. Nor is the ſenſe of the words that Chriſt came by the judgment of God, or the order of divine providence, or to adminiſter juſtice in the government of the world, in a providential way, or to diſtinguiſh his own people from others, tho' all theſe are true; but either to fulfil the purpoſe and decree of God in revealing truth to ſome, and hiding it from others; or in a way of judgment to inflict judicial blindneſs on ſome, whilſt in a way of mercy he illuminated others. So Nonnus interprets it of κριμα δισσον, a two-fold judgment, which is different the one from the other. That they which ſee not, might ſee; meaning, not ſo much corporally as ſpiritually, ſince in the oppoſite clauſe corporal blindneſs can have no place; for though Chriſt reſtored bodily ſight to many, he never took it away from any perſon. The ſenſe is, that Chriſt came as a light into the world, that thoſe who are in the darkneſs of ſin, ignorance, and unbelief, and who are ſenſible of the ſame, and deſire ſpiritual illuminations, as this man did, might ſee what they are by nature, what need they ſtand in of him, and what fulneſs of grace, life, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation there is in him for them. And that they which ſee might be made blind; that ſuch who are wiſe and knowing in their own conceit, who fancy themſelves to have great light and knowledge, to have the key of knowledge, and to have the true underſtanding of divine things, and to be guides of the blind, ſuch as the Scribes and Phariſees, might be given up to judicial blindneſs and hardneſs of heart, ſo as to ſhut their eyes, and harden their hearts againſt the Goſpel, and the truths of it, and which was in judgment to them: ſuch different effects Chriſt and his Goſpel have, as to illuminate and ſoften ſome, and blind and harden others; juſt as ſome creatures, as bats and owls, are blinded by the ſun, whilſt others ſee clearly by the light of it; and as that alſo has theſe different effects to ſoften the wax, and harden the clay; ſee Iſ. vi. 8.

Ver. 40. And ſome of the Phariſees which were with him, &c.] Who had followed him, and were watching him, and obſerving what he ſaid and did, in order to take all advantages, and every opportunity againſt him, they could, heard theſe words, and ſaid unto him, are we blind alſo? they perceived he pointed at them, and therefore with indignation aſk this queſtion, taking it as a great affront unto them, to put ſuch wiſe, learned, and knowing men as they in company with the ignorant and unlearned common people; ſee Iſ. xlii. 19.

Ver. 41. Jeſus ſaid unto them, if ye were blind, &c.] And ſenſible of it, and knew yourſelves to be blind, and were deſirous of light and knowledge, ye would have no ſin; or your ſin would not be ſo aggravated; it would not be imputed to you; it would be pardoned and taken away from you: for the ſenſe cannot be, that their blindneſs would not have been criminal, or they ſhould have had no ſin in them, or any done by them; only, that had this been barely their caſe, there would have been ſome hope of them, that their ſin might be forgiven, and put away, and be no more; ſee 1 Tim. i. 13. but now ye ſay we ſee; they thought themſelves to be wiſe and knowing, and ſtood in no need of any illumination from him, but were obſtinate and hardened in their infidelity, and wilfully oppoſed and ſhut their eyes againſt all the light and evidence of truth: therefore your ſin remaineth; untaken away, yea, immoveable, or unpardonable; the guilt of it abode upon them; nor was there any hope of its being removed from them; owning that they ſaw, and yet believed not, ſinning wilfully againſt light and knowledge in rejecting Jeſus, as the Meſſiah, they ſinned the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, which is never forgiven. And ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, your error ſhall not be forgiven you; ſee Matt. xii. 32.

CHAP. X.

Ver. 1. VERILY verily I ſay unto you, &c.] To the Scribes and Phariſees, who had taken it ill that they ſhould be thought to be blind; and who had caſt out the man that Chriſt had cured of blindneſs, for ſpeaking in favour of him; and who had traduced Chriſt as an impoſtor, and a deceiver, and ſet up themſelves to be the ſhepherds of the flock, and the guides and rulers of the people; all which occaſion the following parable; the deſign of which is to ſhow, that Chriſt is the true and only ſhepherd, who was appointed, called, and ſent of God, whoſe the ſheep are, whoſe voice they hear, and know, and whom they follow; and that they the Scribes and Phariſees were thieves and robbers, and not ſhepherds of the flock; who were not ſent of God, nor did they come in at the right door, but in another way, and uſurped a domination, which did not belong to them. He that entereth not by the door into the ſheepfold: the ſheepfold, with the Jews, was called דיר; and this, as their writers ſay [o], was an incloſure ſometimes in the manner of a building, and made of ſtone, and ſometimes was fenced with reeds, and in it was a large door, at which the ſhepherd went in and out, when he led in, or brought out the ſheep. At tithing, which was done in the ſheepfold, they made a little door, ſo that two lambs could not come out together; and to this incloſure is the alluſion here; and by the ſheepfold is meant the church of God; ſee ver. 16. and a good fold it is, Ezek. xxxiv. 14. The church may be compared to a ſheepfold, becauſe it is ſeparated from the world: it is where the people of God, and ſheep of Chriſt are gathered together; where there is a ſtrict union between them; have ſociety with each other; keep one another warm and comfortable; and where they are fed and nouriſhed, and are preſerved; and where they lie down and have reſt; and which, like a ſheepfold, will be taken down, and not always continue in the form it now is: and by the door into it, is meant Chriſt himſelf, as appears from ver. 7, 9. faith in him, a profeſſion of him, and authority from him. Now he that does not come into the church of God, whether as a member of it, or officer in it, at this door, but climbeth up ſome other way; by hypocriſy and deceit; or, like the prophets of old, who ran and were not ſent; propheſied when they were not ſpoken to, but took their place and poſt by uſurpation: the ſame is a thief and a robber; ſteals into the church, or into an office in it, and robs God or Chriſt of their power and authority; and ſuch were the Scribes and Phariſees: the Perſic verſion renders the words, whoever does not introduce the ſheep through the door of the ſheepfold, know that that man is a thief and a robber; which theſe men were ſo far from doing, that they would not ſuffer thoſe that were entering to go in, Matt. xxiii. 13. The difference between a thief and a robber, with the Jews, was, that the former took away a man's property privately, and the latter openly [p].

Ver. 2. But he that entereth in by the door, &c.] With a divine commiſſion, and by a divine authority, who comes not of himſelf, but is ſent; does not take the honour to himſelf, or thruſt in himſelf, and aſſume an office to himſelf, but is called unto it, and inveſted in it, he is the ſhepherd of the ſheep; by whom Chriſt means himſelf, as is evident from ver. 11, 14. whoſe the ſheep are, and who takes care of them, and feeds them, as a ſhepherd does his flock; and which holds true of any under-ſhepherd, having his miſſion and commiſſion, and deriving his authority from Chriſt.

Ver. 3. To him the porter openeth, &c.] There is nothing in the explanation of this parable given by Chriſt, that directs to the ſenſe of this clauſe; the alluſion cannot be, as ſome have thought, to great men, who have porters at their gates, to open them, and let in perſons that come and knock; ſince the parable is concerning the ſheepfold, and the ſhepherd, and the ſheep that go into it; and therefore muſt refer to one that at leaſt, at certain times, ſtood by the door of the ſheepfold, and had the care of it, and opened it upon proper occaſions: by whom is deſigned not Michael the archangel, nor the virgin Mary, nor Peter, the ſuppoſed door-keeper of heaven, as ſay the Papiſts, nor Moſes, as others, who wrote of Chriſt; nor does it ſeem ſo well to underſtand it of the miniſters of the Goſpel, who preach Jeſus Chriſt, and open the door of faith, or ſet open the door of the Goſpel, whereby Chriſt comes into the ſouls of men, and they come to him; tho' this is a ſenſe not to be deſpiſed; but rather this intends God the Father, from whom Chriſt, as man and mediator, derives his authority, and by whom he is let into, and inveſted with his office, as the ſhepherd of the ſheep; or elſe the holy Spirit, who opens the everlaſting doors of the hearts of men, of Chriſt's ſheep, and lets him in unto them. And the ſheep hear his voice; not the porter's; tho' they do hear the voice of Chriſt's miniſters, and of God the Father, and of the Holy Ghoſt; but the ſhepherd's, even the voice of Chriſt; and which is no other than the Goſpel, which is a voice of love, grace, and mercy; which proclaims peace, pardon, liberty, life, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation; and which is a ſoul-quickening, alluring, delighting, refreſhing, and comforting voice: this the people of Chriſt are made to hear, not only externally, but internally; ſo as to underſtand it, delight in it, and diſtinguiſh it from another: and theſe are called ſheep, and that before converſion; not becauſe they have the agreeable properties of ſheep; nor becauſe prediſpoſed unto, and unprejudiced againſt the Goſpel of Chriſt, for they are the reverſe of theſe; nor can ſome things be ſaid of them before, as after converſion, as that they hear the voice of Chriſt, and follow him; nor merely by anticipation, but by reaſon of electing grace, and becauſe given to Chriſt the great ſhepherd, under this character, to be kept and fed by him. And they are ſo called after converſion, becauſe they are harmleſs and inoffenſive in their lives and converſations; and yet are expoſed to the malice, cruelty, and butchery of men; and are meek and patient under ſufferings; and are clean, ſocial, and profitable. And he calleth his own ſheep by name; the Ethiopic verſion adds, and loves them. Theſe are Chriſt's own, by the Father's gift of them to him, by the purchaſe of his own blood, and by the power of his grace upon them; who looks them up, and finds them out, and brings them home, and takes care of them as his own, and feeds them as a ſhepherd his flock: theſe he may be ſaid to call by name, in alluſion to the eaſtern ſhepherds, who gave names to their ſheep, as the Europeans do to their horſes, and other creatures, and who could ſit and call them by their names: this is expreſſive not only of Chriſt's call of his people by powerful and ſpecial grace, but of the exact and diſtinct knowledge he has of them, and the notice he takes of them, as well as of the affection he has for them; ſee Iſ. xliii. 1. 2 Tim. ii. 19. And leadeth them out; from the world's goats, among whom they lay, and from the folds of ſin, and the barren paſtures of mount Sinai, and their own righteouſneſs, on which they were feeding, and out of themſelves, and from off all dependance on any thing of their own; and he leads unto himſelf, and the fulneſs of his grace, and to his blood and righteouſneſs, and into his Father's preſence and communion with him, and in the way of righteouſneſs and truth, and into the green paſtures of the word and ordinances, beſides the ſtill waters of his ſovereign love and grace.

Ver. 4. And when he putteth forth his own ſheep, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion reads, when he leads them all out; in order to bring them into proper paſtures: he goeth before them; in alluſion to the eaſtern ſhepherds, who when they put out their flocks, did not, as ours do, drive them before them, and follow after them, at leaſt not always, but went before them: ſo Chriſt, the great ſhepherd, goes before his flock, not only to provide for them, but by way of example to them; in many inſtances he is an enſample to the flock, as under-ſhepherds, according to the meaſure of grace received ſhould be: he has left them an example in many reſpects, that they ſhould tread in his ſteps: and the ſheep follow him; in the exerciſe of the graces of humility, love, patience, ſelf-denial, and reſignation of will to the will of God; and in the diſcharge of duty, walking, in ſome meaſure, as he walked. For they know his voice; in the Goſpel, which directs and encourages them to exerciſe grace in him, and to walk in the path of duty: this they know by the majeſty and authority of it; and by the power with which it comes to their ſouls; and by its ſpeaking of him, and leading to him; and by the evenneſs, harmony, and conſiſtency of it. The Perſic verſion renders the whole thus; when he calls and leads out the ſheep, they go before him, and their lambs after them, for they know his voice.

Ver. 5. And a ſtranger will they not follow, &c.] One that knows not Chriſt, is not ſent by him, and who does not preach him: but will flee from him; ſhun him and his miniſtry, as not only diſagreeable, but dangerous: for they know not the voice of ſtrangers; they don't approve of their doctrine, nor take any delight in it, or receive any profit from it. The Perſic verſion, as before, reads, neither will the lambs ever go after ſtrange ſheep, and if they ſee them, they will flee from them.

Ver. 6. This parable ſpake Jeſus unto them, &c.] To the Phariſees, who were with him, ch. ix. 40. but they underſtood not what things they were which he ſpake unto them; the things ſpoken by him being delivered in a parabolical way, tho' in lively figures, and in terms plain and eaſy to be underſtood; yet what thro' the blindneſs of their minds, and the hardneſs of their hearts, and their prejudices in favour of themſelves, and againſt Chriſt, they did not underſtand what were meant by them; ſee Matt. xiii. 13, 14, 15.

Ver. 7. Then ſaid Jeſus unto them again, &c.] By way of explanation of the above parable, ſince they did not underſtand it: verily verily I ſay unto you; this is certainly truth, and what may be depended on as ſuch, whether it will be believed or no: I am the door of the ſheep; and of none but them; not of goats, dogs, or ſwine; none but ſheep enter at this door; and all the ſheep do ſooner or later: Chriſt is the door to them, by which they enter into a viſible church-ſtate, and are let into a participation of the ordinances of it, as baptiſm and the Lord's ſupper: no man comes into a church, at the right door, or in a right way, or has a right to partake of Goſpel-ordinances, but he that truly believes in Chriſt, and makes a profeſſion of faith in him: Chriſt is the door of the under-ſhepherds of the ſheep; none are fit to be paſtors of churches, but who firſt enter into a Goſpel-church at this door, and are qualified, and called, and ſent forth by Chriſt: he is the door of the ſheep, by which they are let into the preſence of his Father, and have communion with him, and partake of all the bleſſings of grace; it is thro' him that ſanctifying, juſtifying, pardoning, and adopting grace, are conveyed unto them, and they brought into the enjoyment of them; it is thro' him they have all their peace, joy, and comfort, and deliverance from, and victory over all their enemies; thro' him they have heirſhip, and a right unto eternal life, and that itſelf; for he is the door into heaven itſelf, thro' which they ſhall have an abundant entrance into it: and he is the only door into each of theſe; there's no coming to God the Father but by, and thro' him; nor to a participation of the bleſſings of the covenant, nor rightly into a Goſpel church-ſtate, and to the ordinances of it, nor into heaven at laſt, but in at this door: and this is a door of faith and hope, and an open one, for all ſenſible ſinners, for all the ſheep of Chriſt, to enter in at; tho' it is a ſtrait gate, the number being few that enter in at it; and thoſe that do, tho' they are certainly, yet but ſcarcely ſaved; for 'tis through many tribulations and afflictions that they enter.

Ver. 8. All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers, &c.] This muſt be underſtood with ſome reſtrictions, not of every individual perſon, nor of every individual prophet or ſhepherd; not of Moſes, nor of the prophets of the Lord, nor of John the Baptiſt, who came immediately before Chriſt, was his harbinger, and prepared his way; but of thoſe prophets who came, and were not ſent of God, and ſo did not come in by the door; of the ſhepherds of Iſrael, who fed themſelves, and not the flock, but lorded it over God's heritage; and of ſuch, as Theudas, and Judas the Galilean, who boaſted that they were ſome great perſons, but were only thieves and robbers; and particularly of the three ſhepherds cut off in one month, Zech. xi. 8. ſuppoſed to be the three ſects among the Jews, and the leaders of them, the Phariſees, Sadducees, and Eſſenes, eſpecially the former; who were wolves in ſheeps clothing, uſurped a power that did not belong to them, robbed God of his authority, and glory; and, in a literal ſenſe, plundered men of their ſubſtance, and devoured widows houſes, as well as deſtroyed their ſouls. The phraſe, before me, is wanting in ſeven of Beza's exemplars, and in ſeveral others; and in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Perſic verſions: but the ſheep did not hear them; the elect of God, ſome of which there were in all ages, tho' their number is comparatively few, did not attend to the falſe prophets, and falſe teachers, and idol ſhepherds; did not receive their doctrines, nor follow their practices; for it is not poſſible that theſe ſhould be finally and totally deceived, or carried away with the error of the wicked.

Ver. 9. I am the door, &c.] Of the ſheep, as before; ſee ver. 7. The Ethiopic verſion reads, I am the true door of the ſheep; which is repeated for further confirmation, and for the ſake of introducing what follows: by me if any man enter in; into the ſheepfold, the church, he ſhall be ſaved; not that being in a church, and having ſubmitted to ordinances, will ſave any; but entering into theſe, at the right door, or thro' faith in Chriſt, ſuch will be ſaved, according to Mark xvi. 16. ſuch ſhall be ſaved from ſin, the dominion of it, the guilt and condemning power of it, and at laſt from the being of it; and from the law, its curſe and condemnation, and from wrath to come, and from every evil, and every enemy; ſuch are, and for ever ſhall be, in a ſafe ſtate, being in Chriſt, and in his hands, out of which none can pluck: and ſhall go in and out; in alluſion to the ſheep going in and out of the fold: not that thoſe who come in at the right door, ſhall go out of the church, or from among the ſaints again; but this phraſe rather denotes the exerciſes of faith in going unto Chriſt, and acting upon him, and in coming forth in the outward confeſſion of him, and the performance of good works; or in going unto him, and dealing with his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, and coming out of themſelves, and all dependance on their own righteouſneſs; or it may regard the converſation of the ſaints in the church, their attendance on ordinances, their ſafety there, their free and open communion one with another, and with Chriſt, in whoſe name and ſtrength they do all they do, coming in and out at this door: and find paſture; green and good paſture; paſture for their ſouls; the words of faith, and good doctrine; the wholeſome words of Chriſt Jeſus; the ordinances, the breaſts of conſolation; yea, Chriſt himſelf, whoſe fleſh is meat indeed, and whoſe blood is drink indeed: the Perſic verſion renders it, and ſhall find a paſtor, or ſhepherd; ſee Jer. iii. 15.

Ver. 10. The thief cometh not but for to ſteal, &c.] That is his firſt and principal view; to ſteal, is to invade, ſeize, and carry away another's property. Such teachers that come not in by the right door, or with a divine commiſſion, ſeek to deceive, and carry away the ſheep of Chriſt from him, tho' they are not able to do it; and to ſteal away their hearts from him, as Abſalom ſtole the hearts of the people from their rightful Lord and ſovereign, David his father; and to ſubject them to themſelves, that they might lord it over them, and make a property of them, as the Phariſees did, who, under a pretence of long prayers, devoured widows houſes. And to kill and to deſtroy; either the ſouls of men by their falſe doctrines, which eat as doth a canker, and poiſon the minds of men, and ſlay the ſouls that ſhould not die, ſubverting the faith of nominal profeſſors, tho' they cannot deſtroy any of the the true ſheep of Chriſt; or the bodies of the ſaints, by their oppreſſion, tyranny, and perſecution, who are killed all the day long for the ſake of Chriſt, and are accounted as ſheep for the ſlaughter, by theſe men, they thinking that by ſo doing they do God good ſervice. I am come that they might have life; that the ſheep might have life, or the elect of God might have life, both ſpiritual and eternal; who, as the reſt of mankind, are by nature dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, and liable in themſelves to an eternal death: Chriſt came into this world in human nature, to give his fleſh, his body, his whole human nature, ſoul and body, for the life of theſe perſons, or that they might live ſpiritually here, and eternally hereafter; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, that they might have eternal life; Nonnus calls it, a life to come; which is in Chriſt, and the gift of God thro' him; and which he gives to all his ſheep, and has a power to give to as many as the Father has given him: and that they might have it more abundantly; or, as the Syriac verſion reads, ſomething more abundant; that is, than life; meaning not merely than the life of wicked men, whoſe bleſſings are curſes to them; or than their own life, only in the preſent ſtate of things; or than long life promiſed under the law to the obſervers of it; but even than the life Adam had in innocence, which was but a natural and moral, not a ſpiritual life, or that life which is hid with Chriſt in God; and alſo than that which angels live in heaven, which is the life of ſervants, and not of ſons: or elſe the ſenſe is, that Chriſt came that his people might have eternal life with more abundant evidence of it, than was under the former diſpenſation, and have ſtronger faith in it, and a more lively hope of it: or, as the words may be rendered, and that they might have an abundance; beſides life, might have an abundance of grace from Chriſt, all ſpiritual bleſſings in him now, and all fulneſs of joy, glory, and happineſs hereafter.

Ver. 11. I am the good ſhepherd, &c.] A ſhepherd of his Father's appointing, calling, and ſending, to whom the care of all his ſheep, or choſen ones, was committed; who was ſet up as a ſhepherd over them by him, and was entruſted with them; and who being called, undertook to feed them; and being promiſed, was ſent unto the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael; and under the character of a ſhepherd, died for them, and roſe again, and is accountable to his Father for every one of them; the ſhepherd, the great and chief ſhepherd, the famous one, ſo often ſpoken and propheſied of, Gen. xlix. 24. Iſa. xl. 11. Ezek. xxxiv. 23. And diſcharging his office aright, he is the good ſhepherd; as appears in his providing good paſture, and a good fold for his ſheep; in protecting them from their enemies; in healing all their diſeaſes; in reſtoring their ſouls when ſtrayed from him; in watching over them in the night ſeaſons, leſt any hurt them; in ſearching for them, when they have been driven, or ſcattered in the dark and cloudy day; in caring for them, ſo that he loſe none of them; and in nothing more than in what follows, the good ſhepherd giveth his life for the ſheep: not only expoſes it to danger, as David did his, for the ſake of his father's flock, but gives it away freely and voluntarily, for the ſake of the ſheep; in their room and ſtead, as a ranſom for them, that they may be delivered from death, and might have eternal life: the Ethiopic verſion renders it, the good ſhepherd gives his life for the redemption of his ſheep; ſo Nonnus paraphraſes it, the ranſom price of his own ſheep: this belongs to Chriſt's prieſtly office, and with the Jews prieſts were ſometimes ſhepherds: hence we read [q] of, רועים כהנים, ſhepherds that were prieſts. Philo the Jew, ſpeaks [r] of God as a ſhepherd and king; and of his ſetting his Word, his firſt-born ſon, over the holy flock, to take care of it: and a good ſhepherd is thus deſcribed by the [s] Jews; "as רועה טוב, "a good ſhepherd delivers the flock from the wolf, "and from the lions (ſee ver. 12.) ſo he that leads "Iſrael, if he is good, delivers them from the "idolatrous nations, and from judgment below "and above, and leads them to the life of the "world to come, or eternal life;" (ſee ver. 10.) Which deſcription agrees with Chriſt, the good ſhepherd; and ſo the Lord is ſaid to be, רועה טוב, the good ſhepherd, and merciful, and there is none like him [t].

Ver. 12. But he that is an hireling, and not the ſhepherd, &c.] That is, who is not the owner of the ſheep, though he keeps them, yet only for reward: by whom are meant, not the faithful miniſters of the word, who live upon the Goſpel, as Chriſt has ordained, and who are worthy of their reward, and are not to be called hirelings by way of reproach; ſince they teach not for hire and reward, but for the good of ſouls, and the intereſt of the Redeemer; but ſuch who ſeek only their gain from their quarter, and mind their own things, and not the things of Jeſus Chriſt: whoſe own the ſheep are not; who have neither a propriety in them, nor an hearty affection for them, and ſo care not what becomes of them: ſuch an one ſeeth the wolf coming; by whom may be meant, either ſatan; ſo the Jews compare Iſrael to a flock of ſheep, and ſatan, they ſay, הוא הזאב, he is the wolf [u]; or any falſe prophet, or teacher, who are ravenous wolves, though ſometimes in ſheeps cloathing; or any tyrant, oppreſſor, or perſecutor of the ſaints; and leaveth the ſheep; as the idol ſhepherd, againſt whom a woe is pronounced, Zech. xi. 17. And fleeth; not being willing to bear any reproach or perſecution, for the ſake of Chriſt; not ſuch a keeper of the flock as David, who went after the lion and the bear, and when they aroſe up againſt him, did not flee, but caught them by the beard and ſlew them; nor like the apoſtle Paul, who fought with beaſts at Epheſus, and would turn his back on none, nor give place, no, not for an hour, that truth might continue: and the wolf catcheth them; ſome of them: and ſcattereth the ſheep; the reſt; ſo are the ſheep of Chriſt and his churches ſometimes ſcattered, by perſecution raiſed againſt them; ſee Acts viii. 1, 4. The Jews have a rule concerning ſuch an hireling ſhepherd [w], which is this; "a ſhepherd that feeds his flock, and leaves "it, and goes to the city, and a wolf comes and "ravines, and the lion comes and tears in pieces, "he is free; but if he leaves by it his ſtaff and "his ſcrip, he is guilty." Which Maimonides thus [x] expreſſes and explains; "a ſhepherd who "can deliver that which is torn, and that which is "carried captive, with other ſhepherds, and with "ſtaves, and does not call the other ſhepherds, nor "bring the ſtaves to deliver them, he is guilty: "one that keeps freely, and one that keeps for "hire; he that keeps freely, calls the ſhepherds, "and brings the ſtaves freely; and if he does "not find them, he is not guilty; but he that "keeps for hire, is obliged to hire ſhepherds and "ſtaves, in order to deliver them."

Ver. 13. The hireling fleeth, becauſe he is an hireling, &c.] And has no propriety in the ſheep; had he, he would abide by them, and defend them; but becauſe he has not, he'll not expoſe himſelf to any danger, but leaves them: and careth not for the ſheep; what becomes of them, providing only for his own ſafety. Abarbinel [y] has a note on Iſa. xl. 11. which may ſerve to illuſtrate this paſſage: "he "ſhall feed his flock like a ſhepherd; not as he that "feeds the flock of others, for the hire they give "him, but as a ſhepherd that feeds his own flock; "who has compaſſion more abundantly on it, be"cauſe it is his own flock; and therefore he ſaith, "behold, his reward is with him, for he does not "ſeek a reward from another; and his work is be"fore him; for he feeds what is his own, and "therefore his eyes and his heart are there." Which is not the caſe of the hireling; he does not care for them, he has not their good at heart; but the good ſhepherd has, ſuch an one as Chriſt is.

Ver. 14. I am the good ſhepherd, &c.] See the note on ver. 11. And know my ſheep; ſo as to call them all by their names: Chriſt has an univerſal, ſpecial, diſtinct, and exact knowledge of all his ſheep, as they are the choice of his Father, as his Father's gift to him, and as his own purchaſe; he bears an affectionate love to them, and takes ſpecial care of them; indulges them with intimate communion with himſelf; and owns and acknowledges them as his, both here and hereafter: and I am known of mine; not in a general way, as devils and external profeſſors may know him, but with a ſpecial, ſpiritual, and ſaving knowledge: Chriſt's own approve of him, as their ſhepherd and their ſaviour, and deſire no other; they love him above all, in the ſincerity of their ſouls, and with a love as ſtrong as death; they truſt in him as their ſhepherd, believing they ſhall not want; and appropriate him to themſelves, as their own; and care for him, his cauſe and intereſt, his Goſpel, ordinances, dinances, and miniſters; and are not aſhamed to own him as theirs, in the moſt publick manner.

Ver. 15. As the Father knoweth me, &c.] Theſe words, with what follow, are in connexion with the preceding verſe; and the ſenſe is, that the mutual knowledge of Chriſt, and his ſheep, is like that which his Father and he have of each other. The Father knows Chriſt as his own ſon, and loves him as ſuch, in the moſt ſtrong and affectionate manner; and has entruſted him with the perſons, grace, and glory, of all his people: even ſo know I the Father; or rather, and I know the Father; as he needs muſt, ſince he lay in his boſom, and ſtill does, and knows his nature, perfections, purpoſes, and his whole mind and will; and loves him moſt ardently, which he has ſhown by his coming down from heaven, to do his will; and truſts in him for the accompliſhment of every thing he promiſed unto him: and I lay down my life for the ſheep; which proves him to be the good ſhepherd, ver. 11. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, for my ſheep; which were his, by the Father's gift, and for no other has he laid down his life. The Ethiopic verſion, as before, renders it, or rather explains it, I lay down my life for the redemption of my ſheep.

Ver. 16. And other ſheep I have, &c.] Not diſtinct from thoſe for whom he laid down his life, but from thoſe who were under the Old Teſtament diſpenſation, and who heard not the thieves and robbers that were before Chriſt, ver. 8. others beſides the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, or the elect among the Jews, to whom Chriſt was ſent; and by whom are meant the choſen of God among the Gentiles, who were ſheep, though not called and folded, for the reaſons given in the note on ver. 3. Theſe, though uncalled, belonged to Chriſt; he had an intereſt in them, they were given him by his Father; he had them in his hands, and upon his heart; his eye was upon them, and they were under his notice, inſpection, and care: which are not of this fold; of the Jewiſh nation and church, being aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers to the covenants of promiſe; were as ſheep going aſtray, and were ſcattered about in the ſeveral parts of the world; and were to be redeemed out of every kindred, tongue, people, and nation: them alſo I muſt bring; out of the wilderneſs of the world, from among the men of it, their former ſinful companions, from the folds of ſin and ſatan, and the paſtures of their own righteouſneſs; to himſelf, and into his Father's preſence, to his houſe and ordinances, to a good fold and green paſtures, and at laſt to his heavenly kingdom and glory: and there was a neceſſity of doing all this, partly on account of his Father's will and pleaſure, his purpoſes and decrees, who had reſolved upon it; and partly on account of his own engagements, who had obliged himſelf to do it; as well as becauſe of the caſe and condition of theſe ſheep, who otherwiſe muſt have eternally periſhed: and they ſhall hear my voice; in the Goſpel, not only externally, but internally; which is owing to his powerful and efficacious grace, who quickens them, and cauſes them to hear and live; unſtops their deaf ears, and gives them ears to hear; and opens their hearts, to attend to his word, and gives them an underſtanding of it. The Arabic verſion reads this in connexion with the preceding clauſe, thus, and I muſt bring them alſo to hear my voice; as well as the reſt of the ſheep among the Jews, and therefore the Goſpel was ſent among them: and there ſhall be one fold, and one ſhepherd; one church-ſtate, conſiſting both of Jews and Gentiles; the middle wall of partition being broke down, theſe two coaleſce in one, become one new man, and members of one and the ſame body; for though there may be ſeveral viſible Goſpel churches, yet there is but one kind of church-ſtate, and one general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born, one family to which they all belong; for what reaſons a church is comparable to a fold, ſee the note on ver. 1. And over this fold, or flock, there is but one ſhepherd, Jeſus Chriſt; who is the rightful proprietor, and whoſe own the ſheep are; and who knows how to feed them, and does take care of them; though there are many under ſhepherds, whom he employs in feeding them: in the original text the copulative and is wanting, and the words ſtand thus, one fold, one ſhepherd; which not only expreſſes a peculiar elegance, but anſwers the proverb delivered in the ſame form; and to which agree the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, which render them, and there, or they ſhall be one fold of one ſhepherd; or one flock which belongs to one ſhepherd only; ſee Ezek. xxxiv. 23. and xxxvii. 24.

Ver. 17. Therefore doth my Father love me, &c.] Chriſt was the object of his Father's love from all eternity, and was loved by him on various accounts; firſt and chiefly, as his own ſon, of the ſame nature with him, and equal to him; and alſo as mediator, engaging for, and on the behalf of his choſen people; and likewiſe as he was cloathed with their nature, and even in his ſtate of humiliation; and not only as ſubject to his ordinances, and obedient to his will, and doing what was pleaſing in his ſight, but likewiſe as ſuffering in their room and ſtead, and he loved him on this account; the bruiſing of him was a pleaſure to him, not for the ſake of that itſelf, but becauſe hereby his counſels and decrees were accompliſhed, his covenant fulfilled, and the ſalvation of his people obtained: hence it follows here, becauſe I lay down my life; that is, for the ſheep; to ranſom them from ſin and ſatan, the law, its curſe and condemnation, and from death and hell, wrath, ruin, and deſtruction: and the laying down his life on this account, was not only well pleaſing to his Father, but likewiſe was done with the following view; or at leaſt this was the event of it, that I might take it again; as he did, by raiſing himſelf from the dead, by which he was declared to be the Son of God; and to have made full ſatisfaction to divine juſtice, for the ſins of his people, and therefore roſe again for their juſtification; and to be the victorious conqueror over death, having now aboliſhed it, and having in his hands the keys of it, the power over that, and the grave: and which life he took up again, by his divine power, and as the ſurety of his people, to uſe it for their good; by aſcending to his God and theirs, entering into heaven as their forerunner, appearing in the preſence of God for them, as their advocate, and ever living to make interceſſion for them.

Ver. 18. No man taketh it from me, &c.] It was indeed taken away at the inſtigation of the Jews, and by the order of Pilate, and by means of the Roman ſoldiers, who crucified him; and the former of theſe are often charged with ſlaying him, and killing him, the prince of life; and it is expreſly ſaid, his life is taken from the earth, Acts viii. 33. and yet no man could, nor did take it away, without his Father's will, and determinate counſel and knowledge, by which he was delivered up into the hands of the above perſons, and by which they did to him what they did, or otherwiſe they could have had no power over him; nor could any man, nor did any man, take away his life from him, without his own conſent; he voluntarily ſurrendered himſelf, or he could never have been taken; he went freely to the croſs, or he could never have been led there; he ſuffered himſelf to be nailed to the accurſed tree, and when he hung on it, he could eaſily have diſengaged himſelf, and come down; and when they had him there, they could not have taken away his life, had he not of himſelf given up the Ghoſt, and breathed out his life and ſoul: I lay it down of myſelf; of my own will, or of my own accord, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions render it; which was done with the greateſt patience and meekneſs, reſolution, courage, and magnanimity; and with a full will, and with the greateſt chearfulneſs and alacrity; and that as a ranſom for his people, and that they might live through him: I have power to lay it down; this was not his life as God, but as man; and was ſo his own, as it was not his Father's, and was entirely at his own diſpoſe; for it was the life of that individual human nature, which was united to his divine perſon; and ſo in a ſenſe his, as it was not either the Father's or the Spirit's; and was ſo his own, as ours are not, which are from God, and dependent on him, and entirely to be diſpoſed of by him, and not by ourſelves: but Chriſt the prince of life, had a power of laying down his life of his own accord, as a ranſom price for his ſheep: and I have power to take it again; as he was the Son of God, and truly God, and as the ſurety of his people; having ſatisfied law and juſtice, by his obedience, ſufferings, and death, and for the ends mentioned in the note on the preceding verſe: this commandment have I received of my Father; which may reſpect both branches of his power, but is not the foundation of it, but the reaſon of his exerciſing it; becauſe it was ſo agreeable to his Father's will, which is the ſame with his own, as he is the Son of God, and one with his Father, and equal to him; and what he delights in as mediator, in which capacity he is conſidered as a ſervant; and in which he chearfully became obedient, even unto death, to his Father's command, or in compliance with his will: the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions read, becauſe this commandment have I received of my Father; this is a reaſon why he ſo readily exerted his power, both in laying down his life, and taking it again, becauſe it was his Father's command and will, and which he received from him, with the utmoſt pleaſure; his and his Father's love, good-will, gracious ends and views towards the elect, herein being the ſame.

Ver. 19. There was a diviſion therefore again among the Jews, &c.] As there had been before; ſee ch. vii. 12. and ix. 16. For theſe ſayings; concerning his being the good ſhepherd, and laying down his life for the ſheep, and having both a power to lay it down, and take it up again.

Ver. 20. And many of them ſaid, he hath a devil, and is mad, &c.] It was a notion of the Jews, that madneſs or diſtraction was from the devil, and therefore theſe two are here joined together, having a devil, and being mad: there is a ſpirit which they call Tazazith, and which they ſay [z], is an evil ſpirit that takes away the underſtanding of men; and under the influence of ſuch a dæmon, the Jews thought Chriſt to be: and therefore ſay, why hear ye him? he is a lunatic, he is diſtracted, he is a mad man; how can you bear to hear ſuch ranting blaſphemous ſtuff, which no man in his ſenſes would ever utter? nor is any thing he ſays to be regarded, ſince he is not in his right mind; but is under the power and influence of ſome evil ſpirit, which inſtills theſe wild and frantic notions into him, and puts him upon venting them; but ſurely no ſober man will ever give heed to them.

Ver. 21. Others ſaid, theſe are not the words of him that hath a devil, &c.] No madman or demoniack, one poſſeſſed of a devil, and under the influence of ſatan, would ever talk in ſo divine a manner, and ſpeak ſuch words of truth and ſoberneſs: theſe were ſome of the wiſer ſort, and were well diſpoſed to Chriſt, who reaſoned thus, and they were but few; whereas thoſe that charged him with madneſs and diſtraction, were many, as in the preceding verſe; can a devil open the eyes of the blind? referring to the late inſtance, of Chriſt's curing a man that was blind from his birth; if it was in the power of a devil to do ſuch an action, which it is not, yet it is not in his nature, it is not uſual with him to do any good; but to do all the hurt he can, both to the bodies and ſouls of men: in one of Beza's copies it is read, can one that has a devil, open the eyes of the blind? ſo the Perſic verſion, can a demoniac, &c.? which reading ſuits beſt with what is before ſaid; and then the ſenſe is, can a mad man, one that is a lunatic, one poſſeſſed with the devil, either talk in the manner this man does, or do ſuch wonderful actions he has done, particularly cure a man that was born blind?

Ver. 22. And it was at Jeruſalem the feaſt of the dedication, &c.] That is, of the temple; not as built by Solomon, as Nonnus in his paraphraſe ſuggeſts; or as re-built by Zorobabel, for there were no annual feaſts appointed in commemoration of either of theſe; and beſides, they were neither of them in the winter-time; the dedication of Solomon's temple was in autumn, at the feaſt of tabernacles, about September, 1 Kings viii. 2, 65, 66. and the dedication of the houſe in Zorobabel's time, was in the ſpring, about February, Ezra vi. 15, 16. but this was the feaſt of dedication, appointed by Judas Maccabæus and his brethren, on account of the purging the temple, and renewing the altar, after the profanation of them by Antiochus; which feaſt laſted eight days, and began on the twenty-fifth of the month Ciſleu, which anſwers to part of our December; ſee 1 Maccab. iv. 52, 56, 59. and 2 Maccab. x. 5, 8. and with which the Jewiſh writers agree [a]: the account Maimonides gives [b] of it is this; "when the Iſraelites prevailed over their "enemies and deſtroyed them, it was on the "twenty-fifth of the month Ciſleu; and they went "into the temple and could not find any pure oil "in the ſanctuary, but one vial; and it was not "enough to light but one day only, and they "lighted lamps of it for eight days, until the "olives were ſqueezed, and they brought forth "pure oil: wherefore the wiſe men of that gene"ration ordered, that thoſe eight days beginning "at the twenty-fifth of Ciſleu, ſhould be days of "rejoicing and praiſe; and they lighted lamps at "the doors of their houſes, every night of theſe "eight nights, to ſhew and make known the mi"racle; and theſe days are called, חנוכה, the de"dication; and they are forbidden mourning and "faſting, as the days of purim; and the lighting "of the lamps on them, is a commandment from "the Scribes, as is the reading of the book of "Eſther.——How many lamps do they light at "the feaſt of dedication? the order is, that every houſe ſhould light one lamp, whether the men of the houſe be many, or whether there is but one man in it; but he that honours the command, lights up lamps according to the number of the men of the houſe, a lamp for every one, whether men or women; and he that honours it more, lights up a lamp for every man the firſt night, and adds as he goes, every night a lamp: for inſtance, if there be ten men in the houſe, the firſt night he lights up ten lamps, and on the ſecond night twenty, and on the third night thirty; until he comes to the eighth night, when he lights up fourſcore lamps." Wherefore as Joſephus ſays[c], this feaſt was called φωτα, lights; though he ſeems to aſſign another reaſon of its name, becauſe that proſperity and happineſs appeared to them beyond hope, and unexpected: and though this was only an order of Judas and his brethren, and the congregation of Iſrael, yet the Jews obſerve it as religiouſly, as if it was the appointment of God himſelf, and they don't ſpare to call it ſo; for in the ſervice of this feaſt, they have theſe words[d]; "bleſſed art thou, O Lord our God, the king of the world, who hath ſanctified us by his commandments, and hath commanded us to light the lamp of the dedication; bleſſed art thou, O Lord our God, the king of the world, who did wonders for our fathers on thoſe days, at this time; bleſſed art thou, O Lord our God, the king of the world, who has kept us alive, and preſerved us, and brought us to this time; theſe lamps we light, becauſe of the wonders and marvellous things, and ſalvations, and wars, thou haſt wrought for our fathers on thoſe days, at this time, by the hand of thine holy prieſts—Theſe lamps are holy, we have no power to uſe them, but only to behold them, ſo as to confeſs and praiſe thy great name, for thy miracles, and for thy wonders, and for thy ſalvations." And though this feaſt is ſaid to be at Jeruſalem, yet it was not confined there, as were the other feaſts of the paſſover, pentecoſt, and tabernacles, for this might be kept in any part of the land: mention is made of the feaſt of dedication at Lydda[e], and in other countries; Maimonides[f] ſays "it is a common cuſtom in all our cities in Spain, that all the men of the houſe light up a lamp the firſt night, and add as they go along, a lamp every night, till he lights up on the eighth night eight lamps, whether the men of the houſe be many, or there be but one man." Some have been of opinion, that this feaſt of dedication was on the account of the victory Judith gained over Holophernes, by cutting off his head; or however, that the commemoration of that victory, was a part of this feſtival: in the Vulgate Latin edition of Judith xvi. 31. it is ſaid, "the day of the feſtivity of this victory is received by the Hebrews, into the number of holy days; and is kept by the Jews from that time, to the preſent day." And Sigonius[g] aſſerts, that it is celebrated by the Jews on the 25th day of the month Ciſleu; which is the ſame day the feaſt began, that was inſtituted by Judas Maccabæus, on the above account: and certain it is, that the Jews do make mention of that fact of hers, in the ſervice for the firſt ſabbath of this feaſt[h]; and ſome of their writers would have this fact to be in the times of the Maccabees, though as one of their chronologers[i] obſerves, it appears from the hiſtory of Judith, to have been in the times of Nebuchadnezzar; and there are ſome that ſay it was in the times of Cambyſes, ſon of Cyrus, king of Perſia, and was two or three hundred years before the miracle of the dedication: but he obſerves, that the wiſe men of that age agreed to comprehend the memorial of that wonderful event, with the miracle of the dedication: and ſo R. Leo Modena[k] ſays, "they have a tradition, that in ordaining this feaſt to be kept, they had an eye alſo upon that famous exploit performed by Judith upon Holophernes; although many are of opinion, that this happened not at this time of the year; and that they make a commemoration of that piece of gallantry of hers now, becauſe ſhe was of the ſtock of the Maccabees." But that can't be, ſince ſhe muſt be ſome hundreds of years before them; wherefore others make mention of another Judith, a daughter of one of the Maccabees, who performed a like exploit upon Nicanor, a general of Demetrius's army: to which R. Gedaliah has reſpect, when he ſays[l], "the wiſe men agreed to comprehend together in the joy of the feaſt of dedication, the affair of Judith, ſeeing there was another Judith, from her that killed Holophernes, a daughter of the Maccabees." But it is not clear that there was any ſuch woman, nor that Nicanor was ſlain by one; and beſides, he was killed on the thirteenth of Adar, and that day was ordained to be kept yearly on that account, 1 Maccab. vii. 43, 49. 2 Maccab. xv. 36. and the month of Adar anſwers to part of February. And it was winter; for the month Ciſleu anſwers to our November and December; ſo that the twenty-fifth of that month might be about the tenth of December, and the Jews reckon part of that month winter, and it muſt be the part in which this feaſt was; they ſay[m], "half Ciſleu, Tebet, and half Shebet, are, חורף, winter:" ſo that the Evangeliſt might with propriety ſay, according to the ſenſe of the Jewiſh nation, that it was winter; though it was but juſt entered, even not more than ten days: the reaſon why this is obſerved, may be for what follows.

wherefore doſt thou ſteal away our minds with words? ſo Jacob when he went away privately, without the knowledge of Laban, is ſaid to ſteal away the heart of Laban, as it is in the Hebrew text, in Gen. xxxi. 20, 26 *. In like manner the Jews charge Chriſt with taking away their ſoul, or ſtealing away their heart, or hiding himſelf from them; not telling them plainly, who he was: therefore ſay they, if thou be the Chriſt, tell us plainly; freely, boldly, openly, in expreſs words; this they ſaid, not as deſirous of knowing who he was, or for the ſake of information, but in order to inſnare him; that ſhould he ſay he was not the Chriſt, as they might hope he would, for fear of them, now they had got him by himſelf, hemmed him in, it would then leſſen his credit among the people; and ſhould he ſay he was the Meſſiah, they would have whereof to accuſe him to the Roman governour, as an enemy to Cæſar, as one that ſet up for king of the Jews.

Ver. 25. Jeſus anſwered them, I told you, and ye believed not, &c.] He had often ſaid, what amounted to it, in his miniſtry and doctrine; as that God was his father, and he was the light of the world, and the good ſhepherd, and the like; but they gave no heed nor credit to his words, even though he told them, that unleſs they believed he was ſuch a perſon, they ſhould die in their ſins: the works that I do in my Father's name, they bear witneſs of me; ſuch as healing the ſick, diſpoſſeſſing devils, cleanſing lepers, giving ſight to the blind, cauſing the deaf to hear, the dumb to ſpeak, and the lame to walk, and raiſing the dead to life; ſuggeſting, that beſides his words, his doctrine and miniſtry, they had his miracles before them, which plainly ſhowed who he was; ſo that they need not have been in any doubt of mind, or ſuſpence about him; nor had they any reaſon to complain of his hiding himſelf from them, or depriving them of the knowledge of him.

Ver. 26. But ye believe not, &c.] In me, as the Meſſiah: becauſe ye are not of my ſheep; they were not among the ſheep given him by his Father, were they, they would have come to him; that is, have believed in him, according to John vi. 37. they were not the choſen of God, predeſtinated unto eternal life; for as many as are ordained of God to eternal happineſs, do believe in God's own time, Acts xiii. 48. but theſe not being the elect of God, had not the faith of God's elect. Chriſt, as the omniſcient God, knew this, that they were not the choſen of God; for he was preſent, when the names of God's elect were written in the book of life; had they been his ſheep, he muſt have known them, for he knows all the ſheep, and calls them by name; had they been given him by the Father, he muſt have known it, and would have owned them as ſuch; but ſo it was not, and therefore they were left to hardneſs and unbelief: as I ſaid unto you; which ſeems to refer to what follows, ſince he had ſaid before, that the ſheep hear the voice of the ſhepherd, and follow him, and that he knows them, ver. 4, 14. This clauſe is omitted in the Vulgate Latin verſion, and in Nonnus, but is in the Greek copies, and Oriental verſions.

Ver. 27. My ſheep hear my voice, &c.] The voice of Chriſt in his Goſpel, both externally and internally; ſee the notes on ver. 4, 16. and ſince therefore theſe Jews did not, it was a plain caſe they were not of his ſheep: and I know them; ſee the note on ver. 14. but Chriſt knew not theſe as the elect of God, or as the Father's gift to him, and therefore they could not be his ſheep: and they follow me; both in the exerciſe of grace, and in the diſcharge of duty, and whitherſoever he the good ſhepherd leads them; ſee the notes on ver. 3, 4. But now, whereas theſe Jews did not follow Chriſt, but turned their backs on him, and rejected him, it was notorious that they were none of his ſheep; but both happy and ſafe are thoſe perſons, that are the ſheep of Chriſt, as appears from what is next ſaid of them.

Ver. 28. And I give unto them eternal life, &c.] Chriſt gives eternal life to his ſheep, or people now; he gives them a ſpiritual life, or a life of grace, which iſſues in eternal life; he gives them himſelf, who is the true God and eternal life, and whoever has him, has life; he gives them the knowledge of himſelf, which is life eternal; and he gives them his righteouſneſs, which is their juſtification of life, or what entitles them to eternal life; and he gives them the foretaſtes of it, in faith and hope, in the enjoyment of himſelf, and the diſcoveries of his love; he gives them the earneſt and pledge of it, his own Spirit; and they have this life in him as their repreſentative, and it is hid with him in God, and is ſafe and ſecure for them; and he will actually give it to them in their own perſons, to be for ever enjoyed by them; and becauſe of the certainty of it, he is ſaid to do it now: this is a pure gift, it is of grace, and not of works; and it is in the gift of Chriſt as mediator, who has power to give it to as many as the Father has given him: and they ſhall never periſh; though they were loſt in Adam, and in a periſhing condition in themſelves, during their ſtate of unregeneracy; in which condition they ſee themſelves to be, when convinced by the Spirit of God; and come as perſons ready to periſh to Chriſt, as a Saviour, reſolving, that if they periſh, they'll periſh at his feet: and though after converſion, they are ſubject to many falls and ſpiritual declenſions, and loſe their peace, joy, and comfort, and imagine their ſtrength and hope are periſhed, or at leaſt fear they ſhall one day periſh through one ſin, or ſnare, or temptation or another, yet they ſhall never periſh in ſuch ſenſe as the wicked will; they'll not be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord, and the glory of his power: neither ſhall any pluck them out of my hand; Chriſt's ſheep are in his hands, being put there by God the Father, both as an inſtance of his love to Chriſt, and them; and this was done from all eternity, even when they were choſen in him; ſo that they were in the hands of Chriſt, before they were in the loins of Adam; and were preſerved in him, notwithſtanding Adam's fall, and through the ruins of it. To be in the hands of Chriſt, is to be high in his eſteem and favour; the ſaints are a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of their God; they are a ſignet on his right-hand that ſhall never be plucked off; they are engraven on the palms of his hands: to be in the hands of Chriſt, is to be in his poſſeſſion, and at his diſpoſe, as all the elect of God are; and to be under his guidance, care, and protection, as they be; they are fed according to the integrity of his heart, and guided by the ſkilfulneſs of his hands; they are always under his care and watchful eye, who protects them from all their enemies, and hides them in the hollow of his hand: hence, becauſe they are ſo, they are called the ſheep of his hand, Pſal. xcv. 7. And none ſhall ever pluck them from thence; no man can do it, not any falſe teacher can remove them from Chriſt, by all the art and cunning he is maſter of; nor any violent perſecutor, by all the force and power he can uſe; nor can any ſin, or ſnare, or temptation, draw them out of Chriſt's hands; nor any adverſity whatever, ſeparate them from him; they muſt be ſafe, and always abide there, who are in the hands of Chriſt; for his hands have laid the foundations of the heavens and the earth, they graſp the whole univerſe, and hold all things together; and who then can pluck any out of theſe hands? Moreover, Chriſt as mediator, has all power in heaven and earth; and even as man, he is the man of God's right-hand, made ſtrong for himſelf.

Ver. 29. My Father which gave them me, &c.] So the ſheep came to be Chriſt's, and to be in his hand; the Father gave them to him, put them into his hands, and made them his care and charge: is greater than all; than all gods, than all beings, than all creatures, angels and men, and than all the enemies of his people; this muſt be allowed: the Vulgate Latin verſion, and ſo ſome of the ancients read, what my Father gave to me, is greater than all; meaning, that the church given to him, and built on him, is ſtronger than all its enemies: and none is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand; ſo that theſe ſheep have a double ſecurity; they are in the hands of Chriſt, and they are in the hands of the Father of Chriſt; wherefore could it be thought, which ought not to be, that they could be plucked out of Chriſt's hands, yet it can never be imagined, that any can pluck them out of the hands of God the Father; and there is no more reaſon to think that they can be plucked out of the hands of the one, than there is that they can be plucked out of the hands of the other, as is clear from what follows in the next verſe; ſee Wiſdom iii. 1.

Ver. 30. I and my Father are one.] Not in perſon, for the Father muſt be a diſtinct perſon from the Son, and the Son a diſtinct perſon from the Father; and which is further manifeſt, from the uſe of the verb plural, I and my Father, εσμεν, we are one; that is, in nature and eſſence, and perfections, particularly in power; ſince Chriſt is ſpeaking of the impoſſibility of plucking any of the ſheep, out of his own and his Father's hands; giving this as a reaſon for it, their unity of nature, and equality of power; ſo that it muſt be as impracticable to pluck them out of his hands, as out of his Father's, becauſe he is equal with God the Father, and the one God with him. The Jew [p] objects, that "if the ſenſe of this expreſſion is, that the Father and the Son are one, as the Nazarenes underſtand and believe it, it will be found that Jeſus himſelf deſtroys this ſaying, as it is written in Mark xiii. 32. for ſaith Jeſus, that day and that hour, there is none knoweth, not the angels, nor the Son, but the Father only; lo, theſe words ſhew, that the Father and the Son are not one, ſince the Son does not know what the Father knows." But it ſhould be obſerved, that Chriſt is both the Son of God, and the ſon of man, as the chriſtians believe; as he is the Son of God, he lay in the boſom of his Father, and was privy to all his ſecrets, to all his thoughts, purpoſes, and deſigns; and as ſuch, he knew the day and hour of judgment, being God omniſcient; and in this reſpect is one with the Father, having the ſame perfections of power, knowledge, &c. but then as the ſon of man, he is not of the ſame nature, and has not the ſame knowledge; his knowledge of things was derived, communicated, and not infinite; and did not reach to all things at once, but was capable of being increaſed, as it was: and it is with regard to him as the ſon of man, that Jeſus ſpeaks of himſelf in Mark; whereas he is here treating of his divine ſonſhip, and almighty power; wherefore conſidered in the relation of the Son of God, and as poſſeſſed of the ſame perfections with God, he and his Father are one; though as man, he is different from him, and knew not ſome things he did: ſo that there is no contradiction between the words of Chriſt in one place, and in the other; nor is he chargeable with any blaſphemy againſt God, or any arrogance in himſelf, by aſſuming deity to himſelf; nor deſerving of puniſhment, even to be deprived of human life, as the Jew ſuggeſts; nor is what he produces from a Socinian writer, of any moment, that theſe words do not neceſſarily ſuppoſe, that the Father and the Son are of the ſame eſſence; ſince it may be ſaid of two men, that they are one, and yet are not the ſame man, but one is one man, and the other another; for we don't ſay they are one and the ſame perſon, which does not follow from their being of one and the ſame nature, but that they are one God, and two diſtinct perſons.

Ver. 31. Then the Jews took up ſtones again to ſtone him.] As they had done before, ch. viii. 59. ſee the note there.

Ver. 32. Jeſus anſwered them, many good works, &c.] Such as healing the ſick, and all manner of diſeaſes; diſpoſſeſſing devils, cleanſing lepers, giving ſight to the blind, cauſing the dumb to ſpeak, the deaf to hear, and the lame to walk; which were not only works of power, but of mercy and beneficence; and therefore are called good works, as well as they were great and miraculous ones: have I ſhewed you from my Father; which Chriſt did in the name, and by the command and authority of the Father; who gave him them to do, and did them by him; and which were evident and notorious, and were done ſo openly and publickly, that they could not be denied: for which of theſe works do ye ſtone me? ſuggeſting, that his publick life had been a continued ſeries of ſuch kind actions to the ſons of men, and it could be for nothing elſe ſurely, that they took up ſtones to ſtone him; wherefore the part they acted, was a moſt ungrateful, cruel, and barbarous one.

Ver. 33. The Jews anſwered him, ſaying, &c.] As follows; for a good work we ſtone thee not: they could not deny that he had done many good works; this was too barefaced to be contradicted; yet they cared not to own them; and though they induſtriouſly concealed their reſentment at them, yet they were very much gravelled and made uneaſy by them, but choſe to give another reaſon for their ſtoning him: but for blaſphemy; which required death by ſtoning, according to Lev. xxiv. 16. and according to the Jews oral law [q]: and becauſe that thou, being a man, makeſt thyſelf God; which they concluded very rightly, from his ſaying ver. 30. that God was his father, and that he and his Father were one; that is, in nature and eſſence, and therefore he muſt be God; but then this was no blaſphemy, but a real truth, as is hereafter made to appear; nor is there any contradiction between his being man, and being God; he is truly and really man, but then he is not a mere man, as the Jews ſuggeſted; but is truly God, as well as man, and is both God and man in one perſon, the divine and human nature being united in him, of which they were ignorant: two miſtakes they ſeem to be guilty of in this account; one that Chriſt was a mere man, the other that he made himſelf God, or aſſumed deity to himſelf, which did not belong to him, and therefore muſt be guilty of blaſphemy; neither of which were true: the phraſe is uſed by the Jews, of others who have taken upon them the name and title of God; as of Hiram king of Tyre, of whom they ſay, שעשה עצמו אלוה, that he made himſelf God [r]; the ſame they ſay of Nebuchadnezzar; and the modern Jews ſtill continue the ſame charge againſt Jeſus, as their anceſtors did, and expreſs it in the ſame language, and ſay of him, that he was a man, and ſet himſelf up for God [s].

Ver. 34. Jeſus anſwered them, is it not written in your law, &c.] In the law which was given unto them, of which they boaſted, and pretended to underſtand, and interpret, even in Pſal. lxxxii. 6. for the law includes not only the pentateuch, but all the books of the Old Teſtament: it is an obſervation of one of the Jewiſh doctors [t], that "with the wiſe men of bleſſed memory, it is found in many places that the word law, comprehends the prophets and the hagiographa." Among which laſt ſtands the book of Pſalms; and this may be confirmed by a paſſage out of the Talmud [u]; it is aſked, "from whence does the reſurrection of the dead appear, מן התורה, out of the law?" It is anſwered, "as it is ſaid in Pſal. lxxxiv. 4. Bleſſed are they that dwell in thy houſe, they will ſtill praiſe thee, Selah; they do praiſe thee, it is not ſaid, but they will praiſe thee; from hence is a proof of the reſurrection of the dead, out of the law." The ſame queſtion is again put, and then Iſa. lii. 8. is cited, and the like obſervation made upon it. Moreover, this is a way of ſpeaking uſed by the Jews, when they introduce another citing a paſſage of ſcripture thus [w], הלא כתיב בתורתכם, is it not written in your law, Deut. iv. 9. only take heed to thyſelf, &c. ſo here the ſcripture follows, I ſaid, ye are Gods? which is ſpoken to civil magiſtrates, ſo called, becauſe of their authority and power; and becauſe they do, in ſome ſort, repreſent the divine majeſty, in the government of nations and kingdoms. Many of the Jewiſh writers by gods, underſtand the angels. The Targum paraphraſes the words thus, "I ſaid ye are accounted as angels, as the angels on high, all of you;" and to this ſenſe, ſome of their commentators interpret it. Jarchi's Gloſs is, ye are Gods; that is, angels; for when I gave the law to you, it was on this account, that the angel of death might not any more rule over you: the note of Aben Ezra is, and the children of the moſt high; as angels; and the ſenſe is, your ſoul is as the ſoul of angels: hence the [x] Jew charges Chriſt with ſeeking refuge in words, that will not profit, or be any help to him, when he cites theſe words, ſhewing that magiſtrates are called Gods, when the ſenſe is only, that they are like to the angels in reſpect of their ſouls: but let it be obſerved, that it is not ſaid, ye are as Gods, as in Gen. iii. 5. but ye are Gods; not like unto them only, but are in ſome ſenſe Gods; and beſides, to ſay that they are like to angels, with reſpect to their ſouls, which come from above, is to ſay no more of the judges of the earth, than what may be ſaid of every man: to which may be added, that this objector himſelf owns, that judges are called, אלהים, Gods, as in Exod. xxii. 9. the cauſe of both parties ſhall come before, אלהים, the judges; and that even the word is uſed in this ſenſe in this very pſalm, from whence theſe words are cited, ver. 1. he judgeth among אלהים, the Gods; and both Kimchi and Ben Melech, interpret this text itſelf in the ſame way, and obſerve, that judges are called Gods, when they judge truly and aright: all which is ſufficient to juſtify our Lord, in the citation of this paſſage, and the uſe he makes of it.

Ver. 35. If he called them Gods, unto whom the word of God came, &c.] The Syriac verſion reads, becauſe the word of God came to them; either the divine Logos, the eſſential Word, the Son of God, who appeared to Moſes, and made him a God to Pharaoh, and who appointed rulers and magiſtrates among the Jews; and who is the king of kings, and lord of lords, from whom all receive their power and dominion: this ſenſe is favoured by the Ethiopic verſion, which renders it, if he called them Gods to whom God appeared, the word of God was with them: or elſe the commiſſion from God, authorizing them to act in the capacity of rulers and governours, is here meant; or rather the word of God, which in the paſſage of ſcripture cited, calls them ſo, as it certainly does: and the ſcripture cannot be broken; or be made null and void; whatever that ſays is true, there's no contradicting it, or objecting to it: it is a Jewiſh way of ſpeaking, much uſed in the Talmud [y]; when one doctor has produced an argument, or inſtance, in any point of debate, another ſays, איכא למיפרך, it may be broken, or objected to, in ſuch and ſuch a manner, and be refuted: but the ſcripture can't be broken, that is not to be objected to, there can be no confutation of that.

Ver. 36. Say ye of him whom the Father hath ſanctified, &c.] Not by making his human nature pure and holy, and free from all ſin, and by beſtowing the holy Spirit on him without meaſure, though both true; but theſe were upon, or after his miſſion into the world; whereas ſanctification here, deſigns ſomething previous to that, and reſpects the eternal ſeparation of him to his office, as mediator, in the counſel, purpoſes, and decrees of God, and in the covenant of his grace, being preordained thereunto, before the foundation of the world; which ſuppoſes his eternal exiſtence as a divine perſon, and tacitly proves his true and proper deity: and ſent into the world; in human nature, to obtain eternal redemption and ſalvation for his people; to ſave them from ſin, ſatan, the world, law, hell and death, which none but God could do: thou blaſphemeſt, becauſe I ſaid, I am the Son of God; for what he had ſaid in ver. 30. is equivalent to it; and in it he was rightly underſtood by the Jews, and what he here and afterwards ſays confirms it: the argument is what the Jews call, קל וחומר, from the leſſer to the greater, and ſtands thus; that if mere frail mortal men, and ſome of them wicked men, being made rulers and judges in the earth, are called Gods, by God himſelf, to whom the word of God came in time, and conſtituted them Gods, or governours, but for a time; and this is a fact ſtands recorded in ſcripture, which cannot be denied or diſproved, then ſurely it cannot be blaſphemy in Chriſt, to aſſert himſelf to be the Son of God, who exiſted as a divine perſon from all eternity; and was ſo early ſet apart to the office of prophet, prieſt, and king; and in the fulneſs of time, was ſent into this world, to be the author of eternal ſalvation to the ſons of men.

Ver. 37. If I do not the works of my Father, &c.] Not only what the Father had given him to finiſh, and which he wrought by him as man, but ſuch as were as great as the Father had done, and were equal to them; and which could not be done by any, but by the Father, or by one that is equal with him: believe me not; Chriſt appeals to his miracles as proofs of his deity, ſonſhip, and Meſſiah, and deſires no other credit than what they demand; ſee Matt. xi. 3, 4, 5. John v. 36.

Ver. 38. But if I do, &c.] Works, which none but God can do: though ye believe not me; what Chriſt ſaid in his doctrine and miniſtry, though they paid no regard to that, and did not receive his teſtimony, on the credit of him the teſtifier, as they ought to have done: believe the works; not only that they are true and real, and not imaginary and deluſory; but for the ſake of them believe the above aſſertion, that Chriſt is the Son of God, he and his Father being one; or take ſuch notice of theſe works and miracles, conſider the nature, evidence, and importance of them, and the divine power that attends them, that ye may know and believe, that the Father is in me, and I in him; or in the Father, as one of Beza's exemplars; the Vulgate Latin, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read; or in my Father, as read the Syriac and Arabic verſions; that they are one in nature, diſtinct in perſon, equal in power, and have a mutual inhabitation and communion in the divine eſſence; all which is manifeſt, by doing the ſame works, and which are out of the reach and power of any mere creature.

Ver. 39. Therefore they ſought again to take him, &c.] Not to take away his life by ſtoning him, as before, in the manner the furious zealots did, and was the part they were about to act juſt now; but to lay hold upon him, and bring him before the Sanhedrim, as they had done in ch. v. he being ſo far from clearing himſelf from the charge of blaſphemy, they had brought againſt him, that in their opinion he had greatly ſtrengthened it; and they thought they had now ſufficient proof and evidence to convict him as a blaſphemer, in their high court of judicature; and therefore attempted to lay hands on him, and bring him thither: but he eſcaped out of their hand; either by withdrawing from them in ſome private way; or by open force, exerting his power, and obliging them on every ſide to fall back, and give way to him; or by rendering himſelf inviſible to them; and this he did, not through fear of death, but becauſe his time was not yet come, and he had other work to do, before he ſuffered and died.

Ver. 40. And went away again beyond Jordan, &c.] Where he had been before; and whither he went; not merely for the ſecurity of his perſon, much leſs to indulge himſelf in eaſe, but to preach the Goſpel, work miracles, and bring many ſouls to believe on him, as did: and he went into the place where John at firſt baptized; that is, Bethabara; where he baptized before he was at Enon, near Salim, John i. 28. and iii. 23. and was the place where Chriſt himſelf was baptized, and where John bore ſuch a teſtimony of him: and there he abode; how long is not certain, perhaps till he went to Bethany, on account of raiſing Lazarus from the dead.

Ver. 41. And many reſorted to him, &c.] From all the parts adjacent, having heard of his being there, and of the fame of him; and many of them doubtleſs perſonally knew him; theſe came to him, ſome very likely to be healed by him, others to ſee his perſon and miracles, and others to hear him preach: and ſaid, John did no miracle; though it was now three years ago, yet the name, miniſtry, and baptiſm of John, were freſh in the memory of men in thoſe parts; and what they ſay one to another, was not to leſſen the character of John, but to exalt Jeſus Chriſt, and to give a reaſon why they ſhould receive and embrace him; for if John, who did no miracle, who only taught and baptized, and directed men to the Meſſiah, was juſtly reckoned a very great perſon, and his doctrine was received, and his baptiſm was ſubmitted to, then much more ſhould this illuſtrious perſon be attended to; who beſides his divine doctrine, did ſuch great and amazing miracles; to which they add, though John did no miracle to confirm his miſſion, miniſtry, and baptiſm, but all things that John ſpake of this man, were true; as that he was greater than he, was the Lamb of God, yea, the Son of God, the Saviour of the world, and true Meſſiah, who ſhould baptize men with the Holy Ghoſt and with fire.

Ver. 42. And many believed on him there.] Thro' the doctrine he preached, the miracles he wrought, and through comparing theſe things with what John had ſaid of him: this ſhows the reaſon of Chriſt's leaving Jeruſalem, and coming into theſe parts; there were others that were to believe in his name: the word there, is left out in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Perſic verſions.

CHAP. XI.

Ver. 1. NOW a certain man was ſick, &c.] Very likely of a fever; Nonnus calls it a morbid fire, a hot and burning diſeaſe: named Lazarus of Bethany; for his name, which the Ethiopic verſion reads Eleazar, and the Perſic verſion Gazarus, ſee the note on Luke xvi. 24. and for the place Bethany, ſee the notes on Matt. xxi. 1, 17. The town of Mary and her ſiſter Martha; where they were both born, as well as Lazarus, or at leaſt where they dwelt; of the former, ſome account is given in the next verſe, and of the latter, ſee the note on Luke x. 38.

Ver. 2. It was that Mary which anointed the Lord with ointment, &c.] Not the woman in Luke vii. 37. as ſome have thought, whoſe name is not mentioned, and which hiſtory is not related by John at all; but Mary in John xii. 3. who is both mentioned by name, and along with Lazarus her brother, and with whom all the circumſtances of the affair ſuit; and though the fact was not yet done, yet John writing many years after it was done, and when it was well known, proleptically, and in a parentheſis, takes notice of it here: and wiped his feet with her hair; inſtead of a napkin, after ſhe had anointed them with oil; ſee the notes on Luke vii. 37. and on John xii. 3. Whoſe brother Lazarus was ſick; this is obſerved, to ſhow how well they were all acquainted with Chriſt, and affected to him.

Ver. 3. Therefore his ſiſters ſent unto him, &c.] Both the ſiſters of Lazarus, Mary and Martha, ſent to Jeſus; they did not go themſelves, being women, and the place where Jeſus was, was at ſome diſtance; and beſides, it was neceſſary they ſhould abide at home, to attend their brother in his ſickneſs, and therefore they ſent a meſſenger, or meſſengers to Chriſt, ſaying, Lord, behold, he whom thou loveſt is ſick; for it ſeems that Lazarus was in a very ſingular manner loved by Chriſt, as man, as John the beloved diſciple was; and this is the rather put into the meſſage by the ſiſters, to engage Jeſus to come to his aſſiſtance; and they were very right in applying to Chriſt in this time of need, who is the phyſician, both of the bodies and ſouls of men; and are greatly to be commended both for their modeſty and piety, in not preſcribing to Chriſt, what ſhould be done in this caſe: and it may be further obſerved, that ſuch who are the peculiar objects of Chriſt's love, are attended in this life with bodily ſickneſs, diſorders, and diſeaſes, which are ſent unto them, not in a way of vindictive wrath, but in love, and as fatherly chaſtizements; which as they are deſigned, ſo they are over-ruled for their good; and are to be conſidered, not as inſtances of wrath, but as tokens of love.

Ver. 4. When Jeſus heard that, &c.] That his friend Lazarus was ſick, he ſaid; either to his diſciples, or to the meſſenger or meſſengers that brought the account to him, and that on purpoſe to yield ſome relief to the afflicted family when it ſhould be reported to them: this ſickneſs is not unto death; it was to iſſue in death, but not in death which was to continue, or under which Lazarus was to continue till the general reſurrection; for tho' he ſhould die, yet he ſhould be ſo quickly reſtored again to life, that it ſcarcely deſerved the name of death. The Jews diſtinguiſh between ſickneſs and ſickneſs; there are ſome that are ſick, the greater part of whom are, לחיים, for life; and there are others that are ſick, the greater part of whom are, למיתה, for death [z], or are ſick unto death, whoſe ſickneſs iſſues in death; but this of Lazarus's was not to be unto death, at leaſt not finally: but for the glory of God; of his power and goodneſs in raiſing him again: that the Son of God might be glorified thereby; that is, that his glory, as the Son of God, might be made manifeſt in the reſurrection of him from the dead; ſee ch. ii. 11.

Ver. 5. Now Jeſus loved Martha, and her ſiſter, and Lazarus.] Not only with an everlaſting love, a love of complacency and delight, an unchangeable one, and which never varies, nor will ever end, with which he loves all his people alike; but with a very great human affection, and which was very ſingular and peculiar to them: theſe were the intimate friends, and familiar acquaintance of Chriſt, whom he often viſited, at whoſe houſe he frequently was when in thoſe parts; they were very hoſpitable to him; they kindly received him into their houſes, and generouſly entertained him, and which he returned in love to them: hence Nonnus paraphraſes the words, "Jeſus loved the women, φιλοξεινους, "who were lovers of hoſpitality, by the law of "kindneſs."

Ver. 6. When he had heard therefore that he was ſick, &c.] Tho' Chriſt had heard that Lazarus was ſick, and by ſuch good hands, a meſſage being ſent him by his ſiſters, to acquaint him with it; and tho' he had ſuch a very great love for him, and the whole family, yet he did not go directly to him, and to his aſſiſtance: but he abode two days ſtill in the ſame place where he was; at Bethabara, beyond Jordan; this he did to try the faith and patience of the ſiſters of Lazarus, and that the miracle of raiſing him from the dead might be the more manifeſt, and his own glory might be the more illuſtrious, and yet equal, if not greater tenderneſs and love be ſhown to his friends.

Ver. 7. Then after that, &c.] The next day, the third day after he had heard of Lazarus's ſickneſs: ſaith he to his diſciples, let us go into Judea again; for the country beyond Jordan was diſtinguiſhed from Judea; ſee Matt. iv. 25. and the note there.

Ver. 8. His diſciples ſaid unto him, maſter, &c.] Addreſſing him very reverently, and with great concern for his ſafety, as well as their own: the Jews of late, or but now, ſought to ſtone thee; as they had attempted to do twice in a very little time; ſee ch. viii. 59. and x. 31. and goeſt thou thither again? where there are ſo many enemies, and ſo much danger, and but little hope of doing much good; whereas here he was among his friends, and in ſafety, and very uſeful.

Ver. 9. Jeſus anſwered, are there not twelve hours in the day? &c.] So the Jews reckoned, and ſo they commonly ſay [a], שתים עשרה שעות הוי היום, twelve hours are a day, or a day conſiſts of twelve hours, which they divided into four parts, each part conſiſting of three hours. This was a matter well known, and Chriſt puts the queſtion as ſuch, it being what might be eaſily anſwered, and at once aſſented to: if any man walk in the day; within any of the twelve hours, even in the laſt of them, he ſtumbleth not, at any ſtone or ſtumbling-block in the way, becauſe he ſeeth the light of this world; the ſun in the horizon not being as yet ſet, by the light of which he ſees what is before him, and avoids it; ſee the note on ch. viii. 12. So our Lord intimates, that as yet it was day with him, his time of life was not expired; and ſo, as yet, it was a time of walking and working; nor did he fear any danger he was expoſed to, or any ſnares that were laid for him, ſince he could not be hurt by any, nor his life taken from him before his time.

Ver. 10. But if a man walk in the night, &c.] After the ſun is ſet, and there is no light in the air and heavens to direct him: he ſtumbleth; at every thing that lies in the way, becauſe there is no light in him; there being none from above communicated to him. So our Lord ſuggeſts, that when the time of his death was come, he ſhould then fall a prey into the hands of his enemies, but till then he ſhould walk ſafe and ſecure; nor had he any thing to fear from them, and therefore could go into Judea again, with intrepidity and unconcern.

Ver. 11. Theſe things ſaid he, &c.] In anſwer to his diſciples, and made a pauſe. And after that he ſaith unto them, our friend Lazarus ſleepeth; meaning, that he was dead; in which ſenſe the word is often uſed in the Old Teſtament, and in the common dialect of the Jews, and frequently in their writings; and eſpecially it is ſo uſed of good men: and it is an obſervation of theirs [b], that "it "is uſual to ſay of the righteous, that there is no "death in them, אלא שינה, but ſleep;" ſee the notes on Matt. ix. 24. 1 Cor. xv. 18, 20. 1 Theſſ. iv. 13, 14. but I go, that I may awake him out of ſleep; that is, to raiſe him from the dead, for the reſurrection of the dead is expreſſed by awaking; ſee Pſ. xvii. 15. Iſ. xix. 26. Dan. xii. 2. which for Chriſt to do, was as eaſy as to awake a man out of natural ſleep: theſe words reſpecting Lazarus's ſleeping and awaking, expreſs both the omniſcience and omnipotence of Chriſt; his omniſcience, that he ſhould know that Lazarus was dead, when at ſuch a diſtance from him; and his omnipotence, that he could raiſe him from the dead; and yet his great modeſty to ſignify it in ſuch covert language, tho' not difficult to be underſtood.

Ver. 12. Then ſaid his diſciples, Lord, if he ſleep, &c.] Soundly, quietly, and comfortably, and takes reſt in it: he ſhall do well; or be ſaved from the diſeaſe; he will be delivered from it; he'll recover out of it; it is a ſign the diſtemper is leaving him, and he is growing better, and will be reſtored to his health again: the Ethiopic verſion renders it by many words, he will be well, and will awake, and will live. Sound ſleep is a ſign of health. This they ſaid to put off their maſter from going into Judea, fearing the danger he would be expoſed unto.

Ver. 13. Howbeit Jeſus ſpake of his death, &c.] Under the figurative phraſe of ſleeping: but they thought that he had ſpoken of taking of reſt in ſleep; in a literal and natural ſenſe.

Ver. 14. Then ſaid Jeſus unto them plainly, &c.] Without a figure, when he perceived they did not underſtand him, and yet it was a very eaſy and uſual metaphor which he had made uſe of; but ſuch was the preſent ſtupidity of their minds, that they did not take in his meaning: wherefore, without reproaching them with it, he ſaid to them in ſo many words, Lazarus is dead. The Perſic verſion reads, Lazarus is dead indeed, as he really was.

Ver. 15. And I am glad for your ſakes, that I was not there, &c.] At Bethany, before he died, or when he died; becauſe he might have been prevailed upon thro' the ſolicitations of his dear friends, Mary and Martha, and thro' tender affection to Lazarus, to have prevented his death, by rebuking the diſtemper, and reſtoring him to health, or to have raiſed him immediately as ſoon as he was dead; and in either caſe the miracle would not have been ſo illuſtrious, nor have been ſuch a means of confirming the faith of his diſciples, as now it would be: to the intent ye may believe; more ſtrongly, that he was the Son of God, and true Meſſiah: nevertheleſs, let us go unto him; to Lazarus, to the grave where he he lies: the Syriac verſion reads, let us go there; to Bethany, where he lived, and died, and now lay interred.

Ver. 16. Then ſaid Thomas, who is called Didymus, &c.] The former was his Hebrew name, and the latter his Greek name, and both ſignify a twin; and perhaps he may be ſo called becauſe he was one: the ſame ſaid unto his fellow-diſciples; the other eleven; tho' the Ethiopic verſion reads, to the next of the diſciples; as if he addreſſed himſelf only to one of them, to him that was neareſt to him: let us alſo go, that we may die with him; either with Lazarus, as ſome think, or rather with Chriſt; for he, and the reſt of the diſciples, imagined that Chriſt, by returning to Judea, would be in great danger of loſing his life; yea, by this expreſſion they ſeem to be poſitive of it, that it was a matter out of queſtion with them, that he would die, ſhould he venture there again: and therefore Thomas ſtirs up his fellow-diſciples to go along with him, and die all together; ſignifying, that they ſhould have but little comfort when he was taken from them: but both Thomas, and the reſt, were differently minded, when Chriſt was apprehended, for they all forſook him and fled, and provided for their own ſafety, and left him to die alone, Matt. xxvii. 56.

Ver. 17. Then when Jeſus came, &c.] The Alexandrian copy, and all the Oriental verſions add, to Bethany; tho' it ſeems by what follows, that he was not come to the town itſelf, but near it; and it looks as if it was not far from Lazarus's grave; and it was uſual to bury without the city; and here he had intelligence of his, Lazarus's death, and how long he had been dead: for he found he had lien in the grave four days already; it is very likely that he died the ſame day that Mary and Martha ſent to Chriſt to acquaint him with his ſickneſs, and the ſame day he was buried; for the Jews uſed to bury the ſame day a perſon died, and ſo they do now: and after Chriſt had this account, he ſtayed two days where he was, and on the third day he propoſed to his diſciples to go into Judea; and very probably on that, or on the next day, which was the fourth, they ſet out and came to Bethany; ſee the note on ver. 39.

Ver. 18. Now Bethany was nigh unto Jeruſalem, &c.] Which was a reaſon why there were ſo many of the Jews come there to condole the two ſiſters upon the death of their brother; and by this means the following miracle became more known there: it was about fifteen furlongs off; that is, about two miles, for ſeven furlongs and a half made a Jewiſh mile, as appears from one of their canons [c], which runs thus: "they don't ſpread nets for doves, except it be diſtant from an habitable place, "שלשים ריס, thirty furlongs;" which the commentators ſay [d] are four miles: and ſtill more expreſsly it is ſaid [e], that "between Jeruſalem and "Zuck, (the place where the ſcape goat was "had) there were ten tents, and ninety furlongs, "שבעה ומחצה לכל מיל, ſeven and a half to every "mile." Hence a furlong was called one-ſeventh and a half of a mile [f], which was 266 cubits, and two-thirds of one.

Ver. 19. And many of the Jews came to Martha and Mary, &c.] Or to thoſe that were about Martha and Mary; in order to have acceſs to them, they came to them, and to the reſt of the family; tho' the phraſe may deſign them only, as the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions read: theſe Jews, as appears from the context, ver. 18, 45, 46. came from Jeruſalem, and might be ſome of the principal inhabitants; and it may be concluded, that theſe perſons, Lazarus, Martha, and Mary, were people of note and figure; and indeed all the accounts of them here, and elſewhere, ſhew the ſame; ſee Luke x. 38. John xii. 1, 2, 3. The end of their coming to them was to comfort them concerning their brother; by reaſon of his death, as was uſual with the Jews to do, after the dead was buried; for they did not allow of it before: hence that ſaying [g] of R. Simeon ben Eleazar, "don't comfort him (thy "friend) in the time his dead lies before him." The firſt office of this kind was done when they returned from the grave; for it is ſaid [h], "when "they return from the grave they make rows "round about the mourner, לנחמו, to comfort him, "and they make him to ſit, and they ſtand, and "there never were leſs than ten in a row." It was an ancient cuſtom for the mourners to ſtand in their place in a row, and all the people paſſed by, and every man as he came to the mourner comforted him, and paſſed on [i]. But beſides theſe conſolations, there were others adminiſtred at their own houſes, which were uſually done the firſt week:

for it is ſaid [k], "the mourner the firſt week does not go out of the door of his houſe; the ſecond he goes out, but does not ſit, or continue in his place; the third he continues in his place, but does not ſpeak; the fourth, lo, he is as every other man. R. Judah ſays, there's no need to ſay, the firſt week he does not go out of the door of his houſe, for behold, all come to his houſe, לנחמו, to comfort him." And it was on the third day more particularly on which theſe conſolatory viſits were paid [l]: "on the firſt day he (the mourner) did not wear his phylacteries; on the ſecond, he put them on; on the third day, others come to comfort him." This rule the Jews here ſeem to have obſerved, ſince Lazarus had been dead four days; and they were come from Jeruſalem hither to comfort his ſiſters on account of his death. The whole of this ceremony is thus related by Maimonides [m], "how do they comfort mourners? after they have buried the dead, the mourners gather together, and ſtand on the ſide of the grave; and all that accompany the dead ſtand round about them, one row within another; and there is no row leſs than ten; and the mourners are not of the number; the mourners ſtand on the left hand of the comforters; and all the comforters go to the mourners, one by one, and ſay to them, תנוחמו מן השמים, may ye be comforted from heaven: after that the mourner goes to his houſe, and every day of the ſeven days of mourning, men come to comfort him; whether new faces come, or do not, the mourner ſits down at the head, (or in the chief place) and no comforters may ſit but upon the floor, as it is ſaid, Job ii. 13. and they ſat with him on the ground: nor may they ſay any thing until the mourner has opened his mouth firſt, as it is ſaid, Job ii. 13. and none ſpake a word unto him: and it is written afterwards, ch. iii. 1. ſo opened Job his mouth, &c. and Eliphaz anſwered, ch. iv. 1. and when he nodds with his head, the comforters may not ſit with him any longer, that they may not trouble him more than is neceſſary. If a man dies, and there are no mourners to be comforted, ten worthy men go and ſit in his place all the ſeven days of mourning; and the reſt of the people gather to them; and if there are not ten fixed every day, ten of the reſt of the people gather together, and ſit in his place:" for this buſineſs of comforting mourners was reckoned an act of great piety and mercy [n]; and theſe Jews here might come, not ſo much out of reſpect to the dead, or to his ſiſters, as becauſe it was thought to be a meritorious act.

Ver. 20. Then Martha, as ſoon as ſhe heard that Jeſus was coming, &c.] Which ſhe might hear of, either by a meſſenger ſent by Chriſt to her, to acquaint her of it; or rather by ſome of the people of the town, who knew him, and ran and told her of it; and ſhe being an active perſon, and ſtirring about houſe, might receive the report unknown to her ſiſter, as it ſeems ſhe did; and as ſoon as ſhe had the hint, without ſtaying to communicate it to her ſiſter, went and met him; either thro' her great affection to him, and eager deſire of ſeeing him; or to conſult his ſafety, and let him know what number of Jews were in their houſe, that he might conſider whether it would be ſafe for him to be at their houſe or not. But Mary ſat ſtill in the houſe; not out of diſreſpect to Jeſus, or thro' want of affection to him, or thro' any indifference and ſloth; but becauſe ſhe knew not that Jeſus was coming; ſee ver. 28, 29.

Ver. 21. Then ſaid Martha unto Jeſus, &c.] When ſhe was come to him, Lord, if thou hadſt been here my brother had not died; which expreſſes much faith, but with a mixture of weakneſs, as if the preſence of Chriſt was neceſſary for the working a cure; whereas he could as well have reſtored her brother to health abſent, as preſent, had it been his will, as he did the centurion's ſervant, and the nobleman's ſon of Capernaum.

Ver. 22. But I know that even now, &c.] At this diſtance of time, tho' her brother had been in the grave four days: whatſoever thou wilt aſk of God, God will give it thee; whether Martha had ſuch a clear notion of the deity of Chriſt, as yet, as ſhe afterwards had, is not ſo certain: however, ſhe was perſuaded that he had great intereſt with God, and that whatever he deſired of him was granted to him; and tho' ſhe does not mention the reſurrection of her brother, yet it ſeems to be what ſhe had in view.

Ver. 23. Jeſus ſaith unto her, thy brother ſhall riſe again.] Chriſt knew what ſhe meant, and accordingly gave her anſwer, and yet in ſuch general terms, that ſhe could not tell whether his meaning was, that he ſhould riſe now, or at the general reſurrection.

Ver. 24. Martha ſaith unto him, &c.] Being deſirous of knowing the ſenſe and meaning of Chriſt, as well as to expreſs her own faith; I know that he ſhall riſe again in the reſurrection, at the laſt day. The Jews were divided about the doctrine of the reſurrection, the Sadducees denied it, the Phariſees aſſerted it; and on this latter ſide was Martha; ſhe believed there would be a reſurrection of the dead; that this would be at the laſt day, or at the end of the world; and that her brother would riſe at that general reſurrection: wherefore, if Chriſt meant no more than that, this was what ſhe always believed. The Syriac verſion renders it, in the conſolation at the laſt day; and ſo the time of the reſurrection is, by the Jews, called the days of conſolation [o]. And good reaſon there is for it in thoſe who ſhall have part in the firſt reſurrection, or come forth to the reſurrection of life; their bodies will riſe glorious, powerful, ſpiritual, and incorruptible, faſhioned like to the glorious body of Chriſt; they'll no more be attended with infirmities, diſorders, and diſeaſes; they'll feel no more pain, nor die any more; being re-united to their ſouls, they'll meet the Lord in the air, and in the judgment, they'll ſtand at his right hand; they'll enter into his joy, and be for ever with him; with their bodily eyes they'll behold Chriſt, and ſee him for themſelves, and not another; they'll meet their ſpiritual friends and acquaintance, and enjoy their company for ever; they'll have uninterrupted communion with angels and ſaints, and with God, Father, Son, and Spirit; their conſolation will be inconceivable and inexpreſſible.

Ver. 25. Jeſus ſaid unto her, I am the reſurrection and the life, &c.] Signifying, that he was able of himſelf to raiſe men from death to life, without aſking it of his Father; and that he could do it now, as well as at the general reſurrection; at which time Chriſt will be the efficient cauſe of it; and which will diſplay both his omniſcience and his omnipotence; as his reſurrection is the earneſt and pledge, and will be the model and exemplar of it. This is true of Chriſt, with regard to a ſpiritual reſurrection, from a death of ſin, to a life of grace; he is concerned both in the life itſelf, and in the reſurrection to it: he is the meritorious and procuring cauſe of it; he died for his people, that they, being dead to ſin, might live unto God, and unto righteouſneſs: he is the author of it; he ſays unto them, when dead in ſin, live; he ſpeaks life into them; he commands it in them, and by his ſpirit breathes into them the breath of ſpiritual life, and implants the principle of it in their ſouls; and he ſupports and maintains it by giving himſelf to them as the bread of life to feed upon, and by ſupplying them with grace continually; yea, he himſelf is their life; he lives in them, and their life is hid with him. It is owing to his reſurrection, that they are begotten again to a lively hope, or are quickened, that has a virtual influence upon it; and it is not only the cauſe, but the exemplar of it. Saints, as they are planted together in the likeneſs of his death, ſo in the likeneſs of his reſurrection: to which may be added, that it is his voice in the Goſpel, attended with an almighty power, which is the means of quickening them, which they hear, and ſo live; and it is his image that is enſtamped upon them; and by his Spirit they are made to live, and to walk in newneſs of life. He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet ſhall he live; believers in Chriſt die as well as others, tho' death is not a penal evil to them; its curſe is removed, its ſting is taken away, being ſatisfied for by Chriſt, and ſo becomes a bleſſing and privilege to them, and is deſirable by them; but tho' they die, they ſhall live again; their duſt is under the peculiar care of Chriſt; and they ſhall riſe by virtue of union to him, and ſhall riſe, firſt in the morning of the reſurrection, and with peculiar privileges, or to the reſurrection of life, and with the peculiar properties of incorruption, power, glory, and ſpirituality. So likewiſe ſuch that have been dead in ſin, and dead in law, under a ſentence of condemnation, as all mankind are in Adam, and being in a natural and ſinful eſtate, and as the choſen of God themſelves are; yet being brought to believe in Chriſt, that is, to ſee the excellency and ſuitableneſs of him as a Saviour, and the neceſſity of ſalvation by him; to go out of themſelves to him, diſclaiming their own righteouſneſs; venture their ſouls upon him, give up themſelves to him, truſt in him, and depend upon him for eternal life and ſalvation; theſe live ſpiritually: they appear to have a principle of life in them; they breathe after ſpiritual things; they ſee the Son of God, and behold his glory; they handle the word of life; they ſpeak the language of Canaan, and walk by faith on Chriſt, as they have received him; they live a life of ſanctification and juſtification; they are manifeſtly in Chriſt, and have him, an intereſt in him, and ſo muſt have life; they live comfortably; they live by faith on Chriſt, and his righteouſneſs, and have communion with him here, and expect to have, and ſhall have eternal life hereafter.

Ver. 26. And whoſoever liveth and believeth in me, &c.] Whoever will be found alive at Chriſt's ſecond coming, and is a believer in him, ſhall never die, but ſhall be changed, and ſhall be for ever with Chriſt; and ſuch as ſhall be raiſed to life by him, ſhall never die any more, not even a bodily death, and much leſs an eternal one, or the ſecond death: and though believers die a corporal death as others do, yet their ſouls live, and live in happineſs, whilſt their bodies are under the power of death; nor ſhall they always continue ſo, but being raiſed, ſhall become immortal, and die no more. So living believers in Chriſt ſhall never die more a ſpiritual death; they are paſſed from death to life, and ſhall never return to death more; their ſpiritual life cannot be loſt; grace in them is an immortal ſeed, a well of living water ſpringing up into everlaſting life: grace may be very low in its exerciſe, and may ſeem to be ready to die; they may be in lifeleſs frames, and without the comforts of a ſpiritual life, and be under the hidings of God's face, which is as death unto them, and may reckon themſelves as free among the dead; yet the principle of life will never be extinct in them; nor ſhall they die the ſecond death, which lies in an eternal ſeparation from God, and in an everlaſting ſenſe of his wrath; that ſhall have no power on them, nor ſhall they be in the leaſt hurt by it; for they are ordained to eternal life, and have the promiſe of it; they are united to Chriſt, and their life is ſecured in him; and he has redeemed them from death; and they have the ſpirit of life dwelling in them, as the pledge and earneſt of eternal glory. Believeſt thou this? the whole of this concerning the power of Chriſt, and privilege of believers; every tittle of it is to be believed. And as with reſpect to a corporal reſurrection, ſo with regard to a ſpiritual one; that men by nature are dead in ſins; that Chriſt is the author of the reſurrection from ſuch a ſtate, to a ſpiritual life; that this life is only by Chriſt, and can never be loſt: this is a doctrine to be believed; it is the doctrine of the ſcriptures; it is according to godlineſs; it makes for the comfort of the people of God, and glorifies the divine perfections.

Ver. 27. She ſaith unto him, yea, Lord, &c.] That is, ſhe firmly believed all that he ſaid concerning himſelf, and the happineſs of thoſe that believed in him: and for the confirmation of it adds, I believe; or I have believed, as the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it; that is, long ago, ever ſince ſhe knew him: that thou art the Chriſt the Son of God, which ſhould come into the world; that he was the true Meſſiah, and the proper and natural Son of God, of the ſame nature with God, equal to him, having the ſame perfections with him; and who was long promiſed, much propheſied of, and greatly expected to come into the world; and was now come into the world by the aſſumption of human nature, to work out ſalvation for his people; and therefore, ſince ſhe believed all this of him, ſhe muſt believe that he was able to raiſe the dead to life, and to ſecure thoſe that believe in him from dying eternally.

Ver. 28. And when ſhe had ſo ſaid, &c.] Had expreſſed her faith in Chriſt in ſuch terms, as the Apoſtles themſelves did, Matt. xvi. 16. John i. 49. and vi. 69. She went her way; from Chriſt, being ordered by him to go to her ſiſter Mary, and fetch her to him: and called Mary her ſiſter ſecretly; either beckoned her to come to her, or whiſpered her in the ear privately, as Nonnus paraphraſes it, that the Jews, who were enemies to Chriſt, might not hear: ſaying, the maſter is come; near the town; is not a great way off: ſhe might uſe the phraſe, the maſter, for greater privacy, that ſhould ſhe be overheard, it would not be known who ſhe meant; and becauſe it was an uſual appellation by which Chriſt was called in that family, and by which he was well known; and was expreſſive of honour to him, and ſubjection in them as his diſciples: and calleth for thee; to come to him; Chriſt aſked after her, deſired to ſee her, and ordered her to come to him; which was an inſtance of his reſpect for her.

Ver. 29. As ſoon as ſhe heard that, &c.] That Chriſt was come, and enquired for her, and wanted to ſee her: ſhe aroſe quickly, and came unto him; having an equal affection for him as her ſiſter Martha; and which ſhe ſhowed, by leaving her comforters at once, and by making the haſte ſhe did, to another and better comforter: both Martha and Mary, out of their great love to Chriſt, break thro' the rule for mourners mentioned in ver. 19. of not going out of the door of the houſe the firſt week of mourning.

Ver. 30. Now Jeſus was not yet come into the town, &c.] Of Bethany, but ſtaid without, being nearer to Lazarus's grave, which he intended to go to, in order to raiſe him to life, it being uſual to bury the dead without the towns and cities; ſee the notes on Matt. viii. 28. and Luke vii. 12. but was in that place where Martha met him; here he ſtopped, and here he continued: the Perſic verſion reads, but was ſitting in the ſame place, &c. waiting for the coming of Mary along with Martha; judging this to be a more ſuitable place to converſe together in, than their own houſe, which was thronged with Jews; and eſpecially he choſe it for the reaſon above given.

Ver. 31. The Jews then which were with her in the houſe, &c.] Who came from Jeruſalem to viſit this afflicted family, and continued in the houſe with them: and comforted her; which was the end of their coming, ver. 19. This they endeavoured to do, tho' they did not ſucceed: when they ſaw Mary, that ſhe roſe up haſtily, and went out, followed her; they did not know what Martha whiſpered to her, but obſerved that ſhe roſe off her ſeat in great haſte, and went out of the houſe at once; and therefore they went after to ſee where ſhe went, and to perſuade her to return; ſaying, within themſelves; thinking, as all the Oriental verſions ſeem to read, ſhe goeth unto the grave to weep there: The Jews were wont to go to the graves on different accounts; one was to ſee whether the perſons were dead or no: for ſo it is ſaid [p], "they go to the graves and viſit until three days." It happened that they viſited one, and he lived five and twenty years, and after that died: and another was on a religious account; ſuch went to the graves of the prophets, wiſe men, and righteous, and proſtrated themſelves upon them, to pray with weeping and ſupplication, and ſeek mercy for themſelves, and for their brethren, expreſſing their faith in the reſurrection [q]. Dr. Pocock [r] has given a large form of prayer uſed by them at ſuch times, from Solomon bar Nathan; and is as follows: "let it be the will of the Lord our God, our creator, our holy one, the holy one of Jacob, who hath created all the children of his covenant in judgment, and cauſes them to die in judgment, and will raiſe them again to the life of the world to come, who knows the number of them all; that he would haſten to awake our maſter and doctor, (ſuch an one) that holy, (or that righteous, or that wiſe doctor) whoſe body dwells in this ſepulchre, whoſe bones reſt in the midſt of theſe ſtones; and that he would quicken him with that eternal life which no death follows; with that life which ſwallows up all death, and which wipes away all tears, and takes away all reproach; together with all thoſe who are written unto life in Jeruſalem; with the ſeven ſhepherds, and eight principal men, who are ſpoken of in Mic. v. 5. and give him a part with them that underſtand, and with them that juſtify many, who will be like the ſtars for ever and ever; and the whole reſidue of the people of the Lord, the houſe of Iſrael, who keep the covenant of our God, and do his pleaſure, may the Lord our God ſhake all theſe out of their duſt, and let their lot, and our lot, be in life, in everlaſting life, that in it he may eſtabliſh all, both great and ſmall, according to what is written, Pſ. lxxii. 16. there ſhall be an handful of corn, &c. and confirm the aſſurance he gave by Iſaiah the prophet, the ſon of Amos, Iſ. xxvi. 19. thy dead men ſhall live, &c. and as he promiſed to Daniel, a man of deſires, Dan. xii. 13. but go thou thy way till the end be, &c. and as he promiſed to all the congregations of Iſrael, by his ſervant Ezekiel, the ſon of Buzi the prieſt, Ezek. xxxvii. 12. therefore propheſy and ſay to them, &c. that the ſaints may rejoice with glory, and ſing upon their beds, and that the righteous may rejoice, and exult before God, and be glad in his ſalvation, and ſay in that day, behold this is our God, we have waited for him, &c. Iſ. xxv. 9. and we will bleſs the Lord from this time forth, and for ever, Hallelujah." A ſhorter one, which is in their liturgies, and is uſed as they paſs by the ſepulchres of the Iſraelites, is this: "bleſſed art thou, O Lord our God, who has formed you in judgment, and has quickened you in judgment, and has fed you in judgment, and knows the number of all of you, and he will quicken you, and reſtore you; bleſſed art thou, O Lord, that quickens the dead." But ſometimes they went only to vent their grief, and lament the loſs of their deceaſed friends, which the Jews imagined was the caſe of Mary. And ſuch a cuſtom as this is uſed by the Turks, whoſe women on Friday, which is their day of worſhip, go before ſun-riſing to the graves of the deceaſed, which are without the city, where they mourn over the death of their friends, and ſprinkle their monuments with water and flowers; and even ſuch as are not at the funeral or interment of the dead, after ſome days, will go to the graves, and make their lamentations there, and enquire of the dead the reaſon of their departure, and, as it were, expoſtulate with them, and to their lamentations add oblations of loaves, cheeſes, eggs, and fleſh [s]. The Perſians alſo viſit the ſepulchres of their principal Imams, or prelates [t]; and the Jews were wont to viſit the graves of their great men, in honour to them; yea, the diſciples of the wiſe men uſed to meet there to ſtudy the law, thereby ſhewing reſpect, and doing honour to the deceaſed. It is ſaid of Hezekiah, 2 Chron. xxxii. 33. that all Judah, and the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, did him honour at his death; from whence, ſay the Talmudiſts [u], we learn, that they fixed a ſitting or a ſchool at his grave; the gloſs is, a ſeſſion (or ſchool) of the wiſe men to ſtudy in the law there. So ſays Maimonides [w], when a king dies they make a ſitting at his grave ſeven days, as it is ſaid, 2 Chron. xxxii. 33. they did him honour at his death; that is, they made a ſitting at his grave.

Ver. 32. Then when Mary was come where Jeſus was, &c.] Where Martha met him, and where ſhe left him. Travellers tell us, that cloſe by a well, about a ſtone's caſt out of the town of Bethany, is ſhewed the place where Martha met our Lord when he came to raiſe Lazarus, and where Mary, being called alſo, met him; but this is not to be depended on, nor is it of any moment to know it. It is bleſſed meeting Chriſt any where; and where he is preached, and his ordinances adminiſtred, let it be in what place it will, there may the preſence of Chriſt be expected; and it is an encouragement to go there where others have met with him: Martha had been here before, and had had ſome converſation with Chriſt to her great ſatisfaction, and ſhe goes and calls her ſiſter, that ſhe might enjoy the ſame: ſo ſouls that have met with Jeſus under ſuch a miniſtry, in ſuch a place, invite others to go thither alſo; and often it is that this is a means, in providence, of finding Chriſt, and enjoying communion with him. And ſaw him, ſhe fell down at his feet; in great reſpect to him, and reverence of him, worſhipping him as her Lord and God. Saying unto him, Lord, if thou hadſt been here, my brother had not died; which were the ſame words Martha uttered upon her firſt meeting Jeſus, ver. 21. and it is very likely that they had often expreſſed themſelves in ſuch language one to another, ſaying to each other, if our Lord Jeſus had been but here, our dear brother Lazarus would not have died.

Ver. 33. When Jeſus therefore ſaw her weeping, &c.] At his feet, who, for ſorrow and grief of heart, could ſay no more to him; but having expreſſed theſe words, burſt out into floods of tears: and the Jews alſo weeping, which came with her; either thro' ſympathy with her, or hypocritically: he groaned in the ſpirit; in his human ſoul; and which ſhews, that he had a real human ſoul, ſubject to paſſions, tho' ſinleſs ones. The word ſignifies an inward motion of the mind, thro' indignation and anger; and it may be partly at the weakneſs of Mary's faith, and at her immoderate ſorrow; and partly at the hypocriſy of the Jews: or elſe this inward groaning was thro' grief, ſympathizing with Mary, and her friends, his human ſoul being touched with a fellow-feeling of their griefs and ſorrows: and was troubled; or troubled himſelf; threw himſelf into ſome forms and geſtures of ſorrow, and mourning, as lifting up his eyes, wringing his hands, and changing the form of his countenance.

Ver. 34. And ſaid, where have ye laid him? &c.] This he might ſay as man, tho' he, as the omniſcient God, knew where he was laid; and that it might appear there was no juggle and contrivance between him, and the relations of the deceaſed; and to raiſe ſome expectation of what he intended to do; and to draw the Jews thither, that they might be witneſſes of the miracle he was about to work. They ſay unto him; That is, Martha and Mary, Lord, come and ſee; it being but a little way off.

Ver. 35. Jeſus wept.] As he was going along to the grave, ſee ver. 28. as he was meditating upon the ſtate of his friend Lazarus, the diſtreſs his two ſiſters were in, and the greater damnation that would befall the Jews then preſent, who notwithſtanding the miracle, would not believe in him. This ſhews him to be truly and really man, ſubject to like paſſions, only without ſin.

Ver. 36. Then ſaid the Jews, behold, how he loved him!] Lazarus; for they ſuppoſed that theſe tears were ſhed purely on his account; and by all circumſtances they could not but judge, that they proceeded from an hearty and ſincere affection to him; and it was amazing to them, that his love to him ſhould be ſo ſtrong, when he was no relation, only as they imagined, a common friend. Chriſt's love to all his people, even when they are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, is wonderful, and paſſes knowledge. And it is amazing indeed, if it be conſidered who the lover is, the eternal ſon of God, who is God over all, bleſſed for ever, the creator of all things, the king of kings, and lord of lords: and alſo, who they are that are loved by him, not only creatures, but ſinful ones, exceeding mean and abject; the baſe things of this world, bankrupts, beggars, yea, comparable to the beaſts that periſh; who had nothing external, nor internal, to recommend them to him, and engage his affections; yea, every thing to give him an averſion to them, and render them odious in his ſight, being enemies in their minds by wicked works, and children of wrath, as others: and likewiſe, if it be conſidered, what he has done for theſe, in which his love appears to them; as before time, in eſpouſing their perſons, becoming their ſurety, engaging in covenant with his Father for them, agreeing to all he propoſed, taking the care of their perſons, and of all bleſſings and promiſes, grace and glory for them; and in time here on earth, by aſſuming their nature, fulfilling the law for them, dying in their room and ſtead, paying their debts, procuring all bleſſings for them, peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and eternal redemption; and now in heaven, by preparing a place for them, being their interceſſor and advocate there, ſupplying their wants, frequently viſiting them, and indulging them with communion with himſelf, preſerving them ſafe to his kingdom and glory, into which he will introduce them, preſenting them to his father with exceeding joy; all which are marvellous acts of love and grace: to which may be added, the conſideration of the nature of his love, that it ſhould be from everlaſting, before theſe perſons were born; that it ſhould be a love of complacency and delight in them; that it ſhould be free, and unmerited, without any reaſon, or motive on their part; that it ſhould be diſtinguiſhing, that they, and not others, ſhould be the objects of it; and that it ſhould continue unchangeably the ſame, notwithſtanding their manifold tranſgreſſions, and provocations; wherefore it may be juſtly ſaid, behold, how he loved them!

Ver. 37. And ſome of them ſaid, &c.] Who were averſe to him, and bore him a ſecret grudge, and were willing to put the worſt conſtruction on every action of his: could not this man which opened the eyes of the blind; as it is ſaid, at leaſt pretended, that he did, ch. ix. 6, 7. for this muſt be underſtood as calling the miracle into queſtion, and as a ſneer upon it, and not as taking it for granted that ſo it was; and even ſuppoſing that, it is mentioned to his reproach, ſince if ſo, he might have cauſed that even this man ſhould not have died: for either the above cure was a ſham, or if it was a real thing, he who did that could have prevented Lazarus's death; and if he could, and would not, where is his friendſhip? and what muſt be thought of all this ſhow of affection to him? and what are theſe tears, but crocodile ones? but this reaſoning, as ſpecious as it may ſeem, was very fallacious; for he that cured the man born blind, could raiſe Lazarus from the dead, which he intended; and therefore did not prevent his death, that he might ſtill give more joy to the family, bring more glory to God, and himſelf, and more ſhame and confuſion to his enemies.

Ver. 38. Jeſus therefore groaning in himſelf, &c.] Not only thro' grief juſt coming up to the grave, where his dear friend lay, but thro' an holy anger and indignation at the malice and wickedneſs of the Jews: cometh to the grave of Lazarus, it was a cave; either a natural one, ſuch as were in rocks and mountains, of which ſort there were many in Judea, and near Jeruſalem, being a rocky and mountainous country, of which Joſephus[x] makes mention; where thieves and robbers ſheltered themſelves, and could not eaſily be come at, and where perſons in danger fled to for ſafety, and hid themſelves; and the reaſon why ſuch places were choſe to bury in, was becauſe, here the bodies were ſafe from beaſts of prey: or this was an artificial cave made out of a rock, in form of one, as was the tomb of Joſeph of Arimathea; and it was the common cuſtom of the Jews to make caves and bury in; yea, they were obliged to it by their traditions: thus ſays Maimonides[y], "he that ſells a place to his friend to make in it a grave, or that receives from his friend a place to make in it a grave עושה מערה, muſt make a cave, and open in it eight graves, three on one ſide and three on another, and two over againſt the entrance into the cave; the meaſure of the cave is four cubits by ſix, and every grave is four cubits long, and ſix hands broad, and ſeven high; and there is a ſpace between every grave, on the ſides a cubit and a half, and between the two in the middle two cubits." And elſewhere[z] he obſerves, that "they dig מערות, caves in the earth, and make a grave in the ſide of the cave, and bury him (the dead) in it." And ſuch caves for burying the dead, were at and near the mount of Olives; and near the ſame muſt be this cave where Lazarus was buried; for Bethany was not far from thence: ſo in the Cippi Hebraici we read[a], that at the bottom of the mount (of Olives) is a very great cave, ſaid to be Haggai the prophet's; and in it are many caves—And near it is the grave of Zachariah the prophet, in a cave ſhut up; and frequent mention is made there of caves in which perſons were buried; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 29. perhaps the cuſtom of burying in them might take its riſe from the cave of Machpelah, which Abraham, their father, bought for a burying-place for his dead. The ſepulchre of Lazarus is pretended[b] to be ſhewn to travellers to this day, over which is built a chapel of marble, very decent, and comely, and ſtands cloſe by a church built in honour of Martha and Mary, the two ſiſters of Lazarus, in the place where their houſe ſtood; but certain it is, that the grave of Lazarus was out of the town: and a ſtone lay upon it. Our verſion is not ſo accurate, nor ſo agreeable to the form of graves with the Jews, nor to this of Lazarus's; their graves were not as ours, dug in the earth and open above, ſo as to have a ſtone laid over them, for they often were, as this, caves in rocks, either natural, or hewn out of them by art; and there was a door at the ſide of them, by which there was an entrance into them; and at this door a ſtone was laid: it would be better rendred here, and a ſtone was laid to it; not upon it, for it had no opening above, but to it, at the ſide of it; and accordingly the Syriac and Perſic verſions read, a ſtone was laid at the door of it; and the Arabic verſion, and there was a great ſtone at the door of it; as was at the door of Chriſt's ſepulchre. In the Jewiſh ſepulchres there was, חצר, a court[c], which was before the entrance into the cave; this was four ſquare; it was ſix cubits long, and ſix broad; and here the bearers put down the corps, and from hence it was carried into the cave, at which there was an entrance ſometimes called, פי המערה, the mouth of the cave[d]; and ſometimes, פתח הקבר, the door of the grave[e]; of its form, meaſure, and place, there is no expreſs mention in the Jewiſh writings: it is thought to be about a cubits breadth, and was on the ſide of the cave; ſo that at it, it might be looked into; and at the mouth of the cave was a ſtone put to ſtop it up, which was called, גולל, from its being rolled there; tho' that with which the mouth of the cave was ſhut up, was not always a ſtone, nor made of ſtone; Maimonides[f] ſays, it was made of ſtone, or wood, or the like matter; and ſo in the Miſna[g] it is ſaid, "גולל לקבר, the covering for a grave, (or that with which it is ſtopped up) if it be made of a piece of timber, whether it ſtands, or whether it inclines to the ſide, does not defile, but over-againſt the door only;" ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 60.

Ver. 39. Jeſus ſaid, take ye away the ſtone, &c.] This was ſaid either to the Jews, or rather to the ſervants that came along with Martha and Mary; and this he ordered, not to facilitate the reſurrection, or merely in order to make way for Lazarus: he that could command him to come forth, could have commanded away the ſtone, but he choſe to have it removed this way, that the corps might be ſeen, and even ſmelt; and that it might be manifeſt, there was no fallacy, nor any intrigue between him, and the ſiſters of the deceaſed in this matter: this order was contrary to a rule of the Jews, which forbid the opening of a grave after it was ſtopped up[h]; but a greater than the fathers of the traditions was here, even he who has the keys of hell, or the grave, and can open, or order it to be opened, when he pleaſes: Martha the ſiſter of him that was dead; that is, of Lazarus, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it, calling him, Gazarus, ſaith unto him, Lord, by this time he ſtinketh; or ſmells; not that ſhe perceived this upon their moving the ſtone, but ſhe concluded it from the time he had been dead, and had lain in the grave, in which dead bodies uſually putrify and ſmell: whether ſhe ſaid this out of reſpect to her brother, being unwilling he ſhould be expoſed to the view of perſons, in ſuch a ſtate of corruption, ſhe knew he muſt be; or whether out of reſpect to Chriſt, leſt he ſhould be diſordered with the offenſive ſmell, is not certain: however, it ſeems as if ſhe had no notion that Chriſt was about to raiſe her brother from the dead; and that the ſtone was commanded to be removed for that purpoſe, not merely for a ſight of the dead, but that the dead might be ſeen to come forth alive: ſhe imagined that Chriſt only wanted to have the ſtone removed, that he might have a ſight of his deceaſed friend, which ſhe thought would be very diſagreeable and nauſeous; ſo ſoon had ſhe forgot what Chriſt had ſaid to her, and loſt that little exerciſe ſhe had of faith and hope, with reſpect to the reſurrection of her brother. Frames of ſoul, and acts of grace, are very changeable, and uncertain things; and eſpecially when carnal reaſoning is indulged. For he hath been dead four days; he had been ſo long in the grave, ver. 17. The word dead is not in the text; he might have been dead longer; tho' the Jews uſually buried on the ſame day a perſon died: however, the ſenſe is here, he had been ſo long in the grave; and ſo the Perſic verſion renders it, for it is the fourth day that he has been in the the grave; in the original text it is, he is one of four days; ſo many days he had been in the houſe appointed for all living; ſo long he had been removed from the ſight of men, and had been in another world, and had begun another æra, and four days had paſſed in it; he was ſo many days old according to that: ſo that his countenance was changed, he was not fit to be ſeen, nor approached unto; nor was there any hope of his returning to life. The Jews [i] ſay, that "for three days the ſoul "goes to the grave, thinking the body may return; "but when it ſees the figure of the face changed, it "goes away, and leaves it, as it is ſaid, Job xiv. 22." So of Jonah's being three days and three nights in the whale's belly, they ſay [k], "theſe are the three "days a man is in the grave, and his bowels burſt; "and after three days that defilement is turned "upon his face." Hence, they don't allow any one to bear witneſs of one that is dead or killed, that he is ſuch an one, after three days, becauſe then his countenance is changed [l], and he can't be well known.

Ver. 40. Jeſus ſaith unto her, ſaid I not unto thee, &c.] Not in ſo many words, but what might be concluded from what he ſaid; yea, the following expreſs words might be delivered by Chriſt, in his converſation with Martha, tho' they are not before recorded by the Evangeliſt: that if thou wouldſt believe thou ſhouldſt ſee the glory of God; a glorious work of God, wherein the glory of his power and goodneſs would be diſplayed, and the Son of God be glorified. or ſhould ſee ſuch a miracle wrought, which ſhould engage her to glorify God; and on account of which, ſhe would ſee juſt reaſon to do it, and would be concerned in it; and when it would appear that the ſickneſs and death of her brother, which had given her and her ſiſter ſo much diſtreſs and uneaſineſs, were for the glory of God, and the honour of Chriſt; ſee ver. 4. Moreover, to ſee the glory of God, is to ſee Chriſt, who is the brightneſs of his father's glory; and tho' ſhe had a ſight of him now, and before this time, with her bodily eyes, and alſo with the eyes of her underſtanding, and knew that he was the Son of God, and the true Meſſiah; yet it is ſuggeſted, that upon a freſh and ſtrong exerciſe of faith on Chriſt, with reſpect to the reſurrection of her brother, and by means of that, ſhe ſhould have a clearer view of his glory, as the only-begotten of the Father; for as he was declared to be the Son of God, by his own reſurrection from the dead afterwards, ſo he was more fully manifeſted to be that glorious and divine perſon, by his raiſing others from the dead, than by any other miracle; and to be indulged with ſuch a ſight of him, is a very high favour; ſee Pſal. lxiii. 2. and ſuch who have their faith moſt in exerciſe, ſee much of the glory of God, both in the face of Chriſt, and in his providences, and the performance of his promiſes.

Ver. 41. Then they took away the ſtone, &c.] From the door of the ſepulchre, as the Arabic verſion adds; from the place where the dead was laid: this clauſe is left out in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions: and Jeſus lift up his eyes; to heaven; this is a praying geſture, as in ch. xvii. 1. and ſaid, father, I thank thee that thou haſt heard me; which cannot refer to the reſurrection of Lazarus from the dead, or to any aſſiſtance given him in performing that miracle, becauſe that as yet was not done; and when it was done, was done by his own power, as all the circumſtances of it ſhow: but it relates to every thing in which he had before heard him, and was a foundation for him, as man, to believe he ſtill would, in whatever was to come; and particularly to the preſent opportunity of ſhowing his power in ſo remarkable a manner, and before ſo many witneſſes.

Ver. 42. And I knew that thou heareſt me always, &c.] Which was not only a ſupport to the faith of Chriſt, as man, but is alſo to his people, whoſe advocate, interceſſor, and mediator he is. But becauſe of the people which ſtand by, I ſaid it; that he was heard, and always heard by God; and therefore muſt have great intereſt in his affection, and knowledge of his will; yea, their wills muſt be the ſame: that they may believe that thou haſt ſent me; for if he had not ſent him, he would never have heard him in any thing, and much leſs in every thing; wherefore this was a full proof, and clear evidence of his divine miſſion.

Ver. 43. And when he had thus ſpoken, &c.] To God his Father, in the preſence and hearing of the people; he cried with a loud voice; not on account of the dead, but for the ſake of thoſe around him, that all might hear and obſerve; and chiefly to ſhew his majeſty, power and authority, and that what he did was open and above-board, and not done by any ſecret ſuperſtitious and magical whiſper; and as an emblem of the voice and power of his Goſpel in quickning dead ſinners, and of the voice of the arch-angel and trumpet of God, at the general reſurrection: Lazarus come forth; he calls him by his name, not only as being his friend, and known by him, but to diſtinguiſh him from any other corps that might lie interred in the ſame cave; and he bids him come forth out of the cave, he being quickned and raiſed immediately by the power which went forth from Chriſt as ſoon as ever he lifted up his voice; which ſhewed him to be truly and properly God, and to have an abſolute dominion over death and the grave,

Ver. 44. And he that was dead came forth, &c.] That is, he who had been dead, being now made alive, and raiſed up, and ſet on his feet, came out of the cave: bound hand foot with grave clothes; not that his hands were bound together, and much leſs his hands and feet together, with any bands or liſts of cloth; but his whole body, as Nonnus expreſſes it, was bound with grave clothes from head to foot, according to the manner of the eaſtern countries, Jews, Egyptians, and others, who uſed to wrap up their dead in many folds of linen cloth, as infants are wrapped in ſwaddling bands; and their manner was to let down their arms and hands cloſe by their ſides, and wind up all together from head to foot: ſo that there was another miracle beſides that of raiſing him from the dead; that in ſuch a ſituation, in which he could have no natural uſe of his hands and feet, he ſhould riſe up, ſtand on his feet, walk, and come forth thus bound, out of the cave: and his face was bound about with a napkin; the uſe of which was not only to tie up the chin and jaws, but to hide the grim and ghaſtly looks of a dead corps; and one of the ſame price and value was uſed by rich and poor; for it is ſaid [m], "the wiſe "men introduced a cuſtom of uſing, סודר, a napkin, (the very word here uſed, which Nonnus "ſays is Syriac) of the ſame value, not exceeding "a penny, that he might not be aſhamed who had "not one ſo good as another; and they cover the "faces of the dead, that they might not ſhame the "poor, whoſe faces were black with famine." For it ſeems [a], "formerly they uſed to uncover "the faces of the rich, and cover the faces of the "poor, becauſe their faces were black through "want, and the poor were aſhamed; wherefore "they ordered, that they ſhould cover the faces of "all, for the honour of the poor." Jeſus ſaith unto them; to the ſervants that ſtood by: looſe him, and let him go; unwind the linen rolls about him, and ſet his hands and feet at liberty, and let him go to his own houſe.

Ver. 45. Then many of the Jews which came to Mary, &c.] To her houſe, to comfort her, and that came along with her to the grave: and had ſeen the things which Jeſus did; in raiſing the dead body of Lazarus, and cauſing him to walk, though bound in grave clothes: believed on him; that he was the true Meſſiah: ſuch an effect the miracle had on them; ſo that it was a happy day for them, that they came from Jeruſalem to Bethany, to pay this viſit.

Ver. 46. But ſome of them went their way to the Phariſees, &c.] At Jeruſalem, who were members of the Sanhedrim; ſo far were ſome of them from receiving any advantage by this miracle, that they were the more hardned and filled with malice and envy to Chriſt, and made the beſt of their way to acquaint his moſt inveterate enemies: and told them what things Jeſus had done; at Bethany; not to ſoften their minds, and bring them to entertain a good opinion of him, but to irritate them, and put them upon ſchemes to deſtroy him; thus even miracles, as well as the doctrines of the Goſpel, are to ſome the ſavour of death unto death, whilſt to others the ſavour of life unto life.

Ver. 47. Then gathered the chief prieſts and the Phariſees a council, &c.] They convened the Sanhedrim, the great council of the nation together, of which they were ſome of the principal members: and ſaid, what do we? that is, why is nothing done? why are we ſo dilatory? why do we ſit ſtill, and do nothing? or what is to be done? this now lies before us, this is to be conſidered and deliberated on: for this man doth many miracles; this is owned, and could not be denied by them; and ſhould have been a reaſon why they ſhould have acknowledged him to have been the Meſſiah, and embraced him; whereas they uſed it as a reaſon, why they ſhould think of, and concert ſome meaſures, to hinder and put a ſtop to the belief of him as ſuch.

Ver. 48. If we let him thus alone, &c.] Going about from place to place, teaching the people, and doing ſuch miracles: all men will believe on him; the whole nation will receive him as the Meſſiah, and proclaim him their king, and yield a chearful obedience to all his commands: the Romans will come; againſt us, with their powerful armies; interpreting the ſetting him up as Meſſiah, to be an inſtance of rebellion againſt Cæſar, and his government: and take away both our place and nation; that is, will deſtroy the temple, their holy place, the place of their religion and worſhip; and their city, the place of their habitation, and lay waſte their country; and take away from them that little ſhare of power and government they had, and ſtrip them both of their civil and religious privileges: the Perſic verſion renders it, they will take away our place, and make a decree againſt our religion.

Ver. 49. And one of them named Caiaphas, &c.] See the notes on Matt. xxvii. 3. Luke iii. 2. John xviii. 13. being the high-prieſt that ſame year; the high prieſthood originally, was not annual, but for life; but towards the cloſe of the ſecond temple, it came into the hands of the king, to appoint who would to be high-prieſt [b]; and it became venal; it was purchaſed with money; inſomuch that they changed the prieſthood once a twelve month, and every year a new high-prieſt was made [c]: now this man being in ſuch an high office, and a man of no conſcience, and of bad principles, being a Sadducee, as ſeems from Acts iv. 6. and v. 17. who denied the reſurrection of the dead, and was unconcerned about a future ſtate; and having no reſtraint upon him, in a bold, haughty, and bluſtring manner, ſaid unto them, ye know nothing at all; ye are a parcel of ignorant and ſtupid creatures, mere fools and ideots, to ſit diſputing and arguing, pro and con, about ſuch a fellow as this; what is to be done is obvious enough, and that is to take away this man's life, without any more ado; it matters not what he is, nor what he does; theſe are things that are not to be conſidered, they are out of the queſtion; would you ſave the nation, deſtroy the man; things are come to this criſis, that either his life muſt go, or the nation periſh; and which is moſt expedient, requires no time to debate about.

Ver. 50. Nor conſider that it is expedient for us, &c.] Prieſts, Levites, Phariſees, the Sanhedrim, and eccleſiaſtical rulers of the people; who, as Caiaphas apprehended, muſt ſuffer in their characters and revenues, muſt quit their honourable and gainful poſts and places, if Jeſus went on and ſucceeded at this rate: wherefore it was moſt expedient and advantageous for them, which was the main thing to be conſidered in ſuch a council, ſo he thought it was, that one man ſhould die for the people, and that the whole nation periſh not; he proceeded entirely upon this political principle, that a publick good ought to be preferred to a private one; that it was no matter what the man was, whether innocent or not; common prudence, and the publick ſafety of the nation, required him to fall a ſacrifice, rather than the Romans ſhould be exaſperated and provoked to ſuch a degree, as to threaten the utter ruin and deſtruction of the whole nation.

Ver. 51. And this ſpake he not of himſelf, &c.] Not of his own deviſing and dictating, but by the Spirit of God; as a wicked man ſometimes may, and as Balaam did; the Spirit of God dictated the words unto him, and put them into his mouth; nor did he uſe them in the ſenſe, in which the Holy Ghoſt deſigned them; but being high-prieſt that year; by his office he was the oracle of God, and was ſo eſteemed by the people, and therefore a proper perſon to be made uſe of in this way; and eſpecially being high-prieſt that year, in which the prieſthood was to be changed, and viſion and prophecy to be ſealed up; he propheſied; though he did not know he did, as did Pharoah, Exod. x. 28. and the people of the Jews, Matt. xxvii. 25. That Jeſus ſhould die for that nation; theſe words, with what follows in the next verſe, are the words of the Evangeliſt, interpreting the prophecy of Caiaphas, according to the ſenſe of the Holy Ghoſt, that Jeſus ſhould die, which was contrary to a notion the Jews had imbibed, concerning the Meſſiah; ſee ch. xii. 34. But Jeſus the true Meſſiah muſt die; this was determined in the counſel of God, agreed to by Chriſt in the covenant of grace, foretold by the prophets from the beginning of the world, typified by ſacrifices and other things, under the forther diſpenſation, predicted by Chriſt himſelf, and accordingly came to paſs; and upon the above accounts was neceſſary, as well as for the ſalvation of his people, who otherwiſe muſt have periſhed; and yet was free and voluntary in him, and a ſtrong expreſſion, and a demonſtrative proof of his love to them: and not only this prophecy declared, that Jeſus ſhould die, but that he ſhould die for that nation, for the nation of the Jews; not for every individual in it, for all of them were not ſaved by him; ſome received him not; they rejected him as the Meſſiah, Saviour, and Redeemer, and died in their ſins; but for all the elect of God among them, the ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, to whom he was ſent, and whom he came to ſeek and ſave; and whom he bleſſed, by turning them away from their iniquities, and by taking away their iniquities from them: and moreover, this prophecy ſuggeſts, that Jeſus was to die, not merely as a martyr, to confirm with his blood the doctrine he preached, nor only as an example of courage, meekneſs, patience, and love, but for, or in the room and ſtead of his people, as their ſurety; giving his life a ranſom, and himſelf a ſacrifice to the juſtice of God, for them; thereby fulfilling the law, and ſatisfying it, and appeaſing the wrath of God on their account.

Ver. 52. And not for that nation only, &c.] For though Chriſt, as a prophet, was ſent to the Jews only, and was the miniſter of the circumciſion, yet as a prieſt he did not die for them only, but for the Gentiles alſo; even for the whole myſtical Iſrael of God, all the world over, whether among Jews or Gentiles; ſee 1 John ii. 2. But that alſo he ſhould gather together in one, the children of God that were ſcattered abroad; by which may be meant, not only the elect of God among the Jews, who were ſcattered amidſt the nations of the world, for whom Chriſt died, and to whom the Goſpel was in the firſt place ſent, and who were gathered together into a Goſpel church-ſtate; ſee John vii. 35. 1 Pet. i. 1, 2. James i. 1. but rather the elect of God among the Gentiles, called the children of God, in oppoſition to a notion of the Jews, who took this character to themſelves, on account of their national adoption, and denied it to the Gentiles, reckoning them no other than as dogs; and becauſe they were the children of God by ſpecial adoption, in divine predeſtination, and in the covenant of grace; and were ſo conſidered, when given to Chriſt, who looked upon them as in this relation, when he aſſumed their nature, and died in their room and ſtead; and not merely becauſe they would hereafter appear to be the children of God in regeneration, and by faith in Chriſt Jeſus, and have the witneſſings of the Spirit that they were ſo; and much leſs becauſe they had a fitneſs and diſpoſition to be the children of God, ſince they were by nature as others, children of wrath: and theſe are ſaid to be ſcattered abroad, both from God, as they were by the fall, and by their own tranſgreſſions; which ſeparated between God and them, and ſet them at a diſtance from him; for in their nature head, and nature ſtate, they are afar off from him, and from one another; which may regard not only diſtance of place, being ſcattered about in the ſeveral parts of the world, but their diſagreement in mind and judgment, in religion and manners; every one purſuing his own way, going aſtray like loſt ſheep: now Chriſt died for them, in order to bring them nigh to God, to the one true and living God; and to gather them together under one head, himſelf, their common head; by whom they were repreſented in his crucifixion, burial, and reſurrection; and to make them one body; and bring them into one fold, into one church-ſtate here, and at laſt to one place, to heaven, there to be for ever with him; and ſo the Perſic verſion renders it, that he might gather them into one place: and in this, the red heifer was a type of Chriſt; whoſe blood was ſprinkled directly before the tabernacle of the congregation, and without the camp; and which was done, as a Jewiſh writer ſays [q], "to call to mind the deſign of the heifer, "which was to bring, המרוחקים, thoſe that were "afar off, from the camp of the Shechinah, to be "near unto it."

Ver. 53. Then from that day forth, &c.] Caiaphas's reaſoning appeared ſo good, and his advice ſo agreeable, that it was at once, and generally aſſented to, except by one or two, as Nicodemus, and Joſeph of Arimathea; that ever after this, they took counſel together; at certain times, and that very often, and agreed in their counſel, for to put him to death: this they reſolved upon, before there was any legal proceſs, before any crime was charged upon him, or any proof given, or he was heard what he had to ſay for himſelf; ſo highly approved of was Caiaphas's motion, to put him to death, right or wrong, whether he was innocent or not; that they had nothing to do, but to conſult of ways and means of getting him into their hands, and of taking away his life in a manner, as would be moſt for their own credit among the people, and to his ſhame and diſgrace, and at the moſt proper and ſuitable time.

Ver. 54. Jeſus therefore, &c.] Knowing the reſolution the Sanhedrim had taken to put him to death, and the ſchemes they were forming to apprehend him: walked no more openly among the Jews; at, or near Jeruſalem; he did not teach in their ſtreets, nor work miracles, nor appear in publick company: but went thence; from Bethany: unto a country near to the wilderneſs; whether this was the wilderneſs of Judea, where John came preaching, and near to which our Lord was before he came to Bethany, or the wilderneſs of Bethaven, Joſh. xviii. 12. is not certain: into a city called Ephraim; the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions call it Ephrem, and ſo ſome copies; it ſeems to be the ſame with the Ephraim of the Miſnic and Talmudic doctors; concerning which they ſay [r], "Micmas and Mezonicha, are the firſt for fine flour, "and the next to them is Ephraim in the valley." For it ſeems there were two Ephraims, one in the valley, and another in the mount [s]: it was a place very fruitful for wheat; hence that ſaying of Jannes and Jambres, the magicians of Egypt, to Moſes [t]; "do you bring ſtraw to Ephraim?" which was a proverbial expreſſion, the ſame with ours of carrying coals to Newcaſtle: they ſeeing Moſes do ſigns and wonders, ſuppoſed he did them by enchantment; and the ſenſe of their proverb is, do you bring enchantments into Egypt, where there are ſo many already? This Ephraim the Jews ſay [u], is the ſame with that in 2 Chron. xiii. 19. and as there Bethel is mentioned with it, it ſeems to have been in the tribe of Benjamin: and it may be obſerved, that Joſephus [w] ſpeaks of an Ephraim, along with Bethel likewiſe; ſo, that they all ſeem to mean the ſame place; and according to the ſame writer, it was but a little city, and it may be an obſcure one, for which which reaſon Chriſt withdrew to it. Epiphanius[x] makes mention of the wilderneſs of Bethel and Ephraim, through which he travelled, accompanied by a Jew, as he came up from Jericho to the hill country; and is very likely the ſame wilderneſs, which is here ſpoken of; and by ſome called Quarentana, and placed by the river Chereth, in the tribe of Benjamin, north-eaſt of Jeruſalem; and the ſame writer elſewhere calls[y] Ephraim, the city of the wilderneſs: according to Jerom[z], it was twenty miles from Ælia, or Jeruſalem; though according to Euſebius, it was but eight miles, which is thought to be the trueſt account; and by them both is ſaid to be a very large village, and in which they may not differ from Joſephus; for it might be a large village, and yet a little city. Jerom[a] takes notice of a place called Aphra, in the tribe of Benjamin, which he ſays at that time was called the village Effrem, and was five miles from Bethel eaſtward; and of another called Aphraim, a city in the tribe of Iſſachar, which in his time went by the name of the village Affarea, ſix miles from the legion, northward; the former agrees beſt with this Ephraim. And there continued with his diſciples; ſpending his time in private converſation with them, teaching and inſtructing them in things concerning the kingdom of God, his time with them being now but ſhort.

Ver. 55. And the Jews paſſover was nigh at hand, &c.] Which was the fourth paſſover from Chriſt's entrance on his publick miniſtry, and the laſt he eat with his diſciples; when he, by being ſacrificed for his people, put an end to that, and all other ceremonial obſervances: and many went out of the country up to Jeruſalem, before the paſſover; not only from the country where Ephraim was, but from all other countries in Judea and Galilee: all the males were obliged to go up to Jeruſalem, at the time of the paſſover, where it was only kept; but many went before that time, for the reaſon following: to purify themſelves; we read in 2 Chron. xxx. 18. of many that had not cleanſed themſelves, and yet eat the paſſover; for whom Hezekiah prayed, that they might be pardoned, which ſhows that they had done amiſs: upon which place, Jarchi has this obſervation; that "Judah (the men of Judah) were "all clean, becauſe they were near to Jeruſalem, "and could purify and ſanctify themſelves, and "return to Jeruſalem; but many of Ephraim, and "Menaſſeh, and Iſſachar, and Zabulon, could not "do ſo." And this ſeems to be the caſe of theſe people, they were country people, that lived at a diſtance, and not having purified themſelves from ſeveral uncleanneſſes, came up before the time, that they might cleanſe themſelves, and be ready at the time: in ſeveral caſes purification was required; as in women after lying-in, menſtruous and profluvious perſons, and ſuch that had touched a dead body, or any creeping thing, and in other caſes; and which by reaſon of diſtance, might be neglected; wherefore it was neceſſary they ſhould come up before the time of the paſſover, to fit themſelves for it: the rule about defiled perſons eating the paſſover, is this[b]; "if the congregation "is polluted, or the greateſt part of it, or the "prieſts are unclean, and the congregation pure, "it is kept in uncleanneſs; but if the leſſer part of "the congregation is defiled, the pure keep the "firſt paſſover, and the unclean the ſecond." This their commentators ſay[c], is to be underſtood of uncleanneſs, by touching the dead, which required ſeven days of purification; and it is very probable that this was the caſe of theſe perſons, ſince it was about ſo many days before the paſſover, that they came up; ſee ch. xii. 1. The account Maimonides[d] gives of this matter, is this; "who "is a defiled perſon, that is put off to the ſecond "paſſover? every one who cannot eat the paſſover, "on the night of the fifteenth of Niſan, becauſe "of his uncleanneſs; as profluvious men and women, menſtruous and lying-in women, and the "huſbands of menſtruous women; but he that "toucheth the dead carcaſs of a beaſt, or a creeping thing, and the like, on the fourteenth, lo, "he dips, and they ſlay for him (the paſſover) after he has dipped; and in the evening, when his "ſun is ſet, he eats the paſſover; he that is defiled by touching the dead, whoſe ſeventh day "happens to be on the fourteenth, though he "dips and is ſprinkled on, and lo, he is fit to eat "the holy things at evening, yet they don't kill "for him, but he is put off to the ſecond paſſover; as it is ſaid, Numb. ix. 6. And there were "certain men who were defiled by the dead body of "a man, that they could not keep the paſſover on that "day; by tradition it is learned, that it was their "ſeventh day, and therefore they aſked if it ſhould "be killed for them, and they ſhould eat at evening? and it was declared to them, that they "ſhould not kill for them: of what is this to be "underſtood? when he is polluted with a defilement by the dead, which Nazarites ſhave for; "but if he is polluted with other defilements by the "dead, which the Nazarites do not ſhave for, they "kill for him on his ſeventh day, after he has "dipped, and is ſprinkled upon; and when his "ſun is ſet, he eats his paſſover: a profluvious perſon, who ſees two appearances, and reckons "ſeven days, and dips on the ſeventh, they kill "for him, and he eats at evening——They don't "kill for a menſtruous woman on her ſeventh day, "for lo, ſhe does not dip till the eighth night, and "ſhe is not fit to eat holy things until the ninth "night." Theſe, with many other caſes there inſtanced in, may ſerve to illuſtrate this paſſage.

Ver. 56. Then ſought they for Jeſus, &c.] That is, the country people; ſome on one account, and ſome on another; ſome out of curioſity to ſee his perſon, others to ſee his miracles, and others to hear his doctrine; and ſome it may be to take him, and deliver him up to the Sanhedrim, who had iſſued out a proclamation to that purpoſe, and doubtleſs offered a reward: and ſpake among themſelves, as they ſtood in the temple; whither they came to purify themſelves, according to the law of the ſanctuary: what think ye, that he will not come to the feaſt? it was a matter of diſpute with them, whether Chriſt would come or no, to the feaſt; ſome might be of opinion that he would not, at leaſt they very much queſtioned it, ſince the Sanhedrim had publiſhed ſuch an order for the diſcovery of him; and ſince upon it he was gone from Bethany, further into the country; though others might be differently minded, and believe he would come, ſince all the males of Iſrael were obliged to appear at that feaſt, and it was his duty; and they could not perſuade themſelves that he would neglect his duty, for fear of the Jews.

CHAP. XII.

Ver. 1. THEN Jeſus ſix days before the paſſover, &c.] Or before the ſix days of the paſſover; not as deſigning the days of that feaſt, for they were ſeven; but as reckoning ſo many days back from it, that is, before the ſixth day from the enſuing paſſover: if there were ſix compleat days between this and the paſſover, as this way of ſpeaking ſeems to imply; then this muſt be the day before the Jewiſh ſabbath, and this is more likely, than that Chriſt ſhould travel on the ſabbath-day: but if this was the ſixth day before it, it was their ſabbath-day, and ſo at the going out of it in the evening, a ſupper was made for him, which with the Jews on that night, was a plentiful one; for they remembered the ſabbath in its going out, as well as in its coming in [e], and this was to prevent grief at the going out of it: ſo ſome days before the paſſover, the lamb was ſeparated from the flock, and kept up till the fourteenth day, Exod. xii. 3, 6. particularly it may be obſerved, that ſeven days before the day of atonement, the high-prieſt was ſeparated from his own houſe, and had to the chamber Palhedrin [f]; and much ſuch a ſpace of time there was, between the day of the great atonement by Chriſt, and his unction by Mary; which is ſaid to be againſt the day of his burial, which being the ſame day with his ſufferings, was the great day of atonement: at this time Jeſus came to Bethany, where Lazarus was, which had been dead; the laſt clauſe is left out in the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions: whom he raiſed from the dead; that is, Jeſus, as the Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions expreſs; and the Ethiopic verſion adds, in Bethany. This was the town of Lazarus; here he lived, and here he died, and here he was raiſed from the dead; and here he continued and dwelt, after his reſurrection; and hither Chriſt came to ſee him, and the reſt of the family, though he knew he expoſed himſelf to danger in ſo doing.

Ver. 2. There they made him a ſupper, &c.] At Bethany, in the houſe of Lazarus, Martha, and Mary; by whoſe order, and at whoſe charge it was prepared for him; and not in the houſe of Simon the leper, which was four days after this, Matt. xxvi. 2, 6. And Martha ſerved; who was always a buſy, active, and ſtirring woman; and this ſhe did, to teſtify her love to Chriſt, and great reſpect for him; otherwiſe, as ſhe was a perſon of ſubſtance, ſhe had ſervants enough to wait at table: but Lazarus was one of them that ſat at the table with him; and eat and drank, and converſed; by which it appeared, that he was really riſen from the dead, and was in a good ſtate of health.

Ver. 3. Then took Mary a pound of ointment very coſtly, &c.] Worth three hundred pence, according to Judas's eſtimation of it. This Mary, was the other ſiſter of Lazarus; ſee the notes on Matt. xxvi. 7. and Mark xiv. 3. concerning the nature and value of this ointment: and anointed the feet of Jeſus; as he lay upon the bed or couch, at ſupper: and wiped his feet with her hair; ſee the note on Luke vii. 38. And the houſe was filled with the odour of the ointment; ſee Cant. i. 3, 12. ointment of ſpikenard, was very odoriferous: this may be an emblem of the ſweet ſavour of Chriſt, in the miniſtration of the Goſpel, throughout the whole world.

Ver. 4. Then ſaith one of his diſciples, &c.] Who had no true love for his maſter, was an hypocrite, and a covetous perſon: Judas Iſcariot; ſo called, to diſtinguiſh him from another Judas, an apoſtle; ſee the note on Matt. x. 4. Simon's ſon; this is omitted in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions; ſee the note on ch. xiii. 2. which ſhould betray him; and ſo he did; this was predetermined by God, foretold in prophecy, and foreknown by Chriſt; and is obſerved here, to ſhew the temper and character of the man.

Ver. 5. Why was not this ointment ſold for three hundred pence, &c.] Meaning Roman pence, one of which is of the value of our money, ſeven pence halfpenny; ſo that three hundred pence, amount to nine pounds ſeven ſhillings and ſix-pence: and given to the poor? this was his pretence, and with which he covered himſelf; his uneaſineſs was, becauſe it was not ſold, and the money put into his hands, as appears by what follows.

Ver. 6. This he ſaid, not that he cared for the poor, &c.] He had no affection for them, and was unconcerned about them, and took no care of them to feed and cloath them; he was no ways ſolicitous for their ſupport, refreſhment, and more comfortable living: but becauſe he was a thief; to his maſter, and purloined the money he was intruſted with by him, and put it to his own uſe: and had the bag, and bare what was put therein; the word rendered a bag, is adopted by the Rabbinical Jews, into their language; and is ſometime read Gloſkema, and at other times Dloſkema, and is uſed by them for different things; ſometimes [g] for a bier, or coffin, in which the dead was buried, which ſenſe can have no place here; ſometimes for a cheſt, or coffer [h]; and ſo the Septuagint uſe the Greek word, in 2 Chron. xxiv. 8, 10, 11. for the cheſt into which the people put their collection; and it may be ſo interpreted here, and ſo Nonnus renders it; it may ſignify the cheſt or coffer, which Judas had the care of, the keys of which were in his hands, and whatever were to be put into it, he bore, or carried thither: and it is alſo uſed by the Jewiſh writers, for a purſe [i]; it is aſked, "what is "Dloſkema? ſays Rabbah bar Samuel, טליקא דסבי, "the purſe of old men;" or ſuch as ancient men uſe; and this is the ſignification of it here: it may be the ſame with the Loculi of the Romans, and ſo the Vulgate Latin renders it here; which were different from a cheſt, or coffer, being moveable, and to be carried about, and which were carried by ſervants, as well as the purſe [k]. Judas had the purſe, into which was put whatſoever was miniſtred to Chriſt, for the common ſupply of him and his diſciples, and for the relief of the poor.

Ver. 7. Then ſaid Jeſus, let her alone, &c.] Don't diſturb her in what ſhe does, or hinder her, or blame her for it: againſt the day of my burial hath ſhe kept this; this ointment, which ſhe now poured on Chriſt; it was uſual to embalm the dead, with ointments and ſpices: Chriſt ſuggeſts, that the time of his death and burial were nigh, and that this woman had kept this ointment till now, for ſuch a purpoſe; and whereas ſhe would not be able to make uſe of it at the time of his interment, ſhe had embalmed his body with it now, beforehand; though without any knowledge of his death, or any ſuch intention and deſign in her, but the Holy Ghoſt ſo directing her: for this is not to be underſtood of her keeping any part of it till that time, which it does not appear ſhe did.

Ver. 8. For the poor always ye have with you, &c.] And ſo would not want opportunities of ſhewing a regard to them, which Chriſt always recommended; nor does he here in the leaſt diſcourage, an induſtrious and affectionate concern for them: the words ſeem to be a ſort of prophecy, that there would be always poor perſons in the churches of Chriſt, to be taken care of and provided for; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 11. and yet the Jews ſuppoſe caſes, in which the collectors of alms may have no poor to diſtribute to, and direct what they ſhall do in ſuch caſes [l]: but me ye have not always; meaning, with reſpect to his corporal preſence, which would be quickly withdrawn from them, when there would be no more an opportunity of ſhewing him perſonal reſpect, in ſuch a way.

Ver. 9. Much of the people of the Jews therefore knew that he was there, &c.] That is, many of the Jews that dwelt at Jeruſalem, knew that Jeſus was at Bethany; for it being but two miles from Jeruſalem, the report of his being come, ſoon reached thither: and they came from Jeruſalem to Bethany, not for Jeſus ſake only; to ſee him, and hear him, and obſerve what he ſaid and did: but that they might ſee Lazarus alſo, whom he had raiſed from the dead; that is, whom Jeſus had raiſed from the dead, as the Alexandrian copy, and the Ethiopic verſion expreſs it; for it equally excited their curioſity, to ſee the perſon that had been dead, and was raiſed from the dead, as to ſee him who raiſed him: and 'tis very likely before they had no opportunity of ſeeing him; it may be he did not appear publickly before, but kept himſelf retired; but now Jeſus being come, he ſhewed himſelf openly; which the Jeruſalem Jews being informed of, induced them to come to ſee both the one and the other.

Ver. 10. But the chief prieſts, &c.] With the reſt of the Sanhedrim: conſulted that they might put Lazarus alſo to death; as well as Jeſus, and that for no other crime, but becauſe he was raiſed from the dead by him; which ſhows, what conſciences theſe men had, and how horribly wicked they were; that they ſtuck at nothing, whereby they might ſatisfy their malice and envy, and ſecure their worldly intereſts and advantages.

Ver. 11. Becauſe that by reaſon of him, &c.] Of the miracle which was wrought upon him, in raiſing him from the dead, of which he was a living and an abiding witneſs: many of the Jews went away; not from Jeruſalem only, but from the chief prieſts and Phariſees, and the reſt of the Jews, that combined againſt Chriſt; they withdrew themſelves from their party, and deſerted them: and believed on Jeſus; as the Meſſiah; ſo that they found their intereſt was decreaſing and weakening every day, and that thoſe on the ſide of Chriſt were increaſing; and this they could not bear, and therefore conſulted to take away the life of Lazarus, as well as Jeſus; who they imagined as long as he lived, would be a means of inducing perſons to believe in Jeſus as the Meſſiah; whereas if he was dead, the fact would be forgotten, or be more eaſily denied.

Ver. 12. On the next day, much people that were come to the feaſt, &c.] Of the paſſover; and they were much people indeed, that came yearly to this feaſt, from all parts of the nation; for all the males in Iſrael, were obliged to appear at this time; and though the women were not obliged, yet multitudes of them came, and the fame of Jeſus might bring the more; add to which, that there was now a general expectation of the Meſſiah's coming, which brought the Jews from all parts of the world, to Jeruſalem; ſo that this might be called indeed, פסח מעוכין, a crouded paſſover: and tho' the following account is a ſtretching it too far, yet it may ſerve to illuſtrate this matter: "would you deſire to know what multitudes were at Jeruſalem of the prieſts, you may know, as it is written, 1 Kings viii. 63. and the tradition is, that an ox was offered for twenty-four, and a ſheep for eleven—— King Agrippa ſought to know what was the number of the multitude, which were in Jeruſalem; he ſaid to the prieſts, lay by for me one kidney of every paſſover lamb; they laid by for him ſix hundred thouſand pair of kidneys, double the number of thoſe that came out of Egypt; and there is never a paſſover lamb, but there are more than ten numbered for it [m], &c." Now the day following the ſupper at Bethany, and which ſeems to be the firſt day of the week, this multitude of people, when they heard that Jeſus was coming to Jeruſalem; from Bethany, which was ſoon known, it being ſo near.

Ver. 13. Took branches of palm-trees, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion adds, and young ſhoots from Jeruſalem; theſe grew in great plenty, on one part of the mount of Olives, that next to Bethany, from whence that town had its name; for it ſignifies the houſe of dates, the fruit of the palm-tree; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 17. And as that tree was a ſign of joy and victory, they carried branches of it in their hands, as they met the king Meſſiah, who was about to make his publick entrance into Jeruſalem, in triumph; and where by his ſufferings and death, he ſhould gain the victory over ſin, ſatan, the world, and death; and lay a ſolid foundation for joy and peace, to all that believe in him: the Jews ſay [n], "if a man takes, באיין, (the very Greek word here uſed) palm-tree branches in his hands, we know that he is victorious." The Perſic verſion reads, branches of olives. And went forth to meet him, and cried; when they came up to him, and as he paſſed by them: Hoſanna, bleſſed is the king of Iſrael, that cometh in the name of the Lord; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 9.

Ver. 14. And Jeſus when he had found a young aſs, &c.] Which he ſent his diſciples for, to a neighbouring village, and they brought to him: ſat thereon, as it is written; in Zech. ix. 9. though ſome part of the words ſeems to be taken out of Iſa. lxii. 11. ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 5. and ſo Nonnus paraphraſes it here, "that it might be fulfilled which Eſaias ſaid."

Ver. 15. Fear not, daughter of Zion, &c.] But rejoice; ſee Zech. ix. 9. and the note on Matt. xxi. 5.

Ver. 16. Theſe things underſtood not his diſciples at the firſt, &c.] Or at that time, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it; or on that day, as the Ethiopic verſion; they did not then know the ſenſe of that prophecy, nor that the things which were now doing, were a fulfilling of it: but when Jeſus was glorified; was raiſed from the dead, and aſcended to heaven, and was ſet down at the right-hand of God, crowned with glory and honour; and when having received the promiſe of the Father, the Holy Ghoſt, and his gifts, he poured them forth in a very plenteous and extraordinary manner upon them; whereby their minds were greatly illuminated, and they had a very diſtinct knowledge of the ſcriptures of the Old Teſtament; and ſaw clearly, how they ſeverally had their accompliſhment in Chriſt: then remembred they that theſe things were written of him; in the prophecies of the Old Teſtament: and that they had done theſe things unto him; both the diſciples and the multitude, or that theſe things were done to him; ſuch as bringing the aſs to him, laying their cloaths on it, and ſetting him upon it, attending him with ſhoutings and hoſannah's to the city of Jeruſalem, &c.

Ver. 17. The people therefore that was with him, &c.] The Jews, that came from Jeruſalem to Bethany, to comfort the two ſiſters of Lazarus upon his death, who believed in Chriſt; and others of the town of Bethany, who with them were along with Chriſt: when he called Lazarus out of his grave; ſaying, Lazarus, come forth: and raiſed him from the dead; to life: bare record; to the Jews at Jeruſalem, and to the people that came out of the ſeveral countries, of the truth of that fact; declaring, that they were eye and ear witneſſes of the whole, and that it was a truth that might be depended on.

Ver. 18. For this cauſe the people alſo met him, &c.] This was a principal reaſon, among others, which induced them to ſet out in the manner they did, with palm-tree branches in their hands, and accoſt him as the king of Iſrael, when they met him, and hoſanna him into the city: for that they heard that he had done this miracle; the witneſſes were ſo many, and the proofs they gave ſo ſtrong, that they firmly believed it: and this being a moſt amazing miracle, and which exceeded even any of the ſame kind; Jairus's daughter was but juſt dead, and the widow of Naim's ſon was not buried, when they were raiſed, but Lazarus had been dead and buried four days; it made a very ſtrong impreſſion upon the minds of the people, and engaged their attention to him, and belief in him.

Ver. 19. The Phariſees therefore ſaid among themſelves, &c.] Either when aſſembled in their own private houſes, or in the Sanhedrim; or as they ſtood together in the ſtreets, ſeeing Jeſus paſs by in ſuch pomp, and ſuch a multitude with him: perceive ye how ye prevail nothing? the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions read, we prevail nothing, ſo Nonnus; the ſenſe is the ſame; ſuggeſting, that all their wiſe ſchemes and crafty councils, ſignified nothing; the commands they enjoined the people not to follow him, or to apprehend him, or to ſhew them where he was, were diſregarded; their threatenings to put out of the ſynagogue, ſuch as ſhould confeſs him, were taken no notice of; their promiſes of reward were ſlighted; their examples were not followed; and all their artifice and cunning, backed with power and authority, did not ſucceed: behold, the world is gone after him; the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, the whole world, and ſo Nonnus; the Perſic verſion, all the people; that is, a very great number of people; for they could not mean, that all the inhabitants of the world, or every individual of mankind were followers of him, and became his diſciples, nor even all in their own land; they themſelves, with multitudes more of the ſame complexion, were an exception to this: but they ſpeak in the common dialect of that nation, of which take two or three inſtances; "it happened to a certain high-"prieſt, that he went out of the ſanctuary, "יהוו אולי כולי עלמא בתריה, and the whole world "went after him; and when they ſaw Shemaiah "and Abtalion, they left him, and went after "them [o]." And again [p], "R. Aba proclaimed, "whoever ſeeks riches, and whoever ſeeks the "way of life in the world to come, let him come "and ſtudy in the law, and, כולי עלמא, the whole "world will gather together to him." Once more [q], "Jonathan ſaid to David, 1 Sam. xxiii. 17. "Thou ſhalt be king over Iſrael, and I will be next "to thee; what is the meaning of this? perhaps "Jonathan the ſon of Saul ſaw, עלמא, the world "draw after David." This ſhews the ſenſe of thoſe phraſes, the world, and the whole world, when uſed in the article of redemption by Jeſus Chriſt; ſee the note on 1 John ii. 2.

Ver. 20. And there were certain Greeks, &c.] Hellenes, ſo called, from Hellen a king of that name, as Pliny ſays [r]. Theſe were not Græcizing Jews, or Jews that dwelt in Greece, and ſpoke the Greek language; for they were called not Hellenes, but Helleniſts; but theſe were, as the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions render it, Gentiles; and were either mere Gentiles, and yet devout and religious men, who were allowed to offer ſacrifice, and to worſhip in the court of the Gentiles; or they were proſelytes, either of righteouſneſs, and ſo were circumciſed, and had a right to eat of the paſſover, as well as to worſhip at it; or of the gate, and ſo being uncircumciſed, might not eat of the paſſover, yet might worſhip at it; which latter ſeems to be the caſe, by what follows: for theſe were among them, that came up to worſhip at the feaſt; of the paſſover, which was near at hand: theſe were among thoſe, that went forth to meet Jeſus, and that attended him to Jeruſalem, who were come up out of the country to this feaſt; and theſe came along with them to worſhip at it, to offer their ſacrifices, and join in prayer, though they might not eat of the paſſover.

Ver. 21. The ſame came therefore to Philip, &c.] Who might know him; they might have been ſome of his neighbours formerly, for that Philip's parents, though Jews, dwelt among Greeks, ſeems probable, from the name given to him, which is a Greek one; ſome have thought, that theſe Greeks were Syrophænicians, who dwelt upon the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and were not far off from Galilee, and from Bethſaida, the native place of Philip, and is therefore mentioned as follows: which was of Bethſaida of Galilee; as in John i. 44. ſee the note there. This place may be interpreted, the houſe of hunting, or of fiſhing; for it is not eaſy to ſay, which it has its name from, ſince, צידא, ſaida ſignifies both hunting and fiſhing: and ſeeing it was in or near the tribe of Nephthali, where was plenty of deer, and a wilderneſs was near it, where might be wild beaſts, it might be ſo called from hunting: and as it was ſituated near the lake of Geneſaret, it might have its name from the fiſhing-trade uſed in it; for Peter and Andrew, who were of it, were both fiſhermen: but it is yet more difficult to determine, whether this is the ſame with, or different from the Bethſaida Joſephus [s] ſpeaks of, as rebuilt by Philip, and called by him Julias, after the name of Cæſar's daughter, as I have obſerved in the notes on Luke ix. 10. and John i. 44. ſince this was in Galilee, of which Herod Antipas was tetrarch, and where Philip could have no power to rebuild places, and change their names; and beſides the city, which he repaired, and called Julias, according to Joſephus [t], was in lower Gaulonitis, and therefore muſt be different, unleſs that, or any part of it, can be thought to be the ſame with Galilee; wherefore the learned Reland [u] thinks, that there were two Bethſaida's, and which ſeems very probable; and it is likely, that this is here purpoſely called Bethſaida of Galilee, to diſtinguiſh it from the other, which, by ſome perſons, might ſtill be called Bethſaida, though it had got a new name. Moreover, this Bethſaida is mentioned in other places along with Capernaum and Choraſin, Matt. xi. 21, 23. which were in Galilee. And Epiphanius ſays [w], that Bethſaida and Capernaum were not far diſtant one from another; and according to Jerom [x], Choraſin was but two miles from Capernaum; and who elſewhere ſays [y], that Capernaum, Tiberias, Bethſaida, and Choraſin were ſituated on the ſhore of the lake of Geneſaret. It is ſaid to be fifty-ſix miles from Jeruſalem: and deſired him, ſaying, Sir, we would ſee Jeſus; that is, they intreated him, that he would introduce them into the company of Jeſus; they wanted to be admitted into his preſence, to have ſome diſcourſe and converſation with him; and what might make them the more deſirous of it, was the miracle he had lately wrought in raiſing Lazarus from the dead; as alſo the uncommon manner of his entring into Jeruſalem, which they ſaw; and which ſhows, that it was not a bare ſight of his perſon, they meant, but the enjoyment of his company, for a while; and this favour they aſk of Philip, with great reſpect to him, and in a very polite way, and yet with great ſincerity, and ſtrong affection, and earneſt importunity; and was a pledge and preſage of the future converſion of the Gentiles, when the Jews would be rejected. And it may be obſerved, that ſenſible ſinners are very deſirous of having a ſpiritual ſight of Chriſt, of the glories of his perſon, and the fulneſs of his grace, and to ſee their intereſt in him, and to have communion and fellowſhip with him: he is all in all to them; no object ſo delightful, and ſatisfying to them as he is; and they never ſee him, but they receive ſomething from him, and are made more like unto him.

Ver. 22. Philip cometh and telleth Andrew, &c.] The requeſt the Greeks made to him, and this he did, that he might have his advice in this matter; and that not only becauſe he might be a ſenior man as well as apoſtle, but becauſe he was of the ſame town, and might know theſe men as well as Philip: and again, Andrew and Philip told Jeſus; after they had conſulted together, whether it was proper or no, to move this thing to their maſter, ſince he had forbid them going in the way of the Gentiles, they agreed to acquaint him with it, that he might do his pleaſure.

Ver. 23. And Jeſus anſwered them, &c.] Not directly and particularly; he did not in plain terms ſignify what was his will, whether theſe Greeks ſhould be admitted or no; and yet expreſſed himſelf in ſuch a manner as ſhows he was not averſe to it, but was pleaſed with it, and takes notice of it, as an evidence of the near approach of his glorification: ſaying, the hour is come, that the Son of man ſhould be glorified; by riſing from the dead, aſcending to heaven, ſitting at the right hand of God, and from thence pouring forth the Spirit upon his diſciples, who ſhould go and preach the Goſpel to the Gentiles, as well as Jews; and which would iſſue in the converſion of many of them, and ſo in his glory, of which the coming of theſe Greeks, was an earneſt. But he intimates in the next verſe, that he muſt firſt die.

Ver. 24. Verily verily I ſay unto you, &c.] This is a certain truth in nature, Chriſt was about to aſſert; and what he ſignifies by it would be a certain fact, and which he mentions, that his death might not be a ſtumbling-block to his diſciples, or any objection to his glorification; but was rather to be conſidered as a means of it, and neceſſary in order to it: except a corn of wheat fall into the ground; or is ſown in the earth; for ſowing with the Jews is expreſſed by the falling of the ſeed into the earth; ſee the note on Matt. xiii. 4. and is a very fit phraſe to ſet forth the death of Chriſt by, who fell a ſacrifice to juſtice by the hands of men: and die; or is corrupted, and putrifies; and which is done in three days time in moiſt land, but is longer in dry ground ere it periſhes [z]: and a corn of wheat is almoſt the only ſeed, that being caſt into the earth, does die; and therefore is very aptly uſed by Chriſt: it abideth alone; a mere ſingle corn as it is: but if it die; if it waſtes, conſumes, and rots, as it does, being caſt into the earth, in the time before mentioned: it bringeth forth much fruit; it ſhoots out, and riſes above ground, and appears in blade, and ſtalk, and ear, and produces many corns or grains of wheat; all which our Lord intends ſhould be accommodated to himſelf, and to his death, and the fruits of it. He compares himſelf to a corn of wheat; to wheat, for the choiceneſs and excellency of it above all other grain, he being the chiefeſt among ten thouſand, angels or men; and for the purity and cleanneſs of it, he being, even in his human nature, pure, and free from ſin; and for its fruitfulneſs, he being fruitful in himſelf, and the cauſe of all fruitfulneſs in his people; and for its uſefulneſs for food, he being the bread of life, and the fineſt of the wheat: and whereas the wheat muſt be threſhed, and ground, and ſifted, and kneaded, and baked, before it is fit for food; all this may expreſs the ſufferings and death of Chriſt, in order to be proper food for the faith of his people: and Chriſt here compares himſelf to a ſingle corn of wheat, becauſe he was of little account among men, and but little or nothing was expected by them from him; and chiefly becauſe he was alone in the ſalvation of his people. The death of Chriſt is ſignified by the falling of the corn of wheat into the ground, and dying, and ſhews that Chriſt's death was not accidental, but deſigned; it was determined in the counſels and purpoſes of God, and intended for his glory and the redemption of men; even as wheat falls out of the hands of the ſower, not caſually, but on purpoſe, that it may die and ſpring up again, and produce an increaſe: and alſo, that the death of Chriſt was voluntary, both on his Father's part, and on his own; and was real, and not in appearance only, and yet was but for a ſhort time; as the corn of wheat that dies, ſoon revives again, and is quickly above ground, ſo Chriſt, tho' he really died, did not long continue under the power of death, but roſe again the third day, and now lives for ever. Moreover, Chriſt intimates by this ſimile, that if he had not died, he ſhould have been alone; not without his Father, and the bleſſed Spirit; nor without the holy and elect angels, but without any of the ſons of men, who all fell and died in Adam; and had not Chriſt died, none of them would have lived; none of them could have been juſtified; nor could their ſins have been expiated; nor would any of them have been regenerated: Chriſt muſt have been without them in heaven; wherefore he choſe rather to die for them, that they might be for ever with him, than be alone in the human nature. And he further obſerves hereby, that his death would be productive of much fruit; which may be underſtood both of a large harveſt of ſouls, that ſhould be ſaved, among Jews, and Gentiles, and eſpecially the latter; and of the bleſſings of grace, as redemption, juſtification, peace, pardon and eternal life that ſhould follow upon it.

Ver. 25. He that loveth his life ſhall loſe it, &c.] The ſenſe is, that whoever is ſo in love with this preſent temporal life, as to be anxiouſly careful of it, and takes all precautions to ſecure it; and rather than to expoſe it to any danger, chooſes to deny the faith of Chriſt, and deſert his cauſe and intereſt; as ſuch an one ſhall not long enjoy this life, ſo he ſhall come ſhort of an eternal one: and he that hateth his life in this world; on the other hand, whoever ſeems careleſs about it, and not to conſult the ſafety of it, but is unconcerned about it; yea, as if he was throwing it away, as of no great moment and ſignificancy, rather than do any thing to preſerve it, which would be ſcandalous to himſelf, and be diſhonourable to his Lord and maſter; he ſhall keep it unto life eternal: he ſhall be preſerved in his temporal life, in a remarkable manner, until he has done the will and work of God, notwithſtanding all attempts upon it; and he ſhall appear to have that ſpiritual life, which is the beginning and pledge of, and which ſprings up unto, and iſſues in eternal life; and that he ſhall enjoy in the world to come. This Chriſt ſaid to let his diſciples and followers know, that they muſt ſuffer and die, as well as he, tho' not on the ſame account, and for the ſelf-ſame reaſons; and that their ſufferings and death in his cauſe, and for his Goſpel, would turn to their advantage.

Ver. 26. If any man ſerve me, &c.] Or is willing to be a ſervant of Chriſt, and to be eſteemed as ſuch: let him follow me; as in the exerciſe of the graces of love, humility, patience, ſelf-denial, and reſignation of will to the will of God, and in the diſcharge of every duty, walking as he walked, ſo in a way of ſuffering; for as the maſter, ſo the ſervants, as the head, ſo the members, through many tribulations, muſt enter the kingdom; to which he encourages by the following things: and where I am; in heaven, as he now was, as the ſon of God; or where I ſhall be, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it, even as man, in the human nature, when raiſed from the dead; there ſhall alſo my ſervant be; when he has done his work, and the place is prepared for him, and he for that, and where he ſhall ever abide; and as a further encouragement, he adds, if any man ſerve me, him will my father honour; by accepting his ſervice, affording him his gracious preſence here, and by giving him eternal glory hereafter, to which he has called him.

Ver. 27. Now is my ſoul troubled, &c.] At the hardneſs and unbelief of the Jews, and the rejection of them, when the Gentiles would be called, and converted, by which he would be glorified; and at the conduct and carriage of his diſciples to him, he had a foreknowledge of; at the betraying of him by one, and the denial of him by another, and the flight of them all from him; and at the devil, and the furious and violent attack he knew he would make upon him, tho' he had obliged him to leave him, when he aſſaulted him before, and knew he could find nothing in him now, and that as God, he was able to deſtroy him; but this was to be done by him, as man, and by dying too: he was in his human ſoul troubled at the thoughts of his death, tho' it was his father's will, and he had agreed to it, and was for the ſalvation of his people, his heart was ſo much ſet upon; yet it was terrible to the human nature, and eſpecially as attended with the wrath of God; at the apprehenſions of which, his ſoul was exceedingly troubled; not as about to fall on him on his own perſonal account, but as being the ſurety of his people, and as having their ſins upon him to ſatisfy angry and injured juſtice for: and what ſhall I ſay? this queſtion he puts, as being in the utmoſt diſtreſs, and difficulty, as if he knew not what to ſay; and yet not as adviſing with his diſciples, what was to be ſaid or done in his caſe; but is rather uſed to introduce another queſtion, as the following words may be formed: ſhall I ſay, Father, ſave me from this hour? as requeſting his father, that he might be ſtrengthened under his ſufferings and death, and carried thro' them, and out of them; or rather as deprecating them, deſiring the cup might paſs from him, as he afterwards did; and then the ſenſe is, ſhall I put up ſuch a petition to my father, to ſave me from ſorrows, ſufferings, and death? no, I will not: the human nature thro' frailty might prompt him to it, and he be juſt going to do it, when he corrects himſelf, ſaying; but for this cauſe came I unto this hour: this hour or time of ſorrow and ſuffering was appointed for him; it was fixed in the covenant of grace, and Chriſt had agreed to it; he was ſent into this world, and he came into it, on account of this hour; and was preſerved hitherto for this purpoſe; and was now come to Jeruſalem, and was there at this inſtant, for that very reaſon, namely, to ſuffer and die. And ſince this was the caſe, he would not put up ſuch a petition to his father, but the following one.

Ver. 28. Father, glorify thy name, &c.] The perfections of his nature, particularly his juſtice and holineſs, meaning in himſelf, by his ſufferings and death; intimating hereby, that his father's glory was what he had in view, and that the ſecuring of that would give him an infinite pleaſure amidſt all his ſorrows. The Arabic verſion, and Nonnus, read glorify thy Son, as in ch. xvii. 1. and the Ethiopic verſion takes in both, glorify thy name, and thy Son: and indeed, what glorifies the one, glorifies the other; ſee ch. xiii. 31, 32. Then came there a voice from heaven; as at his baptiſm and transfiguration, and which came from the Father, and was an articulate one, and what the Jews call Bath Kol, or the daughter of the voice: ſaying, I have both glorified it; meaning in the incarnation, miniſtry, obedience and miracles of Chriſt; and particularly in that late one in raiſing Lazarus from the dead: and will glorify it again; by ſupporting him under, and carrying him thro' his ſufferings and death, and by raiſing him from the dead, and ſetting him at his own right hand.

Ver. 29. The people therefore that ſtood by and heard it, &c.] Some more confuſedly, who were fartheſt off; others more diſtinctly, who were nearer: the firſt of theſe, ſaid that it thundred; as it uſed to do when Bath Kol was heard, which as the Jews ſay [a], "is a voice that comes out of heaven proceeding from the midſt of another voice," as thunder; wherefore ſome took this for thunder, and others for the voice of an angel out of the thunder: others ſaid, an angel ſpoke to him; theſe being nearer, perceived it was an articulate voice, which expreſſed certain diſtinct words, which they thought were delivered by an angel; for the Jews had a mighty notion of the diſcourſe and converſation of angels with men, which their doctors pretended to underſtand; particularly R. Jochanan ben Zaccai a Rabbi, who was living at this time, had learned their ſpeech, and was well verſed in it [b].

Ver. 30. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, &c.] To the people that ſtood by, and were diſputing among themſelves about what they heard, whether it was thunder, or the voice of an angel: this voice came not becauſe of me; at leaſt not only and chiefly; it was not ſo much in anſwer to his prayer, or in order to comfort him under the apprehenſions he had of his ſufferings and death, or to aſſure him of his future glorification, tho' all this was true: but for your ſakes; to convince them that he was the Meſſiah, and engage them to believe in him, or to leave them without excuſe; ſince not only miracles were wrought before their eyes, but with their ears they heard God ſpeaking to him, and which is the rule that they themſelves preſcribe; for according to them, no man is to be hearkened to, tho' he ſhould do as many ſigns and wonders as Moſes, the ſon of Amram, unleſs they hear with their ears, that the Lord ſpeaks to him as he did to Moſes [c].

Ver. 31. Now is the judgment of this world, &c.] That is, in a very ſhort time will be the judgment either of the Jewiſh world, when that ſhall be reproved, convinced and condemned for their ſin of rejecting Chriſt, and crucifying him, by the ſpirit, in the miniſtration of the Goſpel; and they ſtill continuing in their impenitence and unbelief, in proceſs of time wrath will come upon them, upon their nation, city, and temple, to the uttermoſt; or of the Gentile world, when there ſhall be a diſcrimination, and ſeparation made in it, of the choſen of God, who ſhall be called by ſpecial grace, and with the converted and believing Jews, ſhall form a Goſpel church-ſtate, ſeparate from the world of the ungodly; or of the world of God's elect among Jews and Gentiles, whoſe cauſe, being undertook by Chriſt, he will now vindicate it, and redeem them from ſin and ſatan, who have uſurped a power and dominion over them: hence it follows, now ſhall the prince of this world be caſt out. The phraſe, שר העולם the prince of the world, is much uſed by Jewiſh writers [d], by whom an angel is meant; and they ſeem to deſign the angel of death, which is the devil: and it is certain, that he is here intended, and is ſo called, not becauſe he has any legal power and authority over the world; but becauſe he has uſurped a dominion over it, and has great power and efficacy in the hearts of the children of diſobedience, who yield a voluntary ſubjection to him, as if he was their proper lord and ſovereign: now the time was at hand, when he ſhould be caſt out of the Empire of the world, he had aſſumed, and out of the temples of the Gentiles, and out of the hearts of God's elect among them.

Ver. 32. And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, &c.] The death of Chriſt is here ſignified by his being lifted up from the earth, in alluſion to the lifting up of the brazen ſerpent on the pole; and ſhews, that his death would not be natural, but violent, and would be public, and not private; and fitly expreſſes his mediation between God, and men, being lifted up between the heavens and the earth; and points out the death of the croſs, as is intimated in the next verſe: and the if here does not ſuppoſe that his death, and the manner of it, were uncertain, for it was determined by God, agreed to by himſelf, predicted in the ſcriptures, ſignified by types, and foretold by himſelf, and was neceſſary for the ſalvation of his people; but it deſigns the time of his drawing perſons to himſelf, which is afterwards expreſſed, and may be rendered, when I am lifted up, as it is by the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions: now when this will be, Chriſt ſays, I will draw all men to me; which is not to be underſtood of the concourſe of people about him, when on the croſs, ſome for him, and others againſt him, ſome to bewail him, and others to reproach him; but rather, of the gathering of the elect to him, and in him, as their head and repreſentative, when he was crucified for them; or of the collection of them, thro' the miniſtry of the apoſtles, and of their being brought to believe on him for eternal life and ſalvation: and this drawing of them to him, in conſequence of his death, ſuppoſes diſtance from him, want of power, and will, to come to him, and the efficacious grace of God to bring them, tho' without any force and compulſion; and this is to be underſtood not of every individual of human nature; for all are not drawn to Chriſt, or enabled to come to him, and believe in him. There were many of the Jews who would not, and did not come to him for life; and who inſtead of being drawn to him in this ſenſe, when lifted up on the croſs, vilified and reproached him; moreover, in the preceding verſe, a world is ſpoken of, whoſe judgment, or condemnation, was now come; and beſides, there was at this time a multitude of ſouls in hell, who could not, nor never will be, drawn to Chriſt; and a greater number ſtill there will be at the laſt day, who, inſtead of drawing to him in this gracious way and manner, will be bid to depart from him, as having been workers of iniquity. Chriſt died indeed for all men who are drawn unto him; but this is not true of all men, that are, were, or ſhall be in the world. Add to this, that the word men is not in the text, it is only παντας, all: Beza's moſt ancient copy, and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read παντα, all things; and by all are meant, all the elect of God, all the children of God, that were ſcattered abroad; the Perſic verſion reads, I will draw my friends to me; it deſigns ſome of all ſorts of men, of every ſtate, condition, age, ſex, and nation, Gentiles as well as Jews, and eſpecially the former; which agrees with the ancient prophecy, Gen. xlix. 10. and with the context, and the occaſion of the words, which was the deſire of the Greeks, that were come to the feaſt, to ſee Jeſus; and which was a ſpecimen of the large numbers of them, that ſhould be drawn to Chriſt, thro' the preaching of the Goſpel, after his death: the Jews ſay, that in the time to come, or in the days of the Meſſiah, all the proſelytes ſhall be, גרורים, drawn, ſhall freely become proſelytes [e]. The alluſion here, is to the ſetting up of a ſtandard or enſign, to gather perſons together. Chriſt's croſs is the ſtandard, his love is the banner, and he himſelf is the enſign, which draw ſouls to himſelf, and engage them to enliſt themſelves under him, and become his voluntiers in the day of his power; ſee Iſ. xi. 10.

Ver. 33. This he ſaid, &c.] Theſe are the words of the Evangeliſt, interpreting the deſign of Chriſt in the above words, thereby ſignifying what death he ſhould die; the phraſe of being lifted up from the earth, not only ſignified his death, but the kind, or manner of it, that it ſhould be by crucifixion; a perſon crucified being ſtretched forth upon a croſs, and that erected, was lifted up between earth and heaven.

Ver. 34. The people anſwered him, &c.] Not the Greeks, but the Jews, and theſe not ſuch as were friends to Chriſt, but cavillers at him: we have heard out of the law; not the five books of Moſes, but the prophets, and Hagiographa; even all the books of the Old Teſtament are called the law; ſee the note on ch. x. 34. that Chriſt abideth for ever; referring to thoſe places which ſpeak of the perpetuity of his prieſthood, and the everlaſting duration of his kingdom, Pſal. cx. 4. and xlv. 6. and lxxii. 17. and lxxxix. 36, 37. Dan. ii. 44. and vii. 13, 14. in which laſt text expreſs mention is made of the ſon of man, and that and the firſt may be more eſpecially reſpected; from whence it appears, that theſe paſſages were underſtood of the Meſſiah by the ancient Jews: they knew he was deſigned in Pſal. cx. 4. He is David's Lord that was bid to ſit at the right hand of Jehovah, after he was raiſed from the dead, and had aſcended on high; whoſe Goſpel went forth with power, and whoſe people, by it, were made willing to ſubmit to him, to his righteouſneſs, and the ſcepter of his kingdom; and who alſo is a prieſt for ever; and which is appealed to as a proof of the nature, kind, and duration of Chriſt's prieſthood, Heb. v. 6. and vii. 17. and ſo it may be obſerved it is expreſsly applied to him by Jewiſh writers: in Zech. iv. 14. it is ſaid, theſe are the two anointed ones that ſtand by the Lord of the whole earth; of which this interpretation is given [f]. "Theſe are Aaron and the Meſſiah; and "it would not be known which of them is (moſt) "beloved, but that he ſays, Pſal. cx. 4. the Lord "hath ſworn, and will not repent, thou art a prieſt "for ever; from whence it is manifeſt that the "Meſſiah is more beloved than Aaron the righteous "prieſt." And ſo another of them [g] ſpeaking of Melchizedek, ſays, "this is that which is written "Pſal. cx. 4. the Lord hath ſworn, &c. who is this? "this is he that is juſt, and having ſalvation, the "king Meſſiah, as it is ſaid, Zach. ix. 9." So the 45th Pſalm is underſtood by them of the Meſſiah; the king, in ver. 1. is by Ben Melech, ſaid to be the king Meſſiah; ver. 2. is thus paraphraſed by the Targum, "thy beauty, O king Meſſiah, is more ex"cellent than the children of men." And Aben Ezra obſerves, that this Pſalm is either concerning David, or the Meſſiah his ſon, whoſe name is David, Ezek. xxxvii. 25. [h] and the paſſage in Pſal. lxxii. 17. is frequently interpreted of the Meſſiah and his name, and is brought as a proof of the antiquity of it [i]; and Pſal. lxxxix. 36. is alſo applied to him; and as for Dan. vii. 13. that is by many, both ancient and modern Jews, explained of the Meſſiah [k]: and ſince then they underſtood theſe paſſages of him, it is eaſy to obſerve from whence they took this notion that the Meſſiah ſhould abide for ever; but then they ſhould have obſerved out of the ſame law, or holy ſcriptures, that the Meſſiah was to be ſtricken and cut off, was to be brought to the duſt of death, and to pour out his ſoul unto death; all which is conſiſtent with his abiding for ever, in his perſon and office; for tho' according to the ſaid writings, he was to die and be buried, yet he was not to ſee corruption; he was to riſe again, aſcend on high, ſit at the right hand of God, and rule till all his enemies became his foot-ſtool; his ſufferings were to be in the way, and in order to his entrance into the glory that ſhould always abide. The Jews have entertained a notion that Meſſiah the ſon of David ſhall not die, and they lay down this as a rule, that if any one ſets up for a Meſſiah, and does not proſper, but is ſlain, it is a plain caſe he is not the Meſſiah; ſo all the wiſe men at firſt thought that Ben Coziba was the Meſſiah, but when he was ſlain it was known to them that he was not [l]. And upon this principle theſe Jews confront the Meſſiahſhip of Jeſus, ſaying, and how ſayeſt thou, the ſon of man muſt be lifted up? for it ſeems Chriſt uſed the phraſe the ſon of man, in his diſcourſe, tho' John has not recorded it; he attending to his ſenſe, and not to his expreſs words. The Jews rightly underſtood him, that by the ſon of man he meant the Meſſiah, and by his being lifted up, his death; but they did not underſtand, how the Meſſiah could die, and yet abide for ever; and therefore ſince he intended himſelf by the ſon of man, they concluded he talked very inconſiſtent with the ſcriptures, and with the character he aſſumed, and aſk very pertly, who is this ſon of man? is there any other ſon of man beſides the Meſſiah? and can the ſon of man, that is the Meſſiah, be lifted up, or die, who is to abide for ever? and if thou art to be lifted up, or die, thou art not the Meſſiah or Daniel's ſon of man, whoſe kingdom is everlaſting: but how come the Jews themſelves to ſay, that the days of the Meſſiah, according to ſome, are but forty years, according to others ſeventy, according to others, three hundred and ſixty-five [m]? yea, they ſay, he ſhall be as other men, marry, have children, and then die [n]. And how comes it to paſs that Meſſiah ben Joſeph ſhall be ſlain [o]? the truth of the matter is this, they having loſt the true ſenſe of the prophecies concerning the Meſſiah, and obſerving ſome that ſeem to differ, and which they know not how to reconcile, have fancied two Meſſiahs, the one that will be much diſtreſſed and be overcome and be ſlain; the other, who will be potent and victorious.

Ver. 35. Then Jeſus ſaid unto them, &c.] Not directly anſwering to their queſtions, but ſuggeſts to them their ignorance and ſtupidity, amidſt ſo much light, that was about them: yet a little while is the light with you; meaning either himſelf, the light of the world, ch. viii. 12. and xii. 46. who was to be but a very little while longer with them, a few days more, and he was to go away from them by death, and be ſeen and heard no more by them: or the Goſpel, which, tho' that was to continue ſomewhat longer, it being after Chriſt's death, reſurrection, and aſcenſion to be preached to the Jews, both in Judea, and in other parts of the world; yet that would be but for a little while, as the event has ſhown; for the Jews rejecting the Goſpel, and putting it away from them, the Apoſtles, as they were ordered, turned to the Gentiles, Acts xiii. 46, 47. walk while ye have the light; that is, as it is explained in the following verſe, believe ye in the light; which the Perſic verſion adds here, and leaves out there: and the ſenſe is, believe in the Meſſiah, and in his Goſpel; embrace him and that, and walk on in him, and worthy of him and of his Goſpel, as children of the light: leſt darkneſs come upon you; ſuddenly, at an unawares; either a greater degree of the darkneſs of ignorance and unbelief; even a judicial blindneſs and ſtupidity, which did ſeize on that people, and continues upon them to this day; or the darkneſs of afflictions, calamities, and diſtreſs, and which have come upon them to the uttermoſt, to the deſtruction of their temple, city, and nation; or elſe a worſe darkneſs, even blackneſs of darkneſs, outer darkneſs in hell, where are weeping, wailing, and gnaſhing of teeth. For he that walketh in darkneſs, knoweth not whither he goeth; he cannot ſee his way, nor the ſtumbling-blocks that lie in it, and the dangers he is expoſed unto; nor does he know where it leads, and what is the end of it; and juſt ſo it is with a man in a ſtate of unregeneracy, and more eſpecially under judicial blindneſs: he is not aware of the pits and ſnares that lie in his way, or of the dark mountains on which he ſtumbles; and tho' deſtruction and miſery are in his ways, he knows not that he is going thereunto.

Ver. 36. While ye have light, believe in the light, &c.] Receive the Meſſiah, and credit the Goſpel-revelation; this is an explanation of the exhortation in the preceding verſe: that ye may be the children of the light; that is, that they might appear to be ſuch who are enlightened perſons; and ſuch are truly ſo, who are made light in the Lord, or who are enlightened by the Spirit of God to ſee their own ſinfulneſs, impotency, and unrighteouſneſs, and their need of Chriſt, and his righteouſneſs and ſtrength, and of ſalvation by him; and who are made meet, by the grace of God, to be partakers of the inheritance of the ſaints in light; and which is made manifeſt by believing in Chriſt, and walking on in him, as they have received him, and by walking honeſtly, as in the day-time, and circumſpectly, not as fools, but as wiſe, for ſuch walk as children of the light. Theſe things ſpake Jeſus, and departed; from thoſe Jews, as being unworthy of any further converſation with him; and from Jeruſalem, very likely to Bethany, whither he frequently retired, eſpecially at night, during the few days before the paſſover: and did hide himſelf from them; for his ſafety, for he knew that they were irritated by what he ſaid, and would ſeek to lay hold upon him, and deliver him to the Sanhedrim; and whereas his hour was not yet fully come, there were a few more ſands in the glaſs to run, he provided for his ſecurity, by abſconding from them; and this was an emblem of his wholly removing from them, and leaving them, and their houſe deſolate; and it is very likely that from this time forward, they ſaw him no more as miniſtring the word unto them; and alſo of his taking his Goſpel from them in a little time, and of his hiding the things of it from them, which reſpected himſelf, and ſalvation by him.

Ver. 37. But though he had done ſo many miracles before them, &c.] Openly, and in the preſence of them; meaning thoſe miracles which were done at Jeruſalem, as thoſe which brought Nicodemus to him, and to an acknowledgment of him as a teacher ſent from God; and particularly the cure of the lame man at Betheſda's pool, the giving ſight to the man that was born blind, by anointing his eyes with clay, and ſending him to waſh in the pool of Siloam, and the raiſing Lazarus from the dead at Bethany, which was within two miles of Jeruſalem, in the preſence of many of them who were come there to comfort Martha and Mary. Yet they believed not on him; the miracles done by Chriſt before their eyes, which they could not deny, nor diſprove, and were ſo many, and ſo great, were aggravations of their unbelief; and ſuch indeed is the nature of that ſin, and ſo deeply rooted is it, that the moſt powerful means, and mighty works, will not bring a perſon to believe in Chriſt, without the powerful and efficacious grace of God.

Ver. 38. That the ſaying of Eſaias the prophet might be fulfilled, &c.] For though this was not the end of theſe men in diſbelieving Chriſt, that the words of Eſaiah might be fulfilled, yet hereby they were eventually fulfilled; and tho' the predictions of the prophet had no ſuch influence on the wills of theſe men, as to lay upon them a coactive neceſſity, or force them to do, or to anſwer to the things foretold; yet they were to have, and had an infallible event or completion, otherwiſe the foreknowledge of God, and the authority of the prophetic writings, could not be maintained: which he ſpake in Iſ. liii. 1. Lord, who hath believed our report? which words the prophet delivered by way of complaint to God the Father; not ſo much with reſpect to his own time, and the men of it, as to the times of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, whom he perſonates; for the whole chapter is a prophecy of the Meſſiah, and ſuggeſts, that in thoſe times there would be but few that would believe the report made in the miniſtry of the Goſpel, concerning the Meſſiah, his perſon, office, and grace; tho' ſo true in itſelf, and ſo much confirmed by miracles, and mighty deeds; the reaſon of which he intimates would be his outward mean appearance in the world; and which, 'tis certain, was the true reaſon, God denying the influence of his powerful and ſpecial grace, as follows: and to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed? meaning either the Goſpel, which is the power of God unto ſalvation, and which was hid from the wiſe and prudent; or the Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, who is the power of God, by whom he made the heavens and the earth, and upholds them in their being, and by whom he has redeemed and ſaved his people; and who was not revealed neither to them in the miniſtry of the word, nor in them the hope of glory: or the holy Spirit, is meant the finger of God, by whom theſe ſurprizing miracles were done; and yet he did not exert himſelf in theſe perſons, in the ſpecial operations of his grace; or the powerful and efficacious grace of God itſelf is deſigned, which was not put forth, and did not attend the report of the Goſpel, and therefore it was not believed.

Ver. 39. Therefore they could not believe, &c.] God had determined to leave them to the blindneſs and hardneſs of their hearts, and to deny them his grace, which only could cure them of it, and enable them to believe: he had foretold this in prophecy, and they were manifeſtly the perſons ſpoken of; and therefore conſidering the decrees of God, the predictions of the prophet, and the hardneſs of their hearts, they were left unto, it was morally impoſſible they ſhould believe, becauſe that Eſaias ſaid again, in Iſ. vi. 9, 10.

Ver. 40. He hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their heart, &c.] It is of no great moment, whether the he, who is ſaid to blind and harden, be God or Chriſt, or whether the words be rendered, it hath blinded, &c. that is, malice or wickedneſs; or whether they be read imperſonally, their eyes are blinded, &c. ſince God or Chriſt blind and harden not by any poſitive act, but by leaving and giving men up to the blindneſs and hardneſs of their hearts, and denying them the grace which could only cure them, and which they are not obliged to give; and which was the caſe of theſe Jews, ſo as never to be converted, or be turned even by external repentance and reformation, that they might be healed in a national way, and be preſerved from national ruin, as it follows, that they ſhould not ſee with their eyes, &c. ſee the notes on Matt. xiii. 14, 15. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, they have blinded their eyes, &c.

Ver. 41. Theſe things ſaid Eſaias, &c.] Concerning the blinding and hardening of the Jews: when he ſaw his glory, and ſpake of him; when he ſaw, in a viſionary way, the glory of the Meſſiah in the temple, and the angels covering their faces with their wings at the ſight of him; and when he ſpake of him as the king, the Lord of hoſts, whom he had ſeen, Iſ. vi. 1—10. from whence it is clear that he had reſpect to the Jews in the times of the Meſſiah. The prophet ſays in ver. 1. that he ſaw the Lord: the Targumiſt renders it, I ſaw, את יקרא דיי, the glory of Jehovah; and in ver. 6. he ſays, mine eyes have ſeen the king, Jehovah, Zebaot, the Lord of hoſts; which the Chaldee paraphraſe renders, mine eyes have ſeen, את יקר, the glory of the Shekinah, the king of the world, the Lord of hoſts. Agreeable to which our Lord ſays here, that he ſaw his glory, the glory of his majeſty, the glory of his divine nature, the train of his divine perfections, filling the temple of the human nature; and he ſpoke of him as the true Jehovah, the Lord of hoſts; and which therefore is a very clear and ſtrong proof of the proper divinity of Chriſt. And it may be obſerved from hence, that ſuch perſons who have a true, ſpiritual, and ſaving ſight of Chriſt, of the glory of his perſon, and the fulneſs of his grace, cannot but be ſpeaking of him to others, either in private, or in publick, as Iſaiah here did, and as the church in Cant. v. 10—16. and as the Apoſtles of Chriſt, John i. 14. 1 John i. 1, 2. and indeed, ſhould they hold their peace, the ſtones would cry out; ſuch muſt, and will ſpeak of his glory in his temple, Pſ. xxix. 9. and cxlv. 4, 5, 6, 7, 11, 12.

Ver. 42. Nevertheleſs among the chief rulers alſo, &c.] Theſe were the members of the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, as Nicodemus, Joſeph of Arimathea, and others: many believed on him; that he was the Meſſiah, tho' they did not believe in him in a ſpiritual and ſaving manner, as their redeemer and ſaviour, only in their minds, being convicted by his miracles, gave an aſſent unto him, as the promiſed Meſſiah. The two perſons juſt mentioned may be thought truly to have believed in Chriſt; but the many here ſpoken of ſeem to have had only an hiſtorical faith in him, as appears by what follows: but becauſe of the Phariſees they did not confeſs him; as they ought to have done, and as they would have done, if their faith had been right; for where with the heart men believe in Chriſt to righteouſneſs, there, with the mouth, confeſſion is made to ſalvation; and between a non-confeſſion of Chriſt, and a denying him, is no medium; and Chriſt interprets the one to be the ſame with the other; ſee Rom. x. 9, 10. Matt. x. 32, 33. and this they did not do, becauſe of the Phariſees, who were the inveterate and implacable enemies of Chriſt, and were the prevailing party in the Sanhedrim: wherefore theſe chief-rulers, tho' many, were afraid of them, leſt they ſhould be put out of the ſynagogue; for they had made a decree in the Sanhedrim, that whoever confeſſed that Jeſus was the Meſſiah, ſhould be caſt out; and they had put it into execution upon the man born blind, whoſe eyes Chriſt opened, for ſpeaking in favour of his benefactor; and this had ſtruck terror in the minds, not only of the common people, but of the chief-rulers themſelves; for it was looked upon as a very dreadful thing to be put out of the ſynagogue; ſee the note on ch. ix. 22.

Ver. 43. For they loved the praiſe of men, &c.] To be in the eſteem of men, to have their applauſe, and receive honour from them: more than the praiſe of God; than either to receive honour from him, and be praiſed by him, or to praiſe and glorify him. By confeſſing Chriſt they knew they ſhould run the riſque of loſing their places of honour and profit, and of falling under the diſgrace and contempt of men; and therefore they choſe rather not to confeſs Chriſt, than by ſo doing to glorify God, and pleaſe him, and be praiſed by him, as all the faithful profeſſors of Chriſt will be at the laſt day; for then every ſuch an one will have praiſe of God, and it will be ſaid, well done good and faithful ſervant, enter into the joy of thy Lord.

Ver. 44. Jeſus cried and ſaid, &c.] Upon this occaſion, on account of the prevailing hardneſs and unbelief of the Jewiſh nation, and the non-confeſſion of him by thoſe who did believe him to be the Meſſiah. He cried with a loud voice, that he might be heard, and his audience left inexcuſable; it denotes the concern of his mind, the vehemency of his ſpirit, and that openneſs and freedom in which he diſcharged his miniſtry, by ſhewing the nature, excellency, and uſefulneſs of believing in him, and the dangerous conſequences of unbelief: he that believeth on me, believeth not on me; which is not to be underſtood ſimply and abſolutely, for this would be a contradiction in terms: they that believe in Chriſt, do believe in him, and they do right to believe in him; Chriſt is the object of faith; he is propoſed as ſuch in the Goſpel; and it is his Father's will, and his own advice, that his people ſhould believe in him: but then thoſe that truly believe in him, do not believe in him as a mere man, but as God, as the Son of God; and not as ſeparate from, or to the excluſion of his Father: nor do they believe in him as a new, or another God, but as the one God with the Father, and the Spirit; for he and his Father are one: nor do they believe in him only; and ſo the Arabic verſion reads; but in God the Father alſo: nor does their faith reſt in him, but it proceeds thro' him, as the mediator unto God; ſee 1 Pet. i. 21. Beſides, he is here to be conſidered in his office-capacity, as being ſent of God; and he that believes on him as the ſent of God, does not ſo much believe on him, as on the ſender of him, as follows: but on him that ſent me; juſt as whatever honour or diſhonour are done to an embaſſador, ſent by an earthly king to a foreign court, are not ſo much done to the embaſſador that is ſent, as to the king that ſends him; for what is done to him, is all one as if it was perſonally done to his prince: ſo he that deſpiſes Chriſt, deſpiſes him that ſent him; and he that receives Chriſt, receives him that ſent him; and he that believes on Chriſt, believes on him that ſent him; ſee Luke x. 16. Matt. x. 40.

Ver. 45. And he that ſeeth me, ſeeth him that ſent me.] Not with bodily eyes, for there were many that ſaw Chriſt, who never ſaw the Father: they ſaw Chriſt as a mere man, and were offended at the meanneſs of his outward appearance: they ſaw nothing divine in him, nor the glory of the Father thro' him; but with the eyes of the underſtanding, whoever ſaw or perceived the glory of Chriſt in his miracles, ſaw the glory of God in them alſo, for the Father that dwelt in him did the works, John ii. 11. and xi. 40. and xiv. 10. and whoever truly ſees Chriſt with an eye of faith, ſees his glory, as the glory of the only-begotten of the Father, as the brightneſs of his Father's glory, as having the fulneſs of the Godhead dwelling in him, the ſame perfections as in the Father; ſo that he that hath ſeen the one, hath ſeen the other alſo, John. xiv. 9.

Ver. 46. I am come a light into the world, &c.] And even as the light of it, being the ſun of righteouſneſs that was to ariſe, and now was riſen, to enlighten men with the light of the living; ſee John iii. 19. and viii. 12. that whoſoever believeth on me ſhould not abide in darkneſs; God's elect themſelves, whilſt in a ſtate of unregeneracy and unbelief, are in darkneſs; when Chriſt ſhines in upon them, and infuſes the light of faith into them, they are no longer in darkneſs; the darkneſs is paſt, at leaſt in a great meaſure, and the true light ſhines; in which they ſee light, ſee the glory and grace of Chriſt, and the inviſible realities of another world: nor do they continue in the darkneſs of ſin, ignorance, and unbelief, but walk in the light of truth, faith, and holineſs, until the perfect day comes, when all the ſhadows of remaining darkneſs will flee away.

Ver. 47. And if any man hear my words and believe not, &c.] Men may hear the Goſpel of Chriſt, and not underſtand it; and they may underſtand it literally and grammatically, tho' not ſpiritually and experimentally, and not believe it; not ſo much as give credit or an aſſent to the truth of it, but reject and deny it; for though faith comes by hearing to ſome, it does not come to all: ſome receive no profit by hearing it, becauſe it is not mixed with faith by them. The Alexandrian copy, and all the Oriental verſions, and alſo Nonnus, read the laſt clauſe thus, and keep them not; or does not obſerve them, is negligent of them, and ſhews no regard, and yields not the obedience of faith to them; the ſenſe is the ſame. I judge him not; I do not accuſe him to the Father, nor do I condemn him, nor ſhall I take vengeance on him for ſo doing; meaning, that he ſhould do none of theſe things now, tho' hereafter he will be a ſwift witneſs againſt him, and will convict, and condemn him, and paſs ſentence on him, and execute it: for I came not to judge the world, but to ſave the world. Chriſt, at his firſt coming, came not under the character of a judge, but a ſaviour; wherefore ſuitable to his character, and the end of his coming, he would not accuſe, condemn, or judge any man, even the greateſt unbelievers in him, and deſpiſers of him, but would leave them to another day, when righteous judgment ſhall take place.

Ver. 48. He that rejecteth me, &c.] As the Meſſiah, with abhorrence and contempt, as many among the Jews did, who would not have him to reign over them, but ſought to put him to death: and receiveth not my words; the doctrines of the Goſpel, but diſbelieves them, and denies them to be true, looking upon them as the doctrines of a mere man, and an impoſtor: hath one that judgeth him; let not ſuch an one think that he ſhall eſcape righteous judgment; tho' Chriſt does not judge him now, there is one that judges him, yea, even now; and declares, that he that believeth not ſhall be damned, and that he is condemned already: the word that I have ſpoken unto you, the ſame ſhall judge him in the laſt day; according to the different diſpenſations wicked men are under in this world, will be the rule of their judgment hereafter: ſuch who are only under the law of nature, will be judged according to that, that will accuſe them, convict them, and condemn them: ſuch who have been under the law of Moſes, or the written law, will be arraigned, proved, and pronounced guilty, and puniſhed by, and according to that law: and ſuch who have been under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, and have been favoured with the revelation of the Goſpel, but have contemned and denied it, that will judge them at the laſt day. The judge will, by its preſent declaration, and according to that proceed, as it ſtands in Mark xvi. 16. It will riſe up in judgment againſt ſuch perſons, and be an aggravation of their condemnation.

Ver. 49. For I have not ſpoken of myſelf, &c.] As man, or as ſeparate from his Father; his doctrine was not human, but divine, and therefore a rejection of it cannot eſcape notice at the future judgment: but the Father which ſent me, he gave me a commandment what I ſhould ſay, and what I ſhould ſpeak; Chriſt, as man, had his miſſion, and commiſſion, and his inſtructions from his Father to preach the Goſpel unto men; he was anointed for it by the Holy Ghoſt; he was enjoined the preaching of it by his Father, and the ſeveral doctrines he publiſhed were delivered him by him; ſee John viii. 28. and xvii. 8.

Ver. 50. And I know that his commandment is life everlaſting, &c.] By his commandment is not meant the law; that indeed is often ſtiled the commandment; and it is the commandment of God; and many excellent things are ſaid of it; and among the reſt it is called life, Deut. xxx. 15. but not everlaſting life: it only promiſed a continuation of natural life to man, on condition of obedience to it; more than this it did not promiſe to Adam, in innocence; and what it promiſed to the obedient Iſraelites, was only a prolongation of natural life in the land which God gave unto them: but it neither promiſes, nor gives ſpiritual life to the fallen ſons of Adam; it leaves men as it finds them, dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; and cannot communicate either a life of ſanctification, or of juſtification to them; nor does it ſo much as give them any hopes of life, or ſhew where it is to be had; nor is everlaſting life to be obtained by the works of it: juſtification is not by the works of the law; nor ſalvation by works of righteouſneſs done by men; and conſequently eternal life is never to be attained unto by obedience to the commands of the law: it is ſo far from being in this ſenſe life everlaſting, that it is the miniſtration of condemnation and death. But the Goſpel is here meant, and is called a commandment; not that it has the nature of a law, or conſiſts of precepts, as the law does; but becauſe it is by the commandment of the everlaſting God publiſhed by Chriſt, and his Apoſtles. Chriſt, as appears from the preceding verſe, had a commandment from his Father, what he ſhould ſay and ſpeak; now, not the doctrine he delivered was the commandment itſelf, but it was a commandment of the Father that he ſhould deliver that doctrine; beſides, the word commandment ſometimes ſignifies no other than a doctrine, as in Pſ. xix. 8. 1 John ii. 7. and the ſenſe is, that the doctrine of the Goſpel, which Chriſt had in commiſſion from the Father to preach, is life everlaſting; and is ſo called, becauſe it is a means of quickening ſinners with a ſpiritual life, which iſſues in an eternal one; it is the ſavour of life unto life, and the ſpirit which giveth life, and is the miniſtration of it; and it is a means of implanting the graces of the Spirit of God in the heart, which ſpring up unto everlaſting life; and of bringing ſouls to the knowledge of Chriſt, which is the beginning, pledge, and earneſt of eternal life: and beſides all this, it gives an account of the nature of eternal life; it directs the way unto it, which is by Chriſt, and deſcribes the perſons who ſhall enjoy it; ſhewing, that their title to it is the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and their meetneſs for it the regenerating grace of the Spirit; and that all that believe in Chriſt ſhall have it: whatſoever I ſpeak therefore, even as the Father ſaid unto me ſo I ſpeak; and no otherwiſe; and therefore ought to be received, and not rejected. This is to be underſtood not of what Chriſt ſpoke in common converſation, but in the miniſtry of the word, even of the doctrines of the Goſpel, which were given him by his Father, and which he knew were agreeable to his mind and will, and to his council and covenant, and to every thing done and agreed therein, to which he was privy: theſe he delivered as he received them, and both as to matter and manner, as it was his Father's will and pleaſure he ſhould: he preached the righteouſneſs of God, and hid it not; he declared his faithfulneſs, and his ſalvation, and concealed not his loving kindneſs and truth, Pſ. xl. 9, 10. Now, tho' it is a ſufficient ground of faith to receive and believe the doctrines of the Goſpel, becauſe Chriſt has ſpoken them, who is truth itſelf; yet it is a further confirmation of them, that they are what his Father, the God of truth, ſaid unto him: and his delivering them as he had them from him, is an inſtance of his faithfulneſs to him that ſent him; and ſhould be imitated by his miniſters, who ought to declare the whole counſel of God, and keep back nothing they have received from Chriſt, and which may be profitable to the ſouls of men.

CHAP. XIII.

Ver. 1. NOW before the feaſt of the paſſover, &c.] This feaſt was inſtituted as a memorial of the deliverance of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, and was an eminent type of Chriſt; and this paſſover was what Chriſt had greatly deſired, it being his laſt, and when he was to expreſs his great love to his people, mentioned here, by dying for them. It was two days before this feaſt, ſo the Perſic verſion reads this text, at Bethany, in the houſe of Simon the leper, that the things recorded in this chapter were tranſacted; ſee Matt. xxvi. 2, 6. when Jeſus knew that his hour was come that he ſhould depart out of this world to the father. The death of Chriſt is here ſignified by a departing out of this world, a way of ſpeaking frequently uſed by the Jews as expreſſive of death; ſee the note on Phil. i. 23. Much ſuch a phraſe is made uſe of concerning Moſes, of whom it is ſaid [p], that the fourth ſong that was ſung in the world, was ſung by him, "when his time was come, למפטר מן עלמא, "to depart out of the world;" an eaſy and familiar form of ſpeech to expreſs death by, as if it was only a removing from one place to another. The place from whence Chriſt was about to remove is called this world; this preſent world, into which he was come to ſave ſinners, and in which he then was, and where he had already met with very ill uſage, and barbarous treatment, and was to meet with more: where he was going is ſaid to be to the Father, in whoſe boſom he lay, by whom he was ſent, from whom he came; to his God and Father, and the God and Father of all his people, to take his place in their nature at his right hand. A time or hour was fixed for this; for as there was a ſet time, called the fulneſs of time, agreed upon for his coming into the world, ſo there was for his going out of it: and now this his hour was come; the time was now up, or at leaſt very near at hand; and he knew it, being God omniſcient, which gave him no uneaſineſs; nor did it in the leaſt alienate his affections from his people: for having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them to the end. The objects of his love are deſcribed by his property in them, his own: by whom are meant, not all mankind, who are his by creation; nor the Jews, who were his nation and countrymen according to the fleſh; nor the twelve Apoſtles only, whom he had choſen; but all the elect of God, who are his own, by his choice of them, by the Father's gift of them to him, by the purchaſe he made of them with his blood, and by his effectual call of them by his grace: theſe are alſo deſcribed by their condition and ſituation, which were in the world; which is not ſaid to diſtinguiſh them from the ſaints that were in heaven, or to expreſs their former ſtate of unregeneracy, but their preſent ſituation in this vain and evil world, which is no objection to Chriſt's love to them; for tho' whilſt in this world they carry about with them a body of ſin and death, are liable to many ſnares and temptations, and are involved in the troubles, and expoſed to the hatred of the world, yet are, and always will be, the objects of the love and care of Chriſt. The acts of his love to them are expreſſed both in time paſt, and to come: having loved them; ſo he did from everlaſting, with a love of complacency and delight, which he ſhewed as early by eſpouſing their perſons to himſelf, by undertaking their cauſe, by taking the charge of their perſons, and the care of both their grace and glory, and in time by aſſuming their nature: and having done all this, he loved them to the end; and which he ſhowed by dying for them; and continues to ſhow by interceding for them in heaven, by ſupplying them with all grace, and by preſerving them from a final and total falling away; and he will at laſt introduce them into his kingdom and glory, when they ſhall be for ever with him; ſo that his love to them continues not only to the end of his own life, nor barely to the end of theirs, but to the the end of the world, and for ever; and ſo εις τελος ſignifies, and is rendered continually, Luke xviii. 5. and in the Septuagint on Pſ. ix. 6, 18. and xliv. 23. anſwers to לנצח, which ſignifies for ever; and is ſo tranſlated here by the Ethiopic verſion.

Ver. 2. And ſupper being ended, &c.] Or rather ſupper being, or it being ſupper-time, for it was not ended; not the paſchal ſupper, nor the Lord's ſupper, but the ſupper in Simon's houſe at Bethany, two days before the paſſover. There is no mention made in this whole chapter of the paſſover-ſupper, or of any of its rites: the waſhing of the diſciples feet was a peculiar action of our Lord's, and had no manner of regard to any uſage among the Jews at ſuch a time; nor was it ever uſual with them, at the paſſover, to waſh the feet of thoſe that eat of it; there is not the leaſt trace of any ſuch cuſtom in any of their writings: beſides, it is ſaid in ſo many words, in ver. 1. that this was before the feaſt of the paſſover; and by comparing it with Matt. xxvi. 2, 6. it appears to be two days before it; and ſo much time ſeems neceſſary to be allowed, for Judas to do what he did after this ſupper, in which he was firſt inſtigated to it: and that the feaſt of the paſſover was yet to come, when this ſupper was ended, and Judas had taken the ſop, and was bid to do quickly what he did, is manifeſt from the ſenſe the diſciples put upon thoſe words of Chriſt, who thought he ordered him to get the neceſſaries for the feaſt, ver. 29. which can be underſtood of no other than the feaſt of the paſſover, which was at hand, and for which many things were to be got ready; to which may be added, that ſatan's entering into Judas, and putting it into his heart to betray his maſter, and his covenanting with the high-prieſts to do it for ſuch a ſum, were before the paſſover-ſupper, as is clear from Luke xxii. 1, 3, 4, 7. Nor is it reaſonable to ſuppoſe that Judas could meet that night, after the ſupper, with the chief-prieſts, captains, and all the council, the great Sanhedrim, who could not be together; ſince by the law of the paſſover, every head of a family was to be with his reſpective family: and if this could be ſuppoſed, yet there ſeems to be ſome time between this agreement, and the execution of it, in which he ſought for a proper opportunity, Matt. xxvi. 16. Nor can it be thought there was time enough to do all he did, as to covenant with the chief-prieſts, form his ſcheme for apprehending Chriſt, and get ſuch a number of men together for that purpoſe, between the ſupper, and the time of night in which Chriſt was betrayed. Beſides, certain it is, that Chriſt and his diſciples aroſe from the place where he eat his ſupper, and went from thence elſewhere, John xiv. 31. which can't be underſtood very well of any other departure than his going from Bethany to Jeruſalem, and not of his going from Jeruſalem to the garden, which is afterwards ſpoken of as a diſtinct thing, John xviii. 1. And to ſay no more, there is not in this chapter the leaſt hint of the inſtitution of the Lord's ſupper, which all the other Evangeliſts make mention of, when they relate the laſt paſſover of our Lord. The reader may be more fully ſatisfied of the truth of this by conſulting Dr. Lightfoot on Matt. xxvi. 6. The devil having now put it into the heart of Judas Iſcariot, Simon's ſon, to betray him; the perſon ſatan influenced and acted upon, for his purpoſe, was Judas Iſcariot, Simon's ſon: whether this was Simon the Phariſee, or Simon the leper, in whoſe houſe Chriſt and his diſciples were, or who he was, is not certain: was there any reaſon to think it might be Simon the tanner that was the father of Judas, or that either he or his father were tanners, I would venture to add one conjecture more to what has be made on Matt. x. 4. and xxvii. 5. concerning Judas's ſurname, Iſcariot, as that it may come from Iſcortia, which ſignifies a tanner's coat: for ſo it is ſaid in the [q] Talmud, "what is, איסקורטיא, Iſcortia? "ſays Rabba bar Chanah, it is, כיתונא דצלא, a "tanner's coat:" a ſort of a leathern garment, as the gloſs ſays, which tanners put over their clothes. However, this man was an Apoſtle of Chriſt's ſatan tempted to betray him; ſo that we ſee that the higheſt office, and greateſt gifts, can't ſecure men from the temptations of ſatan: the manner in which he tempted him was, he put, or caſt it into his heart; it was a dart, and a fiery one he threw into him, into his very heart; which ſhows the acceſs ſatan has into, and the influence he has upon the minds of men: his end in this temptation was to work upon him to betray Chriſt, his Lord and Maſter, who had choſen him to be an Apoſtle of his, and had inveſted him with this high office, into the hands of his enemies, in order to be put to death. This was an affair determined by God, known by Chriſt, and which he foretold to his diſciples; yet all this did not in the leaſt excuſe the malice of ſatan, and the wickedneſs of Judas: it was an action deviliſh indeed, and which, one would think could never have entered into his heart, had not the devil put it there; and this was at ſupper-time, whilſt they were at table together, that this thought was darted into his mind; which is mentioned to ſhow, that no place and company can preſerve perſons from the evil ſuggeſtions of the devil, and to aggravate the ſin of Judas, who when, and while he was eating bread with Chriſt, firſt thought of, and determined to lift up his heel againſt him: moreover, it was when the ointment was poured on the head of Chriſt, and whilſt Judas was fretting at it, that ſatan took the opportunity of his choler and wrath, to ſtir him up to ſo vile an action. This account is prefaced to Chriſt's waſhing the feet of his diſciples, to ſhew the great compoſure of mind Chriſt was in, tho' he knew what was doing; and his wonderful condeſcenſion in waſhing the feet of ſo vile a creature, into whoſe heart ſatan had already put it to betray him; and alſo his care of, and love to the reſt of the diſciples, when ſatan had got poſſeſſion of one of them.

Ver. 3. Jeſus knowing that the Father, &c.] Theſe words expreſs the ſenſe Chriſt had of his own greatneſs and dignity as mediator: that the Father had given all things into his hands; all the perſons of the elect, all bleſſings both of grace and glory for them, and power and authority over all other perſons and things, to make them ſubſervient to his purpoſes: and that he was come from God; had his miſſion and commiſſion, as man, from God; did not come of himſelf, but he ſent him: and went to God; or was going to him in a very little time, to ſit at his right hand, to have a name above every name, and to have angels, authorities, and powers ſubject to him; which, as it ſhews his high eſteem with his Father, and his exalted character as mediator, ſo it greatly illuſtrates his wonderful humility, that in the view, and under a ſenſe and conſideration of all this, he ſhould condeſcend to waſh the feet of his diſciples; of which an account is given in the following verſes.

Ver. 4. He riſeth from ſupper, &c.] In the midſt of the entertainment, and which no doubt was conſiderable, his mind being intent on ſomething elſe; and it being his meat and drink to do his Father's will, he riſes and leaves his diſciples ſitting to finiſh their meal; and whilſt they were murmuring at the waſte of the ointment poured on his head, and were filled with indignation at it, as they all of them were, ſee Matt. xxvi. 8. he riſes up to waſh their feet; amazing patience and humility! And laid aſide his garments; not all his garments, only his upper ones, that he might better diſpatch the buſineſs he was going about; and which was an emblem of his laying aſide, as it were for a while, his glory and dignity as the Son of God, and of his appearing in the form of a ſervant. And took a towel; or linen cloth, λεντιον, the ſame with לונטית, in the Jeruſalem Talmud [r]: and girded himſelf; with the towel, or linen cloth, which ſerved both for a girdle, and after he had waſhed his diſciples feet, to wipe them with. This was a ſervile habit; ſo ſervants uſed to ſtand at the feet of their maſters, girt about with a linen cloth [s]; and ſhews, that the ſon of man came not to be miniſtred unto, but to miniſter.

Ver. 5. After that he poureth water into a baſon, &c.] This alſo was a ſervile work, and what properly belonged to ſervants to do; ſee John ii. 5, 6, 7. The baſon to waſh the feet in, called by the Jews, עריבת רגלים, was fixed by their doctors to hold, from two logs to nine kabs [t]; not from two logs to ten, as Dr. Lightfoot has rendered the paſſage referr'd to. A kab held about a quart of our meaſure, and a log was the fourth part of a kab. And began to waſh the diſciples feet. This cuſtom of waſhing the feet was not uſed by the Jews at their paſſover, nor at their private entertainments, or common meals, but at the reception of ſtrangers or travellers, which were juſt come off of a journey, whereby they had contracted dirt and filth, and was a ſervile work, never performed by ſuperiors to their inferiors, but by inferiors to ſuperiors; as by the wife to the huſband, by the ſon to the father, and by the ſervant to his maſter; and was an inſtance of great humility in any others, as in Abigail, who ſaid to David, let thine handmaid be a ſervant to waſh the feet of the ſervants of my Lord, 1 Sam. xxv. 41. upon which place ſome Jewiſh Rabbins [u] have this note: “ this “ ſhe ſaid, על צד הענוה, by way of humility, to “ ſhew, that it would have been ſufficient to her, “ if ſhe became a wife to one of the ſervants of “ David, and waſhed his feet, as was the cuſtom “ of a wife to her huſband.” But what a ſurprizing inſtance of humility and condeſcenſion is this, that Chriſt, the Lord and Maſter, ſhould waſh the feet of his diſciples, when it was their proper work and buſineſs to have waſhed his? Tho' Dr. Lightfoot ſays, he does not remember that this was expected from the diſciple toward his maſter, unleſs included in that rule, that the diſciple is to honour his maſter, more than his father; whereas it was a fixed point [w] with the Jews, “ that “ all works which a ſervant does to his maſter, a “ diſciple does to his maſter, except unlooſing “ his ſhoe.” Since therefore it was the work of a ſervant to waſh his maſter's feet, a diſciple was obliged to do this to his maſter likewiſe: and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded; as he began he went thro' with his work; and having waſhed their feet, he wipes them clean; which may deſign the purity of the lives and converſations of the ſaints in general, and of the miniſters of the Goſpel in particular, whoſe feet are beautiful when ſhod with the preparation of the Goſpel of peace, and their converſations are as become the Goſpel they preach; both which they have from Chriſt.

Ver. 6. Then cometh he to Simon Peter, &c.] After having waſhed the feet of ſome of the diſciples, as is thought by ſome interpreters, and particularly the feet of Judas, without any repulſe; tho' others are of opinion that he began with Peter, who modeſtly, and out of reverence to him, refuſes to be waſhed by him: and Peter ſaith unto him, Lord, doſt thou waſh my feet! he ſpeaks as one ſurpized and aſtoniſhed that Chriſt ſhould offer to do any ſuch thing to him; that he, who was the Son of the living God, ſhould waſh the feet of ſuch a ſinful man as he was; that thoſe hands, with which he had wrought ſuch miracles, as the opening the eyes of the blind, cleanſing lepers, and raiſing the dead, ſhould be employed in waſhing his defiled feet, the meaner and inferior parts of his body; this he thought was greatly below his dignity and character, and too much to be done by him to ſuch a worthleſs creature as he was.

Ver. 7. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, &c.] Chriſt replies, what I do, thou knoweſt not now: Peter knew that he was about to waſh his feet, and the reſt of the diſciples, but he did not know the meaning and myſtery of it, what Chriſt deſigned by it, and what inſtruction they were to receive from it: but thou ſhalt know hereafter; as he did, when he had performed this ſervice, and explained it to him. This may teach us, under dark providences, the meaning of which is not yet known by us, to wait the Lord's own time, to make things clear and plain to us, and in the mean time patiently ſubmit to the divine will.

Ver. 8. Peter ſaith unto him, thou ſhalt never waſh my feet, &c.] Before he had behaved with modeſty, but now with obſtinacy and perverſeneſs; and tho' theſe expreſſions might ariſe from great reverence to Chriſt, yet they were wrong and raſhly ſpoken. Peter ought to have been ſatisfied with Chriſt's reply, and have ſubmitted, ſince tho' he then did not know the reaſon of ſuch ſurprizing conduct, he ſhould hereafter. In order therefore to bring him to a compliance, Jeſus anſwered him, if I waſh thee not, thou haſt no part with me; he does not ſay, if I waſh not thy feet, but thee, meaning not with water, but with his blood, and by his Spirit; for Chriſt uſes the word waſh here, not literally, but in a myſtical and figurative ſenſe, and takes an occaſion, as he ſometimes does, from things natural, to diſcourſe of things ſpiritual: moreover, he does not ſay, thou haſt no part in me, but thou haſt no part with me, that is, no fellowſhip and communion with me; ſee 2 Cor. vi. 14, 15. and it is as if he ſhould ſay, Peter, if I had not waſhed thee with the waſhing of regeneration by my Spirit, and if I ſhould not ſhed my blood for thee, and waſh thee in it from thy ſins, ſad would be thy caſe; thou couldſt have no communion with me in this world, nor any part and portion with me in the heavenly inheritance hereafter. Hence, it may be obſerved, that unleſs a man is waſhed by Chriſt, he can have no part with him in this, or the other world. God's elect have a part, an intereſt in Chriſt thro' eternal, electing, and covenant-grace, and in conſequence of this are waſhed by Chriſt both with his blood, and with the waſhing of regeneration: and this is done in order that they may have a part with Chriſt, ſpiritual fellowſhip with him now, and poſſeſs with him the undefiled inheritance, when time ſhall be no more.

Ver. 9. Simon Peter ſaith unto him, &c.] Being convinced of his miſtake in not ſubmitting to Chriſt, fearing he ſhould be deprived of communion with him, than which nothing was more deſirable to him, or more highly eſteemed of by him, ſays, Lord, not my feet only, but alſo my hands and my head; which ſhews the ſenſe he had of the general pollution of his nature, and the need he ſtood in particularly of having his feet, hands, and head waſhed, both as a miniſter, and a believer. By his feet may be meant, either the grace of faith, which is the foot of the ſoul, by which it goes to Chriſt, and walks on in him, and was not without its imperfections; or the affections of the mind, which are that to the ſoul, as feet are to the body; and when they move right, move heavenward, Godward, and Chriſtward; but ſometimes they are inordinate, and cleave to the things of this world: or the outward life and converſation is meant, which is attended with daily infirmities; and each of theſe need waſhing in the blood of Chriſt. His hands may deſign all his actions, works, ſervices, duties, and performances, the hand being the inſtrument of action; and not only the hands of wicked men, but even of ſaints, need waſhing, their beſt righteouſneſſes being as filthy rags. By his head may be meant doctrines and principles imbibed in the mind, and expreſſed by the lips, which were not free from miſtake and pollution, and needed purging and cleanſing; for the diſciples were not as yet clear from the prejudices of the Jewiſh nation, eſpecially relating to the nature of the Meſſiah's kingdom.

Ver. 10. Jeſus ſaith to him, he that is waſhed, &c.] Not he that is baptized; for every ſuch perſon is not wholly clean, but he who is regenerated by the Spirit of God, or rather, who is waſhed in the blood of Chriſt: ſuch an one is clean every whit; is all over clean; not that he has no ſin in him, nor commits any; but as he is waſhed in the blood of Chriſt, and juſtified by his righteouſneſs, he's wholly and entirely clean in the ſight of God; for he's juſtified from all things he could not be juſtified from by the law of Moſes; all his ſins are pardoned, and he is perfectly righteous before God; and ſo is perfectly clean thro' the word or ſentence of juſtification and abſolution pronounced on him, which muſt be underſtood in a forenſic or law ſenſe. And ſuch an one needeth not, ſave to waſh his feet; the feet of his life and converſation, which are continually gathering dirt, and need daily waſhing in the blood of Chriſt; and therefore recourſe muſt be conſtantly had to that fountain to waſh in, for ſin and for uncleanneſs. The alluſion is either to perſons waſhed all over in a bath, who have no need to waſh again, unleſs their feet, which may contract ſome ſoil in coming out of it; or to travellers, who have often need to waſh their feet, tho' no other part, and ſuch is the caſe of the children of God in this life; or rather to the prieſts, who having bathed themſelves in the morning, needed not to waſh again all the day, except their hands and feet, on certain occaſions [x]. And ye are clean, but not all; which ſhews, that juſtifying and regenerating grace are common to all the true diſciples of Chriſt; they are equally born again, alike juſtified, and are as clean one as another in the ſight of God: not only Peter, but all the Apoſtles, were clean, excepting one; there was one of them, Judas, who was not clean; and therefore he ſays, but not all: whence it may be obſerved, that among the pureſt ſocieties, there are ſome unclean perſons; there was a Judas, an unclean perſon among the pure diſciples of Chriſt; there are chaff and tares among his wheat, goats among his ſheep, and fooliſh virgins along with the wiſe ones.

Ver. 11. For he knew who ſhould betray him, &c.] That is, Jeſus, as Beza's ancient copy, and the Syriac and Perſic verſions read. This he knew from the beginning; not only from the beginning of his miniſtry, when he choſe his twelve Apoſtles, but from the beginning of time, yea, from everlaſting; this being fixed by the determinate counſel of God, which he, as the omniſcient God, was privy to: he knew what preparations were making, and how things were then working, in order to bring it about; he knew that ſatan had already put it into Judas's heart, and that he had conſented to it; therefore, ſaid he, ye are not all clean: he does not mention his name, tho' he could have done, it not being as yet proper to make ſo full a diſcovery of him, before the matter was ripe for execution; and alſo to put all the diſciples upon examination of themſelves.

Ver. 12. So after he had waſhed their feet, &c.] Not Peter's only, but the reſt of the diſciples alſo: ſome have thought, that he waſhed only the feet of ſome of them, and not all; but it ſeems, by this expreſſion, that he performed this ſervice to each of them: and when he had gone through it with every one of them; and had taken his garments, and put them on, and was ſet down again; at the table with his diſciples, ſupper not being yet ended; when having done his work as a ſervant, he re-aſſumes the air and authority of Lord and Maſter, and begins to teach and inſtruct, into the deſign and uſe of what he had been doing, which he introduces by putting this queſtion; he ſaid unto them, know ye what I have done to you? They knew the outward action he had done to them, that he had waſhed their feet; but, as yet, they did not know the myſtery of it, Chriſt's deſign in it, and what he would have them learn from it.

Ver. 13. Ye call me Maſter and Lord, &c.] רבי and מר, Maſter and Lord were dignified titles among the Jews, which they frequently [y] gave to their doctors and men of learning, and are often to be met with in their writings: hence the diſciples called Chriſt by theſe names, not out of flattery, but reverence of him, and eſteem for him; nor are they blamed, but commended for it: and ye ſay well, for ſo I am; tho' he had acted the part of a ſervant in ſuch a ſurprizing manner, by waſhing their feet; yet he had not dropp'd and loſt, but ſtill maintains his place and authority as a Maſter to teach and inſtruct them, and as a Lord to rule and govern them.

Ver. 14. If I then your Lord and Maſter, &c.] Chriſt argues from theſe titles and characters, which his diſciples rightly gave him, and from what he had done to them, though he ſtood in ſuch a ſuperior relation to them, to their duty one towards another; that ſince, ſays he, I have waſhed your feet, ye alſo ought to waſh one another's feet: by which he does not mean barely, that they ſhould perform this ſingle action; but as this was an inſtance of humility and condeſcenſion, and doing a good office to ſtrangers and travellers, and was afterwards an expreſſion of love to the ſaints, ſee 1 Tim. v. 10. ſo he would teach them hereby, to behave in a ſpirit of humility and condeſcenſion to one another, to do every kind and good office, and by love to ſerve one another in all things.

[y] Vid. T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 3. 1. Derech Erets, c. 6. fol. 18. 2.

Ver. 15. For I have given you an example, &c.] Chriſt is an example to his people, in many things; not in his miraculous performances and mediatorial work, but in the exerciſe of grace, of meekneſs, humility, love, patience, and the like; and in the diſcharge of duty, in ſubmiſſion to ordinances, and in attending on them; and in the ſeveral duties, both to them that are without, and to them that are within; and alſo in his ſufferings and death; not that he died merely as an example, but likewiſe in the room and ſtead of his people; but here he is ſpoken of as an example, in a particular inſtance: that ye ſhould do as I have done to you; waſh one another's feet, as he had waſhed theirs; which is not to be underſtood literally and ſingly of this action, as though this was an ordinance binding upon all perſons, in all places, and to be attended to at certain ſtated times, as has been the practice of ſome: it was ſo underſtood by the church at Milain, and there practiſed; and this cuſtom was continued and defended by St. Ambroſe, even though not received by the church of Rome; in ſome places the biſhop uſed to waſh the feet of thoſe that were baptized, which in proceſs of time being thought ſufficient, inſtead of baptiſm, was forbidden by the council at Eliberis. In imitation of this, the pope every year, on Thurſday in the paſſion week, waſhes the feet of twelve men; and it is an anniverſary ceremony performed by the kings of England and France, to waſh the feet of twelve poor people, in commemoration of this action of Chriſt's: but our Lord is not to be underſtood literally, nor of any thing that was to be done once a year, but of what was daily and conſtantly to be practiſed; and which was to be done not by one only, to all the reſt, but what they were mutually to do; what they were to do to one another; for the thing ſignified, reaches to, and is obligatory upon all chriſtians. Our Lord's meaning is, that as he had by this action, given them an example of humility, condeſcenſion, and love; ſo they ſhould exerciſe theſe graces, and perform ſuch kind offices to one another, and to all their fellow chriſtians.

Ver. 16. Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, &c.] This is a ſtrong way of aſſeveration, and is uſed when any thing of moment and importance, and worthy of attention and obſervation is delivered. The ſervant is not greater than his Lord; it is enough that he be as his Lord, which was a common phraſe among the Jews; ſee the notes on Matt. x. 24, 25. and as it is there made uſe of, to inform the diſciples they muſt expect perſecution, and to encourage them to bear it with patience; here it is deſigned to engage to humility; for if a maſter condeſcends to perform ſuch an action, much more may a ſervant: neither he that is ſent, is greater than he that ſent him. This is alſo a way of ſpeaking, in uſe among the Jews; “ R. Meir ſays[z], who is greateſt, he that “ keeps, or he that is kept? from what is written in “ Pſal. xci. 11. he that is kept, is greater than he “ that keeps: ſays R. Judah, which is greateſt, “ he that carries, or he that is carried? from what “ is written in ver. 12. he that is carried, is greater “ than he that carries: ſays R. Simeon, from what “ written, in Iſ. vi. 8, הוי המשלח גדול מן המשתלח, “ he that ſends, is greater than he that is ſent.” Which is the very phraſe here uſed by Chriſt; and his meaning is this, that if it was not below him, who had choſe and called, and ſent them forth as his apoſtles, to waſh their feet, they who were ſent by him, ſhould not diſdain to waſh one another's.

Ver. 17. If ye know theſe things, &c.] The duties they owed to him, and one another; thoſe kind offices of love and reſpect to each other; the humility, condeſcenſion, and brotherly love, which ought to be in them, and of which he had given them an example: happy are ye if ye do them; for the bare theory, or a mere ſpeculative knowledge of theſe things, is not ſufficient; not he that knows and does not, but he that knows and does his maſter's will, is bleſſed; he's bleſſed with communion with his Lord, and ſhall hereafter enter into his joy, with well done good and faithful ſervant. There's an happineſs in doing well, and which follows on it, tho' not for it, in a way of merit; on the other hand, perſons who know and do not, are very unhappy: the Jews have a ſaying[a], “ שהלמד שלא לעשות, “ he that learns but not to do, it would have been “ better for him, if he had never been created; “ and ſays R. Jochanan, he that learns, but not to “ do, it would have been better for him if his ſecundine had been turned upon his face, and he “ had never come into the world.”

Ver. 18. I ſpeak not of you all, &c.] What he had before ſaid on the one hand, ye are all clean, for one of them was not; and on the other hand, when he put an if upon, or ſeemed to doubt of their knowing and doing theſe things; or what he was about to ſay concerning his being betrayed, this he did not ſpeak of them all: I know whom I have choſen; not to apoſtleſhip, for they were all choſen to that, Judas as well as the reſt, but to grace and glory, to everlaſting ſalvation and happineſs; of theſe he was well aſſured, that they were all clean, pure, and ſpotleſs, in the ſight of God; were truly regenerated by the Spirit of God, and had an experimental and practical knowledge of the things he recommended by his example, and would be the happy perſons he ſpake of; but he obſerves, ſo it is, and will come to paſs, that there is one of you which will betray me: that the ſcripture may be fulfilled, Pſal. xli. 9. as it literally[b] was in Judas's betraying Chriſt. The paſſage is by many interpreted either of Abitophel, or of ſome other counſellor of Abſalom's, or of Abſalom himſelf; and is applied to their conduct, with reſpect to David, at the time of their rebellion againſt him; and which is thought to be typical of the treatment Chriſt met with from an apoſtle of his: but we don't find that at the time of that rebellion, that David was ſick, or had any diſeaſe upon him, from whence they might hope for his death; it does not ſeem, as though it could be literally underſtood of David at all, and of the behaviour of any of his ſervants; but moſt properly of David's ſon, the Meſſiah, Jeſus, with whom every thing in the pſalm agrees; and particularly this verſe, which ſo plainly deſcribes Judas, and expreſſes his baſe ingratitude, hypocriſy, and malice: the former part of the text is not cited, yea, mine own familiar friend, or the man of my peace, in whom I truſted; though it fully agrees with him, he being admitted to great familiarity with Chriſt, and lived peaceably with him; and who was entruſted by him, with the bag, into which the money was put, which was miniſtred, either for the ſuſtenance of him and his apoſtles, or for the uſe of the poor: but our Lord thought fit to cite no more of it, than what follows, that being ſufficiently deſcriptive of him; and eſpecially at this preſent time, when he was at table with his Lord. He that eateth bread with me, hath lift up his heel againſt me; he ſat down with him at table frequently, and eat bread with him; and was doing ſo, when ſatan put it into his heart to betray him; which is ſtrongly expreſſed, by lifting up his heel againſt him; and ſets forth the ingratitude, wickedneſs, and cruelty of him; who like an unruly horſe, that has thrown his rider, ſpurns at him, to deſtroy him; and alſo the inſidious manner in which he did it; he ſupplanted, he tripped him, as wreſtlers do, in order to caſt him down to the ground, and then trample upon him, and triumph over him: he firſt, מארב, laid ſnares for him, as Jarchi explains the phraſe uſed in the pſalm, and then, הגדיל, he magnified his heel, he behaved proudly and haughtily to him.

Ver. 19. Now I tell you before it come, &c.] That is, gave them notice of this beforehand, that one of them ſhould betray him: that when it is come to paſs; and they had ſeen it fulfilled exactly to a tittle, and according to this ſcripture: ye may believe that I am he; the Lord God omniſcient, who knows and declares things before they come to paſs, juſt as they do come to paſs, which none but the eternal God can do; and that he was the Saviour and Redeemer, the Meſſiah ſpoken of and promiſed, the very perſon propheſied of, in Pſal. xli. For that whole pſalm is applicable to Jeſus Chriſt, the true Meſſiah; in ver. 1, 2, 3. the happineſs of ſuch is declared, who conſider the poor; the Meſſiah, in his low eſtate of humiliation, who became poor for the ſake of his people; in ver. 5. his enemies are repreſented as wiſhing for his death; their hypocriſy, perfidy, and vile deſigns upon his life, are aptly deſcribed in ver. 6, 7. which they executed by ſuborning falſe witneſſes, bringing a wrong charge, דבר בליעל, a wicked accuſation againſt him, ver. 8. which ſucceeded, to the taking away of his life; and then they are introduced as triumphing over him, lying dead in the grave, whom they believed would never riſe more; but in this they were miſtaken, for he was raiſed up again; for which he prays, ver. 10. that he might requite them, as he did, by deſtroying their city, temple, and nation; and the whole is concluded with thankfulneſs to God, for raiſing and exalting him, and ſetting him before his face for ever, ver. 11, 12, 13. There is but one paſſage in it, which has any difficulty in applying it to Chriſt, and that is, ver. 4. where he is ſpoken of as having ſinned againſt the Lord; but the words may be rendered thus, heal my ſoul, i. e. deliver me out of my ſorrows and afflictions, כי חטאתי לך, becauſe I have made an offering for ſin unto thee; and well agrees with Chriſt, who was to make, and has made his ſoul an offering for ſin.

Ver. 20. Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, &c.] You may aſſure yourſelves of the truth of what I am going to ſay, and which I ſay for your comfort and encouragement: he that receiveth whomſoever I ſend, receiveth me, and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that ſent me; I have ſent you in my name to preach the Goſpel; you are my ambaſſadors, and you will be honourably received by many; and which I ſhall regard and take notice of, and eſteem, as though they had received me; even as my Father has ſent me into this world, as a ſaviour and redeemer, a prophet, prieſt, and king; and as many as have received me, are looked upon by my Father, as having received him: in ſhort, ſuch as cordially receive and embrace the miniſters of the Goſpel, receive Chriſt, in whoſe name they come, and whom they preach; and ſuch who receive Chriſt, as preached and held forth in the everlaſting Goſpel, receive the Father of Chriſt; and partake of his love, grace, and kindneſs, ſhewn forth in the miſſion and gift of Chriſt to them: Chriſt, as mediator, perſonated his Father that ſent him; and the miniſters of Chriſt perſonate him; ſo that what is done to them, either in a way of reception or rejection, he takes as done to himſelf: it is a common ſaying among the Jews[c], ששלוחו של אדם כמותו, that the meſſenger of a man is as himſelf.

Ver. 21. When Jeſus had thus ſaid, &c.] Having ſpoken of the miſſion of his diſciples by him, of their reception among men, and the notice that would be taken of it by him: he was troubled in ſpirit; in his ſoul, which ſhews him to be truly and really man, and to have an human ſoul, which ſome have denied; and that to be of like paſſions with ours, only without ſin: he was troubled, not at what he had ſaid, but at what he was about to ſay concerning the betrayer; and that not ſo much on his own account, becauſe of the danger, the ſorrows, and ſufferings he ſhould be expoſed to; as on account of the horrible blackneſs of the crime, and the vengeance that would fall upon the criminal; and being thus inwardly diſtreſſed at this affair, he teſtified and ſaid: he ſpake out openly and plainly, what he had before ſecretly intimated, and that with the greateſt certainty: verily, verily, I ſay unto you; 'tis truth, it may be believed, however unexpected and ſtrange it may ſeem to be: that one of you ſhall betray me; to the chief prieſts and elders, in order to be put to death.

Ver. 22. Then the diſciples looked one to another, &c.] As perſons ſurprized and aſtoniſhed, and as ſcarce crediting what was ſaid; not having had the leaſt ſuſpicion of any one among them, that could be guilty of ſuch an action; and expreſſing by their looks their deteſtation of, and indignation at ſo horrible an iniquity; or they looked one to another, to obſerve if they could, whether the countenance of any one would diſcover who the perſon was: doubting of whom he ſpake; not being able to conceive and imagine, who the perſon was he had in view; from whence it appears, that Judas to this time, had behaved outwardly as well as any of the other diſciples; he had given no occaſion, by his conduct, to ſuſpect him more than any other: upon this broad intimation, or rather ſtrong proteſtation which Chriſt made, that one of them ſhould betray him, their eyes were not turned to him directly and particularly, but to one another.

Ver. 23. Now there was leaning on Jeſus's boſom, &c.] Not preſſing upon that part of Chriſt's body, which would have been irreverent in John, and troubleſome to Chriſt; but leaning at table upon his bed or couch, on which he lay; and which was next to, and juſt before Chriſt; ſo that he was very near unto, and ſeemed to lie in the boſom of Chriſt; as ſuch are ſaid to do, who ſit next at table to another. The poſture of the Jews at table, was either ſitting or lying, and a difference they make between theſe two; “ if, ſay they[d], “ היו יושבין, they ſat to eat, every one aſked a “ bleſſing for himſelf; but if, הסיבו, they lay “ down, one aſked a bleſſing for them all.” This lying down was not on their backs, nor on their right ſide, but on their left; for they ſay[e], that “ lying down on the back, is not called, הסיבה, “ lying down; and lying on the right ſide, is not

And the reaſon given is [f], becauſe they have need of the right hand to eat with; but as they elſewhere [g] obſerve, "they uſed "to eat lying along, leaning on the left ſide, their "feet to the ground, and every man on a ſingle "couch." Would you know the order in which they lay, take the account as they have given it [h]; "when there were but two couches, the principal "perſon lay firſt, and the ſecond to him above "him; and when there were three, the principal "perſon lay in the middle, the ſecond to him "above him, and the third below him; and if he "would talk with him, he raiſed himſelf upright, "and ſitting upright he talked with him; that is, "as the Gloſs explains it, if the principal perſon "was deſirous to talk with him that was ſecond "to him, he muſt raiſe himſelf up from his lying "down, and ſit upright; for all the while he is "leaning, he can't talk with him, becauſe he that "is ſecond to him, is behind the head of the "principal perſon, and the face of the principal "perſon is turned to the other ſide; and its better "for the ſecond to ſit below him, that he may "hear his words, whilſt he is leaning." The form in which Chriſt and his diſciples ſat or lay at table, we may conceive was this [i]; a table was placed in the middle, and as many beds or couches round it, as there were perſons; Chriſt the principal and moſt worthy perſon lay firſt, with his head toward the table, his face ſomewhat turned from it, leaning on his left elbow upon the couch; in this poſture lay Jeſus, upon the firſt couch; in the ſame poſture lay John, in the next to him, and juſt before him; the hinder part of his head being towards, and near the breaſt and boſom of Jeſus; whence he is ſaid to lean upon it: now to lie next to the principal perſon, was a very great honour, as well as a mark of great affection; and for John to lie next to Jeſus, and as it were to lean on his boſom, ſhewed how much he was reſpected and honoured by him; and therefore John modeſtly conceals his name, and only ſays, one of his diſciples whom Jeſus loved: Chriſt, as the Son of God, and ſurety of his people, loved his true diſciples, as he does all his elect, alike; not one more than the other; but as man, he had a particular affection for this diſciple, and therefore admitted him near his perſon, and was very familiar with him.

Ver. 24. Simon Peter therefore beckoned to him, &c.] Peter perhaps lay at a diſtance from Chriſt, or in ſome ſuch poſition, that he could not whiſper to him himſelf; and beſides, knew that John might uſe more freedom, as he was admitted to more familiarity with him; and being at ſome diſtance alſo from him, he beckened to him; which was uſually done at meals, when they could not, by reaſon of their poſture, diſcourſe together: this being the caſe, מחוי ליה במחוג, they made ſigns, by nodding to one another [k]; that is, as the Gloſs explains it, they pointed with their hands and fingers, and by nodding or beckning; ſuch a method Peter took, ſignifying his deſire, that he ſhould aſk who it ſhould be of whom he ſpake: which he did not out of mere curioſity, but from an honeſt intention and pure zeal, that he with the reſt, might ſhew their abhorrence of ſuch a perſon, and avoid him; and do all that lay in their power to hinder him from putting his deſigns into execution, and that the innocent might be free from all ſuſpicion.

Ver. 25. He then lying on Jeſus breaſt, &c.] Being on the couch juſt before Jeſus; with his back to him, he bends backwards, and falling on Jeſus's breaſt, whiſpers in his ear: and ſaith unto him, Lord, who is it? uſing his intereſt in Chriſt, and making thus free with him, in compliance with Peter's requeſt; and he was no doubt deſirous himſelf of knowing who the perſon was.

Ver. 26. Jeſus anſwered, he it is, &c.] Jeſus replied, by whiſpering; for had he ſpoken out, the reſt could not have been ſo ignorant, as they ſtill continued, after the ſign was given: Chriſt, I ſay, whiſpered to John, and told him by what ſign he might know the perſon, and that it was he, to whom, ſays he, I ſhall give a ſop, when I have dipped it. This was not the paſſover ſop, which was dipped into a ſauce made of various things, called by the Jews, חרוסת; for this was not the paſchal ſupper, but a common ſupper at a private houſe, two days before the feaſt of the paſſover; but this ſop, or rather cruſt of bread, which whether dipt into a liquid, or only a piece of dry bread, which Chriſt dipped his hand into the diſh for, and took, as ſome think, is not very material, was a piece of common bread, which Chriſt took up, without regard to any cuſtom, or ceremony uſed at any feaſts, and gave it to the betrayer, as a ſign by which John might know him: and when he had dipped the ſop; either into ſome ſort of broth, or any other liquid, or had dipped his hand into the diſh for it: he gave it to Judas Iſcariot, the ſon of Simon; ſo called, to diſtinguiſh him from another apoſtle, whoſe name was Judas, and was then preſent.

Ver. 27. And after the ſop, ſatan entered into him, &c.] After he had taken and eaten the ſop, or cruſt of bread, by which he was pointed out to be the betrayer, ſatan entered into him; poſſeſſed his body, and filled his mind, and ſtirred him up more eagerly to purſue with vigour, his wicked deſign. The Jews have a ſaying [l], that "no man commits "a tranſgreſſion, until, נכנס בו רוח שטות, a "ſpirit of madneſs enters into him." Such an evil ſpirit entered into Judas, which puſhed him on to commit this horrid iniquity: then ſaid Jeſus to him, that thou doeſt, do quickly; this he ſaid, not as approving his wicked deſign, and exhorting him to it as a laudable action, but rather as deriding him, having nothing to care about, or fear from him; or as upbraiding him with his perfidy and wickedneſs, and ſignifying that he ſhould take no methods to prevent him, though he fully knew what was in his heart to do; and it ſeems alſo to expreſs the willingneſs of Chriſt, and his eager and hearty deſire to ſuffer and die for his people, in order to obtain ſalvation for them.

Ver. 28. Now no man at the table, &c.] Not one of thoſe who lay upon the couches at the table, excepting John, to whom the ſignal was given: knew for what intent he ſpake this unto him; and perhaps he might not know the meaning of his laſt words, that he ſpoke concerning the act of betraying him; nor did not imagine that the thing was ſo near and ſo ſpeedily to be done, as it was.

Ver. 29. For ſome of them thought, &c.] This was the thought of ſome of the diſciples, it may be of all of them but John; becauſe Judas had the bag; which was for the common ſupply of Chriſt and his diſciples, and for the relief of the poor; ſee the note on ch. xii. 6. That Jeſus had ſaid unto him, buy thoſe things that we have need of againſt the feaſt; the feaſt of the paſſover, which was to be two days after; and ſhews, that this was not the paſſover which Chriſt now eat with his diſciples: or that he ſhould give ſomething to the poor; for whom Chriſt cared, and had a hearty concern, and for whom Judas had very little, notwithſtanding his high pretenſions.

Ver. 30. He then having received the ſop, &c.] As ſoon as ever he received it, he went immediately out; fearing leſt an entire diſcovery ſhould be made, and he be prevented accompliſhing his deſign; or being more violently ſtirred up to it by ſatan, who after the ſop entered into him, he directly went from Bethany to Jeruſalem, to the chief prieſts there, in order to conſult and agree upon the delivery of him into their hands: and it was night; this circumſtance is added, to ſhew how eagerly he was bent upon it; that though it was night, it did not hinder or diſcourage him from ſetting out on his journey to Jeruſalem; and as this was a work of darkneſs, the night was the fitteſt time for it, and was a proper emblem of the blackneſs of the crime he was going to perpetrate.

Ver. 31. Therefore, when he was gone out, Jeſus ſaid, &c.] Chriſt and his true diſciples being together alone, he uſed a greater freedom of converſation with them, and entered into ſome diſcourſe about his ſufferings and death; with a view to give them ſome inſtructions about their future conduct and behaviour, and in order to ſupport them under the loſs of his preſence; and tells them in the firſt place, that now is the Son of man glorified: by the Son of man, he means himſelf; a phraſe he often uſes, when ſpeaking of himſelf; this was a title the Meſſiah went by in prophecy; was true in fact of Jeſus, who was the ſon of Abraham, and the ſon of David, and expreſſes the truth of his humanity; and he the rather chuſes to uſe it now, becauſe he is ſpeaking of a glorification, which he in his divine nature was uncapable of, and which regards either time paſt, preſent, or to come: the meaning may be, either that he had been already glorified by his doctrines and miracles; or that he was now glorified, by diſcovering the traitor, before he made one ſingle overt-act towards betraying him; or that in a very ſhort time he ſhould be glorified, meaning at his death; ſee John xvii. 1. But how was he then glorified, when it was an accurſed one, and attended with ſo much ignominy and reproach? he was then glorified by his Father, who ſupported him in it, and carried him through it; ſo as that he conquered all his enemies, and obtained eternal ſalvation for his people: moreover, the death of Chriſt, was not only his way to glory, but was attended with many wonderful and ſurprizing events; as the darkneſs, the earthquake, the rending of the rocks, and vail of the temple, and the like; and it was alſo glorious in the eyes of his Father, becauſe hereby his purpoſes were accompliſhed, his covenant tranſactions brought about, his law and juſtice were ſatiſfied, and the ſalvation of his people finiſhed: and God is glorified in him. The glory of God was great, in the ſalvation of his elect by the death of Chriſt; for hereby his wiſdom and power, his truth and faithfulneſs, his juſtice and holineſs, as well as his love, grace, and mercy, were glorified.

Ver. 32. If God be glorified in him, &c.] Seeing this is a certain truth, is indiſputably matter of fact, that all the perfections of God are glorified in Chriſt, by his ſufferings and death: God ſhall alſo glorify him in himſelf; either with himſelf, with his own glory, which was promiſed to Chriſt, and which he had before the world was, and for which he prays, John xvii. 5. or by himſelf; by his own power, in raiſing him from the dead, ſetting him at his own right hand, and crowning him with glory and honour: and ſhall ſtraightway glorify him; this he'll do very quickly, he'll not leave him in the grave, nor ſuffer him to ſee corruption; he'll raiſe him again the third day, and give him glory.

Ver. 33. Little children, yet a little while I am with you, &c.] Chriſt having removed the ſcandal of his death, by obſerving, that both he and his Father would be glorified by it; begins more freely to open his mind to his diſciples, and acquaint them with it; whom he addreſſes in the moſt kind, tender, and affectionate manner, little children; expreſſing the relation which ſubſiſted between them, of which he was not unmindful; his great affection for them, his conſideration of their weakneſs, and ſympathy with them on that account; who were very ill able to bear his departure, which he now thought high time to acquaint them with, that it would be very ſhortly: it was but a little while he was to be with them, a few days more; the time of his departure was at hand, his hour was as it were come, and the laſt ſands were dropping: ye ſhall ſeek me; as perſons in diſtreſs, under great concern, not knowing what to do, or where to go: and as I ſaid unto the Jews, ch. vii. 33, 34. whither I go ye cannot come, ſo now ſay I unto you; but with this difference, whereas the unbelieving Jews, who died in their ſins, could never come whither he went, theſe his diſciples, though they could not come now, yet they ſhould hereafter, all of them, as well as Peter, ver. 36.

Ver. 34. A new commandment I give unto you, &c.] As parents, when they take their leave of their children, in their dying moments, give them proper inſtructions and orders, and lay their dying injunctions on them, ſo Chriſt taking his leave of his diſciples, gives them his; which were, that they love one another: as brethren in the ſame family, children of the ſame father, and fellow diſciples with each other; by keeping and agreeing together, praying one for another, bearing one another's burdens, forbearing and forgiving one another, admoniſhing each other, and building up one another in faith and holineſs: and this he calls a new commandment; that is, a very excellent one; as a new name, and a new ſong, denote excellent ones; or it is ſo called, becauſe it is ſet forth by Chriſt, in a new edition of it, and newly and more clearly explained, than before; and being enforced with a new argument and pattern, never uſed before, as I have loved you; and to be obſerved in a new manner, not in the oldneſs of the letter, but in the newneſs of the Spirit: beſides, though this commandment, as to the matter of it, is the ſame with that of Moſes, Lev. xix. 18. yet it takes in more, and new objects; ſince by neighbour there, ſeems to be meant the children of their people, the Jews; and ſo they underſtood it only of their countrymen, and of proſelytes at fartheſt, whereas this reaches to any other perſon; ſee Rom. xiii. 8. and as the meaſure, as well as the motive is new, for it is not now as thyſelf, but as I have loved you, the Jew has no reaſon to object as he does [m], to its being called a new commandment: and its being new, carries in it a reaſon or argument, why it ſhould be obſerved, as does alſo the following clauſe; as I have loved you, that ye alſo love one another; than which, nothing can, or ſhould, more ſtrongly engage to it: as Chriſt has loved his people freely, notwithſtanding all their unworthineſs and ungratefulneſs, ſo ſhould they love one another, though there may be many things in them obſervable, which are diſagreeable; as Chriſt loves all his children without any diſtinction, ſo ſhould they love one another, whether poor or rich, weaker or ſtronger, leſſer or greater believers; and as Chriſt loves them not in word only, but in deed and in truth, ſo ſhould they love one another with a pure heart fervently, and by love ſerve one another.

Ver. 35. By this ſhall all men know, &c.] Not only by this you yourſelves will know that ye have paſſed from death and life, that the true work of grace is begun upon your hearts; nor only by this will you know one another to be chriſtians; but by this all men, even the men of the world will know, that ye are my diſciples, if ye have love one to another: and own and acknowledge it, as Tertullian[n] ſays, the very heathens did in his time; who would ſay when they ſaw the chriſtians paſs along the ſtreets, and meet and expreſs their affection to each other, ſee how they love one another; would to God the ſame was as obſervable now. The diſtinguiſhing badge and character of a diſciple of Chriſt, is not any outward garb, or any auſterities of life, by which the diſciples of John and of the Phariſees were known; nor were the ordinary nor extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, beſtowed upon the diſciples of Chriſt, what diſtinguiſhed them as ſuch; ſince thoſe who were not truly his diſciples, had theſe beſtowed on them; but love to one another, brotherly love was the diſtinguiſhing character, and this is another reaſon or argument enforcing a regard unto it.

Ver. 36. Simon Peter ſaid unto him, &c.] One might have expected that Peter would have taken ſome notice of what Chriſt ſaid laſt, about love to one another; but he paſſes over it, and takes no manner of notice of it; which did not ariſe from inattention to it, or from any diſlike of it, or diſaffection to it; for it appears from his whole conduct and writings, that he had the utmoſt regard for it; he very frequently preſſes it, and moſt fervently practiſed it; but having obſerved ſome words which dropped from Chriſt's lips, whither I go ye cannot come, ver. 33. his mind was intent upon them, was uneaſy about them, and very much wanted to know the meaning of them; and as ſoon as Chriſt had done ſpeaking, took the opportunity to put the queſtion: Lord, whither goeſt thou? imagining he was going to ſome diſtant place in the country, and which was difficult of acceſs; whereby he betrayed his weakneſs and ignorance, as the Jews did, ch. vii. 35. Jeſus anſwered him, whither I go thou canſt not follow me now; which words imply, that Chriſt was going ſomewhere in a little time; he was going to the garden to ſurrender himſelf up into the hands of his enemies, and hither Peter could, and did follow him, and therefore is not here meant; he was going to die for his people, in order to take away the ſting of death and the curſe of the law, and work out ſalvation for them; he was going to his Father in heaven, to receive gifts for men; and to ſend the comforter; to open the way to heaven, take poſſeſſion of it, and prepare it for his ſaints; to plead the cauſe, and tranſact the buſineſs of his dear children; and to receive a kingdom for himſelf, and return: now hither, as yet, Peter could not follow him; for his time of ſuffering death was not yet come; Chriſt had ſome other work for him to do firſt; he muſt open the door of faith to the Gentiles, and preach the Goſpel to them: but thou ſhalt follow me afterwards; when thy time is come, and thou haſt done the work allotted for thee, thou ſhalt follow me by dying for me; and thou ſhalt follow me into my kingdom and glory, and be for ever with me: all the ſaints ſhall follow Chriſt to heaven, who is their forerunner for them entered; and as ſure as he is there, ſo ſure ſhall they be alſo; the counſels of God are unalterable, the covenant of grace is firm and ſure, the blood of Chriſt can never be ſpilled in vain, his prayers and preparations cannot be fruitleſs, nor the work of the Spirit be ever loſt; wherefore not one of thoſe who are given to Chriſt, and come to him, and follow him here, but ſhall follow him hereafter.

Ver. 37. Peter ſaid unto him, &c.] Not underſtanding Chriſt's anſwer, and being diſſatisfied with it, enquires: Lord, why cannot I follow thee now? is the place inacceſſible? are the difficulties in the way to it inſuperable? the roughneſs of the road, or the dangers of it, will not diſcourage me; I am ready to go through the greateſt dangers and difficulties, to follow thee: yea, I will lay down my life for thy ſake; whatever enemies I ſhould meet with in following thee, would not diſmay me; I would readily hazard my life, and chearfully lay it down in defence of thee.

Ver. 38. Jeſus anſwered him, wilt thou lay down thy life for my ſake, &c.] Chriſt ſpeaks theſe words as queſtioning, not Peter's ſincerity, but his ſtrength; or as deriding him, or rather pitying him; as if he ſhould ſay, thou poor vain ſelf-ſufficient man, thou doſt not know what thou talkeſt of: verily, verily, I ſay unto thee, the cock ſhall not crow, till thou haſt denied me thrice; not that Peter ſhould deny him three times, before the cock crowed once; for certain it is, that Peter denied Chriſt but once, before the cock crew, Mark xiv. 68. but the meaning is, that before the cock had done crowing, or within the time of cock crowing, he ſhould deny him thrice: whence it follows, that there is no neceſſity of concluding from hence, that this night was the paſſover night, and the night in which Judas betrayed Chriſt, and Peter denied him, but was two nights before; and therefore it is not ſaid here, as by the other Evangeliſts, this day, or this night, or this day, even this night thou ſhalt deny me; only in general before the cock crow, or within the time of cock crowing: ſo that it appears, that Peter twice expreſſed his confidence, in laying down his life for Chriſt; once at the ſupper in Simon's houſe at Bethany, two days before the paſſover, and again at the paſſover ſupper in Jeruſalem; and as often Chriſt rebuked his confidence by this expreſſion, only varying it as the different times required, and therein gave a full proof of his omniſcience.

CHAP. XIV.

Ver. 1. LET not your heart be troubled, &c.] In ſome copies this verſe begins thus, and he ſaid to his diſciples; and certain it is, that theſe words are addreſſed to them in general, Peter being only the perſon our Lord was diſcourſing with in the latter part of the preceding chapter; but turning, as it were, from him, he directs his ſpeech to them all. There were many things which muſt needs needs lie heavy upon, and greatly depreſs the minds of the diſciples; moſt of all the loſs of Chriſt's bodily preſence, his ſpeedy departure from them, of which he had given them notice in the preceding chapter; alſo the manner in which he ſhould be removed from them, and the circumſtances that ſhould attend the ſame, as that he ſhould be betrayed by one of them, and denied by another; likewiſe the poor and uncomfortable ſituation they were likely to be left in, without any ſight or hope of that temporal kingdom being erected, which they had been in expectation of; and alſo the iſſue and conſequence of all this, that they would be expoſed to the hatred and perſecutions of men. Now in the multitude of theſe thoughts within them, Chriſt comforts them, bids them be of good heart, and exhorts them to an exerciſe of faith on God, and on himſelf, as the beſt way to be rid of heart-troubles, and to have peace: ye believe in God, believe alſo in me; which words may be read and interpreted different ways: either thus, ye believe in God, and ye believe in me; and ſo are both propoſitions alike, and expreſs God and Chriſt to be equally the object of their faith; and ſince therefore they had ſo good a foundation for their faith and confidence, they had no reaſon to be uneaſy: or thus, believe in God, and believe in me; and ſo both are exhortations to exerciſe faith alike on them both, as being the beſt antidote they could make uſe of againſt heart-troubles: or thus, believe in God, and ye believe in me; and ſo the former is an exhortation, the latter a propoſition: and the ſenſe is, put your truſt in God, and you will alſo truſt in me, for I am of the ſame nature and eſſence with him; I and my Father are one; ſo that if you believe in one, you muſt believe in the other: or thus, and ſo our tranſlators render them, ye believe in God, believe alſo in me; and ſo the former is a propoſition, or an aſſertion, and the latter is an exhortation grounded upon it: you have believed in God as faithful and true in all his promiſes, though you have not ſeen him; believe in me alſo, though I am going from you, and ſhall be abſent for a while; this you may be aſſured of, that whatever I have ſaid ſhall be accompliſhed. The words conſidered either way are a full proof of the true deity of Chriſt, ſince he is repreſented as equally the object of faith with God the Father, and lay a foundation for ſolid peace and comfort in a view of afflictions and perſecutions in the world.

---

Ver. 2. In my Father's houſe are many manſions, &c.] This he ſays to draw off their minds from an earthly kingdom to an heavenly one; to point out the place to them whither he was going, and to ſupport them with the views and hopes of glory under all their troubles. By his Father's houſe is meant heaven; ſee 2 Cor. v. 1. which is of his Father's building, where he has, and will have all his family. This Chriſt ſays partly to reconcile the minds of his diſciples to his departure from them, and partly to ſtrengthen their hope of following him thither; ſince it was his Father's, and their Father's houſe whither he was going, and in which are many manſions; abiding or dwelling-places; manſions of love, peace, joy, and reſt, which always remain: and there are many of them, which does not deſign different degrees of glory; for ſince the ſaints are all loved with the ſame love, bought with the ſame price, juſtified with the ſame righteouſneſs, and are equally the ſons of God, their glory will be the ſame. But it denotes fulneſs and ſufficiency of room for all his people; for the many ordained to eternal life, for whom Chriſt gave his life a ranſom, and whoſe blood is ſhed for the remiſſion of their ſins, whoſe ſins he bore, and whom he juſtifies by his knowledge; who receive him by faith, and are the many ſons he'll bring to glory. And this is ſaid for the comfort of the diſciples, who might be aſſured from hence, that there would be room not only for himſelf and Peter, whom he had promiſed ſhould follow him hereafter, but for them all. Very agreeable to this way of ſpeaking are many things in the Jewiſh writings: "ſays "R. Iſaack[o], how many, מדורין על מדורין, man-"ſions upon manſions, are there for the righteous in "that world? and the uppermoſt manſion of them "all is the love of their Lord." Moreover, they ſay[p], that "in the world to come every righteous "man ſhall have, מדור, a manſion, to himſelf." Sometimes they[q] ſpeak of ſeven manſions (a number of perfection) being prepared for the righteous in the other world, tho' entirely ignorant of the perſon by whom theſe manſions are prepared; who here ſays, if it were not ſo, I would have told you, I go to prepare a place for you. This expreſſes the certainty of it, that his Father had a houſe, and in it were many manſions, room enough for all his people, or he would have informed them otherwiſe, who muſt needs know the truth of theſe things, ſince he came from thence; and who never deceives with vain hopes of glory; and whatever he ſays is truth, and to be depended on; every thing he here delivers; both what he ſaid before, and alſo what follows: I go to prepare a place for you; heaven is a kingdom prepared by the Father for his ſaints, from the foundation of the world; and again, by the preſence and interceſſion of Chriſt, who is gone before, and is as a forerunner entered into it, and has took poſſeſſion of it in the name of his people; and by his own appearance there for them with his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, he is, as it were, fitting up theſe manſions for their reception, whilſt they are by his Spirit and grace fitting and preparing for the enjoyment of them.

Ver. 3. And if I go and prepare a place for you, &c.] Seeing I am going to prepare, and will prepare a place for you, of the truth of which you may be fully aſſured: I will come again; either by death, or in perſon a ſecond time, here on earth: and receive you unto myſelf; I'll take you up with me to heaven; I'll receive you into glory: that where I am there ye may be alſo; and behold my glory, and be for ever with me, and never part more.

Ver. 4. And whither I go ye know, &c.] They might have known, at leaſt, whither he was going, ſince he had ſpoke of his Father's houſe, and of his going to prepare a place for them there, and doubtleſs had ſome knowledge thereof, tho' very confuſed and imperfect: and the way ye know; this alſo they might have known from ſome expreſſions of his, that the way to his Father's houſe lay thro' ſufferings and death, in which way they alſo were to follow him to his kingdom and glory. Tho' theſe words may be read with an interrogation, and whither I go do ye know? and the way do ye know? which beſt agrees with Thomas's anſwer, and removes all appearance of contradiction between Chriſt's words and his.

Ver. 5. Thomas ſaith unto him, Lord, &c.] Who was one of his Apoſtles, and here betrays his ignorance, as elſewhere his unbelief; and not only ſpeaks for himſelf, but for the reſt of the Apoſtles, of whom he judged by himſelf; and who, it may be, might underſtand things better than himſelf, tho' their knowledge at preſent was but ſmall: we know not whither thou goeſt; tho' he had but juſt told them of his Father's houſe, and of his going to prepare a place for them: and how can we know the way? for if we don't know the place, 'tis not reaſonable to think we ſhould know the way to it. Thomas ſeemed to have no other notion than that Chriſt was talking of ſome particular place in Judea, whither he was going, and of the road to it.

Ver. 6. Jeſus ſaith unto him, I am the way, &c.] Our Lord takes the opportunity of this diſcourſe about the place he was going to, and the way unto it, more fully to inſtruct his diſciples concerning himſelf, ſaying, I am the way; Chriſt is not merely the way, as he goes before his people as an example; or merely as a prophet, pointing out unto them, by his doctrine, the way of ſalvation; but he is the way of ſalvation itſelf by his obedience and ſacrifice; nor is there any other: he is the way of his Father's appointing, and which is entirely agreeable to the perfections of God, and ſuitable to the caſe and condition of ſinners; he is the way to all the bleſſings of the covenant of grace; and he is the right way into a Goſpel church-ſtate here; no one comes rightly into a church of Chriſt but by faith in him; and he is the way to heaven: he is entered into it himſelf by his own blood, and has opened the way to it thro' himſelf for his people: he adds, the truth; he is not only true, but truth itſelf: this may regard his perſon and character; he is the true God, and eternal life; truly and really man; as a prophet he taught the way of God in truth; as a prieſt, he is a faithful, as well as a merciful one, true and faithful to him that appointed him; and as a king, juſt and true are all his ways and adminiſtrations: he is the ſum and ſubſtance of all the truths of the Goſpel; they are all full of him, and center in him; and he is the truth of all the types and ſhadows, promiſes and prophecies of the Old Teſtament; they have all their accompliſhment in him; and he is the true way, in oppoſition to all falſe ones of man's deviſing. And this phraſe ſeems to be oppoſed to a notion of the Jews, that the law was the true way of life, and who confined truth to the law. They have a ſaying[r], that משה ותורתו אמת, Moſes and his law are the truth; this they make Korah and his company ſay in hell. That the law of Moſes was truth, is certain; but it is too ſtrong an expreſſion to ſay of Moſes himſelf, that he was truth; but well agrees with Chriſt, by whom grace and truth came in oppoſition to Moſes, by whom came the law: but when they ſay[s], אין אמת אלא תורה, there's no truth but the law, they do not ſpeak truth. More truly do they ſpeak, when, in anſwer to that queſtion, מה אמת, what is truth? it is ſaid, that he is the living God, and king of the world[t], characters that well agree with Chriſt. The life; Chriſt is the author and giver of life, natural, ſpiritual, and eternal; or he is the way of life, or the living way; in oppoſition to the law, which was ſo far from being the way of life, that it was the miniſtration of condemnation and death: he always, and ever will be the way; all in this way live, none ever die; and it is a way that leads to eternal life: and to conclude all the epithets in one ſentence, Chriſt is the true way to eternal life. 'Tis added by way of explanation of him, as the way, no man cometh unto the Father but by me; Chriſt is the only way of acceſs unto the Father; there's no coming to God as an abſolute God, nor upon the foot of the covenant of works, nor without a mediator; and the only mediator between God and man is Chriſt: he introduces and preſents the perſons and ſervices of his people to his Father, and gives them acceptance with him.

Ver. 7. If ye had known me, &c.] Chriſt having made mention of his Father's houſe, and of himſelf, as the way thither, and the way of acceſs to the Father, was willing to inform his diſciples better concerning him before his departure from them, which he introduces ſaying: if ye had known me; that is, more fully and perfectly; for that they knew Chriſt to be the Son of God, the Saviour of the world, and true Meſſiah, is certain, tho' they were not ſo thoroughly acquainted, as afterwards, with his perſon, power, and office: ye ſhould have known my Father alſo; for the knowledge of the Father, and of Chriſt, go together; he that ſees the one, ſees the other; he that believes in the one, believes in the other; and the knowledge of both is neceſſary to eternal life; and as a perſon increaſes in the knowledge of the one, ſo of the other. The diſciples had ſome knowledge of them both, but what was very ſmall and obſcure, in compariſon of what they afterwards had: and from henceforth ye know him, and have ſeen him; ſome read theſe words, henſeforwards ye ſhall know him, and ſee him; that is, in a very ſhort time, when the Spirit is poured down from on high upon you, and you have received the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, you ſhall then have an enlarged knowledge both of me and my Father. Others render them, as an exhortation, henceforward know ye him; acknowledge the Father in all that I have done, believing that you ſee the Father in me, and in all my works; tho' they are rather to be conſidered as an aſſertion, declaring, that they then had ſome knowledge of the Father; and now ye know him, and, or becauſe ye have ſeen him; in me, who am the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon.

Ver. 8. Philip ſaith to him, Lord, &c.] Another of his diſciples addreſſes him in a reverend and becoming manner, as Thomas before had done, calling him Lord, and ſaying to him, ſhew us the Father, and it ſufficeth us: he ſpeaks in the name of them all, ſeems to own their ignorance of the Father, and expreſſes their deſire of ſeeing him: ſhew us the Father; it was a corporeal ſight of him he aſked for; ſuch a ſight of the glory of God as Moſes deſired, and the elders of Iſrael had at mount Sinai; and ſignifies, that if this could be obtained, it would give them full ſatisfaction: and it ſufficeth us; we ſhall be no more uneaſy at thy departure from us; we ſhall have no doubt about thy Father's houſe, and the many manſions in it; or of thyſelf, as the way unto it, and of our everlaſting abode with thee in it; we ſhall ſit down eaſy and contented, and trouble thee no more with queſtions about this matter.

Ver. 9. Jeſus ſaith unto him, have I been ſo long time with you, &c.] Converſing familiarly with you, inſtructing you by my miniſtry, and performing ſo many miraculous works among you, for ſo long a time; ſee Heb. v. 11, 12. and yet haſt thou not known me, Philip? Surely you can't be ſo ignorant as this comes to; as you have ſeen me with your bodily eyes, as a man, you muſt know that I am God by the doctrines I have taught you, and the miracles I have wrought among you: and he that hath ſeen me; not with the eyes of his body, but with the eyes of his underſtanding; he that has beheld the perfections of the Godhead in me: hath ſeen the Father; the perfections which are in him alſo; for the ſame that are in me are in him, and the ſame that are in him are in me: I am the very image of him, and am poſſeſſed of the ſame nature, attributes, and glory, that he is; ſo that he that ſees the one, ſees the other: and how ſayeſt thou then ſhew us the Father? ſuch a requeſt is a needleſs one, and betrays great weakneſs and ignorance.

Ver. 10. Believeſt thou not that I am in the Father, &c.] This ſurely is, as it muſt needs be, and ought to be, an article of your faith, that I am in the Father, and the Father in me; phraſes which are expreſſive of the ſameneſs of nature in the Father and the Son; of the Son's perfect equality with the Father, ſince the Son is as much in the Father, as the Father is in the Son; and alſo of the perſonal diſtinction there is between them; for nothing with propriety can be ſaid to be in itſelf. The Father muſt be diſtinct from the Son who is in him, and the Son muſt be diſtinct from the Father, in whom he is; the Father and Son, tho' of one and the ſame nature, cannot be one, and the ſame perſon: the words that I ſpeak unto you, I ſpeak not of myſelf. The doctrines which I preach among you are a proof of what I aſſert, and to them I appeal; for theſe are not of myſelf, as man, but the Father that dwelleth in me; and ſo prove that I am truly God, of the ſame nature with my Father; that he is in me, and I in him; ſince they are ſuch as none but the only-begotten, who is in the boſom of the Father, could ever have declared and made known unto you. Likewiſe, the works which I do, as man, I do not of myſelf; but he doth the works: for ſo this paſſage muſt be underſtood and ſupplied, in which Chriſt proceeds to another argument, taken from his works, proving the Father to be in him, and that he is in the Father, which is enlarged on in the next verſe.

Ver. 11. Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me, &c.] Take my word for the truth of this; you may aſſure yourſelves that nothing is more certain; but if you will not believe upon my ſaying ſo, either believe for the ſake of the doctrines I have preached unto you, which are ſuch as never any mere man ſpoke, and which have been delivered in ſuch a manner, and with ſuch authority, as never were by man. Some copies read, by way of interrogation, and ſo the Ethiopic verſion; and the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, believe ye not? or elſe believe me for the very works ſake: meaning his miraculous works, ſuch as raiſing the dead, cleanſing the lepers, cauſing the deaf to hear, and giving ſight to the blind; and which were ſuch as none but a divine perſon could ever perform.

Ver. 12. Verily verily, I ſay unto you, he that believeth on me, &c.] Having mentioned his miracles as proofs of his deity, he aſſures his diſciples, in order to comfort them under the loſs of his bodily preſence, that they ſhould do the ſame, and greater works; for we are not to underſtand theſe words of every one that believes in Chriſt, of every private believer in him, but only of the Apoſtles, and each of them, that were true believers in him: to whom he ſays, the works that I do ſhall he do alſo; he ſhall raiſe the dead, heal all manner of diſeaſes, and caſt out devils; things which Chriſt gave his Apoſtles power to do, when he firſt gave them a commiſſion to preach the Goſpel, and when he renewed and enlarged it; and which they did perform, not in their own name, and by their own power, but in the name, and by the power of Chriſt: and greater works than theſe ſhall he do; meaning, not greater in nature and kind, but more in number; for the Apoſtles, in a long ſeries of time, and courſe of years, went about preaching the Goſpel, not in Judea only, but in all the world; God alſo bearing them witneſs with ſigns and wonders, and divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, wherever they went: tho' perhaps by theſe greater works may be meant the many inſtances of converſion, which the Apoſtles were inſtrumental in, and which were more in number than thoſe which were under our Lord's perſonal miniſtry; beſides, the converſion of a ſinner is a greater work than any of the miracles of raiſing the dead, &c. for this includes in it all miracles: here we may ſee a ſinner dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, quickened; one born blind, made to ſee; one who was deaf to the threatenings of the law, and to the charming voice of the Goſpel, made to hear, ſo as to live; and one that had the ſpreading leproſy of ſin all over him, cleanſed from it by the blood of the Lamb: yea, tho' a miracle in nature is an inſtance and proof of divine power, yet the converſion of a ſinner, which is a miracle in grace, is not only an inſtance of the power of God, and of the greatneſs of it, but of the exceeding greatneſs of it: and the rather one may be induced to give in to this ſenſe of the paſſage, ſince 'tis added, as a reaſon, becauſe I go to my Father; and upon my aſcenſion the Spirit will be given to you, which ſhall not only enable you to perform miracles, as proofs of your Apoſtleſhip, and the doctrine you preach, but which ſhall powerfully attend the Goſpel to the converſion of multitudes of ſouls.

Ver. 13. And whatſoever ye ſhall aſk in my name, &c.] Whether it be for aſſiſtance in preaching of the Goſpel; or for the performance of miraculous operations in confirmation of it; or for ſucceſs to attend it; or for any bleſſings whatſoever, whether for themſelves or others: that will I do; he does not ſay, that he would be a mediator between God, and them, an advocate with the Father for them, and would intercede, and uſe his intereſt with him that it might be done, which would have been ſaying much, and all which he does; but he declares he'll do it himſelf, which is a proof of his deity, and an inſtance of his omnipotence: that the Father may be glorified in the Son. This may be referred either to the petition, which muſt be made with this view, that the Father may be glorified by, or in the Son, in whoſe name it is put up, and for whoſe ſake it is made; or to Chriſt's promiſe to do it; who in doing it, ſeeks not his own glory, at leaſt not ſingly; but as the good of his people, ſo the glory of his heavenly Father.

Ver. 14. If ye ſhall aſk any thing, &c.] Theſe words are much the ſame with the former, and have been thought, by ſome, to have crept into the text from the margin; tho' they ſeem rather to be repeated by Chriſt, the more to ſtrengthen and confirm the faith of his diſciples in this matter; that whatſoever they aſked in his name, either calling upon it, he being equally the object of prayer with the Father, or making mention of it, pleading the merits of his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice; whatever was according to the will of God, was for his glory, and their real good, he would do it for them, as well when abſent from them, as preſent with them.

Ver. 15. If ye love me, &c.] Not that Chriſt doubted of the love of his diſciples to him; but he argues from it to their obſervance of his precepts, ſeeing ye do love me; as all do who are born again, who have had any ſpiritual ſight of him, of his glory, ſuitableneſs, and fulneſs; who believe in him, and have received from him; who have had his love ſhed abroad in their hearts, having enjoyed communion with him, and know the relation he ſtands in to them: theſe love him above all others, and all of him, and that belong to him, unfeignedly, and in the ſincerity of their ſouls, as did the diſciples; and ſince they profeſſed to love, and did love him, as they ought to do, he exhorts them, ſaying, keep my commandments: Chriſt is Lord over his people, as he is the creator and redeemer of them, and as he is an head and huſband to them; and as ſuch he has a right to iſſue out his commands, and enjoin a regard unto them; and theſe are peculiarly his, as diſtinct from, tho' not in oppoſition to, or to the excluſion of his Father's commands; ſuch as the new commandment of loving one another, and the ordinances of baptiſm, and the Lord's ſupper, which are to be obſerved and kept as Chriſt has ordered them, conſtantly, in faith, and with a view to his glory.

Ver. 16. And I will pray the Father, &c.] Here Chriſt ſpeaks as mediator, and promiſes his diſciples, that he would intercede for them with the Father; which is deſigned as an encouragement to them to aſk for what they want, in his name, and to comfort their hearts, which were troubled at the news of his departure from them; and he ſhall give you another comforter. This is no inconſiderable proof of a Trinity of perſons in the Godhead: here is the Father prayed unto, the Son in human nature praying, and the Holy Ghoſt the comforter prayed for; who is the gift of the Father, thro' the prevalent mediation of the Son, and is another comforter; diſtinct from the Meſſiah, to whom reference is here had. One of the names of the Meſſiah, with the Jews, is, מנחם[u], a comforter; ſuch an one Jeſus had been to his diſciples; and now he was about to leave them, and for their ſupport under their ſorrows, he promiſes to uſe his intereſt with his Father, that he would give them another comforter; meaning the Spirit, who performs this his work and office, by taking of the things of Chriſt, and ſhewing them to his people; by ſhedding abroad the love of the Father, and of the Son, into their hearts; by opening and applying the precious promiſes of the Goſpel to them; by being a ſpirit of adoption in them; and by abiding with them as the ſeal, earneſt, and pledge of their future glory; and with this view Chriſt promiſes to pray for him, that he may abide with you for ever: not a few years only, as I have done, but as long as you live; and with all thoſe that ſhall ſucceed you in the work of the miniſtry, and with the church, and all true believers unto the end of the world: this is a proof of the ſaints final perſeverance. When we conſider theſe words, in connexion with the preceding exhortation, to keep the commands of Chriſt, and as an encouragement ſo to do, it brings to mind a ſaying of R. Eliezer ben Jacob[w]; "he that does one commandment gets for "himſelf, פרקליט אחד, ἑνα παρακλητον, the very "word here uſed, one advocate, or comforter; and "he that tranſgreſſes one command, gets for him"ſelf one accuſer." But tho' the word ſignifies both an advocate and a comforter, the latter ſeems to be the meaning of it here, as being more ſuited to the diſconſolate condition of the diſciples.

Ver. 17. Even the ſpirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, &c.] Theſe words explain who is meant by the comforter, even the ſpirit of truth; the true Spirit of God, the dictator of the ſcriptures of truth, who leads men into the truths of the Goſpel, confirms them in them, and gives boldneſs and freedom to own, and confeſs them before men: whom the world cannot receive; the men of the world, who are as they came into the world, carnal and natural men, can neither receive the Spirit, nor the things of the Spirit, the truths and doctrines of the Goſpel; they can neither receive them into their underſtandings, nor into their affections; and indeed, becauſe they can't underſtand them, therefore they don't love them, but deſpiſe and hate them: becauſe it ſeeth him not, neither knoweth him; the world, and the men of it, can neither ſee him with their bodily eyes, becauſe he is a ſpirit; nor know him with their underſtandings, becauſe he is the ſpirit of truth, which they are ignorant of, for want of a ſpiritual diſcerning. But ye know him; as a ſpirit of illumination, regeneration, and converſion: for he dwelleth with you; he is an inhabitant in your hearts, he has taken up his reſidence in you as his temples: and ſhall be in you; as a comforter, when I am gone from you; and as a ſpirit of truth to guide you into all truth, to ſtand by you, and aſſiſt you in preaching it, and to enable you to bear a faithful and glorious teſtimony for it.

Ver. 18. I will not leave you comfortleſs, &c.] Gr. orphans, or fatherleſs. Chriſt ſtands in the relation of a father to his people, and they are his children, his ſpiritual ſeed and offspring; and ſo the diſciples might fear, that as Chriſt was going from them, they ſhould be left as children without a father, in a very deſolate and comfortleſs condition: to ſupport them againſt theſe fears, Chriſt promiſes that he would not leave them thus, at leaſt not long: I will come to you; in a very ſhort time, as he did; for on the third day he roſe again from the dead, and appeared to them, which filled them with great joy. So among the Jews, diſciples, and the world too, are repreſented as fatherleſs, when their doctors and wiſe men are removed by death. Says R. Aba[x], and ſo ſometimes others, concerning R. Simeon ben Jochai, "wo to the world "when thou ſhalt go out of it, wo to the genera"tion that ſhall be in the world when thou ſhalt "remove from them, וישתארון יתמין, and they "ſhall be left fatherleſs by thee." And in another place[y]; "afterwards R. Akiba went out and cried, "and his eyes flowed with water, and he ſaid, wo "Rabbi, wo Rabbi, for the world is left, יתים, "fatherleſs by thee."

Ver. 19. Yet a little while and the world ſeeth me no more, &c.] The men of the world now ſee me with their bodily eyes, which is all the ſight they have of me; and this they'll be deprived of in a very little time; they'll ſee me no more until the time that I ſhall come in the clouds of heaven to judge the world; and then every eye ſhall ſee me; but ye ſee me; ye ſee me now, and ſhall ſee me after my reſurrection, as they did; for then he appeared alive, and converſed with them for forty days; and when he aſcended into heaven, and ſat down at the right hand of God, they ſaw him by faith crowned with glory and honour; and will ſee him as he is when he comes a ſecond time to take them to himſelf in glory. Becauſe I live, ye ſhall live alſo; Chriſt lives as God, as man, and as mediator: as God, he lives the ſame life his Father does, partaking of the ſame nature, and poſſeſſing the ſame perfections; ſo he lived from everlaſting, and will live to everlaſting: as man, he lived firſt a private, and then a publick life, attended with meanneſs, reproaches, ſorrows, and ſufferings; a life which was filled up with acts of devotion and piety to God, and with doing good to the bodies and ſouls of men; he lived in all obedience to the law of God, and at laſt endured the penalty of that law, in the room and ſtead of his people; when his life was taken away for a while, and then taken up by him again; and now, as man, he lives, and lives for evermore. As mediator, he has his life from the Father, which is dependent upon him, by whom he was ſet up in an office-capacity from everlaſting; and as ſuch will live to everlaſting, to ſee the travail of his ſoul, the fruit of his ſufferings, to make interceſſion for his people, and to rule until all enemies are made his footſtool. And his people live alſo; which is to be underſtood, not of the preſervation of his diſciples from dying with him, when he died; for then it ſhould rather have been ſaid, becauſe I die, ye ſhall live: nor of the continuance of their natural life in this world; for the ſaints are not to live always here; nor do they deſire it, nor is it proper they ſhould; death is for their advantage; 'tis a bleſſing to them. Though theſe words may be underſtood of a corporal life, which they ſhall live after the reſurrection; for tho' they die, they ſhall live again, and never die more; they ſhall not only live and reign with Chriſt a thouſand years, but to all eternity. They alſo live a ſpiritual life now; a life of grace and holineſs from Chriſt; a life of faith on him, and ſometimes of communion with him, and deſire to live to his honour and glory; and ſhall hereafter live an eternal life of perfection and pleaſure with Father, Son, and Spirit for evermore. Now between theſe two lives, the life of Chriſt, and of his people, there is a cloſe connexion; the one is dependent on the other, and ſecured by the other: becauſe I live, ye ſhall live alſo; the ſpiritual life of a believer is from Chriſt, and is maintained by him; the ſame which is in the head, is in the members; yea, 'tis not ſo much they that live, as Chriſt that lives in them, and therefore their life can never be loſt; it's bound up in the bundle of life with Chriſt, and is hid ſafe and ſecure with him in God, and ſo out of the reach both of men and devils. The corporal life of the ſaints after death, in the reſurrection morn, ſprings from, and is ſecured by the life of Chriſt: his reſurrection from the dead is the pattern and pledge of theirs; he undertook to raiſe them from the dead, and will do it; as ſure as his dead body is raiſed and lives, ſo ſure ſhall theirs; their bodies, as well as their ſouls, are united to Chriſt; and by virtue of this union, which death does not, and cannot diſſolve, they ſhall be raiſed and live again. They are in Chriſt whilſt they are dead; and becauſe they are the dead in Chriſt, they ſhall riſe firſt. Their eternal life is in the hands of Chriſt, and when he, who is the true God, and their eternal life, ſhall appear, they ſhall appear with him in glory.

Ver. 20. At that day ye ſhall know, &c.] The things they ſhould know, or the objects of knowledge are, that I am in my Father; in his boſom, in union with him, partaker of the ſame nature, perfections, and glory with him, and equal to him: and you in me; that they were in union with him as the branches in the vine, and as the members are in the head, and how they were loved in him, choſen in him, righteous in him, riſen with him, and made to ſit together in heavenly places in him: and I in you; formed in their hearts, living in them, dwelling in them, as in his temples, and filling them with grace and glory. The knowledge of theſe things promiſed, deſigns, a more clear and diſtinct knowledge of them; ſomething of them was known already, but not ſo perfectly as ſhould be hereafter; and this does not ſuppoſe that theſe unions between the Father and Chriſt, and between Chriſt and his people ſhall then begin to be; for as the union between the Father and the Son, is as eternal as themſelves; ſo the union between Chriſt and his people, as he is the head and repreſentative of them, is as early as his inveſtiture with the office of a mediator, and his ſuretyſhip engagements for them, which were from eternity; and are the ground, and foundation of his being in them, and they in him in effectual vocation: nor does it ſuggeſt that they ſhall begin to be known; only that they ſhall be known in a more perfect manner: the time when this will be, is at that day; meaning either when he ſhould live in the body again, be raiſed from the dead, when he ſhould be declared to be the ſon of God with power, when it would appear that he had the ſame power with the Father, by raiſing himſelf from the dead, and when he would riſe as a public head repreſenting them, for their juſtification, and they ſhould ſee themſelves juſtified and diſcharged in him; or the day of Pentecoſt when the ſpirit of truth, he promiſes to pray for, ſhould come to them in an extraordinary manner, and lead them into the knowledge of theſe things; or the laſt day, the reſurrection morn, when, by virtue of union to Chriſt, the ſaints ſhall riſe and live with him for ever, and ſhall have a perfect knowledge of theſe ſeveral unions; ſee John xvii. 21, 23, 24.

Ver. 21. He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, &c.] He that has not merely the external revelation of them in the Bible; but has them written on his heart, by the finger of the Spirit of God, and keeps them under the influence of grace and ſtrength received from him: he it is that loveth me; others may talk of loving Chriſt, but this is the man that truly does love him; for his obſervance of Chriſt's commands is a proof and evidence that he loves him not in word only, but in deed and in truth: and to encourage ſouls to love and obedience, Chriſt adds, he that loveth me, ſhall be loved of my Father; not that love to Chriſt is the cauſe, condition, or motive of the Father's love to his people; nor does his love to them begin when they begin to love Chriſt; but this expreſſion denotes ſome further and greater manifeſtation of the Father's love to ſuch perſons, and ſhews how grateful to the Father are love and obedience to the Son: and I will love him; which muſt be underſtood in the ſame manner; Chriſt does not begin to love his people when they begin to love, and obey him; their love and obedience to him, ſpring from his love to them; which love of his towards them was from everlaſting: but this phraſe deſigns a clearer diſcovery of his love to them, which paſſeth knowledge; and ſome freſh mark and token of his affection for them; and which is explained in the next clauſe: and will manifeſt myſelf to him; not in a viſible way, or in a corporeal form, as he did to his diſciples after his reſurrection; but in a ſpiritual manner, as when he makes himſelf known to his people in Ordinances, and favours them with communion with him, and they ſee his beauty, his fulneſs, his grace and righteouſneſs, his power, and his glory.

Ver. 22. Judas ſaith unto him, not Iſcariot, &c.] This was Judas Lebbeus whoſe ſirname was Thaddeus, the ſame with Jude the apoſtle, the author of the Epiſtle which bears his name; and is ſaid to be not Iſcariot, to diſtinguiſh him from the betrayer. The queſtion put by him, Lord, how is it, τι γεγονεν, which anſwers to מאי דנא or מאי האי or מהו, with the Talmudiſts, what is this thou ſayeſt? what is the meaning of it? how can it be? or what is the reaſon of it, that thou wilt manifeſt thyſelf to us, and not unto the world? ariſes either from ignorance of what Chriſt was ſpeaking, imagining he meant a ſpectre, or ſome apparition of himſelf after his death, which ſhould be viſible to his diſciples, and not to others; and how this could be, he wanted to know; or from that national prejudice which Judas and the reſt of the apoſtles had given into, of a temporal kingdom of the Meſſiah, the glory of which ſhould be viſible to all the world; and therefore he wonders that he ſhould talk of the manifeſtation of himſelf, only to ſome, or from an honeſt hearty deſire that the glory of Chriſt might not be confined to a few only; but that the whole world might ſee it, and be filled with it; or rather from his modeſty, and the ſenſe he had of his own unworthineſs, and of the reſt of the apoſtles, to have ſuch a peculiar manifeſtation of Chriſt to them, when they were no more deſerving of it than others: the queſtion is put by him with admiration and aſtoniſhment; and as not being able to give, or think of any other reaſon of ſuch a procedure, but the amazing grace of Chriſt, his free favour and ſovereign will and pleaſure.

Ver. 23. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, &c.] This anſwer is returned, and theſe words are ſpoken, for the further confirmation and explanation of what was before ſaid: if a man love me, he will keep my words; by his words are meant not his doctrines, but his ordinances; the ſame with his commandments, ver. 21. which he has ſaid, ordered, and commanded to be obſerved, and which are obſerved by ſuch who truly love him, and that from a principle of love to him, and with a view to his glory: and for the encouragement of ſuch perſons as before, he ſays, and my father will love him; which is to be underſtood not of the love of the Father, as in his own heart, which is not taken up in time, but was in him from all eternity; nor of the firſt diſcovery of it to his people, but of greater manifeſtations of it to them, and a quicker ſenſe of it in their hearts, and alſo of ſome other effects of it, to be enjoyed by them in an higher manner; ſuch as larger meaſures of grace, more communion with him here, and eternal honour and glory hereafter: and we will come unto him; I who am now going away, and my Father to whom I am going, and the holy Spirit, the comforter, I have promiſed to pray for: hence a proof of a plurality of perſons in the Godhead, of a Trinity of perſons, of there being neither more nor fewer then three; ſince neither more nor leſs can be collected from the context; and of their diſtinct perſonality, or it could not be ſaid with any propriety, we each of us will come unto him; not locally and viſibly, but ſpiritually, by affording our gracious and comfortable preſence, the continuance of which is promiſed next: and make our abode with him; which denotes habitation; for the ſaints, are the dwelling-places or temples of the living God, Father Son and Spirit; and the conſtancy and perpetuity of their reſidence in them, not as a wayfaring man but always, tho' this may not be always diſcerned by believers; and is a wonderful inſtance of the grace and condeſcenſion of God to dwell on earth with ſinful men; and a far greater one it is, than if the moſt mighty potentate on earth, ſhould take up his abode in a poor deſpicable cottage with the meaneſt of his ſubjects.

Ver. 24. He that loveth me not, keepeth not my ſayings, &c.] Theſe words may have reſpect both to external profeſſors of religion, who being deſtitute of true love to Chriſt, tho' they outwardly obſerve his ordinances and commands; yet inaſmuch as this does not ſpring from a principle of love to him, and is done only to be ſeen of men, or to obtain life for themſelves, may be ſaid, not to keep his words or commands, becauſe they don't keep them aright; and to the prophane world, who as they have no affection to Chriſt, pay no regard to any orders or ordinances of his: and they may be conſidered as having in them a reaſon or argument, juſtifying the conduct of Chriſt, in manifeſting himſelf to his diſciples, and not unto the world; as the following words give a reaſon why the Father takes ſo much notice of, comes and makes his abode with ſuch as keep the words of Chriſt: and or for the word which you hear, is not mine, but the Father's which ſent me; that is, it is not only mine, but my Father's alſo; it is not mine as man; it is not a ſcheme of things of my own deviſing; it is not from earth, but from heaven; my Father has a concern in it, and therefore regards ſuch who hear, receive, and keep it: and this is ſaid by him partly to engage a greater regard and attention to his word, his truths, and ordinances, by his diſciples; and to expoſe and aggravate the ſin of thoſe who deſpiſed and rejected them; ſince it was not barely caſting contempt on him, but on his Father likewiſe.

Ver. 25. Theſe things have I ſpoken unto you, &c.] Concerning his Father, and his Father's houſe, and the way to both; concerning his being in the Father, and the Father in him; concerning keeping his commandments, and the advantages and benefits following upon it: being, ſays he, yet preſent with you; which is a ſtrong intimation that in a little time he ſhould not be preſent with them; and that whilſt he was preſent with them, he was deſirous of ſaying ſuch things to them in a brief compendious manner, as they were able to bear; which might be of future uſe and inſtruction to them.

Ver. 26. But the Comforter, which is the holy Ghoſt, &c.] Before ſpoken of ver. 16. for whom Chriſt promiſed to pray the Father that he might be given to them. The word uſed there, as here, ſignifies an advocate; and is ſo rendered, 1 John ii. 1, a patron, one that pleads and defends the cauſe of another, before kings and princes; ſo the Jewiſh writers [z] uſe the word פרקליט the ſame with παρακλητος, here, and give this as the ſenſe of it: and which agrees well enough with the work and office of the Spirit of God, who has promiſed to the apoſtles to ſpeak in them and for them, when they ſhould be brought before kings and governors for Chriſt's ſake; and would ſo thoroughly plead his cauſe and theirs, as to convince the world of ſin, righteouſneſs and judgment; and who acts the part of an interceſſor, or advocate, for private believers, in prayer to the king of kings: but inaſmuch as it alſo ſignifies a comforter, and this being agreeable to the preſent condition of the apoſtles, as before obſerved; it may be moſt proper to retain that ſenſe of it here, who is explained to be the holy Ghoſt; which is a more clear and explicit account of him than before, and very diſtinctly points out the third perſon in the Trinity, who is in his nature holy, equally with the Father and Son, and the author of holineſs in all the ſaints: whom the Father will ſend in my name. The miſſion of the Spirit is here aſcribed to the Father, but not to the excluſion of the Son, who is alſo ſaid to ſend him, ch. xv. 26. and xvi. 7. which was not ſo proper to be mentioned here, becauſe he ſpeaks of his being ſent, in his name; that is, at his requeſt, thro' his mediation and interceſſion, in his room and ſtead, acting the ſame part, and bearing the ſame name of an advocate or comforter, and for the glory and honour of his name: which act of ſending does not ſuppoſe any local motion, which cannot agree with an infinite and immenſe ſpirit; nor inferiority in him to the other two perſons, ſince he who is ſent by Chriſt, and in his name, is alſo the ſender of Chriſt; but it denotes the joint conſent and agreement of Father, Son, and Spirit, in this affair: he ſhall teach you all things: this is the proper work and buſineſs of the Spirit, to teach, interpret, and explain all things which Chriſt had ſaid to them; to make them more plain and eaſy to their underſtandings; to inſtruct them in all things neceſſary to ſalvation, and to be known by them, that they might teach them others: and bring all things to your remembrance, whatſoever I have ſaid to you; which thro' inattention, or want of underſtanding in them, had ſlipped their minds, and were forgotten by them. This accounts for it, how the Evangeliſts ſome years after the death of Chriſt, at different times and places, and without conſulting each other, could commit to writing the life, actions, ſayings, and ſermons of Chriſt, with all the minute circumſtances attending them.

[z] Maimon. & Bartenora in Pirke Abot, c. 4. §. 11.

Ver. 27. Peace I leave with you, &c.] Chriſt being about to die and leave his diſciples, makes his laſt will and teſtament, and as the beſt legacy he could leave them, bequeaths peace unto them; my peace I give unto you: he left the Goſpel of peace with them, to be preached by them to all the world; which is a declaration and publication of peace made by his blood; is a means of reconciling the minds of men to God and Chriſt, to the truths, ordinances, and people of Chriſt; of relieving and giving peace to diſtreſſed minds; and which ſhews the way to eternal peace: and as Chriſt had kept his diſciples in peace one with another, ſo he left them in peace; and left orders with them to maintain it, one among another: but what ſeems chiefly deſigned here, is peace with God, which Chriſt is the ſole author of; he was appointed in the council and covenant of peace to effect it; he became incarnate with that view, and did procure it by his ſufferings and death; and as it was publiſhed by angels, when he came into the world, he left it, and gave it to his diſciples when he was going out of it: or elſe that peace of conſcience is meant, which follows upon the former, which ariſes from the ſprinklings of the blood of Chriſt, and from a comfortable view, by faith, of an intereſt in his juſtifying righteouſneſs, and is enjoyed in a way of believing, and commonly in the uſe of ordinances: leaving it ſuppoſes that Chriſt was about to leave his diſciples, but would not leave them comfortleſs; he leaves a comforter with them, and bequeaths peace unto them as his laſt legacy: giving it, ſhews that it is not to be acquired by any thing that man can do, but is a pure free-grace-gift of Chriſt; and which being given as his legacy, is irrevocable; for the alluſion is to the making of a will or teſtament when perſons are about to die: tho' ſome have thought it refers to the cuſtom of wiſhing peace, health and proſperity among the Jews; but Chriſt does not ſay, peace be to you; which was the more uſual form of ſalutation among them, and which was uſed by them when they met, and not at parting; eſpecially we have no inſtance of ſuch a form as here uſed, by dying perſons taking their leaves of their relations and friends. It muſt indeed be owned that the phraſe, to give peace, is with them the ſame as to ſalute, or wiſh health and proſperity. Take two or three of their rules as inſtances of it; "whoever knows his friend, "that he is uſed, ליתן לו שלום [a], to give him peace; "he ſhall prevent him with peace (i. e. ſalute him "firſt) as it is ſaid, ſeek peace and purſue it; but if "he gives it to him, and he does not return it, he "ſhall be called a robber." Again, "[b] a man "may not go into the houſe of a ſtranger, on his "feaſt day, ליתן לו שלום, to give peace unto "him, (or ſalute him;) if he finds him in the ſtreet, "he may give it to him with a low voice, and his "head hanging down;" once [c] more, "a man "לא יתן שלום, may not give peace to, or ſalute "his maſter, nor return peace to him in the way "that they give it to friends, and they return it to "one another." Likewiſe it muſt be owned, that when they ſaluted perſons of diſtinction, ſuch as princes, nobles, and doctors, they repeated the word peace [d], tho' never to any ſtrangers; however certain it is, that it was another ſort of peace which Chriſt left, and gave to his diſciples, than what the Jews were wont to give, or wiſh to one another; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. The peace Chriſt gives is true, ſolid, and ſubſtantial; the peace the world, the men, and things of it give, is a falſe one, and whilſt they cry, peace, peace, ſudden deſtruction is at hand; the peace of the world is at beſt but an external one, but the peace Chriſt is the giver of, is internal; the peace the world affords is a very tranſient, unſtable, and ſhort-lived one, but the peace of Chriſt is laſting and durable; the peace of the world won't ſupport under the troubles of it, but the peace which Chriſt gives, chearfully carries his people thro' all the difficulties and exerciſes of this life: and as theſe differ in kind, ſo likewiſe in the manner of giving, and in the perſons to whom they are given; the world gives peace in words only, Chriſt in deed; the world gives feignedly, Chriſt heartily; the world gives it for its own advantage, Chriſt for his peoples ſake; the world gives its peace to the men of it, to the ungodly, none to the godly, whom it hates; Chriſt gives his, not to the wicked, for there's no peace to them, but to the ſaints, the excellent in the earth. Wherefore ſays Chriſt, let not your heart be troubled; at my departure from you, ſince I leave ſuch a peace with you: neither let it be afraid; at the dangers you may be expoſed unto, and the trouble you may be exerciſed with; for in the midſt of them all, in me ye ſhall have peace.

Ver. 28. Ye have heard how I ſaid unto you, &c.] Chriſt had not only told his diſciples that he ſhould depart from them in a little time, but alſo that he ſhould return again to them, and comfort them with his preſence, and receive them to himſelf, to be with him in his Father's houſe for ever: and this he again ſuggeſts, I go away, and come again unto you; ſo that they had not ſo much reaſon to be troubled and afraid, as they were: had he only ſaid to them that he ſhould go away, without giving any hint of his coming again, they might well have been uneaſy; what made the friends of the apoſtle Paul ſo ſorrowful at his departure, was moſt of all, becauſe he had ſignified to them they ſhould ſee his face no more; but Chriſt aſſured his diſciples that in a little time they ſhould ſee him again, to their unſpeakable joy and comfort: if ye loved me, adds he, ye would rejoice; not but that the diſciples did truly love Chriſt, and their concern for the loſs of his bodily preſence is a proof of it; nor was their love unknown to him, nor does he call it in queſtion, only corrects it, or rather uſes means to increaſe it, to draw it forth aright, that it might move and run in a proper channel; they loved him, and therefore was unwilling to part with him, but this was not a pure expreſſion of love to him, it ſhewed too much a regard to themſelves, than to the object loved; whereas had they conſidered things aright, ſince it was to his greater advantage to remove, they ſhould rather have diſcovered a willingneſs to it, and have rejoiced at it; this would have ſhewn pure love and unbiaſſed affection to him: two reaſons our Lord gives why they ſhould have rejoiced at his remove; one is, becauſe, ſays he, I ſaid, I go unto the Father; who was not only his, but their Father alſo; at whoſe right hand he was to ſit, an honour which no mere creature ever had; where he was to be glorified and exalted above all created beings; and beſides his glorification would ſecure and bring on theirs; as ſure as he lived in glory, ſo ſure ſhould they; yea, they ſhould immediately ſit down in heavenly places in him, as their head and repreſentative, and therefore had good reaſon to rejoice at his going away: the other is, for my Father is greater than I; not with reſpect to the divine nature, which is common to them both, and in which they are both one; and the Son is equal to the Father, having the ſelf-ſame eſſence, perfections, and glory: nor with reſpect to perſonality, the Son is equally a divine perſon, as the Father is, tho' the one is uſually called the firſt, the other the ſecond perſon; yet this priority is not of nature which is the ſame in both; nor of time, for the one did not exiſt before the other; nor of cauſality, for the Father is not the cauſe of the Sons exiſtence; nor of dignity, for the one has not any excellency which is wanting in the other; but of order and manner of operation: theſe words are to be underſtood, either with regard to the human nature, in which he was going to the Father, this was prepared for him by the Father, and ſtrengthened and ſupported by him, and in which he was made a little lower than the angels, and conſequently muſt be in it inferior to his Father; or with regard to his office as mediator, in which he was the Father's ſervant, was ſet up and ſent forth by him, acted under him, and in obedience to him, and was now returning to give an account of his work and ſervice; or rather with regard to his preſent ſtate, which was a ſtate of humiliation: he was attended with many griefs and ſorrows, and expoſed to many enemies, and about to undergo an accurſed death; whereas his Father was in the moſt perfect happineſs and glory, and ſo in this ſenſe greater. That is, more bleſſed and glorious than he; for this is not a compariſon of natures, or of perſons, but of ſtates and conditions: now he was going to the Father to partake of the ſame happineſs and glory with him, to be glorified with himſelf, with the ſame glory he had with him before the foundation of the world; wherefore on this account, his diſciples ought to have rejoiced, and not have mourned.

[c] Maimon. Talmud Torah, c. 5. §. 5.

[d] T. Bab. Gittin, fol. 62. 1. Maimon. Hilch. Melacim, c. 10. §. 12.

Ver. 29. And now I have told you before it came to paſs, &c.] This is a ſtrong proof of his true and proper deity, for none but the omniſcient God can tell of things before they come to paſs; this is peculiar to him, and diſtinguiſhes him from the Gods of the Gentiles; ſee Iſ. xli. 22, 23. and xlv. 21. and xlvi. 9, 10. that when it is come to paſs, ye might believe: that is, that when he was removed from them, and gone to his Father, they might then believe that he was truly God, the ſon of God, the promiſed Meſſiah; and that he was then in glory, and at the right hand of God.

Ver. 30. Hereafter I will not talk much with you, &c.] Meaning before his death; for after his reſurrection he talked much with them, about the things pertaining to the kingdom of God; being ſeen of them and converſing with them, for the ſpace of forty days; not much, he ſays, chiefly what is delivered in the two next chapters: the deſign of this was, to obſerve to them that his time of departure was near at hand, and to quicken their attention to what he did ſay to them; ſince they could not expect to hear him long, or much more from him; he would be otherways engaged; for the prince of this world cometh: by the prince of this world, is meant the devil; why he is ſo called, ſee note on ch. xii. 31. the reaſon why Chriſt chuſes to uſe this circumlocution, rather than to ſay ſatan or the devil cometh; is partly to point out what a powerful adverſary he had, and was about to engage with, and partly to obſerve to his diſciples, what they muſt expect from the world, even hatred and perſecution; ſince ſatan was the prince of it, and had ſuch powerful influence over the minds of the men of it. When it is ſaid that he cometh, it is to be underſtood of his coming to Chriſt, tho' it is not expreſſed, and that with an intent agreeable to his character, as a thief, to kill and to deſtroy; and not of his coming merely by Judas, into whom he had already entred, and had put it into his heart to betray him; and by the armed ſoldiers, who would accompany him to apprehend him; and by the chief-prieſts, rulers, and people of the Jews, who with united voices would cry crucify him, crucify him; nor only inviſibly by his angels, his principalities and powers, he was now employing in different ways, to bring about his purpoſes; but of his coming himſelf perſonally, and viſibly: as he viſibly appeared to Chriſt in the wilderneſs, tempting him, where he left him for a ſeaſon; ſo this ſeaſon or opportunity being come, he takes it, and viſibly appears to him in the garden, where a ſharp agony and combat was between them; what ſucceſs he had in this conflict, is next mentioned: and hath nothing in me; or as ſome copies read it, ſhall find nothing in me; or as others, hath nothing to find in me; Chriſt had no ſin in him, which can be ſaid of none but him. The Jews ſay [*], that Samael, by whom they mean the devil, when he wreſtled with Jacob, שלא מצא בו עון, could not find any iniquity in him, he had committed; but this is only true of Jacob's antitype: for tho' his emiſſaries ſought diligently for it, they could find none in him; tho' he had ſin upon him, he had none in him; the ſins of his people were imputed to him, but he had no ſin inherent in him; hence, tho' he the Meſſiah was cut off, according to Dan. ix. 26. but not for himſelf; which by the Septuagint is rendered rendred κ̀ κριμα ȣκ ἐςιν εν ἀυτω, but there is no judgment or condemnation in him, i. e. no cauſe of condemnation; which agrees with what is here ſaid: tho' the accuſer of men ſought to have ſomething againſt him, to accuſe him of, he could find none; ſome pretences indeed were made, and charges brought, but could not be made good, inſomuch that the judge himſelf ſaid, I find in him no fault at all: ſo that the devil had no power over him, no rightful power, nor any but what he had by permiſſion, nor indeed did he prevail over him; for tho' according to the firſt prophecy of the Meſſiah, ſatan bruiſed the heel of Chriſt; yet Chriſt bruiſed his head, deſtroyed him and his works, ſpoiled him, and his principalities and powers: whence it appears that the death of Chriſt was not owing to any ſin of his own, for he had none, nor could any be found in him; nor to the ſuperior power of the devil over him; he ſubmitted to death, not thro' the power of ſatan over him, and complied with all the circumſtances leading to it, not out of fear of him, but in love to his Father, and obedience to his command; as is clear from the following verſe.

[*] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 44. 2.

Ver. 31. But that the world may know, &c.] Not the wicked and unbelieving world, but the world of God's elect, ſuch as are brought to believe in Chriſt: that I love the Father; Chriſt muſt needs love the Father, as being of the ſame nature and eſſence with him, and as ſtanding in the relation of a ſon to him; he loved all that the Father loves, and approved of all his purpoſes, counſels, and determinations, concerning himſelf and the ſalvation of his people; and therefore he voluntarily laid down his life for them: and as the Father gave me commandment, ſo I do: as a ſon is obedient to a father, ſo was Chriſt in all things obedient to the commands of his heavenly Father, in preaching the Goſpel, obeying the law, and ſuffering death; all which he did and ſuffered, as the Father gave commandment to him, as man and mediator: and that it might fully appear how much he loved his Father, and agreed with him in all his deſigns of grace; how much his will was reſigned to his, and what reſpect he paid to whatever he ſaid or ordered; he ſaid to his diſciples, ariſe, let us go hence: not from the paſſover, or the ſupper, for the paſſover was not as yet, and the Lord's ſupper was not inſtituted; nor in order to go to mount Olivet, or to the garden, where Judas and his armed men would be to meet him, and lay hold on him, as is generally thought; but from Bethany, where he and his diſciples now were, in order to go to Jeruſalem and keep the paſſover, inſtitute the ſupper, and then ſurrender himſelf into the hands of his enemies, and die for the ſins of his people; for between this and the ſermon in the following chapters, was the Lord's ſupper celebrated; when Chriſt having mentioned the fruit of the vine, he ſhould drink new with his diſciples in his Father's kingdom, he very pertinently enters upon the diſcourſe concerning the vine and branches, with which the next chapter begins: the phraſe is Jewiſh; ſo R. Joſe and R. Chiyah, ſay to one another as they ſat קום וניהך, ariſe and let us go hence [f].

CHAP. XV.

Ver. 1. I AM the true vine, &c.] The fruit of which he had been juſt ſpeaking of at ſupper with his diſciples; and then informs them, that he himſelf is the vine from whence that fruit muſt be expected, which ſhould be partook of by them in his Father's kingdom; for tho' Chriſt may be compared to a vine for its tenderneſs, weakneſs, and being ſubject to cuttings and prunings; all which may expreſs his outward meanneſs in his birth, parentage, and education, which expoſed him to the contempt of men; the weakneſs of the human nature in itſelf, his being encompaſſed with the infirmities of his people, and his ſufferings and death for their ſakes; yet he is rather called ſo with reſpect to his fruitfulneſs: for as the vine is a fruitful tree, brings forth and bears fruit in cluſters, ſo Chriſt, as man and mediator, is full of grace and truth, of all ſpiritual bleſſings, and exceeding great and precious promiſes; from him come the wine of divine love, of Goſpel-truths and Goſpel-ordinances, the various bleſſings of grace, and the joys of heaven, which are the beſt wine reſerved by him till laſt: Chriſt is the true vine; not that he is really and literally ſo, without a figure; but he is, as the Syriac renders it, גפנא דשררא, the vine of truth. Juſt as Iſrael is called a noble vine, wholly a right ſeed, זרע אמת, a ſeed of truth, Jer. ii. 21. right genuine ſeed; or, as the Septuagint render it, a vine, bringing forth fruit, πασαν αληθινην, wholly true; to which the alluſion may be here. Chriſt is the noble vine, the moſt excellent of vines, wholly a right ſeed, in oppoſition to, and diſtinction from, the wild and unfruitful, or degenerate plant of a ſtrange vine: to him agree all the properties of a right and real vine; he really and truly communicates life, ſap, juice, nouriſhment, and fruitfulneſs to the ſeveral branches which are in him. The metaphor Chriſt makes uſe of was well known to the Jews; for not only the Jewiſh church is often compared to a vine, but the Meſſiah too, according to them: thus the Targumiſt explains the phraſe in Pſ. lxxx. 15. the branch thou madeſt ſtrong for thyſelf, of the king Meſſiah: and indeed, by comparing it with ver. 17. it ſeems to be the true ſenſe of the paſſage [g]. The Cabaliſtic doctors ſay [h], that the Shekinah is called, גפן, a vine; ſee Gen. xlix. 11. where the Jews obſerve [i], the king Meſſiah is ſo called. The Jews [k] ſay, there was a golden vine that ſtood over the gate of the temple, and it was ſet upon props; and whoever offered a leaf, or a grape, or a cluſter, (that is, a piece of gold to the temple, in the form of either of theſe) brought it, and hung it upon it. And of this vine alſo Joſephus [l] makes mention, as being in Herod's temple; of which he ſays, that it was over the doors (of the temple), under the edges of the wall, having cluſters hanging down from it on high, which filled ſpectators with wonder as for the largeneſs of it, ſo for the art with which it was made. And elſewhere he ſays [m], the inward door in the porch was all covered with gold, and the whole wall about it; and it had over it golden vines, from whence hung cluſters as big as the ſtature of a man: now whether our Lord may refer to this, being near the temple, and in view of it, and point to it, and call himſelf the true vine, in diſtinction from it, which was only the repreſentation of one; or whether he might take occaſion, from the ſight of a real vine, to compare himſelf to one, may be conſidered; ſince it was uſual with Chriſt upon ſight, or mention of natural things, to take the opportunity of treating of ſpiritual ones: tho' it may be rather this diſcourſe of the vine and branches might be occaſioned by his ſpeaking of the fruit of the vine, at the time he eat the paſſover, and inſtituted the ordinance of the ſupper. And my Father is the huſbandman; or vine-dreſſer. So God is called by Philo the Jew [n], γεωργος αγαθος, a good huſbandman; and the ſame the Targumiſt ſays of the word of the Lord [o], "and my word ſhall be unto "them, כאכרא טבא, as a good huſbandman." Now Chriſt ſays this of his Father, both with reſpect to himſelf the vine, and with reſpect to the branches that were in him: he was the huſbandman to him; he planted the vine of his human nature, and filled it with all the graces of the Spirit; he ſupported it, upheld it, and made it ſtrong for himſelf, for the purpoſes of his grace, and for his own glory; and took infinite delight in it, being to him a pleaſant plant, a plant of renown. The concern this huſbandman has with the branches, is expreſſed in the following verſe.

[m] De bello Jud. l. 5. c. 5. §. 4.

Ver. 2. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, &c.] There are two ſorts of branches in Chriſt the vine; the one ſort are ſuch who have only an hiſtorical faith in him, believe but for a time, and are removed; they are ſuch who only profeſs to believe in him, as Simon Magus did; are in him by profeſſion only; they ſubmit to outward ordinances, become church members, and ſo are reckoned to be in Chriſt, being in a church-ſtate, as the churches of Judea and Theſſalonica, and others, are ſaid, in general, to be in Chriſt; tho' it is not to be thought that every individual perſon in theſe churches were truly and ſavingly in him. Theſe branches are unfruitful ones; what fruit they ſeemed to have, withers away, and proves not to be genuine fruit; what fruit they bring forth is to themſelves, and not to the glory of God, being none of the fruits of his ſpirit and grace: and ſuch branches the huſbandman taketh away; removes them from that ſort of being which they had in Chriſt. By ſome means or another he diſcovers them to the ſaints to be what they are; ſometimes he ſuffers perſecution to ariſe becauſe of the word, and theſe men are quickly offended, and depart of their own accord; or they fall into erroneous principles, and ſet up for themſelves, and ſeparate from the churches of Chriſt; or they become guilty of ſcandalous enormities, and ſo are removed from their fellowſhip by excommunication; or if neither of theſe ſhould be the caſe, but theſe tares ſhould grow together with the wheat till the harveſt, the angels will be ſent forth, who will gather out of the kingdom of God all that offend and do iniquity, and caſt them into a furnace of fire, as branches withered, and fit to be burnt. And every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. Theſe are the other ſort of branches, who are truly and ſavingly in Chriſt; ſuch as are rooted in him; to whom he is the green fir-tree, from whom all their fruit is found; who are filled by him with all the fruits of his ſpirit, grace, and righteouſneſs. Theſe are purged or pruned, chiefly by afflictions and temptations, which are as needful for their growth and fruitfulneſs, as the pruning and cutting of the vines are for theirs; and tho' theſe are ſometimes ſharp, and never joyous, but grievous, yet they are attended with the peaceable fruits of righteouſneſs, and ſo the end of bringing forth more fruit is anſwered; for it is not enough that a believer exerciſe grace, and perform good works for the preſent, but theſe muſt remain; or he muſt be conſtant herein, and ſtill bring forth fruit, and add one virtue to another, that it may appear he is not barren and unfruitful in the knowledge of Chriſt, in whom he is implanted. Theſe different acts of the vine-dreſſer taking away ſome branches, and purging others, are expreſſed by the Miſnic doctors [p] by פיסולה and זירודה. The former, the commentators [q] ſay, ſignifies to cut off the branches that are withered and periſhed, and are good for nothing; and the latter ſignifies the pruning of the vine when it has a ſuperfluity of branches, or theſe extend themſelves too far; when ſome are left, and others taken off.

Ver. 3. Now ye are clean through the word which I have ſpoken unto you.] Theſe words being inſerted in the diſcourſe concerning the vine and branches, and the pruning and purging them to make them fruitful, are thought, by the learned Dr. Lightfoot, to be an alluſion to the law in Lev. xix. 23. by which the fruit of trees, for the firſt three years, were accounted uncircumciſed or unclean, and in the fourth year fit for uſe; concerning which the Talmudiſts have a whole tract, called ערלה, Orla; the Apoſtles having enjoyed the miniſtry of Chriſt, and been his diſciples about ſuch a time. Tho' the now ſeems to refer to the removal, and taking away of that withered and unfruitful branch Judas. Chriſt, in a former chapter, had told his diſciples, that they were clean, but not all, becauſe the betrayer was among them; but he being diſcovered by Chriſt, and ordered by him to be gone, went out from among them about his wicked deſign; and now Chriſt could ſay of them all, that they were clean: which may be underſtood of their regeneration and ſanctification, in which their hearts were ſprinkled with clean water; were waſhed with the waſhing of regeneration; had their hearts purified by faith in the blood of Chriſt, and had pure principles of grace formed in their ſouls; of all which the Goſpel of Chriſt was the inſtrumental means: or of their juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, by which they were juſtified from all ſin; and were all fair, and without ſpot; which was thro' the Goſpel of Chriſt revealing his righteouſneſs to them, or thro' the ſentence of juſtification he, by his Spirit, paſſed upon their conſciences.

Ver. 4. Abide in me, and I in you, &c.] The former of theſe is an exhortation to continue in the exerciſe of faith and love upon Chriſt, holding to him the head, cleaving to him with full purpoſe of heart, and ſo deriving life, grace, ſtrength, and nouriſhment from him; the latter is a promiſe encouraging to the former; for as Chriſt is formed in the hearts of his people, he continues there as the living principle of all grace. And ſo, as the branch cannot bear fruit of itſelf, except it abide in the vine, no more can ye except ye abide in me; which ſtrongly expreſſes the neceſſity of abiding in Chriſt by freſh repeated acts of faith: and it is eaſy to obſerve, that when believers depart from Chriſt, tho' it be but partially, and for a time, for they cannot finally and totally depart from him, in what a poor, withered, fruitleſs condition they are, both in their frames and duties.

Ver. 5. I am the vine, ye are the branches, &c.] Chriſt here repeats what he ſaid of himſelf, the vine, for the ſake of the application of the branches to his diſciples: which expreſſes their ſameneſs of nature with Chriſt; their ſtrict and cloſe union to him; and the communication of life and grace, holineſs and fruitfulneſs, of ſupport and ſtrength, and of perſeverance in grace, and holineſs to the end from him: he that abideth in me, and I in him; which is the caſe of all that are once in Chriſt, and he in them: the ſame bringeth forth much fruit; in the exerciſe of grace, and performance of good works; and continues to do ſo as long as he lives, not by virtue of his own free-will, power, and ſtrength, but by grace continually received from Chriſt: for without me ye can do nothing; nothing that is ſpiritually good; no, not any thing at all, be it little or great, eaſy or difficult to be performed; can't think a good thought, ſpeak a good word, or do a good action; can neither begin one, nor, when it is begun, perfect it. Nothing is to be done without Chriſt; without his ſpirit, grace, ſtrength, and preſence; or as ſeparate from him. Were it poſſible for the branches that are truly in him, to be removed from him, they could bring forth no fruits of good works, any more than a branch ſeparated from the vine can bring forth grapes; ſo that all the fruitfulneſs of a believer is to be aſcribed to Chriſt, and his grace, and not to the free-will and power of man.

Ver. 6. If a man abide not in me, &c.] Chriſt does not ſay, if ye abide not in me; he would not ſuppoſe this of his true diſciples; Judas now being removed, to whom he may have ſome reſpect in this verſe; tho' it may be applied to any one who has made a profeſſion of Chriſt, and denies the truths of the Goſpel, neglects the ordinances of it, or walks unworthy of his profeſſion; of whom the following things may be truly ſaid, he is caſt forth as a branch; that is unfruitful, and is therefore taken away from the vine, and caſt forth out of the vineyard. This ſignifies the ejection of worthleſs and fruitleſs profeſſors out of the churches; for ſuch who are either unſound in their principles, or are remiſs and negligent in their attendance on the worſhip of God, with the church, or are looſe and vain in their lives and converſations, are to be removed from communion with the people of God. And is withered. Some verſions, as the Arabic, Syriac, and Perſic, read this as an epithet of the word branch, thus; the branch that is withered; expreſſing the condition the branch is in before it is caſt forth out of the vineyard, and the reaſon of its being caſt forth: but others read it as a new and diſtinct predicate of the branch, ſhewing the caſe it is in, immediately upon its being caſt forth: it may be cut off, and caſt out with its leaves upon it, though without fruit; but as ſoon as ever it is ejected, it withers away. So mere external profeſſors of religion, when they are caſt out of the communion of the church, preſently the leaf of profeſſion, which once ſeemed green, decays, loſes its verdure, and that ſeeming fruit which grew upon them, ſhrinks to nothing, and they become trees whoſe fruit withereth, without fruit: their ſhew of life, zeal, religion, and holineſs diſappears, and all their external gifts, light, knowledge, and underſtanding, even in a ſpeculative way, vaniſh: and men gather them; or, as ſome copies have it, αυτο, it, which beſt agrees with the word branch. This was a common thing when branches were thrown out of a vineyard, for men to come and gather them up for a uſe hereafter mentioned. So when unworthy members are put out of a church of Chriſt, the men of the world gather them into their ſociety; or they are taken into the congregations of falſe teachers, who being ſenſual, and without the ſpirit, ſeparate themſelves; or it may be read imperſonally, they are gathered, or it is gathered: ſo wicked men, and Chriſtleſs profeſſors, will be gathered by the angels at the laſt day, and ſever'd by them from the righteous, whom they will place at Chriſt's left hand to receive their awful doom: and caſt them, or it, into the fire, and they are burned, or it is burned; for nothing elſe is ſuch a branch good for; ſee Ezek. xv. 2, 3, 4, 5. This may reſpect either the gnawings of conſcience, that diſtreſs of mind, if not deſpair, that fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation, which attend apoſtates in this life; or their being caſt into the everlaſting burnings of hell-fire by angels at the laſt day, as will be the caſe of every unfruitful tree, of the chaff and tares.

Ver. 7. If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, &c.] Abiding in Chriſt is here explained by his words or doctrines abiding in his diſciples; by which are meant his Goſpel, and the truths of it. This abides when it comes in power, and becomes the engrafted word; and may be ſaid to do ſo, when ſuch, in whoſe hearts it has a place, and has taken deep root, continue to have a reliſh and ſavour of it, a true and hearty affection for it, eſteeming it above their neceſſary food; when they hold faſt the profeſſion of it, ſtand faſt in it, ſtedfaſtly abide by it, and conſtantly attend on it; all which is a conſiderable evidence that they do, yea, there is a promiſe that they ſhall continue in the Son and in the Father, 1 John ii. 24. The bleſſing and privilege that ſuch ſhall enjoy is, ye ſhall aſk what ye will, and it ſhall be done unto you; or, as ſome copies read it, it ſhall be given you: but this muſt be underſtood not of temporal things, as riches, honours, profits, pleaſures, or whatever even the carnal mind of a believer himſelf may ſometimes deſire; but of things ſpiritual, and with ſuch limitations and reſtrictions as theſe; whatever is according to the will of God, for the Spirit of God himſelf aſks for no other for the ſaints; whatever is for the glory of God, and for their own ſpiritual profit and edification; and whatever is agreeable to the words and doctrines of Chriſt, which abide in them. Every thing of this kind they aſk in faith, and with a ſubmiſſion to the divine will, they may expect to receive.

Ver. 8. Herein is my Father glorified, &c.] This does not ſo much refer to what goes before concerning the diſciples abiding in Chriſt, and he and his words abiding in them, and doing for them whatever they aſk, tho' by all this God is glorified; as to what follows, the fruitfulneſs of the diſciples: that ye bear much fruit; of doctrine, grace, and good works, which ſhew them to be trees of righteouſneſs, the planting of the Lord, and the work of his hands; wherein the glory of his power, grace, and mercy is greatly diſplay'd. All the fruits of righteouſneſs, with which they were filled by Chriſt, were by him to the praiſe and glory of God; yea, by the fruitfulneſs of grace, and of life and converſation, by the lively exerciſe of grace, and conſcientious diſcharge of duty, as well as by light of doctrine, and uſefulneſs in the miniſtration of the Goſpel, the diſciples and ſervants of Chriſt not only glorify God themſelves, but are the means of others glorifying him. It follows, ſo ſhall ye be my diſciples; or diſciples to me; to my honour and glory alſo, as well as to my Father's; ther's; not that their fruitfulneſs made them the diſciples of Chriſt, but made them appear to be ſo, or made them honourable ones. Juſt as good fruit does not make the tree good; the tree is firſt good, and therefore it brings forth good fruit; but ſhews it to be good: as by continuing in his word, abiding by his Goſpel they appeared to be diſciples indeed, really and truly ſuch; and as by loving one another, ſo by other fruits of righteouſneſs, other men, all men know that they are the diſciples of Chriſt.

Ver. 9. As the Father hath loved me, &c.] As his own ſon, and as mediator, from everlaſting; and in time, in his ſtate of humiliation, throughout the courſe of his obedience, and under all his ſufferings; which he teſtified more than once by a voice from heaven; which he ſhewed by concealing nothing from him as mediator, by giving all things into his hands, by ſhewing him all that he himſelf did, by appointing him the ſaviour of the body, and making him the head of the church, by exalting him at his right hand, and ordaining him to be judge of quick and dead. So have I loved you: Chriſt loves his as his ſpouſe and bride, as his dear children, as members of his body, as branches in him the vine, as believers in him, and followers of him; which he has ſhewn by eſpouſing both their perſons and cauſe, by aſſuming their nature, by ſuffering and dying in their room and ſtead, and making all ſuitable proviſion for them, both for time and eternity. And there is a likeneſs between the Father's love to him, and his love to his diſciples and followers: as his Father loved him from everlaſting, ſo did he love them; as his Father loved him with a love of complacency and delight, ſo did he, and ſo does he love them; and as his Father loved him with a ſpecial and peculiar affection, with an unchangeable, invariable, conſtant love, which will laſt for ever, in like manner does Chriſt love his people; and with this he enforces the following exhortation. Continue ye in my love; meaning either in his love to them, which, as he always continues in it without any variableneſs or ſhadow of turning, ſo he would have them continue in believing their intereſt in it, prizing and valuing it, in imitating, and remembring it; or elſe in their love to him, to his perſon, to his people, to his Goſpel, to his ordinances, ways, and worſhip, which he knew was liable to wax cold, tho' it could not be loſt.

Ver. 10. If ye keep my commandments ye ſhall abide in my love, &c.] Not that their continuance in the hearts of love and affection Chriſt, depended upon their obſervation of his commands; for as the keeping of them is not the cauſe or reaſon of the ſaints having an intereſt in the love of Chriſt, ſo it is not the cauſe or reaſon of their abiding in it; but to ſuch that obſerve the commandments of Chriſt he will continue to make further diſcoveries of his love, and let them ſee more clearly and largely what a value he has for them, and how much he loves them: or the ſenſe is, that by keeping the commandments of Chriſt, his diſciples and followers ſhew, that they love him, and continue in their affection to him: even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love. The commandments of the Father kept by Chriſt were not only the precepts of the moral law, and the rites of the ceremonial one, which he ſtrictly obſerved; but the preaching of the Goſpel, and ſubmitting to the ordinances of it, doing of miracles, and laying down his life for his people; in performing which, as his Father teſtified his approbation of them, and how ſtrongly he was affected to him, what an abiding he had in his love; ſo Chriſt hereby ſhewed his conſtant and continued love to his Father; and which was done by him, that the world, as well as his diſciples, might know how much he loved him; ſee ch. xiv. 31.

Ver. 11. Theſe things have I ſpoken unto you, &c.] Concerning the vine and branches, his abiding in them, and they in him, their fruitfulneſs from him, and perſeverance in him, his love to them, and theirs to him: that my joy might remain in you; meaning either that joy with which he joyed in and over them, as united to him, and which is of the ſame nature as the joy of the bridegroom over the bride, and which will always remain and continue the ſame; or rather that joy which he is the author, object, ground, and matter of, for there's always reaſon to rejoice in him, even in the moſt afflictive circumſtances of life: and that your joy might be full; that grace of joy which is implanted in the ſoul, by the Spirit of God in regeneration, and ariſes from, and is increaſed by diſcoveries of the perſon, grace, blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice of Chriſt; and is full of glory, upon a clear ſight of him in this life, and will be entirely full, compleatly perfected in the other world, when he will be ſeen as he is.

Ver. 12. This is my commandment, that ye love one another, &c.] Chriſt had been before ſpeaking of his commandments; and he mentions this as the principal one, and to which all the reſt may be reduced; for as the precepts of the ſecond table of the moral law may be briefly comprehended in this one duty, love to our neighbour, ſo all the duties of chriſtianity, relative to one another, are reducible to this, by love to ſerve each other. This was the commandment which lay uppermoſt on Chriſt's heart, and which he knew, if attended to, the reſt could not fail of being obſerved. The argument by which, and the manner in which he preſſes it, is as before: as I have loved you; than which nothing can be more ſtrong and forcible; ſee John xiii. 34.

Ver. 13. Greater love hath no man than this, &c.] By theſe words our Lord ſhews, how far love to another ſhould extend, even to the laying down of our lives for the brethren; which is the higheſt inſtance of love among men; that a man lay down his life for his friends; and in which believers ſhould not come ſhort of them; and alſo his great love to his people, and explains what he had juſt ſaid, as I have loved you; which in a little time would be ſeen, by his laying down his life for them: for he not only came down from heaven, and laid aſide his glory and royal majeſty, but he laid down his life; not his gold and ſilver, and the riches of this world, which were all his, but his life; than which, nothing is dearer to a man, is himſelf, his all: and beſides, Chriſt's life was not a common one, it was not the life of an innocent perſon only, or the life of a mere man, but of a man in union with the Son of God; it was the Lord of glory and prince of life, who was crucified, and ſlain; a life that was entirely at his own diſpoſe; it had never been forfeited by ſin, nor could it have been forced away from him by men or devils; it was laid down of and by himſelf, freely and voluntarily; and that for, in the room, and inſtead of his people, as a ranſom for them; he being their ſurety and ſubſtitute, and ſtanding in their law-place and ſtead, he took their ſins upon him, bore the curſe of the law, ſuſtained his Father's wrath, and all the puniſhment due to ſin; and ſo ſuffered death, the death of the croſs; the juſt, in the room and ſtead of the unjuſt: the perſons for whom he laid down his life, are deſcribed as his friends; not that they were originally ſo; being enemies and enmity itſelf to God, when he laid down his life for them, and reconciled them; they were not ſuch as had carried themſelves friendly, or had ſhewn any love and affection to him, but all the reverſe: but they are ſo called, becauſe he had choſen them for his friends; he had pitched upon them, and reſolved to make them ſo; and by dying for them, reconciled them who were enemies; and in conſequence of this, by his Spirit and grace, of enemies makes them friends; ſo that his love in dying for his people, is greater than any inſtance of love among men: he laid down his life for his enemies, without any ſiniſter ſelfiſh views, and that freely and voluntarily; whereas among men, when one man has laid down his life for others, either they have been very deſerving, or he has been forced to it, or it has been done with the view of popular applauſe and vain glory.

Ver. 14. Ye are my friends, &c.] This is an application of the foregoing paſſage, and more clearly explains it. The character of friends, is applied to the diſciples of Chriſt; and belongs not only to his apoſtles, but to all that love him, believe in him, and obey him; to whom he has ſhewed himſelf friendly, by laying down his life for them: for this clearly ſhews, that Chriſt had reſpect in the former words, to his own laying down his life for his people, in conſequence of his great love to them; whereby he has made them friends, and who appear to be ſo by their chearful obedience to him: if ye do whatſoever I command you; not that their doing of the commandments of Chriſt intereſted them in his favour; or made them his friends; or was the reaſon and motive of his laying down his life for them, and ſhewing himſelf in ſuch a friendly manner to them: but the ſenſe is, that by obſerving his commands from a principle of love, they would make it appear that they were his friends; being influenced by his grace, and conſtrained by a ſenſe of his love in dying for them, to act ſuch a part.

Ver. 15. Henceforth I call you not ſervants, &c.] As they and the reſt of the people of God had been, under the legal diſpenſation; for though they were children, yet differed nothing from ſervants; and were very much influenced and impreſſed with a ſervile ſpirit, a ſpirit of bondage unto fear, being kept under tutors and governours by a ſevere diſcipline; but now Chriſt being come in the fleſh, and being about to lay down his life, and make reconciliation for them, henceforward he would not uſe, treat, or account them as ſervants: for the ſervant knoweth not what his Lord doeth; deſigns to do, or is about to do; he is not made privy to all his counſels and purpoſes; theſe are only opened to him as neceſſity requires; which was pretty much the caſe of the Old Teſtament church, who comparatively ſpeaking, were uſed as ſervants; and had not the knowledge of the myſteries of grace, and of the counſels of God, as they are now laid open under the Goſpel diſpenſation: but I have called you friends; that is, accounted, reckoned of them, and uſed them as his friends and familiar acquaintance; whom he told all his mind unto, and would go on to treat them as ſuch; by leading them more and more, as they were able to bear it, into the deſigns of his grace, and the doctrines of his Goſpel: juſt as Abraham was called the friend of God, and proved to be ſo, by his not concealing from him the thing he was about to do: for all things I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you; not all that he knew as the omniſcient God, for there was no neceſſity that all ſuch things ſhould be made known to them; but all things which he had delivered to him as man and mediator, by his Father, reſpecting the ſalvation of men; all things which he himſelf was to do and ſuffer, in order to obtain eternal redemption; and the whole of the Goſpel, as to the eſſential and ſubſtantial parts of it, they were to preach; for otherwiſe, there were ſome things which as yet they were not able to bear, and were reſerved to another time, to be made known unto them by his Spirit.

Ver. 16. Ye have not choſen me, but I have choſen you, &c.] Not but that they had made choice of him as their Lord and Maſter, Saviour and Redeemer; but not firſt, he was before-hand with them; he choſe them, before they choſe him; ſo that his choice of them was entirely free, did not ariſe from any character, motive, or condition in them: the alluſion is to a cuſtom of the Jews, the reverſe of which Chriſt acted; with whom it was uſual for diſciples to chuſe their own maſters, and not maſters their diſciples; hence that advice of R. Joſhuah ben Perachiah, ſaid [r] to be the maſter of Jeſus of Nazareth, "עשה לך רב [s], make, provide, or chuſe thyſelf a maſter, and get thyſelf a companion." Thoſe words in Cant. ii. 16. my beloved is mine, and I am his, are thus paraphraſed by the Jews [t]; "he hath choſen me, and I have choſen him:" which is not amiſs, provided the latter choice is thought to be by virtue, and in conſequence of the former; if not, our Lord directly oppoſes the words and ſenſe. This may be underſtood both of election to ſalvation, and of choice to the office of apoſtleſhip; in both which Chriſt was firſt, or choſe them before they choſe him, that good part, which ſhall never be taken away; for as they were choſen in him, ſo by him, before the foundation of the world; being as early loved by him, as by his Father; and in conſequence thereof, were choſen by him, for his people and peculiar treaſure; he firſt choſe and called them to be his diſciples and apoſtles, to follow him, preach his Goſpel, and become fiſhers of men; and clothed them with full power and authority, to exerciſe their high office: and ordained you; which may deſign either ordination to eternal life, or apoſtleſhip, before the world began; as Jeremiah was ordained to be a prophet, before he was born; or elſe the inveſtiture of them with that office, and with all gifts and graces neceſſary for the diſcharge of it; for when he called and ſent forth his diſciples to preach the Goſpel, he is ſaid to ordain them, Mark iii. 14. and the rather this may be meant here, becauſe the former is deſigned by his chooſing them; or he ſet them, or planted them in himſelf, a fruitful ſoil, that they might ſhoot up and bear much fruit, as it follows: that ye ſhould go and bring forth fruit; go firſt into Judea, and then into all the world; and bring forth the fruits of righteouſneſs and holineſs in themſelves, and be the happy means of the converſion, and ſo of bringing in a large harveſt of ſouls to Jeſus Chriſt: and that your fruit ſhould remain; as it has done; for they not only perſevered themſelves in faith and holineſs, in preaching the Goſpel, and living according to it, but the perſons, whoſe converſion they were inſtruments of, continued ſtedfaſtly in their doctrine, and in the fellowſhip of the ſaints; and the Goſpel which was preached by them, has remained, though not always in the ſame place, yet in the world ever ſince: that whatſoever ye ſhall aſk of the Father in my name, he may give it you. This is added, to encourage their perſeverance in the work he choſe and called them to, which would be attended with many difficulties and diſcouragements; wherefore as they would ſtand in need of divine aſſiſtance, they might aſſure themſelves of it; for be it what it would they ſhould aſk of his Father, making mention of his name and righteouſneſs; whether for a ſufficiency of gifts and grace in the diſcharge of their duty; or for ſucceſs in it; or for the confirmation of the truths delivered by them; or for liberty and boldneſs to ſpeak in vindication of themſelves, when called to it before kings and governours, it ſhould be given them.

[s] Pirke Abot, c. 1. §. 6.

[t] Zohar in Exod. fol. 9. 1.

Ver. 17. Theſe things I command you, &c.] The doctrines which Chriſt ſpake, as one having authority, concerning the vine and branches; his love to his diſciples, in laying down his life for them, and in accounting and uſing them as friends, and not ſervants; in chuſing, ordaining, and ſending them forth, for the ends above-mentioned; theſe were delivered by him with this view, to promote brotherly love among them: that ye love one another; this lay much upon his heart, he often mentions it; this is the third time 'tis expreſſed by him, in theſe his laſt diſcourſes; and indeed, ſince he had declared ſuch ſtrong love and affection for them, it was but right and proper they ſhould love one another; nor does any thing more tend to increaſe mutual love among the ſaints, than the conſideration of their common intereſt in the unchangeable love of their Lord.

Ver. 18. If the world hate you, &c.] After our Lord had ſignified, how much he loved his diſciples, and what great things he had done for them, he faithfully acquaints them with the world's hatred of them, and what they muſt expect to meet with, from that quarter, and ſays many things to fortify their minds againſt it; his words do not imply any doubt about it, but he rather takes it for granted, as a thing out of queſtion; if, or ſeeing the world hate you; they had had ſome experience of it already, and might look for more, when their maſter was gone from them: wherefore, he, in order to engage their patience under it, ſays, ye know that it hated me before it hated you; which words are an appeal of Chriſt to his apoſtles, for the uſage he had met with from the wicked and unbelieving world of the Jews; how they had expreſſed their hatred, not only by words, calling him a gluttonous man, and a wine-bibber, a ſinner, a Samaritan, a madman, one that had a devil, yea, Beelzebub himſelf, but by deeds; taking up ſtones to ſtone him more than once, leading him to the brow of an hill, in order to caſt him down headlong, conſulting by various means, to take away his life, as Herod did in his very infancy; which was done, before they ſhowed ſo much hatred to his diſciples; and perhaps reference may be had to the original enmity between the ſeed of the woman, and the ſeed of the ſerpent, mentioned Gen. iii. 15. as well as to theſe inſtances. Moreover, the words πρωτον υμων, rendered before you, may be tranſlated the firſt, or chief of you, your Lord and head; and denotes the dignity, excellency, and ſuperiority of Chriſt; wherefore it is ſuggeſted, that if he who was ſo much before them in perſonal worth and greatneſs, was hated by the world, they ſhould not think it hard, or any ſtrange thing, that this ſhould be their caſe.

Ver. 19. If ye were of the world, &c.] Belonged to the world, were of the ſame ſpirit and principles with it, and purſued the ſame practices: the world would love its own; for every like loves its like; the men of the world, love each others perſons, company, and converſation: but becauſe ye are not of the world; once they were, being born into it, brought up in it, had their converſation among the men of it, were themſelves men of carnal, worldly, principles and practices; but being called by Chriſt, and becoming his diſciples, they were no more of it; and as he was not of the world, ſo they were not of it, though they were in it. The Jews diſtinguiſh the diſciples of the wiſe men, from, אינשי דעלמא, the men of the world [u], pretending that they were not; but this is a character that only belongs to the diſciples of Chriſt, in conſequence of their being called by him out of it: but I have choſen you out of the world; which deſigns not the eternal election of them, but the ſeparation of them from the reſt of the world in effectual vocation, and the deſignation of them to his work and ſervice: therefore the world hateth you; and ſince it was upon that account, they had no reaſon to be uneaſy, but rather to rejoice; ſeeing this was an evidence of their not belonging to the world, and of being choſen and called by Chriſt out of it.

Ver. 20. Remember the word that I ſaid unto you, &c.] For their further conſolation under the hatred of the world, he puts them in mind of a ſaying of his, which he had lately uſed, ch. xiii. 16. to teach them humility, ſelf-denial, and brotherly love, and elſewhere, as in Matt. x. 24. for the ſame purpoſe as here; namely, to engage them patiently to bear the hatred of men, and all indignities and inſults from them, for his name's ſake: the ſervant is not greater than the Lord; nor ſo great, and conſequently not more, nor ſo much deſerving of reſpect, or to be treated in a better manner; ſuggeſting, that Chriſt was their Lord and Maſter, as he was, and they were his ſervants; and therefore were not greater than him, but much inferior to him, and could not expect better uſage from men than he had: if they have perſecuted me; as they did, both by words and deeds, as before obſerved: they will perſecute you; and ſo they did in like manner, and from place to place: if they have kept my ſaying; which is either ironically ſpoken, or deſigns that inſidious malicious obſervation of Chriſt's words, made by the Jews, with an intent to catch and lay hold on ſomething to improve againſt him: they will keep yours alſo; that is, either they will attend to your doctrines, or they will make the ſame ſpiteful remarks, and put the ſame evil conſtructions on your words as on mine.

Ver. 21. But all theſe things will they do unto you, &c.] Chriſt here ſignifies, that all the hatred and perſecutions raiſed againſt his people by the world, would not be on their own account, for any evil actions done by them; they would not ſuffer as thieves, murderers, and evil doers, but as chriſtians; or as he ſays, for my names ſake: becauſe they were called by his name, and called upon his name; becauſe they profeſſed his name, and confeſſed him to be the Meſſiah and Redeemer; becauſe they loved his name Jeſus, a Saviour, believed in his name, and hoped in him for eternal life; and alſo preached him, and in his name ſalvation, and encouraged others to believe in him; and therefore they had no reaſon to be aſhamed, but rather to rejoice; joice; as they afterwards did, that they were counted worthy to ſuffer ſhame for his name: beſides, this malice and hatred of theirs, aroſe from ignorance of the Father of Chriſt: becauſe they know not him that ſent me; they did not know that Jeſus was the Chriſt, and ſent of God; they did not acknowledge him to be ſo, or the Father to be the ſender of him; and becauſe Chriſt and his diſciples aſſerted this, therefore they were the objects of their hatred.

Ver. 22. If I had not come and ſpoken unto them, &c.] The ignorance of the Jews is repreſented as inexcuſable, ſince Chriſt was come, and had preached unto them; if he had not come and told them that he was the Meſſiah, they might have pleaded an excuſe for their ignorance of him, and his miſſion, and of the Father that ſent him: but inaſmuch as he was come in the fleſh, and came to them his own; and came alſo a light into the world, carrying along with him evidence, conviction, and demonſtration, of his being the Meſſiah; ſpeaking ſuch words as never man did; preaching with ſuch authority as the Scribes and Phariſees did not; declaring in plain terms he was the Chriſt of God, and that if they did not believe him to be ſo, they would die in their ſins; they could have no pretext to make for their ignorance and diſbelief: if all this had not been done, they had not had ſin; or been guilty of the ſin of unbelief, in the rejection of the Meſſiah; not that they would have been without ſin in any ſenſe, or without any kind of ſin, but without this particular ſin; at leaſt they would have excuſed and wiped themſelves clean, and would have looked like innocent and ſinleſs perſons, under all their ignorance and unbelief: but now they have no cloke for their ſin; they could not ſay, had he come to us, and told us that he was the Meſſiah, and given evidence of his being ſent by the Father, we would have believed him, and received him as the Meſſiah; for he did do this, and ſo cut off all excuſes and pretences from them.

Ver. 23. He that hateth me, hateth my Father alſo.] The hatred the world bears to the followers of Chriſt, is interpretatively hatred to Chriſt himſelf; and hatred to Chriſt himſelf, is no other than hatred to his Father; and indeed, all the hatred that is ſhewn by the men of the world to Chriſt, to his Goſpel, and to his faithful miniſters and followers, originally ariſes from that enmity, that is naturally in the heart of every unregenerate man againſt God: now ſince not only Chriſt, but the Father alſo, is hated by the world, the children of God and diſciples of Chriſt, may ſit eaſier under all the reſentment, frowns, and malice of the world.

Ver. 24. If I had not done among them the works, &c.] This is another, and a new argument, evincing the inexcuſableneſs of their ignorance, and infidelity, and ſin, taken from the works that Chriſt did; ſuch as healing the ſick, raiſing the dead, giving ſight to the blind, cauſing the dumb to ſpeak, the deaf to hear, and the lame to walk, cleanſing lepers, and caſting out of devils; which were clear proofs, and full demonſtrations of his deity, and of his being the true Meſſiah: and which none other man did; in his own name, and by his own power; and which none of the men of God ever did; as Moſes, Elijah, Eliſha, or others; and particularly that of giving ſight to one that was born blind: now if theſe works had not been done among them, openly, viſibly, and publickly, they had not had ſin; or ſo much ſin; or their ſin of unbelief would not have been ſo great, or attended with ſuch aggravating circumſtances; or they would not have been guilty of the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, as many of them were; who ſaw his works and miracles, and were convicted in their own conſciences that he was the Meſſiah, and yet rejected him, againſt all the light and evidence which the Spirit of God gave by them, and by whom Chriſt wrought his miracles: but now have they both ſeen; the works which were done, and the Meſſiah, whoſe miſſion from the Father they proved; and hated both me and my Father; for their rejection of him as the Meſſiah, notwithſtanding the doctrines he taught, and the miracles he wrought, plainly aroſe from obſtinacy, malice, and inveterate hatred againſt Chriſt, and againſt the Father that ſent him.

Ver. 25. But this cometh to paſs, &c.] This hatred againſt Chriſt, and which is pointed at his people for his ſake, and reaches to the Father alſo on his account, is ſuffered to be, and therefore ſhould be patiently born: that the word might be fulfilled which is written in their law; either in Pſal. xxxv. 19. or rather in Pſal. lxix. 4. which is a pſalm of Chriſt, as appears by citations out of it in the New Teſtament, or references to it; ſee John ii. 17. and xix. 28. Matt. xxvii. 48. The whole ſcripture is ſometimes called the law, as here; for not the law of Moſes is meant, or the five books of Moſes, but the writings of the Old Teſtament; which the Jews had in their hands, to them being committed the oracles of God; and ſometimes are ſo called, when the book of pſalms is particularly referred to as now; ſee John x. 34. and xii. 34. the words cited are, they hated me without a cauſe; without any reaſon for it, Chriſt having given them no provocation, or juſt cauſe of offence, anger, or hatred. This ſin of hating without a cauſe, is repreſented by the Jews as a very heinous one, and as the reaſon of the deſtruction of the ſecond temple; under which they obſerve, that men ſtudied in the law, and in the commandments, and in doing of good; and therefore aſk why it was deſtroyed? the anſwer is, becauſe there was under it, שנאת חנם, hatred without a cauſe; to teach us that hatred without a cauſe, is equal to the three (capital) tranſgreſſions, idolatry, adultery, and murder, for which they ſay the firſt temple was deſtroyed [w]. This is a tacit acknowledgment that the ſin here mentioned, was a reigning one, or that it much abounded in the times of Chriſt.

Ver. 26. But when the comforter is come, &c.] Or advocate, the Spirit of God; who was to be, and has been an advocate for Chriſt, againſt the world, and for his people, againſt all their enemies; and who as he was to reprove, and did reprove the world of ſin, righteouſneſs, and judgment, in favour of Chriſt, ſo he was to aſſiſt his people, and plead their cauſe, and help them, in vindication of themſelves, before the princes of the earth, as he did: and who alſo was to act, and has acted the part of a comforter to them, under all the hatred and violence they have met with from the world; by taking and applying the things of Chriſt to them; by ſhedding the love of God in them; by applying the promiſes of the Goſpel to them; by witneſſing their adoption, and ſealing them up to the day of redemption: whom I will ſend unto you from the Father; viſibly, as on the day of pentecoſt, in cloven tongues as of fire; and inviſibly into their hearts, by the ſecret influence of his light and grace; which miſſion, as it ſuggeſts no inferiority in the Spirit, either to the Father or the Son; ſince the ſame Spirit with the Father, was the ſender of Chriſt; ſo it is expreſſive of the equal deity of Chriſt, and his joint power and authority with the Father: even the Spirit of truth; who is the true Spirit, truth itſelf; yea, the true God, with the Father and Son; the ſpirit of him who is truth; the dictator of the ſcriptures of truth; who leads his people into all truth; and is the Spirit of truth, as he is a witneſs or teſtifier of Chriſt, hereafter promiſed: which proceedeth from the Father; Chriſt is not content to deſcribe him by his work and office, as an advocate and comforter, and as the Spirit of truth; and from his miſſion by him from the Father; all which ſhews his uſefulneſs and authority; but alſo from his nature and eſſence, which is the ſame with the Fathers; and from his peculiar perſonal and diſtinctive character, expreſſed by his proceding from the Father; and which is mentioned, as what is diſtinct from his miſſion by Chriſt, from the Father before ſpoken of; and deſigns no other, than the eternal, ineffable, and continued act of his proceſſion, from the Father and the Son; in which he partakes of the ſame nature with them, and which perſonally diſtinguiſhes him from them. The ancient Jews [x] ſpoke of him, juſt in the ſame language, the Spirit of God, in Gen. i. 2. they ſay is the Holy Spirit, דנפיק מאלהים, which proceedeth from God: very pertinently does Chriſt take notice of this his character here, when he was about to ſpeak of him as his teſtifier: he ſhall teſtify of me; of his deity and ſonſhip, of his incarnation, of his being the Meſſiah, of his ſufferings and death, of his reſurrection and aſcenſion, of his exaltation at the right-hand of God, and of his ordination to be the judge of quick and dead; all which he bore teſtimony to, by the gifts beſtowed upon the apoſtles, and the great grace that was upon them all; by the ſigns, wonders, and divers miracles, by which the Goſpel of Chriſt was confirmed; and by the power, influence, and ſucceſs, which attended the preaching of it every where. Thus he teſtified of Chriſt, againſt the blaſpheming Jews, and perſecuting Gentiles, to the reproof and confuſion of them; and he teſtified of him to the apoſtles, and all true believers, to their great joy and comfort, and to the ſupport of them, under all the malice and hatred of the world.

Ver. 27. And ye ſhall alſo bear witneſs, &c.] That is, of Chriſt; of all the things he did in Jeruſalem, and in the land of the Jews; being eye-witneſſes, and miniſters, or ſervants of the word, who conſtantly attended upon him; of all the good he did to the bodies and ſouls of men; of the various miracles he wrought, and of the ſeveral doctrines which were taught by him: what they ſaw with their eyes, heard with their ears, and with their hands handled of the word of life, that they could declare, and did declare, and bore a faithful teſtimony to; they were to be, and were witneſſes of his ſufferings and death, of his reſurrection from the dead, and aſcenſion to heaven; they were a company of ſelect men, choſen before of God, for this purpoſe; they were the moſt proper to be concerned herein, having been for a conſiderable time his intimates and aſſociates: becauſe ye have been with me from the beginning; from the begining of his miniſtry; for as ſoon as he entered on his public work, he called them to be followers of him; and who continued with him to the end, and therefore were the moſt capable of bearing a teſtimony concerning his perſon, doctrines, and works; of all he did and ſuffered, from firſt to laſt.

CHAP. XVI.

Ver. 1. THESE things have I ſpoken unto you, &c.] Concerning the world's hatred and perſecution of them, and the little regard they would ſhow to their doctrine; theſe things Chriſt thought proper to give them notice of before hand, that expecting them, they might be prepared for them, and be fortified againſt them; that ſays he, ye ſhould not be offended: his view in ſpeaking of them, was not to diſcourage them, but to prevent their ſtumbling at them, and falling by them. Hardſhips coming upon perſons at unawares, bear the harder upon their ſpirits, and they are more apt to take offence at them, and be impatient under them, which is prevented by previous intimation: had Chriſt ſaid nothing of theſe things that ſhould befal his diſciples, they might have ſurprized them, and have been a ſtumbling to them; and might have tempted them to have relinquiſhed their profeſſion of him, and dropped their miniſterial work; whereas being apprized of them before-hand, they were not ſo ſhocking to them. This ſhows the tender concern of Chriſt for his diſciples, how careful he was to remove every occaſion of ſtumbling, or what might be matter of offence to them; and may teach us to act in ſuch like manner towards one another, in this, or any other caſe.

Ver. 2. They ſhall put you out of the ſynagogues, &c.] The Jews had made a law already, that he that confeſſed that Jeſus was the Meſſiah, ſhould be caſt out of their ſynagogues; and they had put it in execution upon the blind man Chriſt reſtored to ſight, for his profeſſion of faith in him; which ſtruck ſuch a terror upon the people, that even many of the chief rulers who believed that Jeſus was the true Meſſiah, durſt not confeſs him, becauſe of this law; for it was what they could not bear the thoughts of, to be deemed and treated as hereticks and apoſtates, and the vileſt of wretches: for this putting out of the ſynagogue, was not the leſſer excommunication, which was called, נדוי, Niddui, and was a ſeparation from a particular ſynagogue for a while; but the greater excommunication, either by חרם, Cherem, or שמתא, Shammatha; when a perſon was cut off from the whole body of the Jewiſh church, called often the ſynagogue, or congregation of the people; and was devoted and conſigned to utter deſtruction, which was the heighth of their eccleſiaſtical power, their rage and malice could carry them to; and this the apoſtles were to expect; nay, not only this, but to have their lives taken away by ruffians, under a pretence of zeal for the ſervice of God, and intereſt of religion: yea, the time cometh, that whoſoever killeth you, will think that he doth God ſervice. For this is not to be underſtood of their being delivered up into the hands of civil magiſtrates, and of their being tried, judged, condemned, and put to death by their orders, but of their being murdered by a ſett of men called zealots; who in imitation of Phinehas, as they pretended, took upon them, whenever they found any perſon guilty of a capital crime, as idolatry, blaſphemy, &c. or what they judged ſo, to fall upon him at once, and without any more ado kill him; nor were they accountable to any court of judicature for ſuch an action, and which was reckoned laudable and praiſeworthy: in this way, and by the hands of ſuch miſcreants, Stephen the protomartyr loſt his life; for though they had him before a council, and ſuborned witneſſes againſt him, yet when in his own defence he ſaid what theſe zealots interpreted blaſphemy, they ran upon him at once, and caſt him out of the city, and ſtoned him to death; and without any leave or authority from the Sanhedrim, as appears: and theſe men were accounted good men, zealous, קנאתו של מקום [y], with a zeal for God, his honour and glory; and valued themſelves much upon ſuch butcheries and inhumanity, and thought, as our Lord here ſays, that they did God ſervice; or as the Syriac renders it, דקורבנא מקרב, offered a ſacrifice to God, and ſo the Arabic and Ethiopic: and indeed this is a rule with the Jews [z], and which they form upon the inſtance and example of Phinehas; "that whoever ſheds the blood of wicked "men, (and ſuch they reckoned the apoſtles and "followers of Chriſt to be,) כאלו הקריב קרבן, it "is all one as if he offered a ſacrifice;" they looked upon this to be a ſacrifice acceptable and well pleaſing to God: ſo the apoſtle Paul in his unregenerate ſtate, thought he ought to do many things contrary to the name of Chriſt; and that he was doing God ſervice, when he perſecuted the church, and gave his voice with theſe ruffians, to put the ſaints to death.

Ver. 3. And theſe things will they do unto you, &c.] Chriſt here opens the true ſpring and ſource of the furious zeal of the Jews, againſt the apoſtles, in putting them out of their ſynagogues, and taking away their lives; it was pure wilful ignorance of the Father and himſelf: becauſe they have not known the Father nor me; though they boaſted of their knowledge of God, yet they knew him not as the Father and ſender of Chriſt, at leaſt they would not own him as ſuch; nor Jeſus as the true Meſſiah, and ſent of the Father, to redeem and ſave his people from their ſins; and ſince they neither knew the Father, nor Chriſt, it is no wonder they did not know, own, and acknowledge, the diſciples of Chriſt, but uſed them in the ill manner they did; their zeal was not according to knowledge, it was a blind and miſguided one: and this is mentioned, not to extenuate or excuſe their ſin, though it ſhews, they were not out of the reach of mercy, becauſe they, as the apoſtle ſays of himſelf, did it ignorantly in unbelief; but as an argument with the diſciples to bear their ill uſage with patience, and to pity them and pray for them.

Ver. 4. But theſe things have I told you, &c.] Chriſt enlarged on this diſagreeable ſubject, and was the more particular in enumerating the evils his apoſtles were to endure for his name ſake: that when the time ſhall come; ſome copies read it, their time; ſo the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic render it; that is, the time when wicked men will be ſuffered to vent all their rage and malice: ye may remember that I told you of them; which might ſerve greatly to confirm them in the faith of him as the omniſcient God, and the true Meſſiah, and encourage them to depend on his veracity and faithfulneſs in his promiſes; that ſince the evil things which he ſpoke of came upon them, ſo they might hope, believe, and expect, that all the good things he had aſſured them of, ſhould be accompliſhed; and alſo to engage them to bear their ſufferings with the greater patience, ſince they were appointed by God, and foretold by their Lord and maſter. And theſe things, adds Chriſt, I ſaid not unto you at the beginning; when he firſt called them to be followers of him; for though when he ordained them, and ſent them forth to preach the Goſpel in the cities of Judea, which was ſome time after he had called them by his grace, he did acquaint them with ſome of the troubles and exerciſes they ſhould meet with; as that they ſhould be hated by all men, perſecuted from city to city, beat in the ſynagogues, delivered up to councils, and brought before kings and governours; ſee Matt. x. yet he did not ſo fully and diſtinctly ſpeak of theſe things, as here and at this time: his reaſon for ſuch a conduct was this, becauſe, ſays he, I was with you; wherefore he neither ſpoke ſo fully and diſtinctly of their troubles, becauſe he was with them, and took them upon himſelf; and indeed, whilſt he was with them, the rage and malice of the Jews were not ſo much againſt his diſciples, as himſelf; nor did he for the ſame reaſon ſpeak ſo largely of the comforter, and of the comforts they ſhould receive from him, becauſe as they had not the exerciſes they ſhould afterwards have, ſo they had him to be their comforter.

Ver. 5. But now I go my way to him that ſent me, &c.] Theſe words ſeem to belong to the preceding verſe, and to contain a reaſon why Chriſt ſpoke of the trials and afflictions of his diſciples now, becauſe he was going away from them to his Father; when as they would be at the head of his affairs in this world, ſo they would the more become the butt of the rage of men: and none of you aſketh me, whither goeſt thou? Peter indeed aſked the queſtion, ch. xiii. 36. but his meaning was, what part of the country he was going to? what private and inacceſſible place he was about to betake himſelf to? he had no notion of his going out of the world, or to heaven to his Father, and therefore enquired nothing about it; and when Chriſt had ſuggeſted to his diſciples, that he was going to his Father's houſe, to prepare manſions for them, they did not ſeem to underſtand him, ch. xiv. 2, 3, 5. Nor did they aſk what he meant by his Father's houſe, or what thoſe manſions were he was going to prepare; and what the glory was, he was going to poſſeſs for himſelf and them; they aſk neither about the place he was going to, nor the way to it, nor the happineſs to be enjoyed there.

Ver. 6. But becauſe I have ſaid theſe things to you, &c.] Of being hated and perſecuted by the Jews, of being put out of their ſynagogues, and of loſing of their lives; and particularly of his departure from them, or the loſs of his bodily preſence: ſorrow hath filled your heart; ſorrow for his abſence ſo poſſeſſed their minds, ſeized on all the powers and faculties of their ſouls, and engroſſed all their thoughts, that it never entered into the heart of any of them, to enquire about the place he was going to, or the ſtate he ſhould enter upon; which had they had any right notions of, would have greatly contributed to have abated their ſorrow, quieted their minds, made them eaſy under, and reconciled them unto his departure from them.

Ver. 7. Nevertheleſs, I tell you the truth, &c.] Chriſt was truth itſelf, and could ſay nothing elſe; but he makes uſe of this way of ſpeaking, to raiſe the attention of his diſciples, and to engage their belief of what he was about to ſay, and of which they were not eaſily perſuaded; which was, that however overwhelmed they were with grief and ſorrow, becauſe of his going away from them, a greater truth he could not tell them, than that this would be to their real good and advantage: it is expedient expedient for you that I go away; Chriſt's death here, as in many other places in theſe diſcourſes of his, is ſignified by going away, a departure, taking a ſort of a journey, ſuch an one as indeed is common to all mankind; death is the way of all the earth, and which Chriſt took by agreement with his Father; a dark way is the valley of the ſhadow of death, and ſo it was to Chriſt, who went away in the dark, under the hidings of his Father's face: it is a man's going to his long home, and a long journey it is, till he returns in the reſurrection morn; though it was a ſhort one to Chriſt, who roſe again the third day. The phraſe ſuppoſes place, and perſons he went from, this world and his diſciples; and place and perſons he went unto, the grave, heaven, his Father, the bleſſed Spirit, angels, and glorified ſaints; and is expreſſive of the voluntarineſs of his death, he was not fetched, or thruſt, and forced away, but he went away of himſelf; and is a very eaſy and familiar way of expreſſing death by, and greatly takes off the dread and terror of it; it is only moving from one place to another, as from one houſe, city, or country, to another; and ſhews, that it is not an annihilation of a man, either in body or ſoul, only a tranſlating of him from one place and ſtate to another. Now the death of Chriſt was expedient, not only for himſelf, which he does not mention; he being concerned more for the happineſs of his people than of himſelf; but for his diſciples and all believers; for hereby a great many evils were prevented falling upon them, which otherwiſe would; as the heavy ſtrokes of divine juſtice, the curſes and condemnation of the law, the wrath and vengeance of God, and eternal death, ruin, and deſtruction; as well as many good things were hereby obtained for them; as the redemption of their ſouls from ſin, law, hell, and death; peace, reconciliation, and atonement; the full and free forgiveneſs of all their ſins, an everlaſting righteouſneſs, and eternal life. Moreover, Chriſt's going away was expedient for his people; ſince he went to open the way for them into the holieſt of all, by his blood; to take poſſeſſion of heaven in their name and ſtead; to prepare manſions of glory for them; to appear in the preſence of God for them; to be their advocate, and make interceſſion for all good things for them; to tranſact all their buſineſs between God and them; to take care of their affairs; to preſent their petitions; to remove all charges and accuſations; and to aſk for, and ſee applied every bleſſing of grace unto them. The particular inſtanced in, in the text, of the expediency of it, is the miſſion and coming of the Spirit: for if I go not away, the comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will ſend him to you. The Spirit of God in ſome ſenſe had come, before the death of Chriſt; he had appeared in the creation of all things out of nothing, as a joint creator with the Father and Son; he was come as a ſpirit of prophecy upon the inſpired writers, and others; the Old Teſtament ſaints, had received him as a Spirit of faith; he had been given to Chriſt as man, without meaſure, and the diſciples had been partakers of his gifts and graces; but he was not come in ſo peculiar a manner, as he afterwards did; as the promiſe of the Father, the glorifier of Chriſt, the comforter of his people, the Spirit of truth, and the reprover of the world: there are reaſons to be given, why the Spirit of God ſhould not come in ſuch a manner before, as after the death of Chriſt. The order of the three divine perſons in the Trinity, and in the œconomy of man's ſalvation, required ſuch a method to be obſerved; that the Father ſhould firſt, and for a while, be more eſpecially manifeſted; next the Son, and then the Spirit: beſides, our Lord has given a reaſon himſelf, why the Spirit was not yet given, becauſe Jeſus was not yet glorified, ch. vii. 39. And the coming of the Spirit as a comforter, and the Spirit of truth, was to be through the interceſſion, and by the miſſion of Chriſt; and therefore it was proper he ſhould go away firſt, in order to ſend him: add to all this, that if Chriſt had not gone away or died, there would have been nothing for the Spirit to have done; no blood to ſprinkle; no righteouſneſs to reveal and bring near; no ſalvation to apply; or any of the things of Chriſt, and bleſſings of grace, to have taken and ſhown; all which are owing to the death of Chriſt, and which ſhow the expediency of it: the expediency of Chriſt's death for the miſſion of the Spirit to his diſciples, is very conſpicuous; for hereby they were comforted and ſupported under a variety of troubles; were led into all truth, and ſo furniſhed for their miniſterial work; and were made abundantly ſucceſsful in it, that being attended with the demonſtration of the Spirit and of power.

Ver. 8. And when he is come, &c.] The coming of the Spirit here, chiefly deſigns his deſcent upon the apoſtles, at the day of pentecoſt; as the things aſcribed to him, and which were then done by him, clearly ſhew; though it may alſo include his coming along with, and by the miniſtration of the Goſpel, into the hearts of his people at converſion, in all after ages of time: he will reprove the world of ſin, of righteouſneſs, and of judgment: by the world is principally meant, the Jews; the world among whom Chriſt perſonally was, who knew him not, diſbelieved him, rejected him as the Meſſiah, hated and perſecuted him, even unto death; though not to the excluſion of the Gentiles, the whole world that lies in wickedneſs; ſince both joined, and were concerned in theſe things, and reproved of them; which reproving, as it may reſpect different perſons, may intend both ſuch reproofs and convictions, as are not attended with converſion, and iſſue in ſalvation; and ſuch as are powerful, ſpiritual, and to ſaving purpoſes: the ſeveral things the Spirit of God is ſaid to reprove of, being repeated in the following verſes, with reaſons or ſpecifications annexed to them, will be there conſidered.

Ver. 9. Of ſin, becauſe they believe not on me.] The ſin here primarily intended, is that of the Jews, in diſbelieving, rejecting, and crucifying Chriſt; and which the Spirit of God by Peter, charged upon them on the day of pentecoſt, and fully proved againſt them; gave ſuch clear evidence, and wrought ſuch ſtrong convictions of in their minds and conſciences, that being pricked to the heart, they cried out, what ſhall we do? Acts ii. 23, 36, 37. though as this paſſage may be applied to the ordinary work of the Spirit of God upon the ſouls of men, thro' the miniſtry of the word; ſo it may take in convictions of ſin of all ſorts, as of original and actual ſins, and particularly the ſin of unbelief: for the Spirit of God convinces of the ſinfulneſs and corruption of nature, the wickedneſs and plague of a man's heart, the ſin that dwells in him; how that has overſpread all the powers and faculties of his ſoul, rendered both him and his ſervices unacceptable to God, loathſome in his ſight, and himſelf hopeleſs and helpleſs, and deſerving of his wrath and diſpleaſure: he alſo convinces of actual ſins and tranſgreſſions, ſhewing that they are breaches of the law of God, and are committed againſt God himſelf; that they are deſerving of death, even eternal death; that the wrath of God is revealed againſt them, and for them comes upon the children of diſobedience; and that there is no atonement for them, or cleanſing from them, but by the blood of Chriſt: he likewiſe convinces of the ſin of unbelief, here particularly mentioned; ſhewing the evil nature and conſequences of it, to perſons enjoying a Goſpel revelation; that ſuch who diſbelieve the Meſſiah, ſhall die in their ſins; that whoever believes not in him ſhall be damned; and that faith in Chriſt is neceſſary to ſalvation, and that without it there is none.

Ver. 10. Of righteouſneſs, becauſe I go to my Father, &c.] The righteouſneſs here ſpoken of, does in the firſt ſenſe of the word, deſign the perſonal righteouſneſs of Chriſt. The Jews had traduced him as a wicked man, ſaid he was a ſinner himſelf, and a friend of publicans and ſinners; that he was guilty of blaſphemy and ſedition, maintained a familiarity with ſatan, yea, that he had a devil: now the Spirit of God by the mouth of Peter, on the day of pentecoſt, proved to the conviction of the Jews, that all this was ſlander; that Chriſt was an innocent, holy, and righteous perſon, and a man approved of God among them, as they themſelves muſt be conſcious of, Acts ii. 22. of all which, his going to the Father, and being received by him, were a full proof and demonſtration. The effuſion of the Spirit in that extraordinary manner upon the diſciples, ſhewed that he was gone to the Father, and had received from him the promiſe of the Holy Ghoſt, which he then ſhed abroad; and his going to the Father, and being ſet down by him at his right hand, made it clear that he came from him, and was no impoſtor; that he had acted the faithful and upright part, and was free from all the charges the Jews had laid againſt him. Moreover, this may alſo be very well underſtood of the mediatorial righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which he as the ſurety and ſaviour of his people, was to work out and bring in for them, in obedience to the law of God; which required holineſs of nature, perfection of obedience, and bearing its penalty, death; all which were complied with by Chriſt, and ſo the whole righteouſneſs of the law was fulfilled by him; and which is imputed by God as the juſtifying righteouſneſs, of all that believe in Jeſus; and the proof of his having wrought out this, lies in his going to the Father; for as this was the work he came about, the will of his Father he came to do, had he not done it, 'tis reaſonable to think he would never have met with ſuch a welcome from him: beſides, the donation of the Spirit, in conſequence of its being wrought out, moſt clearly demonſtrates it: likewiſe in the ordinary work of the Spirit of God upon the ſouls of his people, he always convinces them of the neceſſity of a righteouſneſs to juſtify them before God, to render them acceptable in his ſight, and to give them a right to the heavenly glory; for to admit them without a righteouſneſs, or any unrighteous perſons there, would be contrary to the juſtice of God, diſagreeable to his pure and holy nature, and deſtructive of the comfort and happineſs of the ſaints. He, the Spirit of God, convinces men of the inſufficiency of their own righteouſneſs for ſuch purpoſes; that they have no righteouſneſs that deſerves the name of one, and that what they have will not juſtify them before God, and entitle them to heaven: and this he does, by ſhewing them the corruption of their nature, their daily ſins and infirmities, in thought, word, and deed; the purity of the divine perfections, and the ſpirituality and extenſiveneſs of the law of God; which when a man is thoroughly apprized of, he can never hope for, and expect juſtification before God by his own righteouſneſs: hence the Spirit of God proceeds to convince men of the glory, excellency, fulneſs, and ſuitableneſs of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; which he does, by revealing it to them in the Goſpel, ſetting it before them, and working faith in them to lay hold upon it; when they deſire to be found in Chriſt, not having on their own, but his righteouſneſs; which convictions appear by the mean thoughts they have of their own righteouſneſs, by hungring after Chriſt's, by diſclaiming all but his, by their conſtant mention of it, dependance on it, and ſatisfaction in it; and thus to convince of it, is the peculiar work of the Spirit, ſince naturally men are fond of their own righteouſneſs, are ignorant of Chriſt's, and ſet againſt it. 'Tis added, and ye ſee me no more; not but that the diſciples were to ſee Chriſt, and did ſee him after his reſurrection, and will with the reſt of ſaints ſee him at his ſecond coming: but the meaning is, that they ſhould ſee him no more, in a mean and deſpicable condition on earth, in a ſtate of humiliation, in the form of a ſervant, he having faithfully performed the whole work he came about, and particularly that of righteouſneſs, he came to bring in.

Ver. 11. Of judgment, becauſe the prince of this world is judged.] This is to be underſtood of the judiciary power and authority of Chriſt, who has all judgment committed to him by the Father, as mediator; has all power in heaven and in earth; and as he is appointed, ſo he is a very fit perſon to judge the world at the laſt day. Now this being diſputed and diſbelieved by the Jews, the Holy Ghoſt in the miniſtry of Peter, moſt clearly demonſtrated to their full conviction, that he was raiſed from the dead, ſet upon his throne, and was made, or declared, Lord and Chriſt, Acts ii. 24, 34, 35, 36. of which the pouring forth of the Holy Ghoſt was an evidence; and the inſtance in the text proving it, and which is a very conſiderable one, is the judgment, or condemnation and deſtruction of ſatan, the prince of the world; for Chriſt, by his death, has deſtroyed him and his works; has ſpoiled his principalities and powers; and by his reſurrection from the dead, and aſcenſion to heaven, has carried him and them captive, triumphing over them; and, through the effuſion of the Holy Spirit upon the apoſtles, and the power of it attending their miniſtry, ſatan was judged, condemned, and caſt out of the heathen world, their temples, and the ſouls of men; the prey was taken from the mighty, and the lawful captive delivered: but as this may refer to the ordinary work of the Spirit in conviction and converſion, it may be differently applied; for he convinces of various things, which come under this name: he convinces of the wrong judgment which men in a ſtate of nature form of God, whom they take to be ſuch an one as themſelves; of a crucified Chriſt, whom they eſteem fooliſhneſs; of the doctrines of Chriſt, which they judge to be abſurd and irrational; of the people of Chriſt, whom they reckon the filth of the world, and the offſcouring of all things; of the ways and ordinances of Chriſt, which are thought to be grievous, unpleaſant, and unprofitable; and of themſelves, and their own ſtate and condition, which they fancy to be good, and they in a fair way for heaven: he alſo convinces them of the excellency, truth, power, and uſefulneſs of the Goſpel, which is called judgment, Iſa. xlii. 1, 4. and li. 4. ſo as to underſtand it truly, believe it cordially, receive it in the love of it, and feel the power of it: he convinces them of a future judgment; of the reality and certainty of it; that it will be univerſal, reach to all perſons and things; that it will be carried on in the moſt righteous manner, and there will be no eſcaping it, of which the judgment and condemnation of ſatan is a ſtanding proof: and he moreover convinces of judgment or damnation; that men are under a ſentence of condemnation in Adam; that they are liable to eternal damnation in themſelves; that except they believe in Chriſt they will be damned, as ſure as the prince of this world is.

Ver. 12. I have yet many things to ſay unto you, &c.] Not with reſpect to the main doctrines of the Goſpel, for every thing of this kind he had made known unto them, ch. xv. 15. but what regarded the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles, the abrogation of the Moſaic œconomy, and ſettling the Goſpel church-ſtate, which were to come to paſs after the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, and the ſending of the Spirit: but ye cannot bear them now; becauſe of their prejudices in favour of their own nation, the law of Moſes, and the ceremonies of it, and the ſetting up of a temporal kingdom.

Ver. 13. Howbeit, when the ſpirit of truth is come, &c.] Of this character of the ſpirit, ſee ch. xiv. 17. His coming, as before, intends more eſpecially his deſcent on the apoſtles at Pentecoſt; tho' what is here ſaid of him is true of his office, and of his operations on other perſons, and at other times: he will guide you into all truth; neceſſary to be known, uſeful to men, profitable to the churches, even the whole counſel of God; what relates to worſhip, the nature, form, and ſpirituality of it, as well as doctrine. He is as a guide, he goes before, leads the way, removes obſtructions, opens the underſtanding, makes things plain and clear, teaches to profit, and leads in the way men ſhould go, without turning to the right hand or left, which, without ſuch a guide, they would be apt to do. The Jews[y] have a notion of the Holy Ghoſt being a guide into all wiſdom and knowledge. "R. Phinehas ſays, the holy Spirit reſted upon Joſeph from "his youth to the day of his death, and guided "him into all wiſdom, as a ſhepherd leads his flock, "according to Pſ. lxxx. 2." For he ſhall not ſpeak of himſelf: as Chriſt, the Son, ſpoke not of himſelf in oppoſition to the Father, ſo the Spirit ſpeaks not of himſelf in oppoſition either to the Father, or the Son, but in perfect agreement with both; being, as of the ſame nature and eſſence, power and glory, ſo of the ſame mind, underſtanding, and will; and as they agreed and wrought jointly and harmoniouſly, in the works of nature and providence, ſo in the œcomony of grace and ſalvation. But whatſoever he ſhall hear, that ſhall he ſpeak; as Chriſt himſelf did, ch. xv. 15. and they are ſuch things as ear has not heard beſides; what were ſecretly tranſacted in the council and covenant of peace, and agreed upon by all the three perſons; things which concern the ſalvation of men, the Goſpel church-ſtate, another world, and the glory of all the divine perſons: and he will ſhew you things to come; which would come to paſs after the death, reſurrection, and aſcenſion of Chriſt; things relating to the ſtate and ſettlement of the Goſpel-church, the partition-wall being broken down, the law of commandments contained in ordinances aboliſhed, and a new face of things appearing in the kingdom and intereſt of Chriſt, in conſequence of the Spirit being ſent forth, and poured down: or this may reſpect the Spirit of prophecy in the Apoſtles, who ſhowed to them many things to come in after-ages; as the riſe of the man of ſin, the great departure from the faith, and decline of the power of godlineſs in the laſt days, the calling of the Jews, the deſtruction of Antichriſt, the burning of the world, and the making of new heavens and new earth; and, in ſhort, what would be the ſtate of the church of Chriſt, and religion, in all the ſeveral periods of time, quite down to the coming of Chriſt, when dead ſaints ſhall be raiſed, and living ones changed, as is declared throughout the book of the Revelations.

Ver. 14. He ſhall glorify me, &c.] In the miniſtration of the Goſpel, which is the miniſtration of the Spirit; and aſſerts Chriſt to be God over all, to have all that the Father hath, to be poſſeſſed of all divine perfections, to have the fulneſs of the Godhead dwelling in him; aſcribes the ſame works and worſhip to him as to the Father; and, as in a glaſs, holds him forth to be beheld as the brightneſs of his glory, and his glory to be ſeen in it, as the glory of the only-begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth: it declares him to be the only ſaviour and redeemer of loſt ſinners, that juſtification is ſolely by his righteouſneſs, pardon by his blood, and atonement by his ſacrifice; and which miniſtration the Spirit makes effectual to the bringing of many ſouls to Chriſt to believe in him, profeſs his name, and expect life and ſalvation from him, by all which he is glorified. Moreover, the Spirit of God glorifies Chriſt in the experience of the ſaints, by leading them to him for righteouſneſs, peace, and pardon, for grace, and freſh ſupplies of it, for wiſdom and ſtrength, for food and reſt, for life and happineſs; and by enabling them to live by faith on him, on whom he has encouraged them to venture, and to whom they have committed their all; and by inſtructing them to glory in him, as their wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption; and by aſcribing the glory of their ſalvation to him, and by making continual application to him, under his direction and influence; by leaning on him, and expecting every good thing from him both for time and eternity. The particular inſtance in which he glorifies Chriſt, follows, for he ſhall receive of mine, and ſhall ſhew it unto you; which is to be underſtood not of gifts Chriſt received from his Father, and which he gives to men by his Spirit; nor of internal grace, as faith, love, &c. which the Spirit from Chriſt works in the hearts of men; but either of the doctrines of the Goſpel, the deep things of God and Chriſt, which the Spirit ſearches, and reveals in the miniſtration of the word. The Goſpel is a ſort of a Kabala, tho' of a different kind from the oral law of the Jews. Chriſt received it from the Father, the Spirit received it from Chriſt, the Apoſtles received it from the Spirit, and the churches of Chriſt from them in ſucceeding generations: or this may be underſtood of the bleſſings of grace held forth in the Goſpel, ſuch as juſtification, pardon, adoption, &c. which are in Chriſt; and which the Spirit from Chriſt takes and ſhews to the ſaints, and witneſſes their ſpecial and particular intereſt in, and ſo comforts them, and glorifies Chriſt.

Ver. 15. All things that the Father hath are mine, &c.] Tho' it is true that the ſame divine nature the Father is poſſeſſed of, the Son is; and the ſame divine perfections belong to the one, as to the other; and the Son ſhares in the ſame glory and felicity felicity the Father does; ſo that in the utmoſt extent of the phraſe, all that the Father hath are his; yet ſince Chriſt is ſpeaking of things received of him by the Spirit, and ſhewn unto his people, it rather ſeems that the bleſſings of grace, which the Father has in ſtore for his choſen ones, and the doctrines of grace, thoſe deep things of his, are here more eſpecially meant; which to reveal and apply, is the peculiar work of the Spirit; and in theſe Chriſt is equally concerned with the Father: therefore, ſaid I, he ſhall take of mine, and ſhall ſhew it unto you; he does not mention the things of the Father, only his own; nor was there any neceſſity for it, becauſe whatever is his, is the Father's, and whatever the Father has is his: they are jointly concerned in every thing relating to the ſalvation, benefit, comfort, and happineſs of the ſaints; ſo that when the Spirit of God takes of the things of the one, he takes of the things of the other, and diſcovers, and applies them.

Ver. 16. A little while and ye ſhall not ſee me, &c.] Meaning, that he ſhould be quickly taken from them by death. And in a very little time after this, having put up a prayer for them, recorded in the next chapter, he went into the garden, where he was met by Judas with his band of men, who laid hold on him, bound him, and led him firſt to Annas, then to Caiaphas, and from him to Pilate, when all the diſciples forſook him and fled, and ſaw him no more in this mortal ſtate, except Peter and John. He took his trial, was ſoon condemned, and crucified, and laid in the dark tomb, and ſilent grave, where, for a while, he was out of ſight. And again, a little while and ye ſhall ſee me; referring either to his riſing again the third day from his death, as was propheſied of, Hoſ. vi. 2. and was typified by Jonas's lying three days and three nights in the whale's belly, when he appeared to, and was ſeen by his diſciples, to their great joy; or elſe to the ſhort time in which he was to be, and was ſeen by them; namely, forty days between his reſurrection and aſcenſion; a longer ſtay it was not neceſſary he ſhould make, for he had other work to do, for himſelf and them: becauſe I go to the Father; to give an account of the work he had finiſhed on earth; to carry in his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice; to preſent himſelf to his Father on behalf of his people; to appear in the preſence of God for them; to be their advocate, plead their cauſe, and make interceſſion for them, and take poſſeſſion of heaven in their name; to take his place at the right hand of God in their nature; to receive a kingdom for himſelf, and then return.

Ver. 17. Then ſaid ſome of his diſciples among themſelves, &c.] It may be, ſome of them might better underſtand the meaning of Chriſt than others, or they might all be ignorant of it; for before the effuſion of the Spirit on them, they were attended with a great deal of ignorance; and what thro' their being over-whelmed at this time with ſorrow, and what with their national ſentiments they retained about a temporal kingdom, they underſtood very little of what Chriſt ſaid to them concerning his death, the nature, uſe, and end of it. Wherefore ſome might make the motion firſt, and enquire, what is this that he ſaith unto us, a little while and ye ſhall not ſee me? they knew not what he meant by it, tho' he had ſo often, and ſo clearly ſpoken of his death unto them: and as ignorant were they what he ſhould deſign by ſaying, and again a little while and ye ſhall ſee me; tho' he had expreſly told them, in ſo many words, ſome time ago, that whereas he ſhould die, he ſhould riſe again the third day: and as much at a loſs were they to gueſs what he ſhould intend by the reaſon he gives, and becauſe I go to the Father; tho' he had often mentioned it already, and as what might be matter of joy unto them.

Ver. 18. They ſaid therefore, &c.] One, and all of them; the enquiry became univerſal; what is this that he ſaith, a little while? it ſeems as if this phraſe was the moſt intricate and perplexing to them; for whatever conceptions they might have of not ſeeing, and ſeeing him again, as expreſſive of his going from them, and returning to them; yet had no notion at all what he ſhould mean by a little while: and therefore add, we cannot tell what he ſaith; they knew his words, but not his meaning.

Ver. 19. Now Jeſus knew that they were deſirous to aſk him, &c.] This is a proof of Chriſt's deity, that he is the omniſcient God who knows all things, what is in man, even the ſecrets of the heart; for he not only knew the whiſperings of the diſciples, and their enquiries among themſelves about the ſenſe of his words, but alſo their ſecret deſires to aſk him concerning it: and ſaid unto them, do ye enquire among yourſelves of that I ſaid, a little while and ye ſhall not ſee me, and again a little while and ye ſhall ſee me? which he ſaid before they could put the queſtion to him, they being baſhful, and backward thro' fear or ſhame; and which not only confirms what is before obſerved of his omniſcience, but alſo ſhows his readineſs to open his mind and meaning, and explain himſelf to his diſciples, as he does in the following words.

Ver. 20. Verily verily I ſay unto you, &c.] A ſtrong aſſeveration, a way of ſpeaking often uſed by him, when he ſolemnly affirms any thing, and would aſſure of the truth of it, as here: that ye ſhall weep and lament; meaning at his death, when he ſhould be removed from them, ſo that they ſhould not ſee him; when they ſhould be filled with inward grief on account thereof, and expreſs it by mournful geſtures, and a doleful voice; and which was fulfilled in them, Mark xvi. 10. and how penſive the two diſciples were that were going to Emmaus, it's eaſy to obſerve from the account given of them: but the world ſhall rejoice; the unbelieving Jews; and not only the common people, but the chief-prieſts, with the Scribes and elders, mocked at him, inſulted him, and triumphed over him when on the croſs, being glad at heart they had got him there; imagining now, that it was all over, the day was their own, and they ſhould be no more diſturbed by Chriſt and his followers: and ye ſhall be ſorrowful; Chriſt repeats it again, and uſes a variety of words to expreſs the greatneſs of their ſorrow, and the many ways in which they would ſignify it: but your ſorrow ſhall be turned into joy; as it was, when he was raiſed from the dead, which was ſo wonderful and ſurprizing to them, that for joy they could ſcarce believe their own eyes; it being a mercy unexpected, tho' they had been told of it, and too great for them to enjoy; yea, that very thing which was the occaſion of their ſorrow, became the foundation of their joy; namely, the death of Chriſt, ſalvation, and all the benefits and bleſſings of grace coming to them in this way.

Ver. 21. A woman when ſhe is in travail hath ſorrow, &c.] As was ſaid ſhe ſhould have, Gen. iii. 16. This is God's ordination and appointment for ſin: becauſe her hour is come; is at hand; the fixed time in nature is up, and there's no avoiding it: but as ſoon as ſhe is delivered of the child; for tho' the ſorrow is great, yet there is a deliverance, and ſhe is ſaved in child-bearing: when ſhe remembereth no more the anguiſh; the ſharp pains ſhe has endured in her travail; for joy that a man is born into the world. Much ſuch a way of ſpeaking is uſed by the Jews[z], who obſerve, that "if a woman brings forth a male child, all is forgot, and ſhe repents, (i. e. of her impatience, or any unbecoming expreſſion in the time of labour) בשמחת הזכר, for the joy of a man child." And our Lord ſeems to have reſpect to a prevailing notion among them, as well as many others, of the felicity of male children: 'tis a common ſaying with them[a], "bleſſed is he whoſe children are males, and wo to him whoſe children are females:" for they ſay[b], "when, שבא זכר בעולם, that a man child comes into the world, peace comes into the world." Now our Lord, by this inſtance, illuſtrates the ſorrow his diſciples ſhould have by his departure, and the joy that they ſhould be poſſeſſed of upon his return to them; that as the pains of a woman in travail are very ſharp and ſevere, and the diſtreſs of her mind, about the iſſue of things reſpecting herſelf and offspring, is very great, ſo would be the grief and trouble of the diſciples on account of the death of their Lord and Maſter: but as when a woman is ſafely delivered of a man child, ſhe is ſo filled with joy, that her ſorrow is remembered no more; ſo ſhould it be with them, when Chriſt ſhould appear to them; all their trouble, concern, anxiety of mind, and fears, that attended them, would all vaniſh away, and they be diſtreſſed with them no more.

Ver. 22. And ye now therefore have ſorrow, &c.] This is the application of the preceding caſe. As it is with a woman in travail, when her hour is come, ſo it was now with them, and would be when Chriſt was removed from them; and as it is with every believer, when Chriſt is abſent: for tho' there are many things that cauſe ſorrow now, as ſin, ſatan, and afflictive diſpenſations of providence, yet nothing more ſenſibly touches believers to the quick, and gives them more uneaſineſs, than when Chriſt is out of ſight: the reaſons are, becauſe he is ſo nearly related to them, being their everlaſting father, kind huſband, loving brother, and faithful friend; and becauſe they are ſo ſtrongly affected to him, there's none like him in their eſteem in heaven and in earth: he is the perſon whom their ſouls love; he is the very life of their ſouls; his favour, his gracious preſence is life to them, and his abſence is as death; nor can they be eaſy, but are reſtleſs, and upon the enquiry after him, until he returns to them, which he does in his own time; and therefore this ſorrow is but now, for the preſent, it is not perpetual. But I will ſee you again; as he did ſee his diſciples upon his reſurrection once and again, for the ſpace of forty days, at certain times, by intervals: and ſo, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, he comes and ſees his people, makes them a viſit, manifeſts himſelf unto them, and abides with them: they are always under his omniſcient eye; he always ſees them as God; and they are always under his eye of love, grace, and mercy, as mediator: but this means ſuch a ſeeing of them, as that they ſee him as well as he ſees them; and is expreſſive of a delightful intercourſe between Chriſt and them, than which nothing is more deſirable: and your heart ſhall rejoice; as did the hearts of the diſciples, when they ſaw Chriſt riſen from the dead; and as the hearts of believers do, when Chriſt ſo looks upon them that they can view him with an eye of faith; ſuch a ſight is a heart rejoicing one. To ſee the glory and beauty of Chriſt's perſon, the fulneſs and ſuitableneſs of him as a ſaviour; to have an appropriating view of him as ſuch; or to ſee him ſo as to have ſenſible communion with him, muſt needs fill the heart of a believer with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory: ſuch a ſight of Chriſt will rejoice the heart under a ſenſe of ſin, the pollution and guilt of it, when tempted by ſatan, or under God's afflicting hand, and even in the view of death and eternity. And your joy no man taketh from you. The joy of the hypocrite is but for a moment, and the joy of the chief-prieſts, Scribes, and Phariſees, was a ſhort-lived one, on account of Chriſt's death; for Jeſus was ſoon raiſed from the dead, and the Apoſtles were filled with the Spirit, and went forth boldly preaching in the name of Chriſt, to the great grief of theſe men. But the joy of the diſciples was durable; their riſen Lord would never die more; the bleſſings of grace, ſuch as redemption, pardon, righteouſneſs, and atonement, would, and do ever remain as the foundation of ſolid joy: nor could a ſtranger intermeddle with it; ουδεις, not one, either man or devil could take it away, not by all the reproaches they could caſt upon them, or perſecutions they could follow them with: and ſo, tho' a believer's joy may be damp'd by ſin, and ſatan, and the world, it may not be always in lively exerciſe; yet the matter of it always remains in Chriſt, and the principle of it in themſelves can never be deſtroyed, but will iſſue in everlaſting joy in another world.

Ver. 23. In that day ye ſhall aſk me nothing, &c.] Meaning, not the whole Goſpel-diſpenſation, ſo often called in prophetic language, that day; and is, in the New Teſtament, oppoſed to the night of Jewiſh and Gentile darkneſs; and in compariſon of the former diſpenſation, is a time of great ſpiritual light and knowledge: nor the latter part of that day, when there will be no night of darkneſs and deſertion, of error and ſecurity, of affliction and perſecution, with the church; when the earth ſhall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord; when all the children of God ſhall be taught of him, and there will be no need to ſay, know the Lord, for all ſhall know him, from the leaſt to the greateſt: nor the day of judgment, which, by way of emphaſis, is ſo frequently called that day: nor the ſtate of ultimate happineſs, the everlaſting day of glory; when all imperfections ſhall be done away, when ſaints will know, as they are known, and ſee Jeſus as he is, and need not aſk any queſtions about him: but the time when Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, ſhould meet again, and ſee each others faces with joy and pleaſure is meant; and the time following thereon, eſpecially the day of Pentecoſt, when the Spirit was poured down upon them, and, according to his promiſe, came to them, taught them all things, and led them into all truth. This aſking is not to be underſtood of aſking in prayer; for it appears, by what follows, that they ſhould aſk in his name then, and he encourages to it; but of aſking him queſtions, and that not of any ſort; for it is certain, that, within this time, they did aſk many things. Peter aſked what John, the beloved diſciple, ſhould do; and they all aſked him, a little before his aſcenſion, whether he would, at that time, reſtore again the kingdom to Iſrael; but it is to be reſtrained to ſuch things they had been, or were deſirous of aſking him; ſuch as, whither goeſt thou? ſhew us the Father? how is it that thou wilt manifeſt thyſelf to us, and not unto the world? and more eſpecially theſe laſt queſtions, they greatly deſired to put to him, what is this, a little while and ye ſhall not ſee me? and what is this, a little while and ye ſhall ſee me? and what is the meaning of theſe words, becauſe I go to the Father? Now our Lord intimates, that at this time all theſe things would be ſo clear and evident to them, that they ſhould aſk him no queſtions about them. But he adds, verily verily I ſay unto you, whatſoever ye ſhall aſk the Father in my name he will give it you. Aſking here ſignifies prayer, and a different word is here uſed than before. The object of prayer is the Father, tho' not to the excluſion of the Son and Spirit, who were both ſeparately, or in conjunction with the Father, prayed unto after this; ſee Acts vii. 59. and xxii. 16. 2 Theſſ. iii. 5. Rom. i. 7. 1 Cor. i. 2, 3. Rev. i. 4, 5. The medium of acceſs to the Father is the name of Chriſt; he is the mediator between God and man, the way of acceſs unto him; whatever is aſked, is to be aſked on account of his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, and then there is no doubt of ſucceſs; whatever is aſked will be given; his blood within the vail ſpeaks loud for every bleſſing; his righteouſneſs God is always well pleaſed with; his ſacrifice is a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour; his mediation is powerful; and his name is always prevalent.

Ver. 24. Hitherto have ye aſked nothing in my name, &c.] Not that they had never prayed as yet; for they had deſired him to teach them to pray, which he did: they had prayed to him particularly for an increaſe of faith, and for many other things; but either they had only aſked him, he being preſent with them, and not the Father; or if they had aſked the Father any thing, yet not in the name of Chriſt: they had made no mention of his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, nor any uſe of his mediation; things they had not as yet ſuch clear knowledge of; or they had not aſked as yet any extraordinary thing, as they afterwards did; ſee Acts iv. 29, 30. aſk, and ye ſhall receive; that is, in my name, and whatever ye aſk for, ye ſhall have it, to fit you for your work, to carry you thro' it, and to give you ſucceſs in it; ſee Matt. vii. 7. that your joy may be full; go chearfully through your work, find much pleaſure in it, and with great ſatisfaction ſee the Goſpel ſpread, ſouls converted, ſatan's kingdom weakened, and the intereſt of your redeemer thrive and flouriſh; than which nothing can more contribute to complete the joy of the miniſters of Chriſt.

Ver. 25. Theſe things have I ſpoken unto you in proverbs, &c.] Concerning his Father, and his Father's houſe, and the many manſions in it, of his going to prepare a place for them there, and of the way unto it, all which they ſeemed not to underſtand; of the nature of communion with him and his Father, and of the manifeſtation of them to them, ſo as not unto the world, which they could not account for; of their union to him under the ſimile of the vine and its branches; and of his departure from them, and return unto them; and of the ſorrow that ſhould follow upon the one, and the joy that ſhould attend the other, ſet forth in the caſe of a woman in travail, having ſorrow, and being joyful when delivered. All which, one would think, were plain and eaſy to be underſtood; but ſuch was the then preſent ſtate and caſe of the diſciples, that theſe all ſeemed as proverbs, parables, and dark ſayings, which they did not clearly underſtand: wherefore our Lord ſays, the time cometh; meaning either the time of his appearing unto them, after his reſurrection, or the day of Pentecoſt: when I ſhall no more ſpeak unto you in proverbs, but I ſhall ſhew plainly of the Father; by pouring forth his Spirit upon them, who ſhould not only take of his things, but of his Father's alſo, and ſhew them unto them clearly and plainly; ſo as that they ſhould have a clear underſtanding of them, as they were capable of; of the perfections of his nature, his diſtinct perſonality, his being the Father of Chriſt, and of all the elect in him; of his everlaſting love to their perſons; of his choice of them in Chriſt; of his covenant with them in him; of his mind and will concerning them, and his gracious deſigns towards them; of his Father's houſe, and the way to it; and of the nature, deſign, and uſefulneſs of his going to him; of the diſtinction between ſpeaking in parables and dark ſayings, and ſpeaking plainly, openly, and apparently; ſee Numb. xii. 8.

Ver. 26. At that day ye ſhall aſk in my name, &c.] For when the Spirit was poured upon them, they not only received his extraordinary gifts, and had a larger meaſure of his grace beſtowed upon them; but were alſo bleſſed with him, as a Spirit of grace and ſupplication, in a more remarkable manner than ever they had been before: they then better underſtood the throne of grace, and the advantages of it; had greater enlargements and aſſiſtances at it; and were better acquainted with the mediation of Chriſt, and the neceſſity of making uſe of his name, blood, and righteouſneſs, in all their petitions and requeſts. And I ſay not unto you, that I will pray the Father for you. This Chriſt had promiſed before, John xiv. 16. nor was there any occaſion to repeat it now, of which they might be ſtrongly aſſured: beſides, at that day the Spirit would be given to them by virtue of his interceſſion; ſo that there would be no need of praying to the Father for them on that account. This is ſaid, not as if the interceſſion of Chriſt for his people would then ceaſe; for he is always their advocate with the Father, and ever lives to make interceſſion for them; tho' it may not be carried on in the ſame manner, by prayer, as when he was here on earth, his perſonal appearance, and the preſentation of his blood, ſacrifice, and righteouſneſs being ſufficient; but to declare the diſpoſition and readineſs of his Father to hear them, and grant unto them whatſoever they ſhould aſk of him in his name.

Ver. 27. For the Father himſelf loveth you, &c.] The Father loved them as well, and as much as the Son did, and of himſelf too, without any merit or motive in them: he loved them from everlaſting, and had given proofs of it in time, in the gift of his Son to them, and for them, and in calling them by his grace; and therefore being thus ſtrongly affected to them, they might depend upon a ready and ſpeedy anſwer from him, as might be beſt for his glory, and their good. Becauſe ye have loved me; not that their love to Chriſt was the cauſe of the Father's love to them; but, on the contrary, the Father's love to them was the cauſe of their love to Chriſt; and therefore as the cauſe is known by its effect, they might be aſſured of the Father's love to them by their love to Chriſt; for if the Father had not loved them, they had never loved God, nor Chriſt; but ſince they did love Chriſt, it was a clear caſe the Father loved them: and this their love is joined with faith; and have believed that I came out from God; being ſent by him, and am no impoſtor, but the true Meſſiah that was to come: faith in Chriſt, and love to him, go together; where the one is, there is the other, faith works by love; they are both the gifts of God's grace, and the fruits and effects of his everlaſting love; and thoſe who are poſſeſſed of them may be firmly perſuaded of their intereſt therein.

Ver. 28. I came forth from the Father, &c.] This is the ſum of what the Apoſtles believed, and Chriſt, in theſe diſcourſes of his, had been ſpeaking of. This his coming forth from the Father is to be underſtood, not of his eternal filiation; nor of his coming forth in a way of grace towards his own people in the council and covenant of grace and peace; nor of his conſtitution, as mediator, from everlaſting; but of his coming in the fleſh in the fulneſs of time: which ſuppoſes that he was, that he exiſted as a divine perſon before; that he was with the Father before; that he came forth from him with his knowledge, mind, and will; he came not of himſelf, but he ſent him; and yet he came willingly, was not forced, or did not come againſt his will: and this does not ſuppoſe any local motion, or change of place, but only intends an aſſumption of the human nature into unity with his divine perſon, who fills heaven and earth with his preſence; nor any ſeparation from his Father, with whom he was, and in whoſe boſom he lay when he was made fleſh, and dwelt among men; nor any abſence from heaven, for he was there when on earth. And am come into the world; where he was before, as the creator and upholder of it, by his immenſity and powerful preſence: this deſigns his coming and manifeſtation in the fleſh, which in general was to do the whole will of God, which he in council and covenant agreed to do, and for which he came down from heaven; and in particular to preach the Goſpel, call ſinners to repentance, give light and life to many, and to fulfil the law, by obeying its precepts, and bearing its penalty, and both to do and ſuffer in the room and ſtead of his people, and to ſave loſt ſinners, even the chief of them. Again, I leave the world; not that he relinquiſhed the ſuſtentation and government of it, as God, nor the care of his people in it, as mediator, for whom he retains the ſame love as ever, and will not leave them fatherleſs and comfortleſs; nor was he leaving it as never to return more; for he'll deſcend in like manner he aſcended, and will come a ſecond time and judge the world in righteouſneſs: but he was about to depart from it by death, having done the work and buſineſs for which he came about. And go to the Father; to give an account of his work unto him, as his righteous ſervant, being faithful to him that had appointed him; and to tranſact the affairs of his people; to appear in the preſence of God for them; to preſent their petitions, be their advocate, make interceſſion for them, take poſſeſſion of heaven in their name, and prepare it for them; to take his place at the right hand of God in human nature, and to be glorified with the glory promiſed him before the world was.

Ver. 29. His diſciples ſaid unto him, &c.] Upon the above diſcourſe of Chriſt, ſuch rays and beams of light darted into the minds of the Apoſtles, and things ſtood ſo clear in their view, and they ſo well underſtood what Chriſt had ſaid, that they declare, lo, now ſpeakeſt thou plainly, and ſpeakeſt no proverb: what he had ſaid before, were to them like proverbial, or parabolical expreſſions not eaſy to be underſtood; they were like ænigmas, riddles, and dark ſayings, the meaning of which they could not apprehend; but now they obſerve, with admiration, that what he delivered was plain, and intelligible; which was not ſo much owing to Chriſt's different way of ſpeaking now, from what it was before, as to their former dullneſs of hearing, and now having ſome further degree of light given unto them.

Ver. 30. Now are we ſure, that thou knoweſt all things, &c.] Not only all men, but all things, even the ſecrets of mens hearts, of which the Apoſtles had now a convincing proof; for whereas Chriſt had delivered ſome expreſſions, ver. 16. which they did not underſtand, and were deſirous to aſk him the meaning of, ver. 19. which he knowing, being God omniſcient, prevents their putting the queſtion to him, and enters upon a diſcourſe, in which he ſo clearly explained what they wanted to be informed of, without their aſking him, that they were fully aſſured that he muſt know all things; and, as they add, needeſt not that any man ſhould aſk thee: the meaning is, that ſhould Chriſt deliver any thing not ſo intelligible to any of his audience, and they were deſirous of knowing the ſenſe of it, there would be no need of putting the queſtion in form to him, ſince he is privy to the firſt motion of deſire riſing up in the mind; and can, and will, if he thinks fit, explain himſelf on ſuch an head, to the ſatiſfaction of the perſon, without ever aſking him; at leaſt there's no need of putting the queſtion to make him acquainted with his deſire, this being before known unto him. By this we believe that thou cameſt forth from God; was the true Meſſiah, and had his miſſion and commiſſion from God, as ſuch; doubtleſs they believed this before, but this inſtance of Chriſt's omniſcience was a ſtrengthening proof of it. So Nathanael, by Chriſt's ſaying to him, that before Philip called him, and when he was under the fig-tree, he ſaw him when he thought no eye did but an omniſcient one; it laid him under ſuch full convictions of him, as at once to acknowledge him the Son of God, the king of Iſrael. This is one of the ſigns and characters of the Meſſiah with the Jews, that he ſhould have a diſcerning ſpirit of men and things, according to Iſ. xi. 3[c].

Ver. 31. Jeſus anſwered them, do ye now believe?] Not as calling their faith in queſtion; or as denying they had any; or as deſpiſing it for the ſmallneſs of it; but as reproving them for their ſecurity, vain confidence and boaſting, as if their faith was ſo very ſtrong that it would never be moved; and perhaps for the lateneſs of it too: the words may be read affirmatively, without an interrogation, ye do believe now; they are in the Syriac and Arabic verſions read imperatively, believe ye now. Tho' the now is left out by the former, which is not to be ſpared, for the emphaſis lies on it; and a regard ſeems to be had both to time paſt and to come. The words carry in them a tacit reproof, that they believed no ſooner, or were not before this time more eſtabliſhed in their faith, when he had been ſo long with them, and they had heard ſo many diſcourſes from him, and had ſeen ſo many miracles wrought by him: however, it was not too late, and they would do well to go on believing; but 'tis ſuggeſted to them they would meet with ſomething that would try their faith: and it is as if Chriſt had ſaid, ye believe in me now, while I am with you, and all things go according to your mind; but what will you do anon, when I ſhall be taken from you, be apprehended by mine enemies, be delivered into the hands of the Gentiles, be crucified, die, and be laid in the grave? will ye believe then? one of you will betray me, another deny me, and all will forſake me, and ſome expreſs their doubts about me.

Ver. 32. Behold the hour cometh, yea, is now come, &c.] The time is at hand, yea, it may, in a ſenſe, be ſaid to be already come, it was within an hour: and indeed the following prayer might be delivered in leſs than an hour's time; when he went immediately into the garden, and was apprehended; or at leaſt in a very little while it would come to paſs, that ye ſhall be ſcattered, every man to his own; to his own friends, relations, and acquaintance; to his own houſe and home; to his own country Galilee, whither they all went, and to their trade of fiſhing again; ſee John xxi. 1. and ſo was fulfilled the prophecy in Zech. xiii. 7. and ſhall leave me alone; as they did in the hands of his enemies; for they all forſook him and fled, ſome one way, ſome another; tho' one or two of them, Peter and John, followed him at a diſtance; and all came together again, but not to Chriſt, until his reſurrection from the dead. And yet I am not alone; he was not alone at this time; and his meaning is, that he ſhould not be alone then when they ſhould be ſcattered from him: becauſe the Father is with me; not only as the Son of God, by virtue of union to him, and as one with him; but as mediator, in conſequence of his promiſe to uphold him, and aſſiſt him in his human nature; and tho' he withdrew his gracious and comforting preſence from him, he bearing the ſins, and ſtanding in the room and ſtead of his people, yet not his powerful and ſupporting preſence.

Ver. 33. Theſe things I have ſpoken unto you, &c.] As this is the concluſion of our Lord's ſermons to his diſciples, theſe words may well enough be thought to have regard to all that he had ſaid in general; as concerning his departure from them; his going to prepare a place for them; his union to them, and their communion with him; and the various perſecutions and afflictions they ſhould endure for his ſake; and the many bleſſings both of grace and glory they ſhould enjoy; and particularly what he had ſaid in the context, concerning their forſaking him, which ſuppoſed tribulation, and would be a prelude of what they were afterwards to have in the world; and concerning the preſence of his Father with him, and which they might alſo expect to have: that in me ye might have peace; not in the world, in which they were to have tribulation: there's no true, ſolid peace to be enjoyed in the world, and the things of it; the world can neither give it, nor take it away; nor have the men of it any knowledge and underſtanding of it; and much leſs enjoy it: nor in themſelves; ſpiritual peace does not ariſe from any duties, ſervices, and performances of men; no, not from an attendance on the Goſpel, and the ordinances of it; nor even from the graces of the Spirit; for tho' peace may be enjoyed herein, and hereby, and through theſe, as means; yet does not come from them, but from Chriſt, in whoſe ſtrength alone all duties are performed aright; who is the ſum and ſubſtance of the Goſpel, and the ordinances of it, and the object of all grace: it is in him, and in him only, in his perſon, blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, which ſpeak peace, pardon, and atonement, that a ſoul finds any true, ſolid peace, reſt, comfort, and joy; and here he may, and does find it, in oppoſition to the cry of ſin, law, and juſtice, for wrath, ruin, hell, and damnation. There's a peace by Chriſt, which he has made for his people by the blood of his croſs; and there's a peace in him, which is enjoyed thro' faith's looking to his blood for pardon, to his righteouſneſs for juſtification, to his ſacrifice for atonement and ſatisfaction; and by having communion with him, and diſcoveries of his love, and by ſeeing ſafety and ſecurity in him. In the world ye ſhall have tribulation; this is certain from this declaration of Chriſt, who is the omniſcient God, and truth itſelf; from the inſtance and example of Chriſt, who was all his life a man of ſorrows; from the conformity of the members to the head; from the divine appointment that has ſo determined it; from the natural enmity of the world to the ſaints; from the experience of the people of God in all ages; from the uſefulneſs of tribulation to try the graces, and bring about the temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal good of believers: and though they have tribulation in the world, yet not by way of puniſhment for ſin, but as fatherly corrections and chaſtenings for their good, that they may not be condemned with the world; and it is only in this preſent world they have it; as ſoon as they have done with the world, they'll have done with tribulation: be of good chear, I have overcome the world; it is very obſervable how the phraſe, in the world ye ſhall have tribulation, ſtands, and is encompaſſed, before, with theſe words, that in me ye might have peace, and behind, with theſe, be of good chear, &c. Believers, of all men, notwithſtanding their tribulations, have reaſon to be of good chear, ſince their ſins are forgiven, the love of God is ſhed abroad in their hearts, their redemption draws nigh, and they have hopes of glory; and particularly, becauſe as Chriſt here ſays, for their encouragement under all their tribulations in the world, I have overcome the world: ſatan, the god and prince of the world, with all his principalities and powers, which Chriſt has led captive, ranſomed his people from, and delivers them from the power of; and all that is in the world, the luſts and ſins of it, their damning power by the ſacrifice of himſelf, and their governing power by his ſpirit and grace; and the men of the world with all their rage and fury, whom he has trodden down in his anger, reſtrains by his power, and cauſes the remainder of their wrath to praiſe him; in all which conqueſts he makes his people ſhare, and even makes them more than conquerors, thro' himſelf: ſo that they have nothing to fear from the world; nor any reaſon to be caſt down by the tribulation they meet with in it.

CHAP. XVII.

Ver. 1. THESE words ſpake Jeſus, &c.] Referring to his ſermons and diſcourſes, his words of comfort, advice, direction, and inſtruction, delivered in the three preceding chapters: and lift up his eyes to heaven; the ſeat of the divine majeſty, the throne of his Father. This is a prayer geſture. It is ſaid [c] of R. Tanchuma, that הגביה פניו לשמים, he lift up his face to heaven, and ſaid before the holy bleſſed God, Lord of the world, &c. and this is expreſſive of the ardency and affection of the mind of Chriſt, and of his confidence of the divine favour: it ſhews that his mind was filled with devotion and faith, and was devoid of ſhame and fear, and was poſſeſs'd of great freedom, dom, boldneſs, and intrepidity: and ſaid, Father; or my Father, as the Syriac, Arabic and Perſic verſions read; and no doubt but he uſed the word Abba, which ſignifies my Father, thereby claiming his intereſt in him, and relation to him: the hour is come; to depart out of the world, to ſuffer and die for his people, which was agreed upon between him and his Father from all eternity; and it was welcome to him, on account of the ſalvation of his people, and therefore he ſpoke with an air of pleaſure and ſatisfaction; and it would be quickly over, was but an hour, as it were, tho' a time of great trouble, diſtreſs and darkneſs, and ſo a fit time for prayer: glorify thy Son; as man and mediator; for as God, he needed no glory, nor could any be added to him: but it deſigns ſome breakings forth of glory upon him at his death; by ſupporting him under all the ſorrows and ſufferings of it; and in carrying him thro' it; ſo that he conquered all his peoples enemies, and his own, ſin, ſatan, the world and death, and obtained eternal redemption for them: and at his reſurrection; by not ſuffering him to remain ſo long in the grave, as to ſee corruption; and by raiſing him at the exact time that was foretold by the prophets and himſelf; and by ſending an angel to roll away the ſtone; and by raiſing ſome of the ſaints along with him; and by putting ſuch a glory on his body as that it is the pattern and exemplar of the ſaints reſurrection: and at his aſcenſion to heaven, when he led captivity captive; and at his ſeſſion at the right hand of God, above all principalities and powers; and thro' the effuſion of the Spirit upon his diſciples, and the divine power that attended his Goſpel, to make it effectual to great multitudes, both to Jews and Gentiles; by all which he was glorified, purſuant to this petition of his; in which his end is, that thy Son alſo may glorify thee; as he had done throughout the whole of his life and converſation, and by his miniſtry and miracles; ſo now at his ſufferings and death, thro' the ſalvation of his choſen ones, in which the wiſdom, grace, juſtice, holineſs, power, and faithfulneſs of God are greatly glorified; and in the after diſcharge of other branches of his mediatorial office, in making interceſſion for his people, in the miniſtry of his word and ordinances, by his ſervants, attended with his holy Spirit, and by the adminiſtration of his kingly office.

[c] Vajikra Rabba, §. 34. fol. 174. 4.

Ver. 2. As thou haſt given him power over all fleſh, &c.] All men, in diſtinction from angels; and theſe as fallen, as weak, frail, ſinful and mortal creatures; men of every nation, Jew or Gentile, and of every character, elect or non elect: not but that he has alſo a power over angels; nor is his power over men limited to their fleſh or bodies, but reaches to their ſpirits or ſouls alſo: which power is a governing, diſpoſing, and judicial one; he rules them with a ſceptre of righteouſneſs, he diſpoſes of them in providence as he pleaſes, and will judge them at the laſt day: and this is a power that is given him by his Father, and is not that original power over all things he has as God, and the creator of them, which is natural, eſſential, and underived; but is a derived and delegated power, which he has as mediator, as ſubſervient to the ends and deſigns of his office: and as God glorified him as ſuch, by giving him this power; ſo he glorifies him again, by acknowledging it, and by uſing it for the end for which it is given: that he ſhould give eternal life to as many as thou haſt given him; eternal life is a gift, and not owing to the merits of men; indeed there is no merit in mens works, no not in the beſt; for theſe are previouſly due to God, cannot be profitable to him, if done aright, are not done in the creatures ſtrength, but thro' the grace of God, and bear no proportion to eternal life; which is in Chriſt's gift: not only the promiſe of it is in him, but that itſelf; it is put into his hands, and he came into this world that his people might have it; he has procured it, and has removed what lay in the way of their enjoyment of it; he has a right to beſtow it, and their right unto it comes by him, thro' his blood and righteouſneſs: the perſons on whom he confers this gift are not all men, but ſuch as the Father in the everlaſting covenant has given to him, as his people and portion, his ſpouſe and children, his jewels and his treaſure, to be ſaved and enjoyed by him; whom he has choſen and preſerved in him, and made his care and charge; to theſe, and every one of theſe, Chriſt gives this great bleſſing; nor ſhall any of them come ſhort of it; and 'tis for the ſake of this, that all creatures and things, all power in heaven and in earth are given to him.

Ver. 3. And this is life eternal, &c.] That is, the beginning and pledge of it, the way unto it, and means of it, and what will certainly iſſue in it: that they might know thee, the only true God and Jeſus Chriſt, whom thou haſt ſent. The knowledge of God here ſpoken of, is not the knowledge of him by the light of nature, and works of creation; for a man may know God in this ſenſe, and not know him in Chriſt, nor any thing of Chriſt; yea, may know God and profeſs him in words, and in works deny him, as the heathens did; nor is eternal life known hereby, nor connected with it: nor is it ſuch a knowledge of God as is to be obtained by the law of Moſes, in which God is repreſented as a righteous and incenſed being; nor is there in it any diſcovery of God, as a God of love, grace, and mercy in Chriſt; nor any revelation of a mediator, ſaviour and redeemer; nor can it either ſhew, or give to perſons eternal life; and yet what is here ſaid of the knowledge of God and Chriſt, the Jews ſay of the law[d], "one man ſaid to his friend, let us daſh them against that wall and kill them, becauſe they have left, חיי עולם הבא, eternal life; (the gloſs upon it is תורה, the law;) and employ themſelves in a temporary life, the Gloſs ſays of this world, which is merchandize." More truly does Philo the Jew ſay[e], that "fleeing to the divine being, is eternal life; and running from him is death." But this is to be underſtood of an Evangelic knowledge of God, as the God and Father of Chriſt, as the God of all grace, pardoning iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin, and of Chriſt the mediator; not a general, notional, and ſpeculative knowledge; but a practical and experimental one; a knowledge of approbation and appropriation; a fiducial one, whereby a ſoul believes in Chriſt, and truſts in his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice for ſalvation; and which, tho' imperfect, is progreſſive. The Arians and Unitarians urge this text, againſt the true and proper deity of our Lord Jeſus, and his equality with the Father, but without ſucceſs; ſince the Father is called the only true God, in oppoſition to the many falſe Gods of the heathens, but not to the excluſion of the Son or Spirit; for Chriſt is alſo ſtiled the one Lord, and only Lord God, but not to the excluſion of the Father; yea the true God and eternal life; was he not, he would never, as here, join himſelf with the only true God; and beſides, eternal life is made to depend as much upon the knowledge of him, as of the Father. The reaſon of this different mode of expreſſion, is owing to the character of Chriſt as mediator, who is ſaid to be ſent by the only true God, about the buſineſs of man's ſalvation. Nor is it of any moment what the Jew [f] objects, that Jeſus here confeſſes, that the true God is only one God; nor does he call himſelf God, only the Meſſiah ſent by God; and that the apoſtle Paul alſo aſſerts the unity of God, 1 Tim. i. 17. and therefore Jeſus cannot be God: for Chriſt and his Father, the only true God; are one; and that he is the one true God with his Father, he tacitly ſuggeſts here by joining himſelf with him; and what the apoſtle Paul ſays of the one and only wiſe God, may as well be underſtood of Chriſt, the Son of God, as of the Father; ſince all the characters in the text agree with him, and of him he had been ſpeaking in the context.

[e] De profugis, p. 461.

Ver. 4. I have glorified thee on the earth, &c.] This is made uſe of as a reaſon and argument, why the Father ſhould glorify him: Chriſt glorified his Father perſonally, as he held forth and expreſſed the glory of his perſon; and verbally, by aſcribing, on all occaſions, praiſe and glory to him; and really, or by deeds, and that by various ways: as in and by his miniſtry; by aſſerting he had his miſſion, qualifications and doctrine, from him as a prophet; his principal work was to declare his Father's mind and will, his love and grace; nor did he ſeek his own, but his Father's glory: and by his miracles; for tho' theſe were proofs of his Deity and Meſſiaſhip, and diſplays of his own glory; yet the glory of his Father, eſpecially of his power, was eminently ſeen in them, for he referr'd them to him; and theſe were often the means of mens glorifying the God of Iſrael: and by his whole life and converſation, which was entirely according to the will of God; and every action of it was directed to his glory; particularly he glorified him by his early regard to his will, and the buſineſs he ſent him about; by his zeal for his Father's houſe; and by the exerciſe of the various graces of faith, hope, and love upon him: and as by his life, ſo at his death, even all the while he was on the earth; where God had been diſhonoured by the ſin of men; where Chriſt now was debaſed in human nature, and even that was for the glory of God; and this is ſaid in diſtinction from heaven, where God is glorified by the angels, and where Chriſt would ſhortly be glorified in his human nature: I have finiſhed the work which thou gaveſt me to do; by the work is meant obedience to the will of God; the deſtruction of all ſpiritual enemies, as ſin, ſatan, the world and death; and the redemption and ſalvation of his people, which was given him to do: he did not take it upon himſelf, but being called to it he readily accepted of it; it was appointed, and cut out for him, in the council and covenant of grace; he was thoroughly acquainted with it; and tho' it was difficult, it was pleaſant and delightful to him; nor did he leave it till he could ſay it is finiſhed; as it was by himſelf alone, without the help of man; and is ſo compleat that nothing can be added to it; and ſo firmly done, that it can't be unravell'd by men and devils: he ſpeaks of it as done, becauſe the time was come to finiſh it, and he was ſure of the accompliſhment of it.

Ver. 5. And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own ſelf, &c.] Not with his perfections, theſe he had, they dwelt bodily in him; or with his nature, in which he was one with him; but as mediator with his glorious preſence in heaven, by ſetting him at his right hand, and crowning him with glory and honour. The Jews have a notion that God will give to the king Meſſiah, מן הכבוד של מעלה, of the ſupreme glory [g]: the glory Chriſt prays for is, as he ſays, the glory which I had with thee before the world was; the ſame phraſe with לעולם or קודם העולם, uſed by the Jews [h]. This is not to be underſtood of the glory of the human nature of Chriſt, abſtractly conſidered; for that is no perſon of itſelf, but what is taken up into perſonal union with the Son of God; and therefore can't be intended by this perſonal character I; nor did it exiſt from eternity; it was indeed written in God's book of predeſtination, even all its members, when as yet there were none of them in actual being; it was ſet up in God's thoughts and counſel, as the pattern and exemplar of human nature; it had a federal union with the Son of God, or a covenant ſubſiſtence with him; and in the Old Teſtament Chriſt was often ſpoken of as man, becauſe of his frequent appearances in an human form, and becauſe of the certainty of his incarnation; but he did not really and actually exiſt as man, until he took fleſh of the virgin; for Chriſt, as man, is the ſeed of the woman, the ſon of David, Abraham, and Adam; he is called the laſt and ſecond Adam, and was not as man before the firſt: the Old Teſtament ſpeaks of his incarnation as future, nor is it poſſible that a creature can exiſt before time; for as ſoon as a creature exiſts, time begins, which is nothing elſe than the meaſure of a creature's duration; nor was the human nature of Chriſt with the Father from eternity; nor had it a glory before the world began, neither in whole, nor in part: nor is the glory of the divine nature abſtractly conſidered here meant; this glory indeed Chriſt had from everlaſting; he had it with his Father, in common with him, being in union to him; and it is true that it was in ſome meaſure veiled and covered in his ſtate of humiliation; for tho' there were ſome breakings forth of it in that ſtate, theſe were ſeen but by a few; wherefore he is thought by ſome, to pray here for the manifeſtation of this glory; but this glory was eſſential to him, was his natural right, and not to be prayed for, and which he then had as much as ever, and of which there could be no ſuſpenſion: but this deſigns the glory of him as God-man, and mediator; he was not only predeſtinated to be a mediator, but was really ſet up as ſuch from everlaſting, and had a mediatorial fulneſs of grace put into his hands, and had the honour and glory of that office given unto him by the other two perſons; and now that he might appear to be what he was, to be made, that is, made manifeſt that he was both Lord and Chriſt, he here prays; which was to be done, upon his aſcenſion to heaven, and ſeſſion at the right hand of God, by the pouring down of the Holy Ghoſt.

Ver. 6. I have manifeſted thy name, &c.] Not the Nomen Tetragrammaton, the name of four letters, the name Jehovah, and which the Jews call Shemhamphoraſh, and ſay is ineffable, and to be pronounced by Adonai; who alſo ſpeak of other names, and ſay [i], "truly the former wiſe men had holy names, which "they received from the prophets, as the name of "ſeventy-two letters, and the name of forty-two "letters, and the name of twelve letters, and many "other holy names; and by which they could do "new ſigns and wonders in the world; but they "did not make uſe of them, only in caſe of neceſſity, "as in a time of perſecution and diſtreſs." The name of twelve letters Galatinus [k] pretends, is Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, the words for which in the Hebrew language conſiſt of twelve letters; and that of forty-two letters he makes to be this, the Father God, the Son God, the Holy Ghoſt God, yet there are not three Gods, but one God; or thus, the Father God, the Son God, the Holy Ghoſt God, three in one, one in three; the Hebrew words for which contain forty-two letters; but the authorities by which he would ſupport all this are inſufficient. However, it is none of theſe names, nor any other ſcriptural ones, that are here meant; but either God himſelf, or the perfections of his nature, or his will of command, or rather his Goſpel; unleſs Chriſt himſelf, or his name Jeſus, God by the angel gave him, and in whoſe name there is ſalvation, and no other can be thought to be meant; and which, as it was manifeſted to his diſciples, ſo it is to all whom God has choſen and given to Chriſt: unto the men which thou gaveſt me out of the world; which is to be underſtood, not merely of their being given to him as apoſtles, nor of their being given and brought to him in effectual vocation only, but of an eternal act of God's in election, and in the covenant of grace; when theſe perſons were given to Chriſt as his ſpouſe, his ſpiritual ſeed and offſpring, the ſheep of his paſture, and his portion and inheritance, to be ſaved and preſerved by him; which, as it is an inſtance of love and care on God's part to give, and of grace and condeſcenſion on Chriſt's to receive, ſo of diſtinguiſhing goodneſs, to the perſons given; ſince not all the world but ſome of it, ſhare in this favour: thine they were, and thou gaveſt them me; the perſons given were not the Father's merely by creation; for ſo others are his alſo; nor would they be peculiarly his, for they are the ſons likewiſe in this ſenſe; but they are his by electing grace, which is the peculiar act of the Father in Chriſt, and is unto ſalvation by him, thro' the ſanctification of the Spirit; theſe are choſen to be his peculiar people, and given to Chriſt as ſuch: and they have kept thy word; the Goſpel, not only in their memories, but in their hearts; and having publickly profeſſed it, they defended it valiantly againſt the enemies of it, and kept it pure and incorrupt; this ſhews that the Goſpel is meant by the name of God manifeſted to theſe perſons.

Ver. 7. Now they have known, &c.] The Syriac verſion reads it, ידעת, I have known; and ſo the Perſic and Gothic verſions, contrary to moſt copies and other verſions, which read, as we render, they have known; that is, the diſciples and apoſtles of Chriſt: that all things whatſoever thou haſt given me; all temporal things, the world and the fulneſs of it; all power in heaven, and in earth, or a power of diſpoſing of all things for his own ſervice, as mediator; all ſpiritual things, the covenant of grace, with all its bleſſings and promiſes, the Spirit of God, with all his gifts and graces, a fulneſs of all grace for his people, yea, eternal life and glory; and every thing relating to his mediatorial office and character, power to perform miracles, knowledge and wiſdom to preach the Goſpel, ſtrength to procure the ſalvation of his people; every thing to qualify him for the government of the church and the judgment of the world: are of thee; owing to his good will and pleaſure, by his appointment and conſtitution, as an inſtance of love to him, and that he might, as man, and mediator, be honoured, and in all things have the pre-eminence, and all for the good of his choſen ones: now the knowledge of this by his diſciples, muſt greatly confirm the miſſion of Chriſt, render him very ſuitable to them, cauſe them to entertain a greater eſteem for him, lead them into ſome admiring views of the grace of God, in giving ſo much into Chriſt's hands for them, and engage them the more chearfully to obey his commands.

Ver. 8. For I have given unto them the words, &c.] Not commands, but doctrines; and theſe not the doctrines of men; nor any of the divers and ſtrange doctrines; but what are called in ſcripture the doctrine of God, of Chriſt, of the apoſtles, are agreeable to the ſcriptures, and according to godlineſs; and are ſtiled the word of truth, of faith, of righteouſneſs, of peace and reconciliation, of life and ſalvation, and of the Goſpel; and which Chriſt gave to his diſciples, and gifts along with them to preach them, and abilities to defend them: which thou gaveſt me; for the words and doctrines which Chriſt, as the great prophet in Iſrael ſpoke, were not his own, but his Father's; and theſe were given him to ſpeak and deliver to others, and in which he was faithful; ſo Jonathan ben Uzziel [1] paraphraſes the text in Deut. xviii. 18. concerning that prophet, the Meſſiah, God would raiſe up, after this manner; "a prophet "will I raiſe up unto them from among their "brethren, in whom the holy Spirit ſhall be, like "unto thee; ואיתן פתגמי, and I will give the words, "of my prophecy into his mouth, and he ſhall "ſpeak with them all that I have commanded." And ſo the Meſſiah Jeſus did: and they have received them; willingly and gladly, with reverence and meekneſs, with love, and thankfulneſs; ſo as to underſtand them, and believe them, and ſo as to be affectionately and cloſely attached to them: and have known ſurely that I came out from thee; which is meant, not of his eternal filiation, but of his conſtitution and commiſſion, as mediator by his Father; of which they had certain knowledge, full aſſurance of faith, and ſincerely owned and confeſſed being fully perſuaded he was the true Meſſiah, and no impoſtor: and they have believed that thou didſt ſend me; into this world, to ſeek and to ſave loſt ſinners, to redeem all the choſen ones, and perform every thing neceſſary to their ſalvation.

Ver. 9. I pray for them, &c.] This is to be underſtood of Chriſt, not as God; for as ſuch he is the object of prayer; nor need he pray to any other; nor is there any ſuperior to him under that conſideration to pray unto; but as man and mediator: nor is his praying any argument againſt his deity; nor proof of inferiority to his Father with reſpect to his divine nature; ſince 'tis not in that, but in his human nature, that he prayed; tho' this may be aſcribed to his whole perſon as God-man; hence he had the greateſt qualifications and abilities for this work, and his prayers were always heard: praying, as attributed to Chriſt, muſt be reſtrained to his ſtate of humiliation; prayer is never ſpoken of Chriſt but whilſt he was here on earth; his interceſſion in heaven is never expreſſed by prayer; and the ſaints when they come thither, will have done praying. Chriſt, whilſt on earth, was an excellent pattern of prayer; of private and ſolitary prayer; of ſocial prayer, for and with his diſciples; of frequent and fervent prayer; of ſubmiſſion to the will of God in prayer; and of praying even for enemies: the perſons he is here ſaid to pray for are his apoſtles; which ſhows their danger and their wants, his care over them, and concern for them, and his love unto them: I pray not for the world; the inhabitants of it, the carnal unbelieving part of the world, which lie in ſin, and will be condemned; as he died not for them, ſo he prayed not for them; for whom he is the propitiation, he is an advocate; and for whom he died, he makes interceſſion; and for no other, in a ſpiritual ſaving way: but for them which thou haſt given me; out of the world, as diſtinct from them, to be ſaved with an everlaſting ſalvation tion by him; and to be preſerved ſafe to his kingdom and glory; for theſe he prays, for the converſion of them, the application of pardon to them, their final perſeverance and eternal glory: for they are thine; not merely by creation, and as the care of his providence, but by eternal election, and ſpecial grace in vocation; which is a reaſon why Chriſt prayed for them, and an argument why the Father ſhould, and would regard his prayers.

Ver. 10. And all mine are thine, and thine are mine, &c.] Chriſt is ſpeaking not of things, but of perſons; otherwiſe all the perfections of his nature as God, and all the works he did, and doctrines he taught as man, were, of his Father; as all the perfections of his Father, his nature, his names, his works, his worſhip were his; the ſame that belongs to the one belongs to the other: but perſons are here meant, and theſe the elect of God, particularly the apoſtles, who were his and his Father's; belonged to them both by election, covenant-tranſactions, redemption, and efficacious grace in converſion; which mutual intereſt ariſes from an union in nature, an agreement in covenant, and a conjunction in operation: and I am glorified in them; or by them, they aſcribing all divine perfections, works and worſhip to him; attributing the whole of their ſalvation to him, and giving him all the glory of it; believing in him; walking worthy of him, in their lives and converſations; ſuffering patiently and chearfully for his ſake; and abiding by his Goſpel and Ordinances; and he will be glorified by them, and in them hereafter, and that to all eternity.

Ver. 11. And now I am no more in the world, &c.] In the earth; which is no contradiction to his reſurrection from the dead, and ſtay with his diſciples for a while; nor to his return to judge the world at the laſt day; nor to his reigning on earth with his ſaints a thouſand years; ſince it will not be the world as it now is, but it will be a new earth, renewed, purified and refined, and clear of the wicked inhabitants of it; and in which will only dwell righteous perſons: beſides, Chriſt was to be, and will be no more in the world, in ſuch circumſtances, and doing ſuch work as he then was: the meaning is, that whereas he had been in the world, and had done, or as good as done the work he came about, he was now juſt going out of it; it was but a very little while he had to ſtay in it; nor ſhould he continue long with his diſciples when he roſe from the dead; and whereas his bodily preſence had been a guard unto them, a protection of them, and he had bore the heat and burden of the day for them, and had took all reproaches and perſecutions upon himſelf, now he was going from them: but theſe are in the world; and will continue for ſome time, they having much work to do, and be expoſed to the evils, ſnares and temptations of it; where they were hated, and were liable to great hardſhips, afflictions and perſecutions; which ſhows that Chriſt was not ſo intent on his own glory, as to neglect the good of his people, and to be unconcerned for them: and I come to thee; ſignifying his death; the depoſition of his ſoul into his Father's hands; his aſcenſion in ſoul and body to him; his entrance into heaven, and ſeſſion at the right hand of God; and therefore had nothing to aſk for on his own account: but his diſciples he was parting with lay near his heart, and therefore he prays; holy Father, keep, thro' thine own name, thoſe whom thou haſt given me: the perſon prayed unto is God the Father, the Father of Chriſt, and of his people; a very proper relation to conſider God in and under in prayer to him; ſince it muſt give freedom, boldneſs and hope of ſucceſs: the epithet holy is exceeding ſuitable, as it perfectly agrees with him who is eſſentially ſo; and ſince it was holineſs and an increaſe of it Chriſt prays for; and that theſe his diſciples might be kept from the evil of ſin: the perſons prayed for are thoſe that were given to Chriſt in election, and in the covenant, to be kept by him, and therefore he is the more ſolicitous for their preſervation: his requeſt is, that his father would keep them from the evil of the world; from ſinking under temptations and afflictions; faithful to him and to his Goſpel, and in unity among themſelves; and that thro' or in his own name; in it, in the doctrine of the Goſpel, and in the worſhip of God, and profeſſion of him; thro' it, thro' himſelf, as a wall of fire about them, and by his power thro' faith unto ſalvation: that they may be one as we are; in nature, will, affection and underſtanding; which muſt be underſtood not of equality, but of likeneſs; and deſigns not their union to Chriſt, but to one another; abiding together, cleaving to each other, ſtanding faſt in one ſpirit, having the ſame deſigns, and the intereſt of a redeemer in view, and at heart.

Ver. 12. While I was with them in the world, &c.] This does not imply that Chriſt was not in the world now, for he was; but ſignifies that he was juſt going out of it; and that his continuance in it was very ſhort: nor that he was, and would be no longer with his diſciples; for this is to be underſtood of his bodily, not of his ſpiritual preſence; in which reſpect Chriſt is with his people whilſt they are on earth, and they are with him when he is in heaven: I kept them in thy name; by his Father's authority and power, in his doctrine: thoſe that thou gaveſt me I have kept; that is, thoſe that were given him to be his apoſtles; theſe he kept cloſe to himſelf, and from the evil of the world, and from temporal and eternal ruin: but the ſon of perdition; Judas, a child of ſatan, whoſe name is Apollyon the deſtroyer, who was now about to betray his Lord and maſter; and was one that was appointed to eternal ruin and deſtruction, of which he was juſtly deſerving; and which is no inſtance of the apoſtacy of ſaints, ſince tho' he was given to Chriſt as an apoſtle, yet not in eternal election, to be ſaved by him: that the ſcripture might be fulfilled; this reſpects either Chriſt's keeping of his people, and their final perſeverance, whereby the ſcriptures that ſpeak of it are fulfilled; or rather the deſtruction of Judas, whereby ſuch paſſages as ſpeak of that, have their accompliſhment, particularly Pſal. cix. 8. Some have thought that this only refers to the general ſenſe of the ſcriptures, both the law and prophets; that ſome are choſen to everlaſting life, and others are appointed to wrath; that ſome are ſaved, and others loſt; ſome ſons of God, and others ſons of perdition; but it rather ſeems to regard ſome particular paſſage or paſſages of ſcripture relating to Judas, his character, condition and end, and which are very manifeſtly pointed at, in the pſalm referred to; ſee 2 Eſdras ii. 26.

Ver. 13. And now come I to thee, &c.] As in ver. 11. which he repeats as a very great happineſs to himſelf, and with much pleaſure and joy, but not without concern for thoſe he was parting from: and theſe things I ſpeak in the world; which he had expreſſed in this prayer concerning the nature of eternal life, and his power to give it to all the Father had given him; concerning the work of redemption finiſhed by him, and the glory due unto him on that account; concerning his choſen ones, particularly the apoſtles, and the mutual intereſt he and his Father had in them; and what he had done for them, in revealing the Goſpel to them, keeping them by the powerful influence of his grace, and the great concern he had for their future preſervation: and theſe things he took notice of in his prayer, whilſt he was in the world, before he took his leave of them; that, ſays he, they may have my joy fulfilled in themſelves; either the joy which Chriſt had in them, which was of an early date, is ſtill continued towards them, and will be more fully expreſſed, when they ſhall all be brought ſafe home to glory, and be for ever with him; or elſe the joy of which Chriſt is the author and object, which comes from him, and centers in him: ſaints rejoice in the perſon of Chriſt; in the greatneſs and dignity of his perſon, as God over all, hence they know that what he did and ſuffered anſwered the purpoſe, that he muſt have great intereſt in heaven, and they muſt be ſafe in his hands; and in the fitneſs of it, to be a mediator, he being God and man in one perſon; and in the fulneſs of it, which is all theirs, 'tis with delight they view it, with joy they receive from it, and believe they ſhall not want; and in the beauty of it, he being fairer than the children of men. The offices Chriſt bears as prophet, prieſt, and king, the relations he ſtands in as father, huſband, brother and friend; his Goſpel and communion with him, the bleſſings of grace in him, as peace, pardon, righteouſneſs and ſalvation, lay a foundation for ſolid joy in them that believe; as do alſo his death, reſurrection, exaltation and interceſſion. This joy in him is a grace of the Spirit, and is attended with faith in Chriſt; it ſhould be conſtant, but is frequently interrupted; tho' the ground and foundation of it is always the ſame; it is therefore at preſent imperfect, but may be increaſed; it is unknown to the world, and inexpreſſible by the ſaints; and may be ſaid to be fulfilled in them, when it abounds in them more and more; when they are full of it, and that is full of glory, and which will be fulfilled in glory.

Ver. 14. I have given them thy word, &c.] The Goſpel, and a commiſſion and abilities to preach it, and which is a reaſon of what follows, namely the world's hatred of them; becauſe this word is not of men, nor agreeable to carnal reaſon; it magnifies the grace of God, and deſtroys boaſting in men; it is againſt the carnal intereſt, worldly views and luſts of men: and the world hath hated them; the inhabitants of the world, worldly men, ſuch as are what they were when they firſt came into the world; are under the influence of the God of the world, and led by the ſpirit of it, and are wholly taken up with the things thereof: the unbelieving Jews are chiefly deſigned, who bore an implacable hatred to Chriſt and his apoſtles; and the ſame fate do the faithful miniſters of Chriſt and his members ſhare, in all ages and places, more or leſs: the men of the world gnaſh their teeth at them, ſecretly plot againſt them, and inwardly curſe them; rejoice at any evil that befalls them; greedily catch at any thing to reproach them; ſtick not to ſay all manner of evil of them, and to do all manner of evil to them: becauſe they are not of the world; they were of the world by their natural birth, and had their converſation with the men of it, whilſt in a ſtate of unregeneracy; but now they were called out of it, and were guided and led by another ſpirit; and were ſeparate from the world in their lives and converſations, and which brought the hatred of the world upon them; inaſmuch as they had been of them, but now had left them, and profeſſed they did not belong to them; and becauſe their religious lives put a diſtinguiſhing mark on them, and reproved and condemned them: even as I am not of the world; not that Chriſt and his people are alike in their original; they are of the earth earthly, he is the Lord from heaven; nor are they ſo perfect in their walk and converſation in the world, and ſeparation from it as he; yet there is ſome likeneſs between him and them, and ſome conformity in them to him, which makes the world hate them.

Ver. 15. I pray not that thou ſhouldſt take them out of the world, &c.] Either in an unuſual manner, by a tranſlation, as Enoch and Elijah were; or by death in its common form, before their time, and purely to be rid of afflictions: this he prayed not for; for he had much work for them to do, by preaching the Goſpel, for the converſion of ſinners and comfort of ſaints; and it was for his intereſt they ſhould live longer; and it would make moſt for his glory, and be beſt for his choſen people and churches: but that thou ſhouldſt keep them from the evil; either of ſin, which is an evil and bitter thing, being committed againſt a good God, and a righteous law, and brings ruin and deſtruction upon men; from this the apoſtles were kept, and all the ſaints are; not from indwelling ſin, nor from the commiſſion of ſin, but from the dominion of it, and from falling into it and by it, ſo as to periſh eternally: or from the evil of the world; not from affliction in it; nor from the reproach and perſecution of it; but from its wickedneſs and luſts, and from the evil men of it: or from ſatan the evil one, who is eminently, originally, and immutably ſo; not from being tempted by him, but from ſinking under his temptations, and from being devoured by him. Chriſt's praying for this, after this manner, ſhews that evil is very abhorrent, pernicious and powerful; the danger ſaints are in by it; their incapacity to keep themſelves from it; and that the Lord alone is the keeper of his people; but does not ſuggeſt that Chriſt has dropped the charge of them, or is unequal to it; but by ſo doing he expreſſes his great love to them, how dear they are to him, and what care he takes of them, and what concern he has for them.

Ver. 16. They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world.] Theſe words are repeated from ver. 14. where they are given as a reaſon of the world's hatred to them; and here, as ſhewing that they are expoſed to the evil of it; and in both are uſed as an argument with his Father, that he would take notice of them, and preſerve them.

Ver. 17. Sanctify them thro' thy truth, &c.] The Syriac verſion introduces this petition, with the appellation אבא, Abba, Father: and the ſanctification prayed for regards the apoſtles, either as miniſters of the word, and may intend their ſeparation for their work and office; for which tho' they were ſanctified or ſeparated from their mother's womb, and by Chriſt when he ſent them forth, yet were to have a freſh commiſſion and unction after our Lord's reſurrection, and upon his aſcenſion to heaven; and alſo their qualification for it, with the truth of grace and doctrine, with holineſs of heart and life, and with a preſervation in the truth, by being kept faithful to it: or it may alſo regard them as chriſtians and believers, and intend a greater degree of the ſanctification of the ſpirit, which is imperfect in this life; for tho' ſanctification in Chriſt is perfect, and ſo it is in the ſaints, as to parts, yet not as to degrees; which appears from the imperfection of faith, hope, love, and knowledge, from indwelling ſin, being in the beſt of ſaints, from their neceſſities from their diſclaiming perfection, and their deſires after it. Sanctification is a progreſſive work, which is carried on gradually; as is clear from the characters of regenerate ones, who are firſt new-born born babes, then young men, and afterwards fathers in Chriſt; from the ſimiles, by which it is expreſſed as ſeed which opens and grows up by degrees, and light which ſhines more and more unto the perfect day; from exhortations to a concern for the growth of it, and prayers for it: and it is indeed, continually carrying on, as may be concluded from the hand in which it is; and the progreſs and finiſhing of this work, as well as the beginning of it, are entirely the Lord's; and the way and means in which this is done, are by or thro' the truth of the Goſpel: thy word is truth; it is peculiarly ſo, as the Arabic verſion reads it. The Goſpel is here meant, and is ſo called on account of its original, it comes from the God of truth; and becauſe of the concern which Chriſt, who is the truth, has in it, he being the author, preacher, and ſum, and ſubſtance of it; and becauſe the Spirit of truth has dictated it, leads into it, qualifies men to preach it, and makes it effectual; and becauſe it contains all truth neceſſary to ſalvation, and nothing but truth, and particularly that eminent truth, ſalvation alone by Chriſt; and becauſe it is oppoſed to the law, which is but a ſhadow, of which the good things in the Goſpel are the ſubſtance: now this is the means both of the beginning, and increaſing, and carrying on the work of ſanctification in the hearts of God's people, as well as of an experimental knowledge of it; and an increaſe of that knowledge does more and more qualify the miniſters of it, for their miniſterial work and ſervice, which ſeems here chiefly deſigned.

Ver. 18. As thou haſt ſent me into the world, &c.] Which does not ſuppoſe inequality of nature, nor change of place, nor any force upon him, nor diſreſpect unto him, or a ſtate of ſeparation from his Father; but that he was before he was ſent; that he was a perſon, a divine diſtinct perſon from his Father; and deſigns the manifeſtation of him in human nature; and ſhews, that as mediator, he had a divine warrant and authority, and was no impoſtor: what he was ſent into the world to do, was in general the will of God; particularly to preach the Goſpel, and chiefly and more eſpecially to work out the ſalvation of his people: even ſo have I alſo ſent them into the world; to preach the Goſpel likewiſe: he had already ſent them forth on this errand, and in a little time they were to receive a new and enlarged commiſſion for this ſervice; which miſſion of them to ſuch work, implies great honour put upon them, authority in them, and qualifications with them; and hence ſucceſs attended them: the place into which they were ſent is, the world; firſt the Jewiſh and then the Gentile world, and every part of it; out of which he would not have them taken; and where they were ſure to meet with reproach and perſecution; and where God's elect lay, who were to be converted thro' their miniſtry; for the work they were ſent thither for, was to open blind eyes, turn men from darkneſs to light, from the power of ſatan unto God, that they might receive forgiveneſs of ſin, and an inheritance among them that are ſanctified: now tho' there is not an equality between the miſſion of Chriſt by his Father, and of the apoſtles by him, yet there is a likeneſs; there's an agreement in their original, both are divine and of authority; in the place they were ſent, the world; and in their work to declare the mind and will of God: all which carries in it a ſtrong argument with his Father to regard theſe perſons; for inaſmuch as they were in a world that hated them, they needed divine power and protection; and being in a wicked world they needed ſanctification and preſervation; and having ſuch work to do, they therefore needed divine aſſiſtance, and freſh ſupplies of grace.

Ver. 19. And for their ſakes I ſanctify myſelf, &c.] Which is to be underſtood, not of his making himſelf holy; for he never was a ſinner, and ſo ſtood in no need of ſanctification: he was made like unto us, yet without ſin; he looked like a ſinner, but was not one; he was traduced, charged, and treated as ſuch, but was perfectly holy, and free from all ſin; he was eſſentially and infinitely holy as God; and as man, he was holy in his conception and birth; he was filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and was holy in his life and in his death: rather this may be meant of his being ſeparated, and ſet apart for his office as mediator, which, tho' done by the father, and is aſcribed unto him, John x. 36. yet may alſo be attributed to himſelf; ſince he voluntarily devoted himſelf to this work, and chearfully accepted of it: tho' it ſeems beſt to underſtand it of his offering himſelf a ſacrifice for, and in the room and ſtead of his people, in alluſion to the offerings under the law, the ſacrificing of which is expreſſed by ſanctifying, Exod. xiii. 2, 14, 15. and becauſe his ſacrifice was an holy one: what he ſanctified or offered was himſelf; not his divine, but human nature, his body and his ſoul; and theſe as in union with his divine perſon, which gives his ſacrifice the preference to all others, and is the true reaſon of its virtue and efficacy; and this is expreſſive of his great love. He himſelf is alſo the ſanctifier or offerer, which ſhews him to be a prieſt, and that he had a power over his own life, and that he ſacrificed it voluntarily; and this he is ſaid to do at that preſent time, becauſe the time was very near that he was to be offered up, and his preſent prayer and interceſſion were a part of his prieſtly office. This he did not for his own ſake, nor for the ſake of angels, nor for all men, but for his diſciples, as diſtinct from the world; and not for the apoſtles only, but for all that the Father had given to him; and that as their ſubſtitute and ſurety, in their room and ſtead: that they alſo might be ſanctified thro' the truth; that is, have all their ſins expiated, and they be cleanſed from all the guilt and filth of them, thro' Chriſt himſelf and his ſacrifice, who is the truth; or in truth; as it may be rendered, really and truly, in oppoſition to the legal ſacrifices which atoned for ſin, not really, only typically; or thro' the Goſpel of truth, bringing the good news of atonement by the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt, and which the Spirit of God ſeals to the conſcience with comfort and joy.

Ver. 20. Neither pray I for theſe alone, &c.] Meaning his immediate apoſtles and diſciples, for whoſe preſervation and ſanctification he had been particularly praying in the preceding verſes; and now, that it might not be thought that theſe were his only favourites, and the only perſons he had a regard for, and to whom his interceſſion and ſacrifice were confined; he adds, but for them alſo which ſhall believe in me thro' their word: Chriſt is the object of true faith; which faith is not a mere aſſent of the mind to any truth concerning Chriſt, as that he is the Son of God, the Meſſiah and Saviour of the world; but it is a ſpiritual ſight of him, of the neceſſity, fulneſs and ſuitableneſs of him as a Saviour, a going forth unto him, laying hold on him, and depending upon him for life and ſalvation; of which the preaching of the Goſpel is the inſtrumental means: it is indeed a gift of God, and a fruit of electing grace, and which is ſecured by it; hence our Lord knew that there would be a number in all ſucceſſive generations, that would believe in him, thro' the miniſtry of the word; and for theſe perſons, and their converſion, and the ſucceſs of the Goſpel, to the good of their ſouls he prays.

Ver. 21. That they all may be one, &c.] Among themſelves. This may regard their unity in faith, and in the knowledge of Chriſt; for there is but one faith which all truly experienced ſouls agree in: they are converted by the ſame Spirit, and have the ſame work of grace wrought in them; and tho' they have not the ſame degree of light, and meaſure of ſpiritual knowledge, yet they agree in the main point of the Goſpel, ſalvation alone by the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and ſuch an agreement in the doctrine of faith, and the grand articles of it, reſpecting the perſon and offices of Chriſt, is abſolutele neceſſary to their comfortable walking together in church fellowſhip, and the more honourable carrying on the worſhip of God together; and which will be more manifeſt in the latter day, when ſaints ſhall ſee eye to eye: likewiſe an unity in affection may be here deſigned, a being knit together in love to each other; which is the bond of perfectneſs, the evidence of regeneration, the badge of the chriſtian profeſſion, the beauty of church communion, and the barrier and ſecurity from the common enemy; and without which, ſocial worſhip and mutual ſervice will be either neglected or coldly performed. Moreover, this petition may have reſpect to the gathering together all the ſaints at the laſt day, as one body united together in faith and love; as one general aſſembly and church of the firſt born; as one fold of which Chriſt is the head, ſaviour and ſhepherd: as thou Father, art in me, and I in thee. There is a mutual inbeing of the Father and the Son, who are one in nature and eſſence, in power and will, and in underſtanding and affection; which union, tho' it infinitely tranſcends any kind of union among men, or that can be conceived of by men, yet is the exemplar of the ſaints union one with another, and to the divine perſons; and which muſt be underſtood not of an equality, but a likeneſs: that they alſo may be one in us: there is an union of all the elect to God and Chriſt, which is already compleat, and not to be prayed for; they are all loved by God with an everlaſting love, by which they are inſeparably one with him; they are all choſen in Chriſt, as members in their head, and are federally united to him, as their mediator, ſurety, and repreſentative; in conſequence of which he has aſſumed their nature, ſtood in their place and ſtead, and brought them nigh to God. There is a manifeſtation of union in converſion, when perſons openly appear to be in Chriſt; and as a fruit and effect of everlaſting love, are with loving kindneſs drawn unto him; and which will be more gloriouſly ſeen, when all the elect ſhall be brought in, and God ſhall be all in all, and is what Chriſt here prays for: that the world may believe that thou haſt ſent me; either the reſt of God's choſen people in the world not yet called; or rather the wicked and reprobate part of the world, particularly Jews and deiſts: they ſhall ſee the concord and agreement of the ſaints in doctrine, worſhip, and affection in the latter day; and when all the elect ſhall be gathered together, and not only their union to each other, but to the divine perſons ſhall clearly appear; they will then believe, and be obliged to own that Jeſus is the true Meſſiah, was ſent of God, and is no impoſtor.

Ver. 22. And the glory which thou gaveſt me, &c.] Not the glory of his deity; this is the ſame with his Father, what he has in right of nature, and not by gift; nor can it be communicated to creatures; this would be to make them one in the Godhead, as the three are one, which is not the deſign of the expreſſion in the cloſe of the verſe: nor his mediatorial glory, which he had with the Father before the world began; this indeed was given him by the Father, but is not given to the ſaints: nor the glory of working miracles; which glory Chriſt had, and which, as man, he had from the Father, and in which his own glory was manifeſted; this he gave to his diſciples; but all that are his have not had it, and ſome have had it who are none of his: rather the Goſpel is meant, which is glorious in its author, matter and ſubject, in its doctrines, in the bleſſings of grace it reveals, and promiſes it contains, and in the efficacy and uſefulneſs of it to the ſouls of men. This was given to Chriſt, and he gave it to his diſciples: I have given them; as he did the words that were given to him, ver. 8. that they may be one, even as we are one; for the Goſpel was given to the apoſtles, and ſtill is to the miniſters of it, to bring men to the unity of the faith, for the perfecting of the ſaints, and the edifying of the body of Chriſt: or elſe the fulneſs both of grace and glory, which is in Chriſt's hands for his people, is here deſigned. This is one conſiderable branch of the glory of Chriſt, as mediator, to be full of grace and truth; this was given him by the Father, and is what he communicates to his; even the Spirit, and all ſorts of grace, and every ſupply of it; and which greatly contributes to the union of the ſaints among themſelves: yea, eternal happineſs is often ſignified by glory; and this is given to Chriſt; he has it in his hands to give to others; and he does give it, a view of it, a right unto it, a meetneſs for it, a pledge of it, ſome foretaſtes of it, and a kind of a poſſeſſion of it; for the ſaints have it already, at leaſt in him; and he will give them the actual enjoyment of it, and this in order to their conſummate and perfect union together, as a glorious church without ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing.

Ver. 23. I in them, &c.] Chriſt is in his ſaints; not as he is in all the world, being the omnipreſent God; or as he is in every man, communicating the light of nature as creator; or as he is in the human nature, which is united to his divine perſon; or circumſcriptively to the excluſion of him elſewhere; for he is in heaven, his blood is within the veil, and his righteouſneſs without us: but he is in them, in a gracious manner, in regeneration; when he is revealed to them, formed in them, enters into them, takes poſſeſſion of them, communicates his grace, grants fellowſhip with himſelf, and dwells in them; not only by his ſpirit and grace, but in perſon, as the head in the members, as the maſter of the houſe, and the king of them; which is an inſtance of condeſcending grace, and is peculiar to God's elect: hence all their holineſs and fruitfulneſs; nor ſhall they ever periſh; their bodies ſhall riſe from the dead, and being reunited to their ſouls, Chriſt will be in them in a glorious manner to all eternity: and thou in me; the Father is in Chriſt, not only by union of nature, nor merely in him, as mediator in a way of grace; but as he will ſhew himſelf in and thro' him in glory for evermore, and is what is here prayed for: that they may be made perfect in one; this regards not their juſtification, which is already perfect; nor their ſanctification, which will be; but either perfection in glory, when they will be perfect in knowledge, in holineſs, in peace, joy and love: or rather the perfection of their numbers, is meant when the whole election of grace will be compleated in regeneration, ſanctification, and glorification: and that the world may know that thou haſt ſent me; as before, ver. 21. ſee the note there; and haſt loved them, as thou haſt loved me. The oriental verſions, the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic and Ethiopic all read the words thus, and I have loved them, as thou haſt loved me; contrary to all the Greek copies, and other verſions, which read as we do. The Father loved Chriſt as his own Son, and as mediator; ſo he loved him when he aſſumed human nature, and became obedient to his will both in doing and ſuffering; when his Father left him, and poured out his wrath upon him, and when he laid down his life for the ſheep. The inſtances of his love to him as mediator are, his putting all things into his hands, ſhewing him all that he does, and concealing nothing from him, and appointing him the only Saviour, the head of the church, and judge of the world. The nature of this love is, that it is from eternity; is a love of complacency and delight; it is ſpecial and peculiar, unchangeable and inſeparable, and will laſt for ever: now God has loved his people, as he has loved his Son; he loves them not merely as creatures, as the deſcendants of Adam, or as conſidered in themſelves, but as in Chriſt. The inſtances of his love to them are, his chuſing them in Chriſt; making a covenant with them in him; the miſſion of him into this world, to obtain ſalvation for them; the quickning and calling of them, by his grace; the care he takes of them afterwards in ſupplying their wants, ſupporting them under temptations, delivering them out of afflictions, and cauſing all things to work together for their good; to all which add the proviſions he makes for them, both for time and eternity. The nature of this love is ſuch as that he bears to Chriſt; it is from everlaſting; a love of the utmoſt delight and pleaſure; it is ſpecial and peculiar, unchangeable, and will continue for ever: there is not the ſame reaſon for his loving them as his Son; and this as muſt not be thought to denote equality, but ſimilitude and order.

Ver. 24. Father, I will that they alſo whom thou haſt given me, &c.] Not all the world, but a ſelect number; not apoſtles only, nor as ſuch; nor believers, or as ſuch, for as ſuch they were not given to Chriſt; nor as conſidered in effectual vocation; but as the elect of God, and by that eternal act of his grace; when they were given to Chriſt as his children, as his ſpouſe, as his church, as the ſheep of his hand, as his portion, and to be preſerved by him; which is known by their calling and converſion: the form in which theſe words are delivered, is not ſo much by way of intreaty, as demand; they are a declaration of Chriſt's will, in which he inſiſts on it as his right, upon the foot of his purchaſe, and thoſe covenant tranſactions which paſſed between him and his Father, on the behalf of thoſe that were given to him: that they, be where I am; not where he was then, unleſs it may be meant of him as the omnipreſent God, and as ſuch then in heaven; tho' he rather deſigns where he ſhould be as man, after his reſurrection, and where the ſouls of ſaints are after death; and where they will be, ſoul and body, when raiſed again; and which is deſirable both to Chriſt, and to his people; this was the joy that was ſet before him, and what they comfort one another with, that they ſhall be for ever with him: that they may behold my glory which thou haſt given me; not the ſimple abſtract glory of his deity; which, as it was not given to him, is not to be ſeen by them; but his glory as mediator: this was ſeen, tho' imperfectly by ſome, in the days of his fleſh; and in the glaſs of the Goſpel, a believer now has ſome views of it, and by faith ſees, knows, and is aſſured that Chriſt is glorified in heaven; but hereafter the ſaints in their own perſons, and with their own eyes, ſhall ſee him as he is, and appear in glory with him; which ſight of his glory will be near, and not at a diſtance, appropriating and aſſimilating, rejoicing, ſatisfying, and for ever: for thou lovedſt me before the foundation of the world; this is mentioned both as a reaſon, why ſuch a glory was given him, becauſe of his Father's early love to him as mediator; and as an argument why he might expect to be heard and anſwered, becauſe of the intereſt he had in his affections, which had been ſtrongly towards him, even from everlaſting; and becauſe the perſons he aſks, or rather demands theſe things for, ſhared in the ſame ancient love.

Ver. 25. O righteous Father, &c.] God is righteous in all the divine perſons; the Father is righteous, the Son is righteous, and the holy Spirit is righteous: he is ſo in his nature; righteouſneſs is a perfection of it; he is ſo in all his purpoſes and promiſes; in all his ways and works of providence and grace; in predeſtination, redemption, juſtification, pardon of ſin, and eternal glory. Chriſt makes uſe of this epithet, as containing a reaſon why he might juſtly expect that all his petitions and claims, on behalf of himſelf and people, would be regarded: the world hath not known thee; the unbelieving Jews, and idolatrous Gentiles, wicked men, one or another, know not God; as not the Father, ſo neither the Son, nor Spirit; tho' deity may be known by them, or that there is a God, yet they know not God in Chriſt, nor as the Father of Chriſt, or as their Father in him, nor what it is to have communion with him; nor do they know any of the things of God in a ſpiritual way; which ſhews the darkneſs and blindeſs of men by nature, the neceſſity of a divine illumination, and the miſerable ſtate of men without one: but I have known thee; his nature, perfections and glory, his ſecret thoughts, purpoſes and deſigns, his covenant, promiſes and bleſſings, his love, grace and good-will to his people, his whole mind and will; as he needs muſt, ſince he was one with him, and lay in his boſom: and theſe have known that thou haſt ſent me; meaning his diſciples and apoſtles, whom he diſtinguiſhes from the world; theſe knew the Father that ſent him, and that he was ſent by the Father; they knew the love of the Father in ſending of him, the manner in which he was ſent, and the end, man's redemption, for which he was ſent; and acknowledged all this, and which laid them under an obligation to truſt in him, love him, and magnify his grace; and is uſed by Chriſt as an argument with the Father to be concerned for them.

Ver. 26. And I have declared unto them thy name, &c.] Himſelf, his nature, his perfections, eſpecially of grace and mercy, his mind and will, his Goſpel; ſee the note on ver. 6. A very fit perſon Chriſt was to make this declaration, ſince he was with him from all eternity, and was in his boſom; the Father did all in him, and his name is in him; and he is the faithful witneſs; nor is any thing of God to be known ſavingly, but in and thro' Chriſt: the apoſtles are here particularly meant, tho' the ſame is true with reſpect to all that are given to Chriſt, who are his children and brethren, to whom he alſo declares the name of God: and will declare it; more fully to them after his reſurrection, during his forty days ſtay with them, and upon his aſcenſion, when he poured down his ſpirit in ſuch a plentiful and extraordinary manner upon them; and will declare it to others beſides them in the Gentile world; and ſtill more in the latter day glory, and to all believers more and more: that the love wherewith thou haſt loved me, may be in them; that is, that a ſenſe of that love with which God loves his Son, as mediator, might be in them, and abide in them; and which is the rather mentioned, becauſe they are loved by the Father with the ſame love, and ſhare all the bleſſed conſequences of it, the knowledge and ſenſe of which they come at, thro' Chriſt's declaring his Father's name unto them; and which they will have a greater ſenſe of, and will be ſwallowed up in it in heaven to all eternity: and I in them; dwelling in them, taking up his reſidence in them; not only by his ſpirit and grace here, but by his glorious preſence with them hereafter; when they ſhall be brought to his Father's houſe, behold his glory, and be for ever with him.

CHAP. XVIII.

Ver. 1. WHEN Jeſus had ſpoken theſe words, &c.] Referring either to his diſcourſes in chap. xiv. 15, 16. in which he acquaints his diſciples with his approaching death; comforts them under the ſorrowful apprehenſion of his departure from them; gives them many excellent promiſes for their relief, and very wholeſome advice how to conduct; lets them know what ſhould befal them, and that things, however diſtreſſing for the preſent, would have a joyful iſſue: or elſe to his prayer in the preceding chapter, in which he had been very importunate with his Father, both for himſelf and his diſciples; or to both of theſe, which is highly probable: he went forth with his diſciples over the brook Cedron; the ſame with Kidron in 2 Sam. xv. 23. and elſewhere: it had its name, not from cedars, for not cedars but olives chiefly grew upon the mount, which was near it; and beſides the name is not Greek, but Hebrew, tho' the Arabic verſion renders it, the brook, אל ארז, of Cedar: it had its name either from the darkneſs of the valley in which it ran, being between high mountains, and having gardens in it, and ſet with trees; or from the blackneſs of the water thro' the ſoil that ran into it, being a kind of a common ſewer, into which the Jews caſt every thing that was unclean and defiling; ſee 2 Chron. xxix. 16. and xxx. 14. Particularly there was a canal which led from the altar in the temple to it, by which the blood and ſoil of the ſacrifices were carried into it [m]. This brook was but about three feet over from bank to bank, and in the ſummer time was quite dry, and might be walked over dry ſhod; and is therefore by Joſephus ſometimes called the brook of Kedron [n], and ſometimes the valley of Kedron [o]: in this valley were corn fields; for hither the Sanhedrim ſent their meſſengers to reap the ſheaf of the firſt fruits, which always was to be brought from a place near to Jeruſalem [p]; and it is very likely that willows grew by the brook, from whence they might fetch their willow branches at the feaſt of tabernacles; for the Jews ſay [q], there is a place below Jeruſalem called Motza, (in the Gemara it is ſaid to be Klamia or Colonia), whither they went down and gathered willow branches; it ſeems to be the valley of Kedron, which lay on the eaſt of Jeruſalem, between that and the mount of Olives [r]; it had fields and gardens adjoining to it; ſee 2 Kings xxiii. 4. So we read of a garden here, into which Chriſt immediately went, when he paſſed over this brook. The blood, the filth and ſoil of it, which ſo diſcoloured the water, as to give it the name of the black brook, uſed to be ſold to the gardeners to dung their gardens with [s]. It was an emblem of this world, and the darkneſs and filthineſs of it, and of the exerciſes and troubles of the people of God in it, which lie in the way to the heavenly paradiſe and mount of Zion, thro' which Chriſt himſelf went, drinking of the brook in the way; and thro' which alſo all his diſciples and followers enter into the kingdom of heaven: it may alſo be a figure of the dark valley of the ſhadow of death, thro' which Chriſt and all his members paſs to the heavenly glory. And I ſee not why this black and unclean brook, may not be a repreſentation of the pollutions and defilements of ſin; which being laid on Chriſt when he paſſed over it, made him ſo heavy and ſore amazed in the human nature, as to deſire the cup might paſs from him. Once more let it be obſerved, that it was the brook David paſſed over when he fled from his ſon Abſalom; in this David was a type of Chriſt, as in other things: Abſalom repreſented the people of the Jews, who rejected the Meſſiah, and rebelled againſt him; Achitophel, Judas, who betrayed him; and the people that went with David over it, the diſciples of our Lord; only there was this difference; there was a father fleeing from a ſon, here a Son going to meet his Father's wrath; David and his people wept when they went over this brook, but ſo did not Chriſt and his diſciples; the ſorrowful ſcene to them both began afterwards in the garden. This black brook and dark valley, and it being very late at night when it was paſſed over, all add to that dark diſpenſation, that hour of darkneſs, which now came upon our Lord; yet he went forth over it of his own accord, willingly and chearfully, not being forced or compelled by any; and his diſciples with him, not to be partners of his ſufferings, but to be witneſſes of them, and to receive ſome knowledge and inſtruction from what they ſhould ſee and hear: where was a garden into which he entered, and his diſciples: there were no orchards nor gardens within the city of Jeruſalem, but roſe gardens, which were from the times of the prophets [t]; all others were without; and this was a very proper place for gardens, where ſo much dung was near at hand. Whether this garden belonged to one of Chriſt's friends, is not certain; but ſince he often reſorted hither, no doubt it was with the leave, and by the conſent of the proprietor of it. However ſo it was, that as the firſt Adam's diſobedience was committed in a garden, the ſecond Adam's obedience to death for ſin, began here; and as the ſentence of death, on account of ſin, was paſſed in a garden, it began to be executed in one.

Ver. 2. And Judas alſo which betrayed him, knew the place, &c.] This character is given of Judas, to diſtinguiſh him from another diſciple of the ſame name; and tho' as yet he had not betrayed him, yet it was determined he ſhould, and Chriſt knew it, and he was now about to do it: and it is obſerved, that Judas was as well acquainted with the place of Chriſt's reſort, and knew the garden he frequently retired to, as the reſt of the diſciples; to ſhew that Chriſt did not go there to hide and ſecure himſelf from him, but to meet him, and that he might have an opportunity of finding him with the greater eaſe: for Jeſus oft-times reſorted thither with his diſciples; when at Jeruſalem at any of the feaſts, and at this feſtival; partly for refreſhment and reſt after he had been preaching in the temple, and partly for prayer, and alſo for private converſation with his diſciples.

Ver. 3. Judas then having received a band of men, &c.] From the captain of this band, who in ver. 12. is called a Chiliarch, that is, a commander of a thouſand men, one might conclude there were ſo many in this band; but it ſeems, that ſuch an officer might have two bands under his command; and if this was the caſe, there were at leaſt five hundred men in this company; a large number indeed, to take an unarmed perſon; and yet, as if this was not ſufficient, 'tis added, and officers from the chief prieſts and Phariſees; ſervants that belonged to each of theſe, and who ſeem to be a conſiderable number alſo; for theſe are ſaid to be a great multitude; Matt. xxvi. 47. nay, not only ſo, but the chief prieſts, captains of the temple, and elders of the people, were themſelves among them, Luke xxii. 52. to ſee that the men did their work, and did not return without him; as theſe officers, when ſent by them once before, did: cometh thither with lanterns, and torches, and weapons: פנס, which is no other than the Greek word here uſed for a lantern, the Jews tell us[u], was an earthen veſſel, in which a candle was put and covered, that the wind might not put it out, and it had holes in the ſides of it, thro' which light was let out; their לפיד, or lamp, here rendered torch, they ſay[w], was alſo an earthen veſſel in the form of a reed, at the top of which was a proper receptacle, in which they burnt old rags dipped in oil: now tho' it was full moon, being the time of the paſſover, they brought theſe along with them to diſcover him by the light of, and find him out with them, if he ſhould hide himſelf among the trees, or in any of the more ſhady places in the garden; and they took warlike inſtruments, as ſwords, ſpears, and ſtaves, as if they had a thief or a murderer to apprehend, or a little army of men to encounter with; whereas there were only Chriſt, and his eleven diſciples; and theſe in no condition, nor had any deſign, to defend themſelves in an hoſtile manner.

Ver. 4. Jeſus therefore knowing all things, &c.] As being the omniſcient God, ſo his knowledge reaches to all perſons and things, without any limitation and reſtriction; tho' here it has a regard to the all things, that ſhould come upon him; even all the ſufferings he ſhould endure, which were all determined by God; agreed to by him, in the covenant of grace; predicted in the Old Teſtament, and foretold by himſelf: he knew all the circumſtances that would attend his ſufferings, as that he ſhould be betrayed by Judas; be forſaken by the reſt of his diſciples; that the Jews would give him gall and vinegar in his thirſt; and the ſoldiers part his garments among them: he knew the time of his ſufferings; and that it was now at hand; and that Judas and his company were not far off: and therefore, went forth; out of the garden, or at leaſt from that part of it where he was, and his diſciples with him: this was done to ſhew his willingneſs to ſuffer; he went forth of his own accord; he did not hide himſelf in the garden, as the firſt Adam did; he did not ſtay till thoſe that ſought his life came up to him: he went forth, not to make his eſcape from them, but to meet them, and make himſelf known unto them; and ſaid unto them, whom ſeek ye? this queſtion was put, not out of ignorance; for he knew full well who they were ſeeking after; nor with a deſign to deceive them, and make his eſcape; but to ſhew that he was not afraid of them, and that they could not have known him, nor have taken him, had he not made himſelf known, and offered himſelf to them; and which makes it appear, that he was willingly apprehended by them, and voluntarily ſuffered.

Ver. 5. They anſwered him, Jeſus of Nazareth, &c.] Their anſwer is not, thee; for they knew him not, their eyes were holden, or ſtruck with dimneſs, or blindneſs, as the men of Sodom were; or they that anſwered might be ſuch who never perſonally knew him: nor do they ſay Chriſt, for they rejected and denied him as the Meſſiah; nor do they call him that deceiver, or ſeditious perſon, as they ſometimes did, being willing to cover their malicious views and intentions; but Jeſus of Nazareth, a name by which he was commonly known, being taken from his education and converſation in that place; tho' this was ſometimes given him in a contemptuous way: Jeſus ſaith unto them, I am he; or I am, reſpecting his name Jehovah, averring himſelf to be the Chriſt, and owning himſelf under the name they were pleaſed to call him by; which ſhews how willing he was to be taken by them, and may teach us not to be aſhamed of him, or of any nick name we may bear for his ſake: and Judas alſo which betrayed him ſtood with them; this circumſtance is recorded to ſhew, that Judas at firſt did not know him any more than the reſt; ſo that he might eaſily have paſſed them if he had pleaſed; and that Judas did not ſtand with them as an idle ſpectator; he came with them to betray him, and was looking out for him; though when he ſpake he knew him not: it alſo expreſſes the different company Judas was in; a little while ago, he was at ſupper with Chriſt, and the other diſciples, and now he is at the head of a band of ſoldiers, and others, to betray him; and alſo his continuance in his iniquity and wicked reſolutions and agreement; as yet he had no remorſe of conſcience, or ſenſe of his ſin: and it ſeems to be mentioned alſo with this view, to inform us, that he fell to the ground with the reſt; which is related in the next verſe. The Jew[x] aſſerts, that there is a diſagreement between the Evangeliſt John and the reſt of the Evangeliſts in this account: he obſerves, that when Judas came with his armed men to take Jeſus, Jeſus went out to meet them, and aſked them, ſaying, whom ſeek ye? they ſay Jeſus of Nazareth; to whom he replies, I am he; and then Judas, that betrayed him, ſtood with them: but Matthew, in his Goſpel, chap. xxvi. 47. and Mark, ch. xiv. 43. and Luke, ch. xxii. 47. relate, that Judas gave a ſign to the ſoldiers, when they came to take Jeſus, ſaying, him whom I ſhall kiſs, lay hold on, and they did ſo. But here is no contradiction, John does not deny that Judas gave a ſign to the ſoldiers; tho' he omits it, it being ſo particularly obſerved by the other Evangeliſts; and only relates what is not taken notice of by them, and which no ways contradicts what they have aſſerted: the force of the objection ſeems to lie here; that, according to the other Evangeliſts, Judas, as ſoon as he came into the garden, made up to Chriſt, and gave the ſignal by which he might be known, whereas he is here ſaid to ſtand with the ſoldiers and officers; and that ſeeing ſuch a ſignal was given, he muſt be, and was known by it, whereas he is here repreſented as if he was not known by them until he had made himſelf known to them; and that as ſoon as Judas had given the ſign, they immediately ſeized him, whereas, according to this account, count, they did not, until ſome words had paſſed between Chriſt and them, and they firſt fell to the ground. In anſwer to which it may be ſaid, that admitting that Judas did make up to Chriſt as ſoon as he entered the garden, and gave the ſignal to the ſoldiers, he might upon that immediately retire, and place himſelf among the multitude; either to give further directions and inſtructions to them, or that they might defend him from Jeſus, ſhould there be any occaſion for it: and tho' it ſhould be allowed that the ſignal was given by Judas before this, it might not be diſcerned by the ſoldiers, either not being near enough to obſerve it; or, as ſome think, being ſtricken with blindneſs, for a time, as the Sodomites were; or even ſuppoſing it was ſeen, and they knew by it which was Jeſus, it is ſtill a fuller proof of the courage and intrepidity of Chriſt to go forth, and preſent himſelf to them, and put the queſtions he did, and confirm unto them the truth of it, that he was Jeſus whom they ſought: to which may be added, that it does not appear that Chriſt was immediately ſeized by the ſoldiers, upon the ſignal given them by Judas, without ſome intervening words and actions; for tho' the ſignal, and the ſeizure lie very near together in the accounts of Matthew and Mark; yet Luke relates many things between them, as the queſtion of the diſciples, whether they ſhould ſmite with the ſword; Peter's cutting off the ear of the high-prieſt's ſervant; Chriſt's rebuking him, and touching the ſervant's ear, and healing it; and ſome diſcourſe which paſſed between him, and the chief-prieſts, captains, and elders. All which agree with the account the Evangeliſt John here gives.

Ver. 6. As ſoon then as he had ſaid unto them I am he, &c.] Immediately upon his ſpeaking theſe words, which were delivered with ſo much majeſty and authority, and were attended with ſuch a divine power: they went backward, and fell to the ground; they were confounded, ſurprized, and intimidated, and ſeemed as if they would have choſe rather to have fled from him, than to have apprehended him; and as they retired and went backward, they fainted away, as it were, either at the majeſty of his looks, or at the power of his words, or both, ſo that they became like dead men, falling to the ground. Sometimes the majeſty of a man's perſon, or his fame for ſome remarkable things done by him, or the innocence and uprightneſs of his cauſe, have had ſuch an influence upon his enemies, that they have not been able to execute upon him what they intended. It is reported of Caius Marius, that being reduced to the utmoſt miſery, and ſhut up in a private houſe at Minturnæ, (a town in Italy) an executioner was ſent to kill him; and tho' he was an old man, and unarmed, and in the moſt miſerable condition, yet the executioner having drawn his ſword, could not attempt to uſe it; but, as the hiſtorian [y] ſays, being ſtruck with blindneſs at the glory of the man, ran away aſtoniſhed and trembling. Now, beſides the above things, in their higheſt perfection, there was in our Lord ſomething more than human; he was God as well as man, and he diſplayed his divine majeſty, glory, and power. This was done, not to make his eſcape from them; but to give proof of his deity, and a ſpecimen of his power at the great day; and to let them know, that if he had not thought fit to have ſurrender'd himſelf voluntarily to them, tho' he was an unarmed perſon, they with all their men and arms, could never have laid hold on him; and to ſhew them, that he could as eaſily have ſtruck them dead, as to cauſe them to fall to the ground: and ſometimes ſtriking a perſon dead immediately, is expreſſed by this phraſe of ſtriking to the ground; and is aſcribed to God, who does it by the miniſtry of angels: ſays R. Simeon ben Shetach [z], to ſome perſons at variance, "let the maſter of thoughts "come, (i. e. the bleſſed God) and take vengeance "on you; immediately Gabriel came והבטן בקרקע, "and ſmote them to the ground; and they died im"mediately." The like is elſewhere ſaid [a], "if "thou tranſgreſſeſt thy Father's command, imme"diately comes Gabriel, and ſmites to the ground."

Ver. 7. Then aſked he them again, whom ſeek ye, &c.] This ſuppoſes them to be riſen up again, and on their feet; no hurt being done to them; for Chriſt always did good, and not hurt to the bodies of men; he never diſabled any, or took away life, or limb: he only did this to ſhew his power, and not to do them any real damage; and the ſame divine perſon that ſtruck them down, ſuffered them to riſe, and gave them power and ſtrength to get up; which ſhowed his great clemency and goodneſs: but they, on the contrary, perſiſted in their wicked intentions, and were ſtill ſeeking after him; a plain proof of that judicial hardneſs of heart, under which they were; and that even miracles wrought will not bring hardened ſinners to repentance without powerful and efficacious grace. When Chriſt, as fearleſs of them, and to ſhow that by this action he had no deſign to make his eſcape from them, tho' he could eaſily have done it, and that he was willing to be apprehended by them, puts the queſtion a ſecond time, and aſks them who they were ſeeking for. Something like this Joſephus [b] reports concerning Eliſha the prophet, tho' not repeated as here, nor attended with the like effect: he relates, that Eliſha having requeſted of God that he would ſmite his enemies with blindneſs, and that being granted he went into the midſt of them, and aſked them, τινα επιζητȣντες ηλθον, whom do ye come to ſeek? they ſay Eliſha the prophet: he promiſed them to deliver him to them, if they would follow him into the city, where he was; and ſo they being blinded by God, both in their ſight and in their mind, followed the prophet. They ſaid Jeſus of Nazareth; having recovered their ſpirits, and being hardened in deſperate malice and wickedneſs, impudently make this reply to him; nor would they, notwithſtanding this inſtance of his power, own him to be the Meſſiah; but ſtill contemptuouſly ſtile him Jeſus of Nazareth.

Ver. 8. Jeſus anſwered, I have told you that I am he, &c.] This he ſaid, upbraiding them with their ſtupidity; ſignifying he was ready to deliver himſelf up into their hands; and which he did with intrepidity and calmneſs, only on this condition, with this proviſo for his diſciples; if therefore ye ſeek me, let theſe go their way: Chriſt was about to ſuffer for them, and therefore it was not juſt that they ſhould ſuffer too; nor was it proper that they ſhould ſuffer with him, leſt their ſufferings ſhould be thought to be a part of the price of redemption. Beſides, their ſuffering-time was not come, and they had other work to do: this ſhows the love of Chriſt to his diſciples, and his care of them, and alſo his power, and that he could have ſaved himſelf as well as them. Moreover, theſe words may be conſidered as an emblem and pledge of the acquittance and diſcharge of God's elect, thro' the ſuretiſhip-engagements, and performances of Chriſt, who drew near to God on their account, ſubſtituted himſelf in their room, and undertook for them in the council and covenant of peace, and laid himſelf under obligation to pay their debts, to ſatisfy for their ſins, to bring in an everlaſting righteouſneſs, to keep and preſerve them in this world, and to make them happy in another. Accordingly, in the fulneſs of time he was made under the law, and ſtood in their place and ſtead, and was taken, ſuffered, died, and roſe again. Now, as there was a diſcharge and acquittance of them from eternity, a non-imputation of ſin to them, and a ſecret letting of them go upon the ſuretiſhip-engagements of Chriſt, and in virtue thereof a paſſing by, and over, the ſins of the Old Teſtament ſaints; ſo there was an open acquittance and diſcharge of them all upon the apprehenſion, ſufferings, death, and reſurrection of Chriſt; complete deliverance from wrath and condemnation being obtained, and a full title to eternal glory made. Moreover, theſe words may be conſidered not only and merely as ſpoken to the Jews, but as addreſſed to the law and juſtice of God; or however, as having ſome reſpect to them, while directed to the others; for juſtice finding the ſins of all the elect upon Chriſt, on whom the Father had laid them, and Chriſt had took them upon himſelf, was ſeeking for, and about to demand ſatisfaction of him for them; and he being under the law, and coming into the world to fulfil it, in the room and ſtead of his people, was about to bear the curſe of it; wherefore ſeeing this was the caſe, he inſiſts upon it, that they who were convicted of the law as tranſgreſſors, and held under it as condemned criminals and malefactors, and who were liable, as conſidered in themſelves, to be ſeized upon by the juſtice of God, and to have the ſentence of condemnation and death executed upon them, might be diſcharged and let go; and accordingly, upon the ſatisfaction made by Chriſt, this is the caſe: Chriſt's people are no longer under the law, as a miniſtration of condemnation and death, nor liable to ſuffer the vindictive wrath of God; they are become free from the curſes of a righteous law, and are let go by divine juſtice, and will never ſuffer the ſtrokes of it, neither in this world nor in that to come; there's no demand to be made upon them, either by the law or juſtice of God; there is no wrath or puniſhment will be inflicted on them, either here or hereafter; and they may, and ſhall go their way into everlaſting life, when time ſhall be no more with them, neither law nor juſtice having any thing to ſay to the contrary.

Ver. 9. That the ſaying might be fulfilled which he ſpake, &c.] John xvii. 12. of them which thou gaveſt me have I loſt none; which tho' it has a peculiar reſpect to the apoſtles, is true of all the elect of God; who are given to Chriſt, and ſhall none of them be loſt, neither their ſouls nor bodies; for Chriſt's charge of them reaches to both; both were given to him, both are redeemed by him, and both ſhall be ſaved in him with an everlaſting ſalvation: he ſaves their ſouls from an eternal death, and will raiſe their bodies from a corporal one; wherefore that his care of his diſciples with reſpect to their bodies, as well as ſouls, with reſpect to their temporal lives, as well as eternal happineſs might be ſeen; he made this agreement with the Jews that came to take him, or rather laid this injunction on them, to diſmiſs them; and which 'tis very remarkable they did; they laid hands on none of them, even tho' Peter drew his ſword and ſtruck off the ear of one of them: and which is a very conſiderable inſtance of the power which Chriſt had over the ſpirits of theſe men, to reſtrain them; and ſo a proof of his proper deity, as well as of the care of Chriſt for the preſervation of his apoſtles, whilſt he was here on earth; for to that time only the words cited have a reſpect; in which Chriſt ſpeaks of his keeping them whilſt he was with them, and uſes this as an argument with his Father to keep them, now he was removing from them: wherefore their loſing their lives afterwards for his ſake, as they all did excepting the apoſtle John, is no contradiction to this expreſſion of his; and beſides, they were preſerved by the power of God ſo long, until they had done the work which was appointed them to do, and for which they were given him, and choſen by him to be his apoſtles, and for which they were better furniſhed after his reſurrection and aſcenſion; for had they been apprehended by the Jews at this time, in all probability, according to an human view of things, ſuch was their weakneſs, they would have fallen moſt foully and ſhamefully, as the inſtance of Peter, the ſtrongeſt of them, ſhews; and therefore to prevent ſuch a temptation, and to preſerve them, our Lord took this method to deliver them out of the hands of the Jews: the ſaving clauſe, but the ſon of perdition, is here left out, becauſe Judas, who is deſigned by that character, was now openly declared to be what he was; he was no longer among the diſciples; he was ſeparated from them, and had betrayed his maſter, and was not of the number of thoſe Chriſt inſiſted upon might be let go.

Ver. 10. Then Simon Peter having a ſword, &c.] Girt about him, which he either wore in common; or particularly at the feaſt, as the Galileans are ſaid to do, to preſerve them from thieves and wild beaſts by the way; or was one of the two the diſciples had with them in the garden; or what Peter purpoſely furniſhed himſelf with to defend his maſter, taking a hint from what was ſaid by him, Luke xxii. 36. drew it; before Chriſt could give an anſwer to the queſtion put by his diſciples, whether they ſhould ſmite or no, Luke xxii. 49. being encouraged thereunto either by what Chriſt ſaid, Luke xxii. 38. or by what he had juſt done in ſtriking the man to the ground; and being provoked by that ſervant's going to lay hold on Chriſt, and who 'tis probable was more forward and buſy than any of the reſt; for it appears from the other Evangeliſts, that Peter did this, tho' he is not mentioned by name, by any of the reſt, juſt as they were ſeizing and apprehending Chriſt: and ſmote the high prieſts ſervant, and cut off his right ear; he doubtleſs ſtruck at his head, and intended to have cleaved him down, but miſſed his aim, and took off his ear: the perſon is particularly deſcribed that he was a ſervant, and the ſervant of the high prieſt, and he is mentioned alſo by name; and the ſervants name was Malchus; that if the truth of this relation was called in queſtion, it might eaſily be looked into and examined, when it would appear that it was perfectly right. All the Evangeliſts give an account of this action of Peter's, but none of them mention his name, but this Evangeliſt; perhaps the reaſon might be, that Peter was alive when the other Evangeliſts wrote, and therefore it was not ſafe to ſay who it was that did it, leſt he who was the miniſter of the circumciſion, and dwelt among the Jews, ſhould be proſecuted for it, or their minds ſhould be prejudiced againſt him on that account; but John writing his Goſpel many years after his death, the reaſon for the concealment of his name no longer ſubſiſted: nor indeed is the name of the high prieſt's ſervant mentioned by any other of the Evangeliſts: John had, or however he writes a more exact and particular account of this matter. This was a name frequent with the Syrians, Phenicians, and Hebrews. Jerom[c] wrote the life of one Malchus a monk or Eremite, who was by nation a Syrian; and Porphyry, that great enemy of Chriſtianity, who was by birth a Tyrian, his original name was Malchus, as was his Father's; and which in the Syrian, and his country dialect, as he himſelf[d] and others[e] ſay, ſignifies a king. Joſephus[f] ſpeaks of one Cleodemus, whoſe name was Malchus, that wrote a hiſtory of the Hebrews. And ſome Jewiſh Rabbins were of this name; hence we read of ר״ מלוך, R. Maluc[g], and of ר״ מלכיו, R. Malcio[h]; the name is the ſame with Malluch, Neh. x. 4.

Ver. 11. Then ſaid Jeſus unto Peter, &c.] By way of rebuke, and to prevent his repeating the blow, and that further miſchief might not enſue; for ſuch a bold imprudent action riſqued the lives of all the diſciples, who in all probability, would have fallen a ſacrifice to the fury and reſentment of theſe men, had not Chriſt interpoſed in this prudent manner; who alſo Luke ſays, touched the ſervant's ear and healed him, which no doubt tended greatly to conciliate their minds, and make them eaſy: put up thy ſword into the ſheath: Peter was not a proper perſon to bear the ſword, and uſe it; it was a very daring attack, and a dangerous one, and was very unneceſſary; ſince Chriſt could have defended himſelf, had he thought fit, without Peter's drawing his ſword; and beſides, for a word ſpeaking he could have had of his Father, more than twelve legions of angels; and it was alſo contrary to the nature of his kingdom, which was not of this world, nor to be ſupported and defended in any ſuch manner; and was moreover, as much as in Peter lay, an hindrance of his ſufferings, and of the execution of his Father's will and decree; wherefore he adds, the cup which my Father hath given me: by the cup is meant, the wrath of God, and puniſhment due to ſin, endured by Chriſt in his ſufferings, and is ſaid to be given him by his Father; becauſe he called him to theſe ſufferings, they were appointed and determined by him; yea, he was even ordered, and commanded by his Father, to drink of this cup; juſtice mixed it up, and put it into his hands; and he took it as coming from his Father, who delighted in ſeeing him drink it up, as the ſurety of his people; and a dreadful one it was, a cup of trembling and aſtoniſhment, of curſe, and not of bleſſing, of wrath and fury: the alluſion ſeems to be to the maſter of the family, who appointed, and gave to every one their cup: ſhall I not drink it? which expreſſes his willingneſs to do it, his eager deſire after it, his delight in it, and diſpleaſure at Peter's attempt to hinder him; he being now perfectly reconciled in his human nature to drink it, tho' it was ſo bitter a potion: he found it was impoſſible, conſidering the decree of God, his own agreement, and the ſalvation of his people, that it ſhould be otherwiſe; and beſides, it was his Father's will and pleaſure, he conſidered it as coming from him; and therefore chearfully accepted it, and was reſolved to drink it up, and that nothing ſhould hinder him. The Perſic verſion reads it, I will not give it to another to drink; Peter by this raſh action, ſeeming as if he would have the cup out of Chriſt's hands, and have drank it himſelf; which as it could not be, nor would Chriſt ſuffer it, ſo if he had, it would have been of no advantage to the ſalvation of his people.

Ver. 12. Then the band, and the captain, and the officers of the Jews, &c.] Which Judas received, and which came along with him, ver. 3. When Jeſus had rebuked Peter, and healed the ſervant's ear, and ſhewed ſuch a willingneſs to ſurrender himſelf to them; they took Jeſus and bound him. This they did, partly for ſafety and ſecurity, he having ſeveral times eſcaped from them; and partly for contempt, and by way of reproach, uſing him as they would do the vileſt of malefactors: and this was ſubmitted to by Chriſt, that his people might be looſed from the cords of ſin, be delivered from the captivity of ſatan, and be freed from the bondage of the law; hereby the types of him were fulfilled, as the binding of Iſaac, when his Father was going to offer him up, and the binding of the ſacrifice with cords to the horns of the altar: who that has read the ceremonies of the ſheaf of the firſt-fruits, but muſt call them to mind, upon reading this account of the apprehenſion and binding of Chriſt, and leading him to the high prieſt. This ſheaf was fetched from places the neareſt to Jeruſalem, particularly from the fields of Kidron: the manner was this[i]; "the meſſengers of "the Sanhedrim went out (from Jeruſalem) on the "evening of the feaſt day (the ſixteenth of Niſan, "and over the brook Kidron to the adjacent fields), "and bound the ſtanding corn in bundles, that it "might be the eaſier reaped, and all the neighbouring cities gathered to together there, that it "might be reaped in great pomp; and when it "was dark, one (of the reapers) ſays to them, is "the ſun ſet? they ſay, yes; and again, is the ſun "ſet? they ſay, yes: with this ſickle (ſhall I reap?) "they ſay, yes; again, with this ſickle (ſhall I reap?) "they ſay, yes; in this baſket (ſhall I put it?) they "ſay, yes; again, in this baſket (ſhall I put it?) "they ſay, yes; if on the ſabbath-day he ſays to "them, is this ſabbath-day? they ſay, yes; again, "is this ſabbath-day? they ſay, yes; (it was ſabbath-"day this year:) ſhall I reap? they ſay to him reap, "ſhall I reap? they ſay to him reap; three times "upon every thing; then they reap it, and put it "into the baſkets, and bring it to the court, where "they dry it at the fire." Whoever reads this, will eaſily obſerve a likeneſs: the meſſengers of the great Sanhedrim go to the fields of Kidron, in the evening, with their ſickles and baſkets; bind the ſtanding corn; queſtions and anſwers paſs between them and the people before they reap; and when they have done, they bring the ſheaf in their baſket to the court, to be dried at the fire. So the officers of the high prieſt, with others, paſs over the brook Kidron, with lantherns, torches, and weapons; in the night go into a garden; there apprehend Jeſus; queſtions and anſwers paſs between them there; then they lay hold on him, bind him, and bring him to the high prieſt.

Ver. 13. And led him away to Annas firſt, &c.] Who is elſewhere mentioned with Caiaphas as an high-prieſt alſo, Luke iii. 2. Acts iv. 6. He was the ſagan of the high-prieſt; he and Caiaphas ſeem to have had the high-prieſthood alternately; and either now, becauſe his houſe lay firſt in the way, or rather, becauſe he was a man of age, learning, and experience, as theſe men uſually were, that they might ſupply the deficiencies of the high-prieſts, who were ſometimes very weak and unlearned men[k]; therefore they firſt lead him to him, to have his advice how to proceed, and to take him along with them to his ſon-in-law, where the great council was convened, and that he might uſe his intereſt and authority, in taking proper meaſures, in order to put Jeſus to death; and eſpecially they led him to him, for the reaſon here aſſigned; for he was father-in-law to Caiaphas; ſo that he was, it is very probable, the older man; and being related to him, had an intereſt in him; and to whom ſuch a ſight was equally pleaſing as to the high-prieſt himſelf, or any of the council: which was the high-prieſt that ſame year; for the high-prieſthood was not for life, but was often changed, being bought and ſold for money; ſee the note on Luke iii. 2. ſo that this clauſe is very properly added, though Caiaphas held it longer, or, at leaſt, had it more years than one; for Caiaphas was high-prieſt when John began to preach, Luke iii. 2. but he now ſucceeded Simeon ben Camhith, who was prieſt the year before; as was Eleazar the ſon of Ananus, the year before that; and before him Iſhmael ben Phabi, who were all three ſucceſſively put into the prieſthood by Valerius Gratus, the Roman governour; as was alſo Caiaphas this year, and whoſe name was Joſeph.

Ver. 14. Now Caiaphas was he which gave counſel to the Jews, &c.] The chief-prieſts and Phariſees, who met in council about Jeſus, John xi. 47, &c. the counſel he gave was, that it was expedient that one man ſhould die for the people; and which advice was given out of ill will and malice to Chriſt, and to prevent, as he thought, the people of the Jews being deſtroyed by the Romans; though the words have a very good ſenſe, which he did not underſtand. The people Chriſt was to die for, was not all the people of the world, nor only the people of the Jews, nor all of them; but all the elect of God, whom God has choſen for his ſpecial and peculiar people, and has given to Chriſt as ſuch: theſe Chriſt were to die for, and did, not merely as a martyr, to confirm his doctrine to them, or as an example to teach them meekneſs, patience, and courage, but in the room and ſtead of them, as a ſurety for them; and it was expedient that he ſhould, in ſuch ſenſe, die for them, becauſe of his ſuretiſhip-engagements, that he might make ſatiſfaction to the law and juſtice of God, and procure the ſalvation of his people, and ſend forth the ſpirit to make application of it to them.

Ver. 15. And Simon Peter followed Jeſus, &c.] 'Tis certain, he firſt fled with the reſt, and forſook him, as they all did, notwithſtanding his reſolution to abide by him; however, he was very deſirous to know what would become of Jeſus, and what would be the iſſue of things; with this view he followed him, and not to deny him; tho' that was the conſequence. Other Evangeliſts ſay he followed him afar off, at a diſtance; which ſhewed ſome fear; and yet to follow him at all diſcovered love and zeal. To follow Chriſt is a property of his ſheep, and is highly commendable, eſpecially to follow him in ſufferings; a greater character a perſon can't well have, than to be a follower of Jeſus, in the exerciſe of grace, in the diſcharge of duty, and in bearing the croſs; and yet it does not appear that Peter did well in following Chriſt now; for Chriſt had cautioned him of his over-confidence, had hinted to him that he ſhould deny him, and had diſmiſſed him, and took his leave of him, and the reſt, on whoſe diſcharge he inſiſted, when he was apprehended, ver. 8. And ſo did another diſciple, and that diſciple was known unto the high-prieſt. This is thought to be the Apoſtle John, becauſe he frequently ſpeaks of himſelf, without mentioning his name; and theſe two, Peter and John, were generally together; and certain it is, that John was preſent at the croſs at the time of Chriſt's crucifixion; and who is ſuppoſed to be known to the high-prieſt, by carrying fiſh to his houſe, and ſelling it to him; ſo Nonnus ſays, he was known from his fiſhing-trade: but it is not probable that he was known, or could be known by the high-prieſt, ſo as to have any intimacy with him; nor is it likely that he, being a Galilean, would venture in; he was diſcoverable by his ſpeech, and would have been in equal danger with Peter; rather it was ſome one of the diſciples of Chriſt, who had not openly profeſſed him; one of the chief rulers that believed in him, but, for fear of the Phariſees, had not confeſſed him; it may be Nicodemus, or Joſeph of Arimathea, or the man at whoſe houſe Chriſt had eat the paſſover. In the Syriac verſion he is called one of the other diſciples; not of the twelve, but others. However, through his knowledge of the high-prieſt, he went in with Jeſus into the palace of the high-prieſt; not Annas, but Caiaphas; for Chriſt was now brought from Annas's houſe to Caiaphas's, where the Scribes and elders were aſſembled together.

Ver. 16. But Peter ſtood at the door without, &c.] It being difficult to get in; and perhaps he might be fearful too of going in, leſt he ſhould be known; however, he waited, if he could hear or ſee any thing, and for a proper opportunity of entrance: it would have been well if he had took the hint of providence, acceſs not being eaſy, and have gone his way; for he was now at the door of temptation: it would have been beſt for him, if he had kept without; and indeed at a greater diſtance; but his curioſity had led him thus far, and he hoped for an opportunity of getting nearer, which offered in the following manner: then went out that other diſciple, which was known unto the high-prieſt; ſeeing Peter thro' the window, by the light of the moon, for it was full moon; and knowing him, who he was, concluded he had a mind to come in, and hear and ſee what he could, ſteps out, and ſpake unto her that kept the door; which might be thought more properly the buſineſs of men-ſervants; but theſe being employed in apprehending and guarding Jeſus, the maid-ſervants might be obliged to take this poſt. The Ethiopic verſion, in the next verſe, calls her the door-keeper's daughter; her father might be the porter, and he being buſy, ſhe ſupplied his place. Though there is no need of theſe conjectures, ſince it was uſual with other nations, and it might be with the Jews, for women to be door-keepers, as Pignorius[1] has ſhewn out of Plautus, Petronius, Pauſanias, and others. However, the other diſciple, who was a man of figure and authority, and was known by the ſervants of the family, ordered her to open the door, and let Peter in; who accordingly did: and brought in Peter; into the hall, where Jeſus was under the examination of the high-prieſt.

Ver. 17. Then ſaith the damſel that kept the door unto Peter, &c.] She being relieved, either by her father, if porter, or by a fellow-ſervant, had the opportunity of coming into the hall, where Peter was, and was curious to obſerve him, who he ſhould be, that that perſon of note ſhould order him to be admitted, when an affair of ſo much privacy and importance was tranſacting; and either by Peter's language, or the trouble that appeared in his countenance, or fancying ſhe had ſeen him in the temple, or in ſome part of the city in company with Jeſus, addreſſes him after this manner: art not thou alſo one of this man's diſciples? She ſpeaks of Chriſt in the vulgar dialect of the Jews, calling him this man; not only eſteeming him a mere man, but a worthleſs man; and knowing he had diſciples, challenges him as one of them; when he, all in fright and ſurprize, not expecting ſuch a queſtion to be put to him, without any further thought, raſhly and ſuddenly ſays, I am not: he never denied that Chriſt was God, or the Son of God, or that he was come in the fleſh, or that he was the Meſſiah and Saviour of ſinners; but either, that he did not know what the maid ſaid, or the perſon ſhe ſpoke of; or, as here, that he was one of his diſciples; which was a very great untruth: and many are the aggravations of his fall; which came to paſs as ſoon as ever he was entered almoſt; and that by the means of a maid, a ſervant-maid, a very inferior one; and at firſt perhaps they were alone; and the queſtion put to him might not be in a virulent way, nor proceed from malice, but commiſeration of him; and yet he had not reſolution enough to own himſelf a diſciple of Jeſus; which he might have done, and in all likelihood might have gone ſafe off directly: but he that had ſo much confidence as to ſay, tho' all men deny thee, yet will not I; and had ſo much courage, as in the face of a band of ſoldiers, to draw his ſword, and ſmite one of the high-prieſt's ſervants, but a few hours before, has not ſpirit enough in him to own his maſter before a ſervant-maid!

Ver. 18. And the ſervants and officers ſtood there, &c.] In a certain part of the hall, the middle of it; the Vulgate Latin reads, by the coals: it follows, who had made a fire of coals, for it was cold; tho' it was the paſſover, and harveſt near. Dr. Lightfoot has obſerved from our countryman Biddulph, who was at Jeruſalem at this time of the year, that tho' in the day-time it was as hot as with us at mid-ſummer, yet ſuch very great dews fell as made it very cold, eſpecially in the night; and from one of the Jewiſh canons [m], that the year was not intercalated, (which when done was chiefly on account of the paſſover) neither for ſnow nor froſt; which, as he juſtly remarks, ſuppoſes there might be froſt and ſnow at the time of the paſſover. The ſame is obſerved in the Talmud [n], where the gloſs upon it is, "that they might not deſiſt, "on that account, from coming to the paſſover." The ſenſe is, that whereas ſometimes ſnow fell about the time of the paſſover; which might be thought to be an hindrance to ſome from coming to it; this never was a reaſon that came into conſideration with the Sanhedrim, or prevailed upon them to intercalate a month, that ſo the paſſover might not fall at a time of year when there was uſually ſnow. The paſſover was always in the ſpring of the year, when nights are commonly cold, as they are generally obſerved to be at the vernal equinox: this night might be remarkably cold; which ſeems to be ſuggeſted by the Perſic verſion, which reads, for it was cold that night; and the Ethiopic verſion, for the cold of that night was great; and adds what is neither in the text, nor true, for the country was cold. The Arabic verſion, as it ſhould ſeem, very wrongly renders it, for it was winter; ſince the paſſover was never kept in the winter-ſeaſon, but always in the ſpring, in the month Niſan: the winter-ſeaſon, with the Jews, were half the month of Ciſleu, all Tebet, and half Shebet [o]; tho' this is to be obſerved in favour of that verſion, that the Jews diſtinguiſh their winter into two parts; the one they call חורף, which, as the gloſs ſays, is the ſtrength of winter, the coldeſt part of it, and which laſts the time before mentioned; and the other they call קור, which is the end of winter, and when the cold is not ſo ſtrong; and half Niſan is taken into this; for they ſay that half Shebet, all Adar, and half Niſan are reckoned to this part of winter: ſo that, according to this account, the fourteenth of Niſan, which was the day on which the paſſover was killed; or at leaſt the fifteenth, which was now begun, was the laſt day of winter, and ſo juſt ſecures the credit of the above verſion. And they warmed themſelves, and Peter ſtood with them, and warmed himſelf: he was cold both inwardly and outwardly; and being ſo, he gets into bad company; and it may be with a view that he might not be ſuſpected, but be taken for one of their own ſort, as one who had the ſame ill opinion of Jeſus they had; and by the light of the fire he is again diſcovered and challenged, which makes way for a ſecond denial.

Ver. 19. The high-prieſt then aſked Jeſus, &c.] Being now brought from Annas to Caiaphas, who was the high-prieſt and mouth of the Sanhedrim, and to whom it appertained to hear and try a cauſe relating to doctrine. And what he did was by putting queſtions to him, inſtead of opening the charge againſt him, and calling for witneſſes to ſupport it. The perſon he interrogated was a greater high-prieſt than himſelf; was that prophet Moſes ſpoke of, to whom the Jews were to hearken, and no other than the Son of God, and king of Iſrael; who, when at twelve years of age, aſked the doctors queſtions, and anſwered theirs, to their great aſtoniſhment. He firſt enquires of his diſciples, not ſo much who they were, and what they were, and how many they were, and where they were now, as for what purpoſe he gathered them together; whether it was not with ſome ſeditious views to overturn the preſent government, and ſet up himſelf as a temporal prince; and this he did, that he might be able to ſend him, with a charge againſt him, to the Roman governor: he did not aſk for his diſciples to come and ſpeak on his behalf, if they had any thing to ſay for him, which, by their canons [p], was allowed and encouraged: "if any of the diſ"ciples (of the perſon accuſed) ſays, I have a "crime to lay to his charge, they ſilence him; "but if one of the diſciples ſays, I have ſomething "to ſay in his favour, they bring him up, and "place him between them; nor does he go down "from thence all the day; and if there is any "thing in what he ſays, שומעין לו, they hearken "to him." The Jews indeed pretend [q], that after Jeſus was found guilty, a herald went before him forty days declaring his crime, and ſignifying, that if any one knew any thing worthy in him, to come and declare it; but none were found: but this is all lyes and falſhood, to cover their wickedneſs; no diſciple of his was allowed to ſpeak for him. The high-prieſt next aſked Jeſus of his doctrine; not for the ſake of information and inſtruction, nor to ſee whether it was according to the ſcriptures; but if it was a new doctrine, and his own, and whether it tended to idolatry or blaſphemy, and whether it was factious and ſeditious, that ſo they might have wherewith to accuſe him; for tho' they had got his perſon, they were at a loſs for an accuſation; and yet this ſelf-ſame man that put theſe queſtions, and was fiſhing for ſomething againſt him, had before given counſel to put him to death, right or wrong: all this was doing, and theſe queſtions were put to Jeſus, whilſt Peter was denying him.

Ver. 20. Jeſus anſwered him, &c.] Not to the firſt of theſe queſtions concerning his diſciples; not becauſe they had all now forſaken him, and one was denying him; nor becauſe he would not betray them; nor becauſe he would ſuffer alone; but becauſe if his doctrine was good, it could not be blame-worthy to have diſciples, and to teach them: and the charge of ſedition, blaſphemy, and idolatry they wanted to faſten on him, would ſufficiently appear to be groundleſs by the doctrine he preached; and as to that he anſwers not directly what he taught, but declares the manner in which he delivered it, and which was ſuch, that they that heard him could not be ſtrangers to it. I ſpake openly to the world; with all plainneſs, freedom, and boldneſs, without any reſerve or ambiguity; and that not to a few perſons only, to his own particular diſciples, but to all the people of the Jews, who crouded in great numbers to hear him; inſomuch that it was ſaid by his enemies, that the world was gone after him. I ever taught in the ſynagogue; the Arabic, the ſynagogues; the places of public worſhip in all parts of the nation, where the Jews met to pray, and read, and hear the word: and in the temple; at Jeruſalem, whenever he was in that city; whither the Jews always reſort; for prayer, and to offer ſacrifice, and particularly at the three grand feſtivals of the year, the paſſover, pentecoſt, and feaſt of tabernacles, when all the males from all parts appeared before the Lord. Accordingly, the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, read, whither all the Jews reſort; and ſo read the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions. And in ſecret have I ſaid nothing; not but that our Lord taught in other places than what are here mentioned, as on mountains, in deſerts, by the ſea-ſhore, and in private houſes, yet generally to great multitudes; and tho' he ſometimes converſed alone, and in ſecret with his diſciples, yet what he taught them was either an explanation of what he had ſaid in publick, or was perfectly agreeable to it.

Ver. 21. Why aſkeſt thou me? &c.] He ſeems ſurprized at the high-prieſt's conduct, that he ſhould put ſuch queſtions to him, who ſtood bound before him; was brought there as a criminal, and was the defendant, and not obliged to accuſe himſelf; nor could it be thought, that whatever evidence or teſtimony he ſhould give, would have much weight with the perſons before whom he ſtood. Aſk them which heard me, what I ſaid unto them: he appeals to his hearers, many of whom were then preſent; and theſe his enemies, even his worſt enemies: ſo clear was his caſe, ſo free was his doctrine from ſedition and blaſphemy, ſo innocent was he in the whole of his deportment and conduct, that he even ſubmits to have his caſe iſſued and determined by what his hearers ſhould ſay of him; and theſe not his friends, but his enemies; ſee Iſ. l. 8. behold they, or theſe, know what I have ſaid; pointing at ſome perſons preſent, perhaps the very officers who had been ſent to take him before, but returned without him, declaring that never man ſpake like him.

Ver. 22. And when he had thus ſpoken, &c.] What was ſo right and reaſonable, in ſo becoming a manner, without heat or paſſion: one of the officers which ſtood by; it may be one of thoſe who had been ſent to him, and had been a hearer of him, whom Jeſus might look wiſhly at, or point unto, when he ſaid the above words, at which he might be provoked: and therefore ſtroke Jeſus with the palm of his hand; or gave him a rap with a rod, or ſmote him with a ſtaff, as ſome think, is the ſenſe of the phraſe; tho' the Syriac, agreeable to our verſion, reads it, he ſmote him, על פכה, upon his cheek; gave him, what we commonly call, a ſlap on the face; and which is always eſteemed a very great affront, and was a piece of rudeneſs and inſolence to the laſt degree in this man: ſaying, anſwereſt thou the high-prieſt ſo? This he ſaid, as well as gave the blow, either out of flattery to the high-prieſt, or to clear himſelf from being a favourer of Chriſt; which, by what had been ſaid, he might think would be ſuſpected: ſome have thought this was Malchus, whoſe ear Chriſt had healed; if ſo, he was guilty of great ingratitude.

Ver. 23. Jeſus anſwered him, &c.] For the high-prieſt took no notice of him, nor any of the Sanbedrim, tho' the action was ſo inſolent and indecent, both as to the manner in which it was done, and the perſon, an officer, by whom it was done; and conſidering the circumſtances of it, in the palace of the high-prieſt, in his preſence, and before ſo grand a council, and whilſt a cauſe was trying; and it was a barbarous, as well as an impious action, conſidering the perſon to whom it was done. Wherefore Jeſus replies to him, without making uſe of his divine power as the Son of God, or diſcovering any warmth of ſpirit, and heat of paſſion, as a man, mildly and rationally argues with him; if I have ſpoken evil bear witneſs of the evil: meaning, either if he had, to his knowledge, delivered any wicked doctrine in the courſe of his miniſtry, or had at that time ſaid any evil thing of the high-prieſt, or any other perſon, he deſires that he would make it to appear, and give proper proof and evidence of it: but if well, why ſmiteſt thou me? If he had ſaid nothing contrary to truth, reaſon, and good manners, then he ought not to be uſed and treated in ſuch an injurious way. And moreover, the officer ought to have been corrected by the council, and have been made to pay the two hundred zuzim, or pence, the fine for ſuch an affront, according to the Jewiſh canon, or more, according to the dignity of the perſon abuſed [r].

Ver. 24. Now Annas had ſent him bound, &c.] As he found him, when the captain, band, and officers brought him to him; who having pleaſed himſelf with ſo agreeable a ſight, and had aſked him ſome few queſtions, and perhaps inſulted him, ſent him away in this manner, unto Caiaphas the high-prieſt; his ſon-in-law, as the more proper perſon to be examined before; and eſpecially as the grand council was ſitting at his houſe. This was done before Peter's firſt denial of Chriſt; which, 'tis plain, was in the palace of the high-prieſt, and not in Annas's houſe; tho' there ſeems no reaſon on this account to place theſe words at the end of the 13th verſe, as they are by ſome, ſince they manifeſtly refer to time paſt, and do not at all obſcure or hinder the true order of the hiſtory, as ſtanding here.

Ver. 25. And Simon Peter ſtood and warmed himſelf, &c.] This is repeated from ver. 18. to connect the hiſtory, and carry on the thread of the account of Peter's denial of Chriſt, which is interrupted by inſerting the examination of Chriſt before the high-prieſt, which was made at the ſame time. Peter ſtood among, and continued with the ſervants and officers of the high-prieſt, warming himſelf by a fire they had made, it being a cold night; and this proved of bad conſequence to him. The company and converſation of wicked men ſhould be abſtained from; no good is got thereby; continuance among ſuch is very dangerous; men are too often more concerned for their bodies than their ſouls; ſatan baits his temptations for the fleſhly and ſenſitive part; and that which is thought to be for good, is the occaſion of hurt. They ſaid therefore unto him; the ſervants and officers, among whom he ſtood warming himſelf, having obſerved what the maid had ſaid to him: art thou not alſo one of his diſciples? ſuſpecting that he was, tho' he had denied it, and therefore preſs him to give a direct anſwer: they might obſerve his countenance to fall, when the maid put the queſtion to him; there might be ſomething in his dreſs, and eſpecially in his ſpeech, which increaſed the ſuſpicion: but he denied it, and ſaid, I am not; a ſecond time. This denial of his being a diſciple of Chriſt, as before, did not ariſe from a ſenſe of his unworthineſs to be one; nor from diffidence and diſtruſt of a right to ſuch a character; but from the fear of men; and being aſhamed of Chriſt, he denies that which was his great mercy, privilege, and glory.

[r] Miſn. Bava Kama, c. 8. §. 6.

Ver. 26. One of the ſervants of the high-prieſt, &c.] Hearing him ſo ſtiffly deny that he was a diſciple of Jeſus, when he had great reaſon to believe he was: being his kinſman, whoſe ear Peter cut off; a near relation of Malchus, to whom Peter had done this injury; and who was preſent at the ſame time, and no doubt took particular notice of him; and the more, becauſe of what he had done to his kinſman: ſaith unto him, did not I ſee thee in the garden with him? as if he ſhould have ſaid, I ſaw thee with my own eyes along with Jeſus, this very night in the garden, beyond Kedron, where he was apprehended, how canſt thou deny it? and wilt thou ſtand in it ſo confidently, that thou art not one of his diſciples?

Ver. 27. Peter then denied again, &c.] A third time, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; and that, according to other Evangeliſts, with curſing and ſwearing; for now he was more affrighted than before, leſt ſhould he be taken up, and it be proved upon him, that he was the perſon that cut off Malchus's ear, he ſhould be ſentenced to a fine, or it may be ſome capital puniſhment. The fine for plucking a man's ears, and which ſome underſtand of plucking them off, was four hundred zuzim [s], or pence; which, as they anſwer to Roman pence, amount to twelve pounds ten ſhillings; a ſum of money, Peter perhaps could not have raiſed, without great difficulty: and therefore, that it might be believed he was not a diſciple of Chriſt, ſo not the man; he ſwears in a prophane manner, and imprecates the judgments of God upon him: and immediately the cock crew; the ſecond time; which was a ſignal, by which he might call to remembrance, what Chriſt had ſaid to him; that before the cock crowed twice, he ſhould deny him thrice, Mark xiv. 72. It was now early in the morning, about three o'clock, or ſomewhat after.

Ver. 28. Then led they Jeſus from Caiaphas, &c.] When Peter had denied him, one of the officers had ſmote him, the high-prieſt had examined him, and they thought they had enough, out of his own mouth, to condemn him; they, the chief-prieſts, elders, Scribes, and the whole multitude, led him bound as he was, from Caiaphas's houſe, unto the hall of judgment; or the prætorium; the place where the Roman governour, who was now Pontius Pilate, uſed to hear and try cauſes in; the Romans now having matters and cauſes relating to life and death, in their hands: and it was early; the morning indeed was come; but it was as ſoon as it was day; they had been all night in taking and examining Jeſus, and conſulting what to do with him; and as ſoon as they could expect the governour to be up, they hurry him away to him, eagerly thirſting after his blood, and fearing leſt he ſhould be reſcued out of their hands: and they themſelves went not into the judgment-hall, leſt they ſhould be defiled; that is, the Jews, only the band of Roman ſoldiers went in; the reaſon of this was, becauſe it was the houſe of a Gentile, and with them, מדורות העכ״ום טמאים, the dwelling-houſes of Gentiles, or idolaters, are unclean [t]; yea, if they were the houſes of Iſraelites, and Gentiles were admitted to dwell in them, they were defiled, and all that were in them; for ſo they ſay [u], "if the collectors for the government enter "into a houſe to dwell in, all in the houſe are de"filed." They did not think it lawful to let out a houſe in Judea to an heathen [w], or to aſſiſt in building a Baſilica for them; which they explain to be a palace, in which judges ſit to judge men [x]: hence the reaſon of their caution, and which they were the more obſervant of, that they might eat the paſſover; pure and undefiled; not the paſſover lamb, for that they had eaten the night before; but the Chagigah, or feaſt on the fifteenth day of the month. Many chriſtian writers, both ancient and modern, have concluded from hence, that Chriſt did not keep his laſt paſſover, at the ſame time the Jews did; and many things are ſaid to illuſtrate this matter, and juſtify our Lord in it: ſome obſerve the diſtinction of a ſacrificial, and commemorative paſſover; the ſacrificial paſſover is that, in which the lamb was ſlain, and was fixed to a certain time and place, and there was no altering it; the commemorative paſſover is that, in which no lamb is ſlain and eat, only a commemoration made of the deliverance of the people of Iſrael, out of Egypt; ſuch as is now kept by the Jews, being out of their own land, where ſacrifice with them is not lawful; and this 'tis ſuppoſed our Lord kept, and not the former: but it does not appear that there was ſuch a commemorative paſſover kept by the Jews, in our Lord's time, and whilſt the temple ſtood; and ſuppoſing there was ſuch an one allowed, and appointed for thoſe that were at a diſtance from Jeruſalem, and could not come up thither, (which was not the caſe of Chriſt and his diſciples) it is reaſonable to conclude, that it was to be kept, and was kept at the time the ſacrificial paſſover was, in the room of which it was ſubſtituted, as it is by the Jews to this day; ſo that this will by no means clear the matter, nor ſolve the difficulty; beſides, it is very manifeſt, that the paſſover our Lord kept was ſacrificial; and ſuch an one the diſciples propoſed to get ready for him, and did, of which he and they are ſaid to eat: and the firſt day of unleavened bread, when they KILLED the paſſover, his diſciples ſaid to him, where wilt thou that we go and prepare, that thou mayeſt EAT the paſſover? Mark xiv. 12. and again, then came the day of unleavened bread, when the paſſover MUST be KILLED, Luke xxii. 7. They made ready the paſſover, ver. 13. and he ſate down, and the twelve apoſtles with him, ver. 14. and he ſaid unto them, with deſire I have deſired to eat this paſſover, ver. 15. Others ſuggeſt, that this difference of obſerving the paſſover by Chriſt and the Jews, aroſe from fixing the beginning of the month, and ſo accordingly the feaſts in it, by the Φασις, or appearance of the moon; and that our Lord went according to the true appearance of it, and the Jews according to a falſe account: but of this, as a fact, there's no proof; beſides, tho' the feaſts were regulated and fixed according to the appearance of the moon, yet this was not left to the arbitrary will, pleaſure, and judgment of particular perſons, to determine as they ſhould think proper; but the Sanhedrim, or chief council of the nation ſat, at a proper time, to hear and examine witneſſes about the appearance of the moon; and accordingly determined, and none might fix but them [y]; and as this was doubtleſs the caſe at this time, it is not very reaſonable to think, that Chriſt would differ from them: beſides, it was either a clear caſe, or a doubtful one; if the former, then there would be no room nor reaſon to keep another day; and if it was the latter, then two days were obſerved, that they might be ſure they were right [z]; but then both were kept by all the Jews: and that the time of this paſſover was well known, is clear from various circumſtances; ſuch and ſuch facts were done, ſo many days before it; ſix days before it, Jeſus came to Bethany, John xii. 1. and two days before it, he was in the ſame place, Matt. xxvi. 2, 6. and ſays to his diſciples, ye know that after two days is the feaſt of the paſſover, &c. Others taking it for granted, that Chriſt kept the paſſover a day before the uſual and preciſe time, defend it, by obſerving the deſpotic and legiſlative power of Chriſt, who had a right to diſpenſe with the time of this feaſt, and could at his pleaſure anticipate it, becauſe the betraying of him and his death were ſo near at hand: that he had ſuch a power will not be diſputed; but that he ſhould uſe it in this way, does not ſeem neceſſary, on account of his death, ſeeing none but the living were obliged to it; nor ſo conſiſtent with his wiſdom, ſince hereby the mouths of his enemies would be opened againſt him, for acting not agreeable to the law of God: moreover, when it is conſidered that the paſſover, according to the Jews, was always kept, במועדו, in its ſet time [a], and was not put off on the account of the ſabbath, or any thing elſe, to another day; and that though when it was put off for particular perſons, on account of uncleanneſs, to another month, yet ſtill it was to be kept on the fourteenth day at even, in that month, Numb. ix. 10, 11. it will not eaſily be received that Chriſt obſerved it a day before the time: beſides, the paſſover lamb was not killed in a private houſe, but in the temple, in the court of it, and that always on the fourteenth of Niſan, after noon: ſo ſays Maimonides [b], "it is an affirmative command to ſlay the paſſover on the fourteenth of the month Niſan, after the middle of the day—— The paſſover is not ſlain but in the court, as the reſt of the holy things; even in the time that altars were lawful, they did not offer the paſſover on a private altar; and whoever offers the paſſover on a private altar, is to be beaten; as it is ſaid, thou mayeſt not ſacrifice the paſſover within any of thy gates, which the Lord thy God giveth thee, Deut. xvi. 5." And ſeeing therefore a paſſover lamb was not to be killed at home, but in the court of the prieſts, in the temple, it does not ſeem probable, that a ſingle lamb ſhould be ſuffered to be killed there, for Chriſt and his diſciples, on a day not obſerved by the Jews, contrary to the ſenſe of the Sanhedrim, and of the whole nation: add to this, that the ſacred text is expreſs for it, that it was at the exact time of this feaſt, when it was come according to general computation, that the diſciples moved to Chriſt to prepare the paſſover for him, and did, and they with him kept it: the account Matthew gives is very full; now the firſt day of the feaſt of unleavened bread; that is, when that was come in its proper time and courſe, the diſciples came to Jeſus; ſaying unto him, where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the paſſover? He bids them go to the city to ſuch a man, and ſay, I will keep the paſſover at thy houſe with my diſciples, and the diſciples did as Jeſus had appointed, and they made ready the paſſover; now when the even was come, the time of eating the paſſover, according to the law of God, he ſat down with the twelve, and as they did eat, &c. Matt. xxvi. 17, 18, 19, 20. and Mark is ſtill more particular, who ſays, and the firſt day of unleavened bread, when they killed the paſſover; that is, when the Jews killed the paſſover, on the very day the lamb was ſlain, and eaten by them; and then follows much the ſame account as before, Mark xiv. 12—18. and Luke yet more clearly expreſſes it, then came the day of unleavened bread, when the paſſover muſt be killed; according to the law of God, and the common uſage of the people of the Jews; yea, he not only obſerves, that Chriſt kept the uſual day, but the very hour, the preciſe time of eating it; for he ſays, and when the hour was come, he ſat down, and the twelve apoſtles with him, Luke xxii. 7—14. Nor is there any thing in this text, that is an objection to Chriſt and the Jews keeping the paſſover at the ſame time; ſince by the paſſover here is meant, the Chagigah, or feaſt kept on the fifteenth day of the month, as it is ſometimes called: in Deut. xvi. 2. it is ſaid, thou ſhalt therefore ſacrifice the paſſover unto the Lord thy God, of the flock and the herd: now the paſſover of the herd, can never mean the paſſover lamb, but the paſſover Chagigah; and ſo the Jewiſh commentators explain it; of the herd, ſays Jarchi, thou ſhalt ſacrifice for the Chagigah; and ſays Aben Ezra, for the peace-offerings; ſo Joſiah the king, is ſaid to give for the paſſovers, three thouſand bullocks, and the prieſts three hundred oxen, and the Levites five hundred oxen, 2 Chron. xxxv. 7, 8, 9. which Jarchi interprets of the peace offerings of the Chagigah, there called paſſovers; and ſo in 1 Eſd. i. 7, 8, 9. mention is made of three thouſand calves, beſides lambs, that Joſias gave for the paſſover; and three hundred by ſome other perſons, and ſeven hundred by others: the paſſage in Deuteronomy, is explained of the Chagigah, in both Talmuds [c], and in other writings [d]; ſo beſides the paſſover lamb, we read of ſacrifices ſlain, לשום פסח, in the name of the paſſover, or on account of it [e]; and particularly of the calf and the young bullock, ſlain for the ſake of the paſſover [f]: and now this is the paſſover which theſe men were to eat that day, and therefore were careful not to defile themſelves, that ſo they might not be unfit for it; otherwiſe had it been the paſſover lamb in the evening, they might have waſhed themſelves in the evening, according to the rules of, טבול יום, or the daily waſhing, and been clean enough to have eat it: beſides, it may be obſerved, that all the ſeven days were called the paſſover; and he that eat the unleavened bread, is ſaid by eating that, to eat the paſſover; and thus they invite their gueſts daily to eat the bread, ſaying [g], "every "one that is hungry, let him come and eat all that "he needs, ניפסח, and keep the paſſover." It is eaſy to obſerve the conſciences of theſe men, who were always wont to ſtrain at a gnat, and ſwallow a camel; they ſcruple going into the judgment-hall, which belonged to an heathen governour, and where was a large number of heathen ſoldiers; but they could go along with theſe into the garden to apprehend Chriſt, and ſpend a whole night in conſulting to ſhed innocent blood: no wonder that God ſhould be weary of their ſacrifices and ceremonious performances, when truſting to theſe, they had no regard to moral precepts: however, this may be teaching to us, in what manner we ſhould keep the feaſt, and eat of the true paſſover Chriſt; not with malice and wickedneſs, as theſe Jews eat theirs, but with ſincerity and truth: beſides, a Sanhedrim, when they had adjudged any one to death, were forbidden to eat any thing all that day [h]; and ſo whilſt ſcrupling one thing, they broke through another.

Ver. 29. Pilate then went out unto them, &c.] Either into the ſtreet, or rather into the place called the pavement, and in Hebrew Gabbatha; ſee ch. xix. 13. the place where the Jewiſh Sanhedrim uſed to ſit; wherefore in complaiſance to them, ſince they would not come into his court of judicature, he condeſcends to go into one of theirs, which ſhewed great civility and humanity in him: and ſaid, what accuſation bring ye againſt this man? meaning, what offence had he committed? what crime had they to charge him with? what did they accuſe him of? and what proof had they to ſupport their charge? His view was, to have the matter ſtated, the cauſe opened, and evidence given; that the accuſed being face to face with the accuſers, might anſwer for himſelf; and he, as a judge, be capable of judging between them: all which were very commendable in him, and agreeable to the Roman laws, and have an appearance of equity, juſtice, and impartiality.

Ver. 30. They anſwered and ſaid unto him, &c.] Offended at the queſtion put to them, and filled with indignation that they ſhould be ſo interrogated, with an air of haughtineſs and inſolence reply to him: if he were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered him up unto thee; inſinuating, that he was guilty of ſome very wicked action; not merely of a breach of ſome of their laws peculiar to them; for then they would have tried and judged him according to them, and not have brought him before him; but they ſuggeſt, that he was guilty of ſome male practices cognizable by Cæſar's court; and which they did not care to mention expreſly, leſt they ſhould not ſucceed, not having it may be as yet, their witneſſes ready; and hoped he would have took their own word for it, without any further proof, they being men of ſuch rank and dignity, and of ſo much knowledge, learning, and religion; and therefore took it ill of him, that he ſhould aſk ſuch perſons as they were, ſo famous for their prudence, integrity, and ſanctity, ſuch a queſtion: however, they own themſelves to be the betrayers and deliverers up of our Lord, which Chriſt had before foretold, and which Stephen afterwards charged them with.

Ver. 31. Then ſaid Pilate unto them, &c.] Either ironically, knowing that they did not, or it was not in their power, to judge in capital cauſes; or ſeriouſly, and with ſome indignation, abhorring ſuch a method of procedure they would have had him gone into, to condemn a man without knowing his crime, and having evidence of it: take ye him, and judge him according to your law; this he ſaid, as chuſing to underſtand them in no other ſenſe, than that he had broken ſome peculiar law of theirs, though they had otherwiſe ſuggeſted; and as giving them liberty to take him away to one of their courts, and proceed againſt him as their law directed, and inflict ſome leſſer puniſhment on him than death, ſuch as ſcourging, &c. which they ſtill had a power to do, and did make uſe of: the Jews therefore ſaid unto him, it is not lawful for us to put any man to death; thereby inſinuating, that he was guilty of a crime, which deſerved death, and which they could not inflict; not that they were of ſuch tender conſciences, that they could not put him to death, or that they had no law to puniſh him with death, provided he was guilty; but becauſe judgments in capital caſes had ceaſed among them; nor did they try cauſes relating to life and death, the date of which they often make to be forty years before the deſtruction of the temple [i]; and which was much about, or a little before the time theſe words were ſpoken: not that this power was taken away wholly from them by the Romans; though ſince their ſubjection to the empire, they had not that full and free exerciſe of it as before; but through the great increaſe of iniquity, particularly murder, which cauſed ſuch frequent executions, that they were weary of them [k]; and through the negligence and indolence of the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, and their removal from the room Gazith, where they only judged capital cauſes [l]: as for the ſtoning of Stephen, and the putting of ſome to death againſt whom Saul gave his voice, theſe were the outrages of the zealots, and were not according to a formal proceſs in any court of judicature. Two executions are mentioned in their Talmud; the one is of a prieſt's daughter that was burnt for a harlot [m], and the other of the ſtoning of ben Stada in Lydda [n]; the one, according to them, ſeems to be before, the other after the deſtruction of the temple; but theſe dates are not certain, nor to be depended upon: for ſince the deſtruction of their city and temple, and their being carried captive into other lands, 'tis certain that the power of life and death, has been wholly taken from them; by which it appears, that the ſceptre is removed from Judah, and a lawgiver from between his feet; and this they own almoſt in the ſame words, as here expreſſed; for they ſay [o] of a certain man worthy of death, "why "doſt thou ſcourge him? he replies, becauſe he "lay with a beaſt; they ſay to him, haſt thou any "witneſſes? he anſwers, yes; Elijah came in the "form of a man, and witneſſed; they ſay if it be "ſo, he deſerves to die; to which he anſwers, "from the day we have been carried captive out of "our land, לית לן רשותא למקטל, we have no "power to put to death." But at this time, their power was not entirely gone; but the true reaſon of their ſaying theſe words is, that they might wholly give up Chriſt to the Roman power, and throw off the reproach of his death from themſelves; and particularly they were deſirous he ſhould die the reproachful and painful death of the croſs, which was a Roman puniſhment: had they took him and judged him according to their law, which muſt have been as a falſe prophet, or for blaſphemy or idolatry, the death they muſt have adjudged him to, would have been ſtoning; but it was crucifixion they were ſet upon; and therefore deliver him up as a traitor, and a ſeditious perſon, in order thereunto.

Ver. 32. That the ſaying of Jeſus might be fulfilled, &c.] That he ſhould be delivered by the Jews to the Gentiles, to crucify him; and that he ſhould be lifted up from the earth, and as the ſerpent upon the pole: which he ſpake, ſignifying what death he ſhould die; Matt. xx. 19. John xii. 32, 33. and iii. 14. and which was brought about this way, by the providence of God conducting this whole affair; and was chearfully ſubmitted to by Chriſt, in great love to his people, to redeem them from the curſe of the law, being hereby made a curſe for them.

Ver. 33. Then Pilate entered into the judgment-hall again, &c.] Where he went at firſt, but the Jews refuſing to come in thither to him, he came out to them; and now they ſpeaking out more plainly, that he was guilty of a crime deſerving of death; as that he ſet up himſelf as a king, in oppoſition to Cæſar, and taught the people not to pay tribute to him; he goes into the prætorium again, and called Jeſus; beckoned, or ſent for him; or ordered him to come in thither to him, that he might alone, and the more freely, converſe with him; which Jeſus did, paying no regard to the ſuperſtitious obſervances of the Jews: and ſaid unto him, art thou the king of the Jews? This he might ſay, from a rumour that was generally ſpread, that there was ſuch a perſon to come, and was born; and by many it was thought, that Jeſus was he; and particularly from the charge of the Jews againſt him, which though not here expreſſed, is elſewhere; ſee Luke xxiii. 2. Wherefore Pilate was the more ſolicitous about the matter, on account of Cæſar, and leſt he ſhould be charged with dilatorineſs and negligence in this affair: ſome read theſe words not by way of queſtion, but affirmation, thou art the king of the Jews; which method he might make uſe of, the more eaſily to get it out of him, whether he was or no: and to this reading, Chriſt's anſwer in the next verſe ſeems beſt to agree.

Ver. 34. Jeſus anſwered him, ſayeſt thou this thing of thyſelf, &c.] That he was the king of the Jews: Chriſt's meaning is, whether he aſſerted this from the ſentiments of his own mind; or moved the queſtion from any thing he himſelf had obſerved, which might give him juſt ground to ſuſpect that he had, or intended to ſet up himſelf as the king of that nation: or did others tell it thee of me? Whether the Jews had not intimated ſome ſuch thing to him, out of malice and ill-will? not but that Chriſt full well knew, where the truth of this lay; but he was deſirous of convincing Pilate of his weakneſs, if he ſo judged of himſelf, and of his imprudence and haſtineſs, if he took up this from others; and alſo to expoſe the baſeneſs and wickedneſs of the Jews, to charge him with this, when they themſelves would have made him a temporal king, and he refuſed; and when he had not only paid tribute himſelf to Cæſar, but had exhorted them to do the like.

Ver. 35. Pilate anſwered, am I a Jew? &c.] This he ſaid, in a ſort of deriſion and contempt; who was not a Jew, neither by birth, nor by religion, and ſo had never imbibed any notions of their king Meſſiah, nor read any thing about him; and knew nothing of his diſtinguiſhing characters and properties, by which he was deſcribed, and might be known; and therefore it remained, that what he had ſaid, though not expreſſed, was not of himſelf, of his own knowledge or obſervation, but aroſe from ſome intimations and ſuggeſtions the Jews had given him: thine own nation and the chief prieſts have delivered thee unto me; that is, the men of his nation, his countrymen the Jews, who beſt underſtood their own laws and books of prophecy; and what expectations they had formed from thence, concerning their king, and his kingdom; and the principal of the prieſthood, who were accounted men of the greateſt learning, piety, and integrity, they had brought him bound before him; they had entered a charge againſt him, and had delivered him up into his hands, as an enemy to Cæſar, and a traitor to his government: what haſt thou done? as an occaſion of ſuch treatment, and as the foundation of ſuch a charge; ſurely there muſt be ſomething in it, or men of ſuch character would never impeach a man altogether innocent, and one of their own country too!

Ver. 36. Jeſus anſwered, my kingdom is not of this world, &c.] By ſaying which, he tacitly owns he was a king: as ſuch he was ſet up, and anointed by his Father from everlaſting; was propheſied of in the Old Teſtament; declared by the angel, both when he brought the news of his conception, and of his birth; was owned by many, who knew him to be ſo in the days of his fleſh; and ſince his reſurrection, aſcenſion, and ſeſſion at God's right hand, more manifeſtly appears to be one: he alſo hereby declares, that he had a kingdom; by which he means, not his natural and univerſal kingdom, as God, and the creator and governour of all things; but his mediatorial kingdom, adminiſtered both in the days of his fleſh, and after his reſurrection; which includes the whole Goſpel diſpenſation, Chriſt's viſible church-ſtate on earth, and the whole election of grace; it takes in that which will be at the cloſe of time, in the latter day, which will be more ſpiritual, and in which Chriſt will reign before his ancients glorioſly; and alſo the kingdom of God, or of heaven, even the ultimate glory: the whole of which is not of this world; the ſubjects of Chriſt's kingdom are not of the world, they are choſen and called out of it; the kingdom itſelf does not appear in worldly pomp and ſplendor, nor is it ſupported by worldly force, nor adminiſtered by worldly laws; nor does it ſo much regard the outward, as the inward eſtates of men; it promiſes no worldly emoluments, or temporal rewards. Chriſt does not ſay it is not in this world, but it is not of it; and therefore will not fail, when this world does, and the kingdoms thereof. Every thing that is carnal, ſenſual, and worldly, muſt be removed from our conceptions of Chriſt's kingdom, here or hereafter: and to this agrees what ſome Jewiſh writers ſay of the Meſſiah, and his affairs; “the Meſſiah they ſay [*], is ſeparated from “the world, becauſe he is abſolutely intellectual; “but the world is corporal; how then ſhould the “Meſſiah be in this world, when the world is corporal, and, ענין המשיח הוא אלהי לא גשמי, “the buſineſs of the Meſſiah is divine, and not corporal?” And ſince this was the caſe, Cæſar, or any civil government, had no reaſon to be uneaſy on account of his being a king, and having a kingdom; ſince his kingdom and intereſts did not in the leaſt break in upon, or injure any others: and that this was the nature of his kingdom, he proves by the following reaſon; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my ſervants fight that I ſhould not be delivered to the Jews: if Chriſt's kingdom had been a worldly one, ſet up on worldly views, and governed with worldly policy, and was to anſwer ſome worldly ends, Chriſt would have had ſervants enough among the Jews, who would have declared for him, and took up arms in his favour againſt the Romans; his own diſciples would not have ſuffered him to have been betrayed into the hands of the Jews by Judas; nor would he have hindered them from attempting his reſcue, as he did Peter; nor would they ſuffer him now to be delivered by Pilate into their hands, to put him to death; ſince they had ſuch a prince at the head of them, who was he to make uſe of his power, was able to drive all the Roman forces before them out of the nation, and oblige a general ſubmiſſion among the Jews, to the ſceptre of his kingdom: but now is my kingdom not from hence; it does not riſe out of, nor proceed upon, nor is it ſupported by worldly principles, wherefore none of the above methods are made uſe of.

Ver. 37. Pilate therefore ſaid unto him, &c.] Upon this free and full declaration of Chriſt, concerning his kingly office, and the nature of his kingdom: art thou a king then? or thou art a king then; for, from his having a kingdom, it might be very juſtly inferred that he was a king: Jeſus anſwered, thou ſayeſt that I am a king; and which was very rightly ſaid; and Chriſt by theſe words owns and confeſſes, that he was one: adding, to this end was I born, and for this cauſe came I into the world, that I ſhould bear witneſs unto the truth. The end of Chriſt's being born, which was of a virgin, in a very miraculous manner, and of his coming into the world, which was by the aſſumption of human nature, among many other things, was to bear teſtimony to truth in general; to the whole Goſpel, the word of truth, and every branch of it, which he brought with him, conſtantly preached in life, and confirmed by his death; and particularly to this truth, that he was a king, and had a kingdom in a ſpiritual ſenſe: every one that is of the truth; that is of God, belongs to the ſheep of Chriſt, knows the truth as it is in Jeſus, and is on the ſide of truth, and ſtands by it: heareth my voice; the voice of his Goſpel; and that not only externally, but internally; ſo as to approve of it, rejoice at it, and diſtinguiſh it; and the voice of his commands, ſo as chearfully to obey them from a principle of love to him.

Ver. 38. Pilate ſaith unto him, what is truth? &c.] That is in general, or that which Chriſt then particularly ſpoke of: many things might be obſerved in anſwer to this queſtion, as that there is the truth and faithfulneſs of God in his word and promiſes; the truth of grace in the hearts of his people; Jeſus Chriſt himſelf is truth, he is true God, and true man; the truth of all covenant tranſactions, of all types, promiſes, and prophecies; whatever he ſaid and taught, was truth, and the truth of all doctrine comes from him. The Goſpel is truth in general, it comes from the God of truth; lies in the ſcriptures of truth; Chriſt who is truth itſelf, is the ſubſtance of it; the Spirit of truth has an hand in it, leads into it, and makes it effectual; the whole of it is true, and every particular doctrine of it; as the manifeſtation of the Son of God in human nature, his coming into the world to ſave the chief of ſinners, juſtification by his righteouſneſs, pardon by his blood, atonement by his ſacrifice, the reſurrection of the dead, &c. The ſame queſtion is put in the Talmud[p], מה אמת, what is truth? and it is anſwered, that he is the living God, and the king of the world: we don't find that our Lord gave any anſwer to this queſtion, which might be put in a ſcornful, jeering way; nor did Pilate wait for one; for when he had ſaid this, he went out again unto the Jews: as ſoon as he had put the queſtion about truth, having no great inclination to hear what Chriſt would ſay to it; nor did he put it for information ſake, or as having any opinion of Chriſt, and that he was able to anſwer it; he directly goes out of the judgment-hall, taking Jeſus along with him, and addreſſes the Jews after this manner: and ſaith unto them, I find in him no fault at all; and indeed how ſhould he? there was no ſin in his nature, nor guile in his lips, nor any iniquity in his life; the devil himſelf could find none in him. This confeſſion is both to the ſhame of Pilate and the Jews; to the reproach of Pilate, that after this he ſhould condemn him; and of the Jews, that after ſuch a fair and full declaration from the judge, they ſhould inſiſt upon his crucifixion; it ſhews however, that he died not for any ſin of his own, but for the ſins of others.

Ver. 39. But ye have a cuſtom, &c.] Not a law, either of God or man's, but a cuſtom; and which was not originally obſerved at the feaſt of the paſſover, and perhaps was not of any long ſtanding; but what the Roman governours, by the order of Cæſar, or of their own pleaſure, had introduced to ingratiate themſelves into the affections of the people; and being repeated once and again, was now looked for: that I ſhould releaſe unto you one at the paſſover; which was at this time; and more than one it ſeems it was not cuſtomary to releaſe: will ye therefore that I releaſe unto you the king of the Jews? who they had ſaid called himſelf ſo, and was ſo accounted by others, and which Pilate ſays, in a ſneering, ſarcaſtic way; though he was heartily willing to releaſe him, and was in hopes they would have agreed to it, ſince nothing could be proved againſt him; however he propoſes it to them, and leaves it to their option.

Ver. 40. Then cried they all again, &c.] For it ſeems that Pilate had made this propoſal once before, and that this was the ſecond time, though not mentioned; yet ſome copies, and the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, leave out the word again: they all, prieſts and people, in a very clamorous manner, cried out as one man, with one united voice, all at once; ſaying, not this man, but Barabbas; now Barabbas was a robber; who was an emblem of God's elect in a ſtate of nature, releaſed and ſet free when Chriſt was condemned. Theſe, as he, many of them at leaſt, are notorious ſinners, the chief of ſinners, robbers and murderers; who have robbed God of his glory, and deſtroyed themſelves; are priſoners, concluded in ſin and unbelief, and ſhut up in the law, and in a pit, wherein is no water, in their nature ſtate; and were, as this man, worthy of death, and by nature children of wrath; and yet children of God by adopting grace, as his name Bar Abba ſignifies, the ſon of the father: theſe, though ſuch criminals, and ſo deſerving of puniſhment, were let go free, when Chriſt was taken, condemned, and died; and which was according to the wiſe and ſecret counſel of Jehovah, and is a large diſcovery of divine grace; and what lays thoſe who are releaſed, under the greateſt obligations to live to him, who ſuffered for them, in their room and ſtead.

[p] T. Hieroſ. Sanhedrin, fol. 18. 1.

CHAP. XIX.

Ver. 1. THEN Pilate therefore took Jeſus, &c.] Finding that the Jews would not agree to his releaſe, but that Barabbas was the perſon they choſe, and being very deſirous, if poſſible, to ſave his life, thought of this method: he ordered Jeſus to be taken by the proper officers, and ſcourged him; that is, commanded him to be ſcourged by them; which was done by having him to a certain place, where being ſtripped naked, and faſtened to a pillar, he was ſeverely whipped: and this he did, hoping the Jews would be ſatisfied therewith, and agree to his diſmiſſion; but tho' he did this with ſuch a view, yet it was a very unjuſt action in him to ſcourge a man that he himſelf could find no fault in: however, it was what was foretold by Chriſt himſelf, and was an emblem of thoſe ſtrokes and ſcourges of divine juſtice he endured, as the ſurety of his people, in his ſoul, in their ſtead; and his being ſcourged, tho' innocent, ſhews, that it was not for his own, but the ſins of others; and expreſſes the vile nature of ſin, the ſtrictneſs of juſtice, and the grace, condeſcenſion, and patience of Chriſt: and this may teach us not to think it ſtrange that any of the ſaints ſhould endure ſcourgings, in a literal ſenſe; and to bear patiently the ſcourgings and chaſtiſements of our heavenly Father, and not to fear the overflowing ſcourge or wrath of God, ſince Chriſt has bore this in our room.

Ver. 2. And the ſoldiers platted a crown of thorns, &c.] This was an emblem of his being ſurrounded by wicked men, ſons of Belial, comparable to thorns, whilſt he hung ſuffering on the croſs; and of the ſins of his people compaſſing him about, which were as thorns, very grievous to him; and of his various troubles in life, and of his being made a curſe for us at death; thorns being the produce of the curſe upon the earth. And put it on his head: not only by way of deriſion, as mocking at his character, the king of the Jews, but in order to afflict and diſtreſs him. And they put on him a purple robe; Matthew calls it a ſcarlet robe; and the Arabic and Perſic verſions here, a red one: it very probably was one of the ſoldier's coats, which are uſually red: this was ſtill in deriſion of him as a king, and was an emblem of his being clothed with our purple and ſcarlet ſins, and of the bloody ſufferings of his human nature for them, and thro' which we come to have a purple covering, or to be juſtified by his blood, and even to be made truly kings, as well as prieſts, unto God.

Ver. 3. And ſaid, hail king of the Jews, &c.] Some copies before this clauſe read, and they came unto him; and ſo read the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, Coptic, and Ethiopic verſions; that is, they came and proſtrated themſelves before him; bowed the knee unto him, and addreſſed him in a mock way, as if he was an earthly monarch juſt come to his crown, and whom they wiſhed long to live; thus mocking at his kingly office, and deſpiſing him under that character, as many do now: ſome will not have him to reign over them, but reject him as king; and others, tho' in words they own him to be king, yet diſregard his commands, and act no better part than theſe ſcoffing ſoldiers did: and they ſmote him with their hands; upon his cheeks, as the Syriac verſion reads it. Theſe, and many other affronts they gave him; in all which they were indulged by Pilate, and was a pleaſing ſcene to the wicked Jews, whoſe relentleſs hearts were not in the leaſt moved hereby, tho' Pilate hoped they would; and which was his view in allowing the ſoldiers to uſe ſuch incivilities and indecencies to him.

Ver. 4. Pilate therefore went forth again, &c.] When all this was done to Jeſus, Pilate went again out of the judgment-hall, or however from the place where Jeſus had been ſcourged, and ill uſed in the manner he was: he went a little before him unto the Jews that ſtood without, and ſaith unto them, behold I bring him forth to you; that is, he had ordered him to be brought forth by the ſoldiers, and they were juſt bringing him in the ſad miſerable condition in which he was, that the Jews might ſee, with their own eyes, how he had been uſed: that ye may know that I find no fault in him; for by ſeeing what was done to him, how ſeverely he had been ſcourged, and in what deriſion and contempt he had been had, and what barbarity had been exerciſed on him, they might know and believe, that if Pilate did all this, or allowed of it to be done to a man whom he judged innocent, purely to gratify the Jews; that had he found any thing in him worthy of death, he would not have ſtopped here, but would have ordered the execution of him; of this they might aſſure themſelves by his preſent conduct. Pilate, by his own confeſſion, in treating, or ſuffering to be treated in ſo cruel and ignominious a manner, one that he himſelf could find no fault in, or cauſe of accuſation againſt, was guilty of great injuſtice.

Ver. 5. Then came Jeſus forth, &c.] Out of the judgment-hall, or place where he had been ſcourged, as ſoon as Pilate had ſaid theſe words: wearing the crown of thorns, and the purple robe; with his temples ſcratched and torn with the thorny crown, and the blood running down from thence, and his face and eyes ſwoln with the blows he had received from their cloſed fiſts, and all beſmeared with his own blood, and the ſoldiers ſpittle; his body appearing to be almoſt of the ſame colour with the purple or ſcarlet robe, thro' the ſtripes and laſhes he had received, when that was thrown back. And Pilate ſaith unto them, behold the man; not their king, that would have provoked them; tho' he did ſay ſo afterwards, when he found he could not prevail upon them to agree to his releaſe; but the man, to move their compaſſion; ſignifying, that he was a man as they were, and that they ought to uſe him as ſuch, and treat him with humanity and pity; and that he was a poor deſpicable man, as the condition he was in, ſhewed; and that it was a weak thing in them to fear any thing with reſpect to any change of, or influence in civil government from one that made ſuch a figure; and therefore ſhould be ſatisfied with what had been done to him, and diſmiſs him.

Ver. 6. When the chief-prieſts therefore, and officers, ſaw him, &c.] In this piteous condition, in his mock-dreſs, and having on him all the marks of cruel uſage, enough to have moved an heart of ſtone: and tho' they were the principal men of the prieſthood, and who made great pretenſions to religion and piety, and the officers were their ſervants and attendants, and all of them uſed to ſacred employments; which might have been thought would have at leaſt influenced them to the exerciſe of humanity and compaſſion to fellow-creatures; yet inſtead of being affected with this ſight, and wrought upon by it, to have agreed to his releaſe, as Pilate hoped, they cried out, ſaying, crucify him, crucify him; which was done in a very noiſy and clamorous way; and the repetition of their requeſt ſhews their malignity, vehemence, and impatience; and remarkable it is, that they ſhould call for, and deſire that kind of death the ſcriptures had pointed out, that the Meſſiah ſhould die, and which was predicted by Chriſt himſelf. Pilate ſaith unto them, take ye him, and crucify him, for I find no fault in him. This was not leave to do it, as appears from the reaſon he gives, in which the innocence of Chriſt is again aſſerted; nor did the Jews take it in this light, as is evident from their reply; and 'tis clear, that after this Pilate thought he had a power either to releaſe or crucify him; and he did afterwards ſeek to releaſe him; and the Jews made a freſh requeſt to crucify him; upon which he was delivered to be crucified: but this was ſaid in a way of indignation, and as abhorring the action; and is an ironical conceſſion, and a bitter ſarcaſm upon them, that men that profeſſed ſo much religion and ſanctity, could be guilty of ſuch iniquity, as to deſire the death of one that no fault could be found in; and therefore, if ſuch were their conſciences, for his part, he deſired to have no concern in ſo unrighteous an action; but if they would, they muſt even do it themſelves.

Ver. 7. The Jews anſwered him, &c.] Finding they could make nothing of the charge of ſedition againſt him, and that Pilate could not be prevailed upon to adjudge him to death upon that ſcore, they try another method, and charge him with blaſphemy; which, if the other had ſucceeded, they would have concealed; becauſe this, if proved, according to their law, would not have brought on him the kind of death they were deſirous of: we have a law; meaning the law of Moſes, which they had received by his hands from God: and by our law he ought to die; referring either to the law concerning blaſphemy in general, or concerning the falſe prophet, or to the having and aſſerting of other Gods, and enticing to the worſhip of them; in either of which caſes death by ſtoning was enjoined: becauſe he made himſelf the Son of God; the natural and eſſential Son of God; not by adoption, or on account of his incarnation and mediatorial office; but as being one with the Father, of the ſame nature with him, and equal to him in all his perfections and glory. This he had often aſſerted in his miniſtry, or what was equivalent to it, and which they ſo underſtood; and indeed had ſaid that very morning before the high-prieſt in his palace, what amounted thereunto, and which he ſo interpreted; upon which he rent his garments, and charged him with blaſphemy: for that God has a Son, is denied by the Jews, ſince Jeſus aſſerted himſelf to be ſo, tho' formerly believed by them; nor was it now denied that there was a Son of God, or that he was expected; but the blaſphemy with them was, that Jeſus ſet up himſelf to be he: but now 'tis vehemently oppoſed by them, that God has a Son; ſo from Eccl. iv. 8. they endeavour to prove [q], that God has neither a brother, ולא בן, nor a ſon; but, hear, O Iſrael, they obſerve, the Lord our God is one Lord. And elſewhere [r], "there "is one; this is the holy bleſſed God; and not a "ſecond; for he has no partner or equal in his "world; yea, he hath neither child nor brother; he "hath no brother, nor hath he a ſon; but the "holy bleſſed God loves Iſrael, and calls them his "children, and his brethren." All which is oppoſed to the Chriſtian doctrine, relating to the Sonſhip of Chriſt. The conduct of theſe men, at this time, deſerves notice, as their craft in impoſing on Pilate's ignorance of their laws; and the little regard that they themſelves had to them, in calling for crucifixion inſtead of ſtoning; and their inconſiſtence with themſelves, pretending before it was not lawful for them to put any man to death; and now they have a law, and by that law, in their judgment, he ought to die.

Ver. 8. When Pilate therefore heard that ſaying, &c.] That Jeſus had aſſerted himſelf to be the Son of God, and that the Jews had a law to put ſuch a perſon to death that was guilty of ſuch blaſphemy: he was the more afraid; he was afraid to put him to death, or to conſent to it before; partly on account of his wife's meſſage to him, and partly upon a conviction of the innocence of Chriſt, in his own conſcience: and now he was more afraid, ſince here was a charge brought againſt him he did not well underſtand the meaning of; and a law of theirs pretended to be violated hereby, which ſhould he pay no regard to, might occaſion a tumult, ſince they were already become very clamorous and noiſy; and he might be the more uneaſy, leſt the thing they charged him with aſſerting, ſhould be really fact; that he was one of the gods come down in the likeneſs of man; or that he was ſome demigod at leaſt, or ſo nearly related to deity, that it might be dangerous for him to have any thing to do with him this way: and in this ſuſpicion he might be ſtrengthened, partly from the writings of the Heathens, which ſpeak of ſuch ſort of beings; and partly from the miracles he might have heard were performed by Jeſus; and alſo by calling to mind what he had lately ſaid to him, that his kingdom was not of this world, and that he was come into it to bear witneſs to the truth.

Ver. 9. And went again into the judgment-hall, &c.] From whence he came out, taking Jeſus along with him, in order to interrogate him alone upon this head: and ſaith unto Jeſus, whence art thou? meaning not of what country he was, for he knew he was of the nation of the Jews; nor in what place he was born, whether at Bethlehem, or at Nazareth, for this was no concern of his; but from whence he ſprung, who were his anceſtors, and whether his deſcent was from the gods, or from men; and if from the former, from which of them; for as Pilate was an Heathen, he muſt be ſuppoſed to ſpeak as ſuch: but Jeſus gave him no anſwer; for his queſtion was frivolous, and deſerved none; and beſides, he was not worthy of one, who had uſed him ſo ill, when he knew, in his own conſcience, that he was innocent; nor was he capable of taking in an anſwer, or able to judge whether it was right or wrong; and ſince Chriſt was come to die for the ſalvation of his people, it was not proper he ſhould ſay any thing that might be a means of hindering it.

Ver. 10. Then ſaith Pilate unto him, &c.] Being angry with him, reſenting his ſilence, and looking upon it as a contempt of him: ſpeakeſt thou not unto me? he wondered that he ſtood in no fear of him, who was the Roman governour, his judge; who had the power of life and death; and that he ſhould make no anſwer to him, who was in ſo much dignity, and in ſo high and exalted a ſtation. Knoweſt thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to releaſe thee? proudly boaſting of his authority to do one or the other. The ſudden change of the man from fear, to vain and proud boaſting, is to be obſerved; juſt now he was afraid of the divine power of Chriſt, leſt he ſhould have any divinity in him; and now he boaſts and brags of his own power, and menaces and threatens with his authority to puniſh with death, even the death of the croſs; in which he diſcovers his wickedneſs, as a magiſtrate, to endeavour to terrify one that he himſelf believed to be innocent: and beſides, his aſſertion is falſe; for he had no power, neither from God nor man, to crucify innocent men, and releaſe criminals: and moreover, he himſelf muſt be ſelf-condemned, who had a power, as he ſays, of releaſing him, and yet did not do it, tho' he had once and again declared he found no fault in him.

Ver. 11. Jeſus anſwered, &c.] With great intrepidity and courage, with freedom and boldneſs, as being not at all diſmayed with his threatnings, or affected with his proud boaſts, and in order to expoſe the vanity of them: thou couldſt have no power at all againſt me, except it were given thee from above; meaning, not from the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, whoſe court of judicature was in the temple, which was higher than the other part of the city; nor from the Roman emperor, or ſenate of Rome, the higher powers; by whom Pilate was made governour of Judea, and a judge in all cauſes relating to life and death; but reference is had to the place from whence he came, and to the decree and council of God above, and the agreement between the eternal three in heaven. Chriſt ſpeaks of a power he had againſt him, that is, of taking away his life; he had no lawful power to do it at all; nor any power, right or wrong, had it not been given him by God: and which is to be aſcribed, not merely to the general providence of God, without which nothing is done in this world; but to the determinate counſel of God, relating to this particular action of the crucifying of Chriſt; otherwiſe Chriſt, as God, could have ſtruck Pilate his judge with death immediately, and without ſo doing could as eaſily have eſcaped out of his hands, as he had ſometimes done out of the hands of the Jews; and, as man and mediator, he could have prayed to his Father for, and have had more than twelve legions of angels, which would ſoon have reſcued him: but this was not to be; power was given to Pilate from heaven againſt him; not for any evil he himſelf had committed, or merely to gratify the envy and malice of the Jews, but for the ſalvation of God's elect, and for the glorifying of the divine perfections: and to this the Jews themſelves agree in general, "that all the things of this world depend on above; and when they agree above firſt, they ſay [*], they agree below; and that there is no power below, until that דאתייהיב שולטנותא לעילא, power is given from above; and the whole of that depends on this:" therefore he that delivered me unto thee, hath the greater ſin; מן דילך, than thine, as the Syriac verſion adds; and to the ſame purpoſe the Perſic. Pilate had been guilty of ſin already in ſcourging Chriſt, and ſuffering the Roman ſoldiers to abuſe him; and would be guilty of a greater in delivering him up to be crucified, who he knew was innocent: but the ſin of Judas in delivering him into the hands of the chief-prieſts and elders, and of the chief prieſt and elders and people of the Jews, in delivering him to Pilate to crucify him, according to the Roman manner, were greater, in as much as theirs proceeded from malice and envy, and was done againſt greater light and knowledge; for by his works, miracles, and miniſtry, as well as by their own propheſies, they might, or muſt have known, that he was the Meſſiah, and Son of God: and it is to be obſerved, that as there is a difference in ſin, and that all ſins are not equal, the circumſtances of things making an alteration; ſo that God's decree concerning the delivery of his Son into the hands of ſinful men, does not excuſe the ſin of the betrayers of him.

Ver. 12. And from thenceforth Pilate ſought to releaſe him, &c.] From the time that Chriſt ſpoke the above words; or, as the Syriac verſion renders it, מטול הדא, becauſe of this, or on account of the words he had ſpoken; to which agree the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions: he ſought by all means, and ſtudied every way to bring the Jews to agree to his releaſe: his reaſons were, becauſe of the conſciouſneſs of guilt, and the danger of contracting more; the ſenſe he might have of a divine being, to whom he was accountable for the exerciſe of his power; his ſuſpicion that Jeſus was the Son of God, or that he was more than a man; for he perceived that power went along with his words, by the effect they had on him: but tho' he ſought to releaſe him, he did not do it, nor uſe the power he boaſted he had; the reaſon in himſelf was, he was deſirous that the Jews would concur with him; the ſecret one in providence was, God would not have it ſo; and yet things muſt be carried to this pitch, that it might appear that Chriſt ſuffered not for his own ſins, but ours, and that he ſuffered willingly: but the Jews cried out, ſaying, if thou let this man go, thou art not Cæſar's friend. Theſe were the chief-prieſts, Scribes, and elders of the people, more eſpecially, and by whom the common people were ſtirred up to requeſt his crucifixion; theſe ſtill made a greater outcry, and in a more clamorous way urged, that ſhould he be releaſed, Pilate would ſhew but little regard to Cæſar, by whom he was raiſed to this dignity; who had put him into this truſt; whom he repreſented, and in whoſe name he acted. This was a piece of craftineſs in them, for nothing could more nearly affect Pilate, than an inſinuation of want of friendſhip and fidelity to Tiberius, who was then Cæſar, or emperor; and alſo, it was an inſtance of great hypocriſy in them, to pretend a regard to Cæſar, when they ſcrupled paying tribute to him, and would have been glad, at any rate, to have been free from his yoke and government; and is a very ſpiteful hint, and carries in it a ſort of threatening to Pilate, as if they would bring a charge againſt him to Cæſar, ſhould he let Jeſus go with his life, whom they in a contemptuous manner call this man: adding, whoſoever maketh himſelf a king, ſpeaketh againſt Cæſar; returning to their former charge of ſedition, finding that that of blaſphemy had not its effect: their reaſoning is very fallacious, and mere ſophiſtry; for tho' it might be allowed that whoever ſet up himſelf as a temporal king in any of Cæſar's dominions, muſt be an enemy of his, a rebel againſt him; and ſuch a declaration might be truly interpreted as high-treaſon; yet Chriſt did not give out that he was ſuch a king, but, on the contrary, that his kingdom was not of this world, and therefore did not aſſume to himſelf any part of Cæſar's dominions and government; and tho' the Jews would have took him by force, and made him a king, he refuſed it, and got out of their hands.

[*] Zohar in Gen. fol. 99. 1.

Ver. 13. When Pilate therefore heard that ſaying, &c.] Of the Jews, that a diſmiſſion of Jeſus would ſhew an unfriendlineſs to Cæſar; and gave very broad hints, that they would accuſe him to Cæſar of treachery and unfaithfulneſs, in letting go a man, that made pretenſions to be a king in his territories; and knowing very well the jealouſies and ſuſpicions of Tiberius, and fearing leſt it would turn to his own diſrepute and diſadvantage, immediately he brought Jeſus forth; out of the judgment-hall, the place where he had been examined in; not to declare his innocence, nor to move their pity, nor to releaſe him, but to paſs ſentence on him. And he ſat down in the judgment-ſeat; for that purpoſe. He had ſat but little all this while, but was continually going in and out to examine Jeſus, and converſe with the Jews; but he now takes his place, and ſits down as a judge, in order to give the finiſhing ſtroke to this affair; and where he ſat down, was in the place that is called the pavement, but in the Hebrew, Gabbatha. This place, in the Greek tongue, was called Lithoſtrotos; or the pavement of ſtones, as the Syriac verſion renders it: it is thought to be the room Gazith, in which the Sanhedrim ſat in the temple when they tried capital cauſes[t]; and it was ſo called, becauſe it was paved with ſmooth, ſquare, hewn ſtones: "it was in the north part; half of it was holy, and half of it common; and it had two doors, one for that part which was holy, and another for that which was common; and in that half which was common the Sanhedrim ſat[u]." So that into this part of it, and by this door, Pilate, though a Gentile, might enter. This place, in the language of the Jews, who at this time ſpoke Syriac, was Gabbatha, from its height, as it ſhould ſeem; tho' the Syriac and Perſic verſions read Gaphiphta, which ſignifies a fence, or an incloſure. Mention is made in the Talmud[w] of the upper Gab in the mountain of the houſe; but whether the ſame with this Gabbatha, and whether this is the ſame with the chamber Gazith, is not certain. The Septuagint uſe the ſame word as John here does, and call by the ſame name, the pavement of the temple on which the Iſraelites fell and worſhipped God, 2 Chron. vii. 3.

Ver. 14. And it was the preparation of the paſſover, &c.] So the Jews[x] ſay, that Jeſus ſuffered on the eve of the paſſover; and the author of the blaſphemous account of his life ſays[y], it was the eve both of the paſſover and the ſabbath; which account ſo far agrees with the evangelic hiſtory; but then this preparation of the paſſover was not of the paſſover-lamb, for that had been prepared and eaten the night before. Nor do I find that there was any particular day which was called the preparation of the paſſover in ſuch ſenſe, and much leſs that this day was the day before the eating of the paſſover. According to the law in Exod. xii. 3—6. the lamb for the paſſover was to be ſeparated from the reſt of the flock on the tenth day of the month, and to be kept up till the fourteenth; but this is never called the preparation of the paſſover; and was it ſo called, it cannot be intended here; the preparing and making ready the paſſover the Evangeliſts ſpeak of, were on the ſame day it was eaten, and deſign the getting ready a place to eat it in, and things convenient for that purpoſe, and the killing the lamb, and dreſſing it, and the like, Matt. xxvi. 17, 19. Mark xiv. 12, 15, 16. Luke xxii. 8, 9, 12, 13. there is what the Jews call פרוס הפסח, which was a ſpace of fifteen days before the paſſover, and began at the middle of the thirty days before the feaſt, in which they uſed to aſk queſtions, and explain the traditions concerning the paſſover[z]; but this is never called the preparation of the paſſover: and on the night of the fourteenth month they ſought for diligently, in every hole and corner of their houſes, for leavened bread, in order to remove it[a]; but this alſo never went by any ſuch name: wherefore, if any reſpect is had to the preparation for the paſſover, it muſt either deſign the preparation of the Chagigah, which was a grand feſtival, commonly kept on the fifteenth day, and which was ſometimes called the paſſover; or elſe the preparation for the whole feaſt all the remaining days of it; ſee the note on ch. xviii. 28. but it ſeems beſt of all to underſtand it only of the preparation for the ſabbath, which, becauſe it was in the paſſover week, is called the paſſover preparation-day: and it may be obſerved, that it is ſometimes only called the day of the preparation, and the preparation, Matt. xxvii. 62. Luke xxiii. 54. John xix. 31. and ſometimes the Jews preparation-day, John xix. 42. and it is explained by the Evangeliſt Mark, ch. xv. 42. It was the preparation, that is, the day before the ſabbath; on which they both prepared themſelves for the ſabbath, and food to eat on that day; and this being the time of the paſſover likewiſe, the preparation was the greater: and therefore to diſtinguiſh this preparation-day for the ſabbath, from others, it is called the paſſover-preparation; nor have I obſerved that any other day is called the preparation but that before the ſabbath: the Jews diſpute about preparing food for the ſabbath on a feaſt-day, as this was; they ſeem to forbid it, but afterwards ſoften their words, and allow it with ſome proviſo's: their canon runs thus[b]; "a feaſt-day which falls on the eve of the ſabbath, a man may not boil (any thing) at the beginning of the feaſt-day for the ſabbath, but he may boil for the feaſt-day; and if there is any left, it may be left for the ſabbath; and he may make a boiling on the eve of a feaſt-day, and depend on it for the ſabbath: the houſe of Shammai ſay two boilings; and the houſe of Hillel ſay one boiling." Bartenora on the paſſage obſerves, that ſome ſay the reaſon of this boiling on the evening of a feaſt-day, is for the honour of the ſabbath; for becauſe from the evening of the feaſt-day, the ſabbath is remembered, that which is beſt is choſen for the ſabbath, that the ſabbath may not be forgotten thro' the buſineſs of the feaſt-day. The account Maimonides[c] gives of this matter is, "on a common day they prepare for the ſabbath, and on a common day they prepare for a feaſt-day; but they don't prepare on a feaſt-day for the ſabbath, nor is the ſabbath, מכינה, a preparation for a feaſt-day." This ſeems to be contrary to the practice of the Jews in the times of Chriſt, as related by the Evangeliſts, underſtanding by the preparation they ſpeak of, a preparation of food for the ſabbath; but what he afterwards ſays[d] makes ſome allowance for it: "a feaſt-day, which happens to be on the eve of the ſabbath, (Friday) they neither bake nor boil, on a feaſt-day what is eaten on the morrow, on the ſabbath; and this prohibition is from the words of the Scribes, (not from the word of God) that a “man ſhould not boil any thing on a feaſt-day for a common day, and much leſs for the ſabbath; but if he makes a boiling (or prepares food) on the evening of a feaſt-day on which he depends and boils and bakes on a feaſt-day for the ſabbath, lo, this is lawful; and that on which he depends is called the mingling of food.” And this food, ſo called, was a ſmall portion of food prepared on a feaſt for the ſabbath, tho' not leſs than the quantity of an olive, whether for one man or a thouſand[e]; by virtue of which, they depending on it for the ſabbath, they might prepare whatever they would, after having aſked a bleſſing over it, and ſaying[f], “by this mixture it is free for me to bake and boil on a feaſt-day what is for the morrow, the ſabbath; and if a man prepares for others, he muſt ſay for me, and for ſuch an one, and ſuch an one; or for the men of the city, and then all of them may bake and boil on a feaſt-day for the ſabbath.” And about the ſixth hour; to which agrees the account in Matt. xxvii. 45. Luke xxiii. 44. but Mark ſays, ch. xv. 25. that it was the third hour, and they crucified him; and Beza ſays he found it ſo written in one copy; and ſo read Peter of Alexandria, Beza's ancient copy, and ſome others, and Nonnus: but the copies in general agree in, and confirm the common reading, and which is differently accounted for; ſome by the different computations of the Jews and Romans; others by obſerving that the Jewiſh day was divided into four parts, each part containing three hours, and were called the third, the ſixth, the ninth, and the twelfth hours; and not only that time, when one of theſe hours came, was called by that name, but alſo from that all the ſpace of the three hours, till the next came, was called by the name of the former: for inſtance, all the ſpace from nine o'clock till twelve was called the third hour; and all from twelve to three in the afternoon the ſixth hour: hence the time of Chriſt's crucifixion being ſuppoſed to be ſomewhat before, but yet near our twelve of the clock, it may be truly here ſaid that it was about the ſixth hour; and as truly by Mark the third hour; that ſpace, which was called by the name of the third hour, being not yet paſſed, tho' it drew toward an end. This way go Godwin and Hammond, whoſe words I have expreſſed, and bids fair for the true ſolution of the difficulty: tho' it ſhould be obſerved that Mark agrees with the other Evangeliſts about the darkneſs which was at the ſixth hour, the time of Chriſt's crucifixion, ch. xv. 33, 34. and it is to be remarked, that he does not ſay that it was the third hour when they crucified him, or that they crucified him at the third hour; but it was the third hour, and they crucified him, as Dr. Lightfoot obſerves. It was the time of day when they ſhould have been at the daily ſacrifice, and preparing for the ſolemnity of that day particularly, which was their Chagigah, or grand feaſt; but inſtead of this they were proſecuting his crucifixion, which they brought about by the ſixth hour. And about this time Pilate ſaid, and did the following things: and he ſaith unto the Jews, behold your king; whom ſome of your people, it ſeems, have owned for their king, and you charge with ſetting up himſelf as one; ſee what a figure he makes; does he look like a king? this he ſaid, in order to move upon their affections, that, if poſſible, they might agree to releaſe him, and to ſhame them out of putting ſuch a poor deſpicable creature to death; and as upbraiding them for their folly, in fearing any thing from ſo mean and contemptible a man.

Ver. 15. But they cried out away with him, &c.] As a perſon hateful and loathſome to them, the ſight of whom they could not bear; and this they ſaid with great indignation and wrath, and with great vehemency, earneſtneſs and importunacy, in a very clamorous way; repeating the words away with him: they were impatient until he was ordered away for execution; and nothing would ſatisfy them but the crucifixion of him; and therefore they ſay, crucify him; which is alſo repeated in the Syriac verſion; for this was what they thirſted after, and were ſo intent upon; this cry was made by the chief prieſts: Pilate ſaith unto them, ſhall I crucify your king? This he ſaid either ſeriouſly or jeeringly, and it may be with a view to draw out of them their ſentiments, concerning Cæſar, as well as him; however it had this effect; the chief prieſts anſwered, we have no king but Cæſar; whereby they denied God to be their king, tho' they uſed to ſay, and ſtill ſay in their prayers; we have no king but God[g]: they rejected the government of the king Meſſiah, and tacitly confeſſed that the ſceptre was departed from Judah; and what they now ſaid, came quickly upon them, and ſtill continues; for according to prophecy, Hoſ. iii. 4. they have been many days and years without a king; and this they ſaid in ſpite to Jeſus, and not in reſpect to Cæſar, whoſe government they would have been glad to have had an opportunity to ſhake off. They could name no one as king but Jeſus, or Cæſar; the former they rejected, and were obliged to own the latter: it is a poor obſervation of the Jew[h] upon this paſſage, that it “ſhews that before the crucifixion of Jeſus, the Roman Cæſars ruled over Iſrael; and that this Cæſar was Tiberius, who had ſet Pilate over Jeruſalem, as is clear from Luke iii. 1. Wherefore here's an anſwer to the objection of the Nazarenes, who ſay that the Jews, for the ſin of crucifying Jeſus, loſt their kingdom.” To which may be replied, that this is not ſaid by any of the writers of the New Teſtament, that the kingdom of the Jews was taken away from them for their ſin of crucifying Jeſus; and therefore this is no contradiction to any thing ſaid by them; this is only the aſſertion of ſome private perſons, upon whom it lies to defend themſelves; and what is aſſerted, is defenſible, nor do the words of the text militate againſt it: for tho' before the crucifixion of Chriſt the Jews were tributary to the Roman Cæſars, and Roman governours were ſent to preſide among them; yet the government was not utterly taken from them, or their kingdom loſt; they indeed feared this would be the caſe, ſhould Jeſus ſucceed and proſper, as he did; ſaying, the Romans ſhall come and take away both our place and nation, John xi. 48. which ſhews, that as yet this was not done, tho' for their diſbelief and rejection of the Meſſiah, their deſtruction was haſtening on apace; and after the crucifixion of him, all power was taken from them; the government was ſeized upon by the Romans entirely, and at laſt utterly deſtroyed; beſides, the Jews did not own Cæſar to be their king, tho' they ſaid this now to ſerve a turn; and after this they had kings of the race of Herod over them, tho' placed there by the Roman emperor or ſenate.

Ver. 16. Then delivered he him therefore, &c.] Perceiving he could not by any means work upon them, and that nothing would ſatisfy them but his death; he therefore paſſed ſentence on him, and gave him up to their will, unto them to be crucified; as they requeſted, and which was done in a judicial way, and all by divine appointment, according to the counſel and foreknowledge of God: and they took Jeſus and led him away; directly from the judgment-hall, out of the city to the place of execution, whither he was led as a lamb to the ſlaughter, without opening his mouth againſt God or man; but behaved with the utmoſt patience, meekneſs, and reſignation.

Ver. 17. And he bearing his croſs, &c.] Which was uſual for malefactors to do, as Lipſius[i] ſhews out of Artemidorus, and Plutarch; the former ſays, "the croſs is like to death, and he that is to be fixed to it, firſt bears it;" and the latter ſays, "and every one of the malefactors that are puniſhed in body, carries out his own croſs." So Chriſt when he firſt went out to be crucified, carried his croſs himſelf, until the Jews meeting with Simon the Cyrenian, obliged him to bear it after him; that is one part of it; for ſtill Chriſt continued to bear a part himſelf: of this Iſaac was a type, in carrying the wood on his ſhoulders for the burnt-offering; and this ſhewed that Chriſt was made ſin, and a curſe for us, and that our ſins and the puniſhment which belonged to us, were laid on him, and bore by him; and in this he has left us an example to go forth without the camp, bearing his reproach: went forth into a place called the place of a ſkull, which is called in the Hebrew, Golgotha; and ſignifies a man's ſkull: it ſeems, that as they executed malefactors here, ſo they buried them here; and in proceſs of time, their bones being dug up to make room for others, their ſkulls, with other bones, lay up and down in this place; from whence it had its name in the Syriac dialect, which the Jews then uſually ſpake: here ſome ſay Adam's ſkull was found, and that it had its name from thence. This was an ancient tradition, as has been obſerved in the notes on Matt. xxvii. 33. and Luke xxiii. 33. the Syriac writers have it[k], who ſay, "when Noah went out of the ark there was made a diſtribution of the bones of Adam; to Shem, his head was given, and the place in which he was buried is called Karkaphta; where likewiſe Chriſt was crucified;" which word ſignifies a ſkull, as Golgotha does: and ſo likewiſe the Arabic writers[l]; who affirm that Shem ſaid theſe words to Melchizedek, "Noah commanded that thou ſhouldſt take the body of Adam, and bury it in the middle of the earth; therefore let us go, I and thou, and bury it; wherefore Shem and Melchizedek went to take the body of Adam, and the angel of the Lord appeared to them and went before them, till they came to the place Calvary, where they buried him, as the angel of the Lord commanded them:" the ſame alſo had the ancient fathers of the chriſtian church; Cyprian[m] ſays, that it is a tradition of the ancients, that Adam was buried in Calvary under the place where the croſs of Chriſt was fixed; and Jerom makes mention of it more than once; ſo Paula and Euſtochium, in an epiſtle ſuppoſed to be dictated by him, or in which he was aſſiſting, ſay,[n] in this city, meaning Jeruſalem, yea in this place Adam is ſaid to dwell, and to die; from whence the place where our Lord was crucified is called Calvary, becauſe there the ſkull of the ancient man was buried: and in another place he himſelf ſays[o], that he heard one diſputing in the church and explaining, Eph. v. 14. of Adam buried in Calvary, where the Lord was crucified, and therefore was ſo called. Ambroſe[p] alſo takes notice of it; the place of the croſs, ſays he, is either in the midſt of the land, that it might be conſpicuous to all, or over the grave of Adam, as the Hebrews diſpute: others ſay that the hill itſelf was in the form of a man's ſkull, and therefore was ſo called; it was ſituated, as Jerom ſays[q], on the north of mount Zion, and is thought by ſome to be the ſame with the hill Gareb, in Jer. xxxi. 39. It was uſual to crucify on high hills, ſo Polycrates was crucified upon the higheſt top of mount Mycale[r].

Ver. 18. Where they crucified him, &c.] Namely, at Golgotha, the ſame with Calvary; and ſo had what they were ſo deſirous of: and two other with him, on either ſide one, and Jeſus in the midſt; theſe other two men were thieves, as the other Evangeliſts declare; among whom Chriſt was placed, being numbred and reckoned among tranſgreſſors: he was no tranſgreſſor of the law of God himſelf, but he was accounted as ſuch by men, and was treated as if he had been one by the juſtice of God; he, as a ſurety, ſtanding in the law-place, and ſtead of his people; hence he died in their room, and for their ſins: this ſhews the low eſtate of Chriſt, the ſtrictneſs of juſtice, the wiſdom of God in ſalvation, and the grace and love of the redeemer; who condeſcended to every thing, and every circumſtance, tho' ever ſo reproachful, which were neceſſary for the redemption of his people, and the glory of the divine perfections, and for the fulfilment of purpoſes, promiſes, and predictions.

Ver. 19. And Pilate wrote a title, &c.] Luke calls it a ſuperſcription, Mark the ſuperſcription of his accuſation, and Matthew the accuſation itſelf; it contained the ſubſtance of the charge againſt him, and was written upon a table or board, and nailed to the croſs, as Nonnus ſuggeſts; to this is the alluſion, Col. ii. 14. The form of it was drawn up by Pilate, his judge, who ordered it to be tranſcribed upon a proper inſtrument, and placed over him: and put it on the croſs; not with his own hands, but by his ſervants, who did it at his command; for others are ſaid to do it, Matt. xxvii. 37. It was put upon the top of the croſs, as the Perſic verſion reads it; over him, or over his head, as the other Evangeliſts ſay; and may denote the riſe of his kingdom, which is from above, the viſibility of it, and the enlargement of it, thro' the croſs: and the writing was; the words written in the title were, Jeſus of Nazareth, the king of the Jews: Jeſus was his name, by which he was commonly called and known, and ſignifies a Saviour, as he is of all the elect of God; whom he ſaves from all their ſins, by bearing them in his own body on the croſs, and of whom he is the able and willing, the perfect and compleat, the only and everlaſting Saviour: he is ſaid to be of Nazareth; this was the place of which he was an inhabitant; here Joſeph and Mary lived before his conception; here he was conceived, tho' born in Bethlehem; where he did not abide long, but conſtantly in this place, till he was about thirty years of age; this title was ſometimes given him as a term of reproach, tho' not always: the king of the Jews; which both expreſſes his accuſation, and aſſerts him to be ſo.

Ver. 20. This title then read many of the Jews, &c.] Who were in great numbers, at the place of execution, rejoicing at his crucifixion, and inſulting him as he hung on the croſs: for the place where Jeſus

Jeſus was crucified, was nigh unto the city; Golgotha, the place of Chriſt's crucifixion, was not more than two furlongs, or a quarter of a mile from the city of Jeruſalem; ſo that multitudes were continually going from thence to ſee this ſight; the city alſo being then very full of people by reaſon of the feaſt of the paſſover; to which may be added, that the croſs ſtood by the way ſide, where perſons were continually paſſing to and fro, as appears from Matt. xxvii. 39. Mark xv. 29. and where it was uſual to erect croſſes to make publick examples of malefactors, and to deter others from committing the like crimes: ſo Alexander, the emperor, ordered an Eunuch to be crucified by the way ſide, in which his ſervants uſed commonly to go to his ſuburb[s] or country houſe: Cicero ſays[t] the Mamertines, according to their own uſage and cuſtom, crucified behind the city, in the Pompeian way; and Quinctilian obſerves[u], as often as we crucify criminals, the moſt noted ways are choſen, where moſt may behold, and moſt may be moved with fear: and now Chriſt being crucified by a publick road-ſide, the inſcription on the croſs was doubtleſs read by more than otherwiſe it would: and it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin; that it might be read by all, Jews, Greeks, and Romans; and to ſhew that he is the Saviour of ſome of all nations; and that he is king over all. Theſe words were written in Hebrew letters in the Syriac dialect, which was uſed by the Jews, and is called the Hebrew language, ver. 13, 17. and in which it is moſt likely Pilate ſhould write theſe words, or order them to be written; and which, according to the Syriac verſion, we now have, were thus put, ישוע נצריא מלכא דיהודיא; in Greek the words ſtood as in the original text, thus, Ιησȣς ο Ναζωραίος ο βασιλευς των Ιȣδαιων; and in the Latin tongue, as may be ſuppoſed, after this manner, Jeſus Nazarenus Rex Judæorum. Theſe three languages may be very well thought to be underſtood by Pilate; at leaſt ſo much of them as to qualify him to write ſuch an inſcription as this. The Latin tongue was his mother tongue, which he muſt be ſuppoſed well to underſtand; and the Greek tongue was very much uſed by the Romans, ſince their conqueſt of the Grecian monarchy; and the emperors edicts were generally publiſhed in Greek, which it was therefore neceſſary for Pilate to underſtand; and as he was a governour of Judea, and had been ſo for ſome time, he muſt have acquired ſome knowledge of the Hebrew language; and theſe being the principal languages in the world, he choſe to write this title in them, that perſons coming from all quarters might be able to read it, and underſtand it in ſome one of them.

Ver. 21. Then ſaid the chief prieſts of the Jews to Pilate, &c.] Who were not only informed of this inſcription, but might read it themſelves, for they were preſent at the crucifying of Chriſt, and mocked at him as he hung on the tree; theſe, when they read the title, were greatly offended at it, partly becauſe it was doing too great an honour to Jeſus to call him the king of the Jews: and partly becauſe it fixed a public brand of infamy upon their nation, that a king of theirs ſhould be crucified; wherefore they went to Pilate and addreſſed him, ſaying, write not the king of the Jews: becauſe they did not own him for their king, which this title ſeemed to ſuggeſt, nor had he in their opinion any right to ſuch a character; wherefore they deſired that in the room of theſe words he would be pleaſed to put the following, but that he ſaid, I am king of the Jews; that ſo he might be thought to be a ſeditious perſon and a traitor, one that laid claim to the temporal crown and kingdom of Iſrael, and one that ſuffered juſtly for attempts of that kind.

Ver. 22. Pilate anſwered, what I have written I have written.] He ſeems to ſay this, as one angry and diſpleaſed with them; either becauſe they would not conſent to releaſe Jeſus, which he was deſirous of, but preſſed him ſo very hard to crucify him; or at their inſolence, in directing him in what form to put the ſuperſcription, which he determines ſhall ſtand unaltered, as he had wrote it. This he ſaid, either becauſe he could not alter it after it was written, for 'tis ſaid[w], that "a pro-conſul's table is his ſentence, "which being once read, not one letter can either "be increaſed or diminiſhed; but as it is recited, "ſo it is related in the inſtrument of the province;" or if he could have altered it, he was not ſuffered by God to do it; but was ſo directed, and overruled by divine providence, as to write, ſo to perſiſt in, and abide by what he had wrote inviolably; which is the ſenſe of his words. Dr. Lightfoot has given ſeveral inſtances out of the Talmud, ſhewing that this is a common way of ſpeaking with the Rabbins; and that words thus doubled ſignify that what is ſpoken of ſtands good, and is irrevocable: ſo a widow taking any of the moveable goods of her huſband deceaſed for her maintenance, it is ſaid[x], מה שתפסה תפסה, what ſhe takes, ſhe takes; that is, ſhe may lawfully do it, and retain it; it continues in her hands, and can't be taken away from her; and ſo the Gloſs explains it, they don't take it from her; and in the ſame way Maimonides[y] interprets it: ſo of a man that binds himſelf to offer an oblation one way, and he offers it another way, מה שהביא הביא, what he has offered, he has offered[z]; what he has offered is right, it ſtands good, and is not to be rejected: and again, among the rites uſed by a deceaſed brother's wife, towards him that refuſes to marry her, if one thing is done before the other, it matters not, מה שעשוי עשוי, what is done, is done[a]; and is not to be undone or done, over again in another way; it ſtands firm and good, and not to be objected to: and the ſame writer obſerves, that this is a ſort of prophecy of Pilate, and which ſhould continue, and for ever obtain, that the Jews ſhould have no other king Meſſiah than Jeſus of Nazareth; nor have they had any other; all that have riſen up have proved falſe Meſſiahs; nor will they have any other; nor indeed any king, until they ſeek the Lord their God, and David their king, Hoſ. iii. 5. that is, the ſon of David, as they will do in the latter day; when they ſhall be converted, and when they ſhall own him as their king, their anceſtors at this time were aſhamed of.

Ver. 23. Then the ſoldiers when they had crucified Jeſus, &c.] The crucifixion of Chriſt was at the requeſt and ſolicitation of the Jews, was ordered by the Roman governour, and performed by the Roman ſoldiers; the ſinful men into whoſe hands Chriſt was to be delivered: took his garments; which they had ſtripped his body of, crucifying him naked; as what properly belong'd to them, it being uſual then, as now, for executioners to have the clothes of the perſons they put to death; theſe were his inner garments: and made four parts, to every ſoldier a part; for it ſeems there were four of them concerned in his execution, and who were ſet to watch him: and and alſo his coat; or upper garment; now the coat was without ſeam, woven from the top throughout: in ſuch an one the Jews ſay[b] Moſes miniſtred; and of this ſort and make was the robe of the high prieſt, ſaid to be of woven work, Exod. xxiii. 32. upon which Jarchi remarks, ולא במחט, and not with a needle; it was all woven, and without any ſeam: and ſo the Jews ſay[c] in general of the garments of the prieſts: "the garments of the prieſts are not made "of needle-work, but of woven work; as it is ſaid, "Exod. xxviii. 32. Abai ſays, it is not neceſſary "(i. e. the uſe of the needle) but for their ſleeves; "according to the tradition, the ſleeve of the gar-"ments of the prieſts is woven by itſelf, and is "joined to the garment, and reaches to the palm "of the hand." So that this was an entire woven garment from top to bottom, excepting the ſleeves, which were wove ſeparately and ſewed to it; of this kind alſo was his coat, which Jacob Iehudah Leon ſays[d], "was a ſtately woolen coat of a ſky-colour, "wholly woven, all of one piece, without ſeam, "without ſleeves;" ſuch a garment Chriſt our great high prieſt wore, which had no ſeam in it, but was a curious piece of texture from top to bottom. The very learned Braunius[e] ſays, he has ſeen ſuch garments in Holland, and has given very fine cuts of them, and alſo of the frame in which they are wrought. What authority Nonnus had to call this coat a black one, or others for ſaying it was the work of the virgin Mary, I know not.

Ver. 24. They ſaid therefore among themſelves, &c.] When they ſaw what a curious piece of work it was, and that it was pity to divide it into parts; and beſides, that it would have been rendered entirely uſeleſs thereby; they moved it to each other, ſaying, let us not rent it, but caſt lots for it, whoſe it ſhall be, that the ſcripture might be fulfilled: not that they knew any thing of the ſcripture, or had any intention of fulfilling it hereby, but they were ſo directed by the providence of God, to take ſuch a ſtep; whereby was literally accompliſhed the paſſage in Pſal. xxii. 18. which ſaith, they parted my raiment among them, and for my veſture they did caſt lots. The whole pſalm is to be underſtood of the Meſſiah, not of David as ſome do[f]; many paſſages in it cannot be applied to him, ſuch as ſpeak of the diſlocation of his bones, the piercing of his hands and feet, and this of parting his garments, and caſting lots for his veſture; all which had their literal accompliſhment in Jeſus: nor can it be underſtood of Eſther, as it is by ſome Jewiſh[g] interpreters; there is not one word in it that agrees with her, and particularly, not the clauſe here cited; and there are ſome things in it which are manifeſtly ſpoken of a man, and not of a woman, as ver. 8. 24. nor can the whole body of the Jewiſh nation, or the congregation of Iſrael be intended, as others ſay[h]; ſince it is clear, that a ſingle perſon is ſpoken of throughout the pſalm, and who is diſtinguiſhed from others, from his brethren, from the congregation, from the ſeed of Jacob and Iſrael, ver. 22, 23. and indeed, no other than the Meſſiah can be meant; he is pointed at in the very title of it, Aijeleth Shabar, which words, in what way ſoever they are rendered, agree with him: if by the morning daily ſacrifice, as they are by the Targum; he is the lamb of God, who continually takes away the ſins of the world; and very fitly is he ſo called in the title of a pſalm, which ſpeaks ſo much of his ſufferings and death, which were a propitiatory ſacrifice for the ſins of his people: or by the morning ſtar, as others[i] interpret them; Chriſt is the bright and morning ſtar, the day ſpring from on high, the ſun of righteouſneſs, and light of the world: or by the morning help, as by the Septuagint; Chriſt had early help from God in the morning of his infancy, when Herod ſought his life, and in the day of ſalvation of his people; and early in the morning was he raiſed from the dead, and had glory given him: or by the morning hind, which ſeems beſt of all, to which he may be compared, as to a roe or hart, in Cant. ii. 9, 17. and viii. 14. for his love and lovelineſs, and for his ſwiftneſs and readineſs in appearing for the ſalvation of his people; and for his being hunted by Herod in the morning of his days; and being encompaſſed by thoſe dogs the Scribes and Phariſees, Judas and the band of ſoldiers; ſee ver. 16. The firſt words of the pſalm were ſpoken by Jeſus the true Meſſiah, when he hung upon the croſs, and are truly applied to himſelf; his reproaches and ſufferings endured by him there, are particularly and exactly deſcribed in it, and agree with no other; the benefits which the people of God were to enjoy, in conſequence of his ſufferings, and the converſion of the Gentiles ſpoken of in it, which is peculiar to the days of the Meſſiah, ſhew to whom it belongs. The Jews themſelves are obliged to interpret ſome parts of it concerning him; they ſometimes ſay[k], that by Aijeleth Shabar is meant the Shekinah, a name that well ſuits with the Meſſiah Jeſus, who tabernacled in our nature; the 26th verſe is applied by Jarchi to the time of the redemption, and the days of the Meſſiah; ſo that upon the whole, this paſſage is rightly cited with reſpect to the Meſſiah, and is truly ſaid to be fulfilled by this circumſtance, of the ſoldiers doing with his garments as they did: theſe things therefore the ſoldiers did; becauſe they were before determined and predicted that they ſhould be done; and therefore they were diſpoſed and directed by a ſuperior influence, in perfect agreement with the freedom of their wills to do theſe things. The whole of this account may be ſpiritually applied. The ſcriptures are the garments of Chriſt; or, as a prince of Anhalt ſaid, the ſwadling clothes in which the infant of Bethlehem was wrapt; theſe exhibit and ſhew forth Chriſt in his glory, and by which he is known and bore witneſs to, and are pure and incorrupt, fragrant, and ſavory. Hereticks are the ſoldiers that rend and tear the Scriptures in pieces, part them, add unto them, or detract from them; who corrupt, pervert, wreſt, and miſapply them; but truth is the ſeamleſs coat; it is all of a piece, is of God, there's nothing human in it; tho' it may be played with, betrayed, ſold, or denied, it cannot be deſtroyed, but is, and will be preſerved by divine providence: or the human nature of Chriſt is the veſture, with which his divine perſon was as it were covered, was put on and off, and on again as a garment; is of God, and not man; is pure and ſpotleſs; and tho' his ſoul and body were parted aſunder for a while, this could never be parted from his divine perſon: or elſe the righteouſneſs of Chriſt may be ſignified by this robe, which is often compared to one, becauſe it is put on the ſaints, and they are clothed with it; it covers, keeps warm, protects, beautifies, and adorns them; this is ſeamleſs, and all of a piece, and has nothing of mens works and ſervices tacked unto it; is enjoyed by a divine lot by ſome men, and not all, and even ſuch as have been ſinful and ungodly; it is pure, perfect, and will laſt for ever.

Ver. 25. Now there ſtood by the croſs of Jeſus, &c.] So near as not only to ſee him, but to hear him ſpeak: his mother; the mother of Jeſus, Mary; which ſhewed her affection to Chriſt, and her conſtancy in abiding by him to the laſt; tho' it muſt be a cutting ſight, and now was fulfilled Simeon's prophecy, Luke ii. 35. to ſee her ſon in ſuch agonies and ſorrow, and jeered and inſulted by the worſt of men; and tho' ſhe herſelf was expoſed to danger, and liable to be abuſed by the outragious multitude; and it alſo ſhewed that ſhe ſtood in need, as others, of a crucified Saviour; ſo far was ſhe from being a co-partner with him in making ſatisfaction for ſin, as the papiſts wickedly ſay: and his mother's ſiſter, Mary the wife of Cleophas. The Syriac, Perſic and Ethiopic verſions diſtinguiſh Mary the wife of Cleophas from his mother's ſiſter, by placing the copulative and between them, and ſo make two perſons; whereas one and the ſame is intended, and who was the ſiſter of Mary, the mother of Chriſt; not her own ſiſter, for it is not likely that two ſiſters ſhould be of the ſame name; but her huſband Joſeph's ſiſter, and ſo hers; or elſe Cleophas was Joſeph's brother, as Euſebius from Hegeſippus ſays [k]: and who was alſo not the daughter of Cleophas, as the Arabic verſion has here ſupplied it; much leſs the mother of him; but his wife, as is rightly put in our tranſlation: for, according to the other Evangeliſts, ſhe was the mother of James and Joſes, and who were the ſons of Cleophas or Alpheus; which are not the names of two perſons, nor two names of one and the ſame perſon, but one and the ſame name differently pronounced; his true name in Hebrew was, חלפי, or חלפאי or חילפי, Chelphi, or Chelphai, or Chilphi, a name frequently to be met with in Talmudic and Rabbinic writings; and ſo a Jewiſh writer [l] obſerves, that חילפא והוא אילפא, Chilpha is the ſame as Ilpha; and in Greek may be pronounced either Cleophas, or Alpheus, as it is both ways: ignorance of this has led interpreters to form different conjectures, as that either the huſband of this Mary had two names; or that ſhe was twice married to two different perſons, once to Alpheus, and after his death to Cleophas; or that Cleophas was her father, and Alpheus her huſband; for neither of which is there any foundation. She was no doubt a believer in Chriſt, and came and ſtood by his croſs; not merely to keep her ſiſter company, but out of affection to Jeſus, and to teſtify her faith in him: and Mary Magdalene; out of whom he had caſt ſeven devils, and who had been a true penitent, a real believer in him, an hearty lover of him, was zealouſly attached to him, and followed him to the laſt. Three Mary's are here mentioned as together; and it is obſervable, that the greater part of thoſe that are taken notice of, as following Chriſt to the croſs, and ſtanding by it, were women, the weaker, and timorous ſex, when all his diſciples forſook him and fled; and none of them attended at the croſs, as we read of, excepting John; no, not even Peter, who boaſted ſo much of his attachment to him. Theſe good women ſtanding by the croſs of Chriſt, may teach us to do, as they did, look upon a crucified Chriſt, view his ſorrows, and his ſufferings, and our ſins laid upon him, and born and taken away by him; we ſhould look unto him for pardon, cleanſing, and juſtification, and, in ſhort, for the whole of ſalvation: we ſhould alſo weep, as they did, whilſt we look on him; ſhed even tears of affection for, and ſympathy with him; of humiliation for ſin, and of joy for a Saviour: and likewiſe ſhould abide by him as they did, by his perſon, offices and grace; by the doctrine of the croſs, continuing ſtedfaſtly in it; and by the ordinances of Chriſt, conſtantly attending on them, and that notwithſtanding all reproaches and ſufferings we may undergo.

Ver. 26. When Jeſus therefore ſaw his mother, &c.] Standing near him, within the reach of his voice, as well as ſight, he took notice of her, and ſhewed a concern for her temporal, as well as for her eternal good: and the diſciple ſtanding by; either by his croſs, or by his mother, or both: whom he loved; meaning John the writer of this Goſpel, who for modeſty's ſake often deſcribes himſelf in this manner; he being diſtinguiſhed by Chriſt from the reſt, by ſome peculiar marks of affection as man; tho' as God, and as the Redeemer, he loved his diſciples alike, as he does all his true and faithful followers: he ſaith unto his mother, woman, behold thy ſon; meaning not himſelf, but the diſciple, who was her ſon, not by nature, nor adoption; but who would ſhew himſelf as a ſon, by his filial affection for, care of, honour and reſpect unto her. Chriſt calls her not mother, but woman; not out of diſrepect to her, or as aſhamed of her; but partly that he might not raiſe, or add ſtrength to her paſſions, by a tenderneſs of ſpeaking; and partly to conceal her from the mob, and leſt ſhe ſhould be expoſed to their rude inſults; as alſo to let her know that all natural relation was now ceaſing between them; tho' this is a title he ſometimes uſed to give her before.

Ver. 27. Then ſaith he to the diſciple, &c. The ſame diſciple John: behold thy mother; take care of her, and provide for her, as if ſhe was thine own mother: this ſhews the meanneſs of Chriſt, who had nothing to leave her, tho' Lord of all; it is very probable that Joſeph was dead, and Mary now a widow; and whereas Chriſt had taken care of her, and maintained her hitherto, he now, in his dying moments, committs her to the care of this diſciple; which is an inſtance of his humanity, and of his regard to every duty; and this in particular, of honouring parents, and providing for them in diſtreſs, and old age: and from that hour that diſciple took her to his own home; or houſe; ſo the Septuagint render ביתו, to his houſe, by εις τα ιδια in Eſth. vi. 12. the phraſe here uſed, and in chap. xvi. 32. Some ſay ſhe lived with John at Jeruſalem, and there died; and others ſay, that ſhe died in the twelfth year after the reſurrection of Chriſt, being 59 years of age, and was buried by John in the garden of Gethſemane: where his houſe was is not certain, whether at Jeruſalem or in Galilee, nor how long ſhe lived with him; but this is not to be doubted, that he took care of her, and provided for her, as if ſhe was his own mother; and his doing this forthwith ſhews his great regard to Chriſt, his readineſs and chearfulneſs to comply with his orders and directions, and his unfeigned love unto him.

Ver. 28. After this, &c.] After he had committed his mother to the care of John, which was about the ſixth hour, before the darkneſs came over the land; and three hours after this was the following circumſtance, which was not without the previous knowledge of Chriſt: Jeſus knowing that all things were now accompliſhed; or juſt upon being accompliſhed, were as good as finiſhed, and as they were to be, would be in a very ſhort time; even all things relating to his ſufferings, and the circumſtances of them, which were afore appointed by God, and foretold in prophecy, and of which he had perfect knowledge: that the ſcripture might be fulfilled; might appear to have its accompliſhment, which predicted the great drought and thirſt that ſhould be on him, Pſal. xxii. 15. and that his enemies at ſuch a time would give him vinegar to drink, Pſal. lxix. 21. ſaith, I thirſt; which was literally true of him, and may be alſo underſtood ſpiritually of his great thirſt and eager deſire after the ſalvation of his people.

Ver. 29. Now there was ſet a veſſel full of vinegar, &c.] In a place near at hand, as Nonnus obſerves; not on purpoſe, for the ſake of them that were crucified, either to refreſh their ſpirits, or ſtop a too great effuſion of blood, that they might continue the longer in their miſery; but was for the uſe of the ſoldiers who crucified Chriſt, vinegar being part of the allowance of Roman ſoldiers [m], and what they uſed to drink: ſometimes it was mixed with water; which mixed liquor they called Poſca [n], and was what even their generals ſometimes uſed; as Scipio, Metellus, Trajan, Adrian, and others: vinegar was alſo uſed by the Jews for drink, as appears from Ruth ii. 14. and dip thy morſel in the vinegar, which Boaz's reapers had with them in the field; becauſe of heat, as the commentators ſay [o]; that being good to cool and to extinguiſh thirſt; for which reaſon the ſoldiers here offer it to Chriſt; tho' the Chaldee paraphraſe of the above place, makes it to be a kind of ſauce or pap boiled in vinegar; and ſuch an Embamma made of vinegar the Romans had, in which they dipped their food [p]; but this here ſeems to be pure vinegar, and to be different from that which the other Evangeliſts ſpeak of, which was mingled with gall, or was ſour wine with myrrh, Matt. xxvii. 34. Mark xv. 23. Vinegar indeed is good to revive the ſpirits, and hyſſop, which is after mentioned, is an herb of a ſweet ſmell; and if the reed, which the other Evangeliſts make mention of, was the ſweet calamus, as ſome have thought, they were all of them things of a refreſhing nature: vinegar was alſo uſed for ſtopping blood [q], when it flowed from wounds in a large quantity; and of the ſame uſe were ſpunges; hence Tertullian [r] mentions ſpongias retiariorum, the ſponges of the fencers, which they had with them to ſtop any effuſion of blood that ſhould be made in their exerciſes: but then it can hardly be thought that theſe things ſhould be in common prepared at crucifixions for ſuch ends, on purpoſe to linger out a miſerable life a little longer, which would be ſhocking barbarity; and eſpecially ſuch a proviſion would never be made at this time, on ſuch an account, ſince the Jews ſabbath drew nigh, and they were in haſte to have the executions over before that came on, that the bodies might not remain on the croſs on that day; for which reaſon they would do nothing at this time however to prolong the lives of the malefactors; wherefore it is moſt reaſonable, that this veſſel of vinegar was not ſet for any ſuch purpoſe, but was for the uſe of the ſoldiers; and therefore this being at hand when Chriſt ſignified his thirſt, they offered ſome of it in the following manner: and they filled a ſpunge with vinegar; it being the nature of a ſpunge (which Nonnus here calls βλαϛημα θαλασσης, a branch of the ſea, becauſe it grows there;) to ſwallow up any thing that is liquid, and which may be again ſqueezed and ſucked out of it; hence the Jews ſay [s] of it, ספוג שבלע משקין, the ſponge which ſwallows up liquids; and uſed it for ſuch a purpoſe: and put it upon hyſſop; meaning not the juice of hyſſop, into which ſome have thought the ſponge with vinegar was put, but the herb, and a ſtalk of it: the other Evangeliſts ſay, it was put upon a reed; meaning either that the ſpunge with the hyſſop were put about a reed, and ſo given him; or rather it was a ſtalk of hyſſop, which was like a reed or cane; and in this country of Judea grew very large, ſufficient for ſuch a purpoſe. The hyſſop with the Jews was not reckoned among herbs, but trees; ſee 1 Kings iv. 33. and they ſpeak [t] of hyſſop which they gather, לעצים, for wood; the ſtalks of which therefore muſt be of ſome bigneſs; yea, they call [u] a ſtalk which has a top to it קנה, a reed, or cane; which obſervation ſeems to reconcile the other Evangeliſts with this: and they diſtinguiſh their hyſſop which was right for uſe from that which had an epithet joined to it; as, Roman hyſſop, Græcian hyſſop, wild and baſtard hyſſop [w]: and ſome writers [x] obſerve even of our common hyſſop, that it has ſometimes ſtalks of nine inches long, or longer, and hard and woody, nay, even a foot and a half; with one of which a man with his arms ſtretched out might poſſibly reach the mouth of a perſon on a croſs: how high croſſes uſually were is not certain, nor was there any fixed meaſure for them; ſometimes they were higher, and ſometimes lower; the croſs or gallows made by Haman for Mordecai was very high indeed, and the mouth of a perſon could not have been reached with an hyſſop ſtalk; but ſuch an one might, as was erected for Saul's ſons, whoſe bodies on it could be reached by the beaſts of the field, 2 Sam. xxi. 10. and ſo low was the croſs on which Blandina the martyr ſuffered, as the church at Lyons relates [y], when on the croſs ſhe was expoſed to beaſts of prey, and became food for them: ſo that there is no need to ſuppoſe any fault in the text, and that inſtead of hyſſop it ſhould be read hyſſos; which was a kind of javelin the Romans call Pilum, about five or ſix foot long, which it is ſuppoſed, one of the ſoldiers might have, and on it put the hyſſop with the ſpunge and vinegar; but this conjecture is not ſupported by any copy, or ancient verſion; the Syriac verſion, which is a very ancient one, reads hyſſop. The Arabic and Perſic verſions render it, a reed, as in the other Evangeliſts; and the Ethiopic verſion has both, they filled a ſpunge with vinegar, and it was ſet round with hyſſop, and they bound it upon a reed; and ſo ſome have thought that a bunch of hyſſop was ſtuck round about the ſpunge of vinegar, which was faſtened to the top of a reed; and the words will bear to be rendered, ſetting it about with hyſſop: this they might have out of the gardens, which were near this place, or it might grow upon the mountain itſelf; for we are told [z], it grew in great plenty upon the mountains about Jeruſalem, and that its branches were almoſt a cubit long. Joſephus [a] makes mention of a village beyond Jordan called Bethezob, which, as he ſays, ſignifies the houſe of hyſſop; perhaps ſo called from the large quantity of hyſſop that grew near it: and put it to his mouth; whether Chriſt drank of it or no is not certain; it ſeems by what follows as if he did; at leaſt he took it, being offered to him: the Jews themſelves ſay [b], that Jeſus ſaid, give me a little water to drink, and they gave him חומץ חזק, ſharp vinegar; which ſo far confirms the Evangelic hiſtory.

Ver. 30. When Jeſus therefore had received the vinegar, &c.] Of the Roman ſoldiers, who offered it to him, either by way of reproach, or to quench his thirſt; and he drank of it, as is very likely: he ſaid, it is finiſhed; that is, the whole will of God; as that he ſhould be incarnate, be expoſed to ſhame and reproach, and ſuffer much, and die; the whole work his Father gave him to do, which was to preach the Goſpel, work miracles, and obtain eternal ſalvation for his people, all which were now done, or as good as done; the whole righteouſneſs of the law was fulfilled, an holy nature aſſumed, perfect obedience yielded to it, and the penalty of death endured; hence a perfect righteouſneſs was finiſhed agreeable to the law, which was magnified and made honourable by it, and redemption from its curſe and condemnation ſecured; ſin was made an end of, full atonement and ſatisfaction for it were given; compleat pardon procured, peace made, and redemption from all iniquity obtained; all enemies were conquered; all types, promiſes and prophecies were fulfilled, and his own courſe of life ended: the reaſon of his ſaying ſo was, becauſe all this was near being done, juſt upon finiſhing, and was as good as done; and was ſure and certain, and ſo compleat, that nothing need, or could be added to it; and it was done entirely without the help of man, and cannot be undone; all which ſince has more clearly appeared by Chriſt's reſurrection from the dead, his entrance into heaven, his ſeſſion at God's right hand, the declaration of the Goſpel, and the application of ſalvation to particular perſons: and he bowed his head; as one dying, and freely ſubmitting to his Father's will, and the ſtroke of death: and gave up the ghoſt; his ſpirit or ſoul into the hands of his Father; freely laying down that precious life of his which no man could take away from him.

Ver. 31. The Jews therefore becauſe it was the preparation, &c.] That is, either of the paſſover, as in ver. 14. which was the Chagigah or grand feſtival in which they offered their peace offerings, and ſlayed their oxen, and feaſted together in great mirth and jollity; or of the ſabbath, the evening of it, or day before it, as in Mark xv. 42. that the bodies ſhould not remain upon the croſs on the ſabbath-day; which was now drawing near: according to the Jewiſh law, Deut. xxi. 22, 23. the body of one that was hanged on a tree was not to remain all night, but to be taken down that day and buried; tho' this was not always obſerved; ſee 2 Sam. xxi. 9, 10. What was the uſage of the Jews at this time is not certain; according to the Roman laws, ſuch bodies hung until they were putrified, or eaten by birds of prey; wherefore that their land might not be defiled, and eſpecially their ſabbath, by their remaining on the croſs, they deſire to have them taken down: for that ſabbath-day was an high day; it was not only a ſabbath, and a ſabbath in the paſſover week, but it was the day in which all the people appeared and preſented themſelves before the Lord in the temple, and the ſheaf of the firſt-fruits was offered up; all which ſolemnities meeting together, made it a very celebrated day: it is in the original text, it was the great day of the ſabbath; which is the language of the Talmudiſts, and who ſay[d], "שבת הגדול נקרא, the great ſabbath is called, "on account of the miracle or ſign of the paſſover;" and in the Jewiſh Liturgy[e] there is a collect for the great ſabbath: hence the Jews pretending a great concern leſt that day ſhould be polluted, tho' they made no conſcience of ſhedding innocent blood, beſought Pilate that their legs might be broken; which was the manner of the Jews[f] partly to haſten death, ſince, according to their law, the body was to be taken down before night; and partly that it might be a clear point that the perſon was rightly executed; for this was not the Roman cuſtom, with whom breaking of the legs, or rather thighs, was a diſtinct puniſhment, and was done by laying a mans legs or thighs upon an anvil, and ſtriking them with an hammer[g]; which could not be the caſe here; this ſeems to have been done by ſtriking the legs of thoſe that were crucified, which were faſtened to the croſs, with a bar of iron, or ſome ſuch inſtrument. Nonnus ſuggeſts that their legs were cut off with a ſaw or ſword; but the former ſeems more reaſonable: and that they might be taken away; which it ſeems the Jews had not power to do, but muſt be done by the Roman ſoldiers, or by leave at leaſt from the Roman governour; and therefore they make their requeſt to him.

Ver. 32. Then came the ſoldiers, &c.] Pilate having granted the Jews what they deſired; either the ſoldiers that crucified Chriſt, and the others with him, and watched their bodies, being ordered by Pilate, went from the place where they ſat; or a freſh company which were ſent for this purpoſe, came from the city: and brake the legs of the firſt; they came unto, which whether it was he that was crucified on his right hand, and was the penitent believer in him, as ſome have thought, is not certain: and of the other which was crucified with him; who, if the former is true, muſt be he that reviled him; and was this their poſition, it was a lively emblem of the laſt day, when the ſheep ſhall ſtand at the right, and the goats on the left hand of Chriſt.

Ver. 33. But when they came to Jeſus, &c.] Whom they paſſed by before, and now returned to; this they did not out of tenderneſs to him, but that he might be the longer in his torture, and whom they reſerved till laſt, that they might uſe with the greater cruelty and barbarity: and ſaw that he was dead already; as they might, from the bowing down of his head, the ghaſtlineſs of his countenance, the falling of his jaws, and other ſigns: they brake not his legs; there being no occaſion for it, nor would it have anſwered any end, were they ever ſo ſpiteful and malicious againſt him; tho' the true reaſon was, and which reſtrained them from it, divine providence would not ſuffer them to do it.

Ver. 34. But one of the ſoldiers, &c.] Whoſe name ſome pretend to ſay was Longinus, and ſo called from the ſpear with which he pierced Chriſt: with a ſpear pierced his ſide; his left ſide, where the heart lies; tho' the painters make this wound on the right, and the Arabic verſion of Erpenius, as cited by Dr. Lightfoot, adds the word right to make the miracle the greater: this the ſoldier did, partly out of ſpite to Chriſt, and partly to know whether he was really dead; and which was ſo ordered by divine providence, that it might beyond all doubt appear that he really died, and was not taken down alive from the croſs; ſo that there might be no room to call in queſtion the truth of his reſurrection, when he ſhould appear alive again: and forthwith came there out blood and water; this is accounted for in a natural way by the piercing of the Pericardium, which contains a ſmall quantity of water about the heart, and which being pierced, a perſon, if alive, muſt inevitably die; but it ſeems rather to be ſomething ſupernatural, from the aſſeverations the Evangeliſt makes. This water and blood ſome make to ſignify baptiſm and the Lord's ſupper, which are both of Chriſt's appointing, and ſpring from him, and refer to his ſufferings and death; rather they ſignify the bleſſings of ſanctification and juſtification, the grace of the one being repreſented by water, as it frequently is in the Old and New Teſtament, and the other by blood, and both from Chriſt: that Chriſt was the antitype of the rock in the wilderneſs, the apoſtle aſſures us, in 1 Cor. x. 4. and if the Jews are to be believed, he was ſo in this inſtance; Jonathan ben Uzziel in his Targum on Numb. xx. 11. ſays that "Moſes ſmote the rock twice, at the firſt "time אטיפת ארמא, blood dropped out; and at "the ſecond time abundance of waters flowed out." the ſame is affirmed by others[h] elſewhere in much the ſame words and order.

Ver. 35. And he that ſaw it, bare record, &c.] Meaning himſelf, John the Evangeliſt, the writer of this Goſpel, who, in his great modeſty, frequently conceals himſelf, under one circumlocution or another; he was an eye witneſs of this fact, not only of the piercing of his ſide with a ſpear, but of the blood and water flowing out of it; which he ſaw with his eyes, and bore record of to others, and by this writing; and was ready to atteſt it in any form it ſhould be deſired: and his record is true; tho' it is not mentioned by any of the other Evangeliſts, none of them but himſelf being preſent at that time: and he knoweth that he ſaith true; meaning either God or Chriſt, who knew all things; and ſo it is a ſort of appeal to God or Chriſt, for the truth of what he affirmed, as ſome think; or rather himſelf, who was fully aſſured that he was under no deception, and was far from telling an untruth; having ſeen the thing done with his eyes, and being led into the myſtery of it by the divine ſpirit; ſee 1 John v. 6, 8. wherefore he could, and did declare it with the ſtrongeſt aſſeverations: that ye might believe; the truth of the fact, and in Chriſt, both for the expiation of the guilt of ſin, and cleanſing from the filth of it; both for ſanctifying and juſtifying grace, which the water and the blood were an emblem of.

Ver. 36. For theſe things were done, &c.] The not breaking his bones and piercing his ſide, and that not by Chance, and without deſign; but, that the ſcripture ſhould be fulfilled, a bone of him ſhall not be broken; referring either to Pſal. xxxiv. 20. he keepeth all his bones, not one of them is broken; which if to be underſtood of the righteous in general, had a very particular and remarkable accompliſhment in Chriſt; tho' a certain ſingle perſon ſeems to be deſigned; nor is it true in fact of every righteous man, ſome of whom have had their bones broken; and ſuch a ſenſe would lead to deſpair in caſe of broken bones; for whereas ſuch a calamity befals them, as well as wicked men, under ſuch an affliction, they might be greatly diſtreſſed, and from hence be ready to conclude, that they are not righteous perſons, and are not under the care and protection of God, or otherwiſe this promiſe would be made good: nor have the words any reſpect to the reſurrection of the dead, as if the ſenſe of it was, that none of the bones of the righteous ſhall be finally broken; and tho' they may be broken by men, and in their ſight, yet the Lord will raiſe them again, and reſtore them whole and perfect at the general reſurrection; for this will be true of the wicked, as well as of the righteous: and much leſs is the meaning of the words, one of his bones ſhall not be broken, namely, the bone luz, the Jews ſpeak of; which they ſay[i], remains uncorrupted in the grave, and is ſo hard that it can't be ſoften'd by water, nor burnt in the fire, nor ground in the mill, nor broke with an hammer; by, and from which God will raiſe the whole body at the laſt day: but the words are to be underſtood of Chriſt, he is the poor man that is particularly pointed at in ver. 6. who was poor in his ſtate of humiliation, and who cried unto the Lord, and he heard him, and ſaved him; and he is the righteous one, whoſe afflictions were many, and out of which the Lord delivered him, ver. 19. whoſe providential care of him was very particular and remarkable; he kept his bones from being broken, when others were; and by this incident this paſſage had its literal fulfilment in him: or elſe it may refer to the paſſover lamb, a type of Chriſt, 1 Cor. v. 7. a bone of which was not to be broken, Exod. xii. 46. Numb. ix. 12. The former of theſe paſſages is a command, in the ſecond perſon to the Iſraelites concerning the paſchal lamb, neither ſhall ye break a bone thereof; and the latter is delivered in the third perſon, nor ſhall they break any bone of it; which may be rendered imperſonally, a bone of it, or of him ſhall not be broken; or a bone ſhall not be broken in him; and ſo the Syriac and Perſic verſions read the words here; and in ſome copies it is, a bone ſhall not be broken from him; and ſo read the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions; and he that violated this precept, according to the traditions of the Jews, was to be beaten. Maimonides[k] ſays, "he that breaks a bone in a pure paſſover, lo, "he is to be beaten, as it is ſaid, and a bone ye ſhall not "break in it: and ſo it is ſaid of the ſecond paſſover, "and a bone ye ſhall not break in it; but a paſſover "which comes with uncleanneſs, if a man breaks a "bone in it, he is not to be beaten: from the literal "ſenſe it may be learned, that a bone is not to be "broken, whether in a pure or defiled paſſover: one "that breaks a bone on the night of the fifteenth, or "that breaks a bone in it within the day, or that "breaks one after many days, lo, he is to be beaten; "wherefore they burn the bones of the paſſover in "general, with what is left of its fleſh, that they "may not come to damage: none are guilty but "for the breaking of a bone on which there is "fleſh of the quantity of an olive, or in which "there is marrow; but a bone in which there is "no marrow, and on which there is no fleſh of "the quantity of an olive, a man is not guilty for "breaking it; and if there is fleſh upon it of ſuch "a quantity, and he breaks the bone in the place "where there is no fleſh, he is guilty, altho' the "place which he breaks is quite bare of its fleſh: "he that breaks after (another) has broken, is to be "beaten." And with theſe rules agree the following canons[l], "the bones and ſinews and what is left "they burn on the ſixteenth day, but if that falls "on the ſabbath they burn them on the ſeventeenth, "becauſe theſe do not drive away the ſabbath or a "feaſt-day." And ſo it fell out this year in which Chriſt ſuffered, for the ſixteenth was the ſabbath-day: again, "he that breaks a bone in a pure paſſover, "lo, he is to be beaten with forty ſtripes; but he "that leaves any thing in a pure one, and breaks in "an impure one, is not to be beaten with forty ſtripes;" yea they ſay[m], tho' "it was a little kid "and tender, and whoſe bones are tender, they "may not eat them; for this is breaking of the bone,

“ and if he eats he is to be beaten, for it is the ſame “ thing whether a hard or a tender bone be broken.” Now in this as in many other reſpects the paſchal lamb was a type of Chriſt, whoſe bones were none of them to be broken, to ſhew that his life was not taken away by men, but was laid down freely by himſelf; and alſo the unbroken ſtrength of Chriſt under the weight of ſin, the curſe of the law, and wrath of God, and conflict with ſatan, when he obtained eternal redemption for us: and alſo this was on account of his reſurrection from the dead, which was to be in a few days; tho' had his bones been broken he could eaſily have reſtored them, but it was the will of God it ſhould be otherwiſe. Moreover as none of the bones of his natural body were to be broken, ſo none that are members of him in a ſpiritual ſenſe, who are bone of his bone and fleſh of his fleſh, ſhall ever be loſt.

Ver. 37. And again another ſcripture ſaith, &c.] Zach. xii. 10. which as the former is referred to on account of the not breaking of his bones, this is cited as fulfilled by the piercing of his ſide: they ſhall look on him whom they pierced; in the Hebrew text it is, upon me whom they have pierced; the reaſon of this difference is, becauſe Chriſt who is Jehovah is there ſpeaking prophetically of himſelf, here the Evangeliſt cites it as fulfilled in him, that is, that part of it which regards the piercing of him; for that of the Jews looking upon him and mourning is yet to be fulfilled, and will be at the time of their converſion in the latter day, and at the day of judgment. And as the piercing of the Meſſiah has been literally fulfilled in Jeſus, there is reaſon to believe, tho' the Jews are to this day hardened againſt him, that that part of the prophecy which concerns their looking to him, and mourning for him on account of his being pierced by them, will alſo, in God's own time, be fulfilled. Nor is it any objection to the application of this prophecy to our Lord Jeſus, that not the Jews, but the Roman ſoldiers pierced him, ſince what one does by another, he may be ſaid to do himſelf: tho' it was a Roman ſoldier that pierced the ſide of Chriſt, the Jews might deſire and urge him to do it; and however, they agreed to it, and were well pleaſed with it; and juſt ſo Chriſt is ſaid to be crucified and ſlain by them; tho' this was done by the above ſoldiers, becauſe they prevailed upon Pilate to paſs the ſentence of death upon him, and to deliver him to the ſoldiers to be crucified. From the citation of this paſſage it appears, that the writers of the New Teſtament did not always follow the Greek verſion of the Old Teſtament, which here renders the words very differently, and very wrongly; but John cites them according to the Hebrew text, even which we now have, and which is an inſtance of the truth, purity, and integrity of the preſent Hebrew books of the Old Teſtament. The Jewiſh doctors [n] themſelves own that theſe words reſpect the Meſſiah, tho' they pretend that Meſſiah ben Joſeph is meant, who ſhall be ſlain in the wars of Gog and Magog; for ſince their diſappointment, and the blindneſs and hardneſs of heart which have followed it, they feign two Meſſiahs as expected by them; one Meſſiah ben David who they ſuppoſe will be proſperous and victorious; and the other Meſſiah ben Joſeph, who will ſuffer much and at laſt be killed.

Ver. 38. And after this, &c.] That is, after Jeſus had given up the ghoſt, when it was a clear caſe that he was dead; as it was before the ſoldiers came to break the legs of the crucified, and before one of them pierced the ſide of Jeſus with his ſpear, tho' that confirmed it: but it ſeems to be before theſe laſt things were done, and yet after the death of Chriſt, that Joſeph of Arimathea went to Pilate, and deſired leave to take down the body of Jeſus. This Joſeph was a counſellor, one of the Jewiſh Sanhedrim; tho' he did not give his conſent to the counſel of the court concerning Jeſus: he is here deſcribed by the place of his birth, Arimathea. This place has been generally thought to be the ſame with Ramah or Ramathaim Zophim, the birth-place of Samuel the prophet; and ſo I have taken it to be in the note on Matt. xxvii. 57. but there ſeems to be ſome reaſon to doubt about it, ſince Ramathaim Zophim was in mount Ephraim, or in the mountainous parts of that tribe, 1 Sam. i. 1. whereas Arimathea is called a city of the Jews, Luke xxiii. 5. But if it was in the tribe of Ephraim, it would rather, as Reland [o] obſerves, be called a city of the Samaritans, to whom that part of the country belonged; beſides, as the ſame learned writer ſhews from Judg. iv. 5. 2 Chron. xix. 4. the mountainous parts of Ephraim were about Bethel, to the north of Jeruſalem; whereas Arimathea is mentioned along with Lydda, which lay to the weſt of it, as it is by Jerom, and others: that ancient writer ſays [p], that not far from Lydda, now called Dioſpolis, famous for the raiſing of Dorcas from the dead, and the healing of Æneas is Arimathia, the little village of Joſeph, who buried the Lord; tho' he makes this elſewhere [q] to be the ſame with Ramathaim Zophim: his words are, Armatha Zophim, the city of Elkanah and Samuel, is in the region of Thamna by Dioſpolis, (or Lydda) from whence was Joſeph, who, in the Goſpels, is ſaid to be of Arimathia; and ſo in Joſephus [r], and in 1 Maccab. xi. 34. Lydda and Ramatha, or, as in the latter, Ramathem, are mentioned togther, as added unto Judea from the country of Samaria; which laſt clauſe, from the country of Samaria, ſeems to bid fair for a reconciliation of this matter, that theſe two are one and the ſame place: and as the birth-place of Samuel the prophet is called, by the Septuagint, Armathaim, as has been obſerved on the note on Matt. xxvii. 57. ſo it is likewiſe called, רמתא, Ramatha, by the Targumiſt on Hoſ. v. 8. as it is alſo by Joſephus [s]. The city of this name, near Lydda, is now called Ramola, and is about thirty-ſix, or thirty-ſeven miles from Jeruſalem. The Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions render it, who was of Rama. Some take this Joſeph to be the ſame with Joſeph ben Gorion, the brother of Nicodemus ben Gorion, and who is ſuppoſed to be the ſame Nicodemus mentioned in the next verſe. The character the Jews [t] give of Joſeph ben Gorion, is, that he was a prieſt, and of the richeſt and moſt noble of the prieſts in Jeruſalem; that he was a very wiſe, juſt, and upright man; and that three or four years before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, he was about ſixty-ſeven years of age. Being a diſciple of Jeſus, but ſecretly, for fear of the Jews; not one of the twelve, but a private hearer, who had ſometimes ſecretly attended on the miniſtry of Chriſt, loved him, and believed in him as the Meſſiah, but had not courage enough to confeſs him, and declare for him, for fear of being put out of the ſynagogue and Sanhedrim: but now being inſpired with zeal and courage, went in boldly, as Mark ſays, and beſought Pilate that he might take away the body of Jeſus;

Jeſus; from off the croſs, that it might not be any more inſulted by his enemies, and might not be thrown with the other bodies into the place where the bodies of malefactors were caſt, but that it might be decently interr'd. This Pilate, the Roman governour, had the diſpoſal of, and to him Joſeph applies for it; which was a great inſtance of his affection for Chriſt, and was a declaring openly for him, and muſt unavoidably expoſe him to the malice and reſentment of the Jews: and Pilate gave him leave; having firſt enquired of the centurion, whether he was dead; of which being ſatisfied, he readily granted it; not only in complaiſance to Joſeph, who was a man of note and figure, but on account of the innocence of Jeſus, of which he was convinced, and therefore was very willing he ſhould have an honourable burial: he came therefore; to the croſs, with proper ſervants with him, and took the body of Jeſus; down from the croſs, and carried it away. The Alexandrian copy, different from all others, and in language uncommon, reads, the body of God.

Ver. 39. And there came alſo Nicodemus, &c.] To the croſs, at the ſame time as Joſeph did; who, whether they were brethren, as ſome conjecture, and met here by conſent, ſince one prepared one thing, and another another, for the interment of Chriſt, is not certain. This Nicodemus is thought to be the ſame with Nicodemus ben Gorion, the Talmudiſts ſpeak of, who, they ſay [u], was one of the three rich men in Jeruſalem; as this appears to be a rich man, from the large quantity of myrrh and aloes he brought with him, and which muſt be very coſtly. Moreover, they ſay [w], that he had another name, which was Boni; and they themſelves obſerve [x], that Boni was one of the diſciples of Jeſus, as this Nicodemus was, tho' a ſecret one, as Joſeph: this is he which at the firſt came to Jeſus by night; who, when Chriſt firſt entered on his miniſtry, or when he firſt came unto him, came to him by night to diſcourſe with him about his Meſſiahſhip, doctrine, and miracles, John iii. 1, 2. for being one of the Phariſees, a ruler of the Jews, and a Rabbi or maſter in Iſrael, he was aſhamed, or afraid to converſe publickly with him; however, he went away a diſciple; and tho' he did not openly profeſs him, he loved him, and believed in him, and now being dead ſhewed his reſpect to him: and brought a mixture of myrrhe and aloes, about an hundred pound weight; not himſelf, but by his ſervants. This mixture of myrrh and aloes together, and which was a very large quantity, and exceeding coſtly, was not deſigned for the embalming of his body, and preſerving it from putrefaction; for he was not embalmed, tho' myrrh and caſſia and other odours were uſed in embalming [y]; but for perfuming it, and in honour and reſpect unto him: it was ſweet ſmelling myrrh, and an aromatic ſpice called aloe he brought, and not the common aloe. Nonnus calls it the Indian aloe, which was of a ſweet odour; for which reaſon it was brought. Theſe are both reckoned with the chief ſpices, Cant. iv. 14. Myrrh was one of the principal ſpices in the anointing oil and holy perfume, Exod. xxx. 23, 34. It is a kind of gum or reſin called ſtacte, that iſſues either by inciſion, or of its own accord, out of the body or branches of a tree of this name, which grows in Arabia and Egypt; and being of an agreeable ſmell, was uſed at funerals: hence thoſe words of Martial [z]——& olentem funera myrrham; and ſo Nazianzen, ſpeaking of his brother Cæſarius, ſays [a], "he lies dead, friendleſs, deſolate, miſer-"able, σμυρνης ολιγης ηξιωμενος, favoured with a little "myrrh." And ſo the aloe was uſed to perfume, and to give a good ſcent, Prov. vii. 17. and Chriſt's garments are ſaid to ſmell of myrrh, aloes, and caſſia, Pſ. xlv. 8. Some have thought, that this was a mixture of the juice of myrrh, and of the juice of the aloe-plant, and was a liquid into which the body of Chriſt was put: but this will not ſo well agree with the winding of the body in linnen, with theſe in the next verſe, where they are called ſpices. A Jew [b] objects to this relation of the Evangeliſt as unworthy of belief: he affirms, that this was enough for two hundred dead bodies, and that it could not be carried with leſs than the ſtrength of a mule, and therefore not by Nicodemus. In anſwer to which, it is obſerved by biſhop Kidder [c], that we have nothing but the Jew's own word for it, that this was enough for two hundred bodies, and a load for a mule; and that it ſhould be told what was the weight of the λιτρα, or pound, mentioned by the Evangeliſt, e'er the force of the objection can be ſeen; and that it is a thing well known, that among the Jews the bodies of great men were buried with great quantity of ſpices: 'tis ſaid of Aſa, that they buried him in his own ſepulchre which he had made for himſelf, in the city of David, and laid him in the bed which was filled with ſweet odours, and divers kinds of ſpices, 2 Chron. xvi. 14. To which may be added, what is before obſerved, that this was not brought by Nicodemus himſelf, but by his ſervants; and what they did by his orders, and he coming along with them, he may be ſaid to do. Juſt as Joſeph is ſaid to take down the body of Jeſus from the croſs, wind it in linnen, and carry it to his ſepulchre, and there bury it; this being done by his ſervants, at his orders, or they at leaſt aſſiſting in it; and as Pilate is ſaid to put the title he wrote upon the croſs, tho' it was done by others, at his command.

Ver. 40. Then took they the body of Jeſus, &c.] It being taken down from the croſs, and carried to the deſigned place of interment; they, Joſeph and Nicodemus, either themſelves, or by their ſervants, took the body; and wound it in linnen clothes; or ſwathed, or wrapped it in linnen; rolled it about the body many times, as was the cuſtom of the eaſtern nations to do; this was what Joſeph prepared: with the ſpices; which they either wrapped up with the linnen, or ſtrowed over the body when it was wound up; theſe Nicodemus brought: as the manner of the Jews is to bury; both was uſual with them; both to wind up the dead in linnen, hence R. Jonathan alluding to this cuſtom when R. Iſai was taken, and others would have delivered him, ſaid, יכרך המת בסדינו, let the dead be wrapt in his own linnen [d]; and alſo to bury them with ſpices; hence we read of the ſpices of the dead in a Jewiſh canon [e]: "they don't "ſay a bleſſing over a lamp, nor over the ſpi-"ces of idolaters; nor over a lamp, nor over "הבשמים של מתים, the ſpices of the dead:" the uſe of which, Bartenora on the place ſays, was to drive away an ungrateful ſmell. The wrapping up the body of Chriſt in a fine linnen cloth, was a token of his purity and innocence; and ſignificative of that pure and ſpotleſs righteouſneſs he had now brought in: the ſtrowing it with ſpices may denote the fragrancy of Chriſt's death to Jehovah the Father, in whoſe ſight it was precious, and whoſe ſacrifice to him is of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour; and alſo to all ſenſible ſinners, to whom a crucified Chriſt is precious; ſince by his death ſin is expiated, the law fulfilled, juſtice ſatisfied, reconciliation made, ſecurity from condemnation obtained, and death is aboliſhed.

[d] T. Hieroſ. Terumot, fol. 46. 2.

[e] Miſn. Beracot, c. 8. §. 6.

Ver. 41. Now in the place where he was crucified, &c.] Which takes in all that ſpot of ground that lay on that ſide of the city where he was crucified; or near to the place of his crucifixion, for it was not a garden in which he was crucified: there was a garden; all gardens, except roſe-gardens, were without the city, as has been obſerved on ch. xviii. 1. This, it ſeems, belonged to Joſeph: rich men uſed to have their gardens without the city for their convenience and pleaſure: and in the garden a new ſepulchre; they might not bury within the city. Some choſe to make their ſepulchres in their gardens, to put them in mind of their mortality, when they took their walks there; ſo R. Duſtai, R. Jannai, and R. Nehurai, were buried, בפרדס, in a garden, or orchard [f]; and ſo were Manaſſeh and Amon, kings of Judah, 2 Kings xxi. 18, 26. Here Joſeph had one, hewn out in a rock, for himſelf and family, and was newly made. The Jews diſtinguiſh between an old, and a new ſepulchre; they ſay [g], "קבר חדש, a new ſepulchre may be meaſured and "ſold, and divided, but an old one might not be "meaſured, nor ſold, nor divided." Wherein was never man yet laid; this is not improperly, nor impertinently added, though the Evangeliſt had before ſaid, that it was a new ſepulchre; for that it might be, and yet bodies have been lain in it; for according to the Jewiſh canons [h], "there is a new "ſepulchre, which is as an old one; and there is "an old one, which is as a new one; an old ſepulchre, in which lie ten dead bodies, which are not "in the power of the owners, הרי זה כקבר חדש, "lo, this is as a new ſepulchre." Now Chriſt was laid in ſuch an one, where no man had been laid, that it might appear certainly that it was he, and not another, that was riſen from the dead.

Ver. 42. There laid they Jeſus therefore, &c.] Becauſe it was a new ſepulchre, and no man had been ever laid there before; and ſome other reaſons are added: becauſe of the Jews preparation day; either for the Chagigah, or the ſabbath, which was juſt at hand; the Perſic verſion reads, the night of the ſabbath: for this reaſon, they could not dig a grave purpoſely for him; for it was forbidden on feaſt-days; and therefore they put him into a tomb ready made: the canon runs [i], "they may not dig "pits, וקברות, nor graves, on a ſolemn feaſt-day." The former of theſe the commentators ſay [k], are graves dug in the earth, and the latter edifices built over graves; and for the ſame reaſon, becauſe it was ſuch a day, they did not take his body to any of their houſes, and embalm and anoint it, as they otherwiſe would have done; but this being a ſolemn day, and the ſabbath drawing on apace, they haſtened the interment, and took the moſt opportune place that offered: for the ſepulchre was nigh at hand; ſome ſay about an hundred and eight feet from the croſs, and others an hundred and thirty feet, though ſome ſay but fifty or ſixty, at furtheſt it was not far off.

CHAP. XX.

Ver. 1. THE firſt day of the week, &c.] On the ſixth day of the week, towards the cloſe of it, Chriſt was interred; he lay in the grave all the ſeventh day, and on the firſt day of the week, roſe from the dead: ſo the women, after they had obſerved where the body was laid, went home and prepared ſpices and ointments, to anoint it; but the ſabbath coming on, they were prevented; on which they reſted, according to the Jewiſh law: but as ſoon as it was over, cometh Mary Magdalene; not alone, but other women with her; who had attended Chriſt at the croſs, obſerved where he was buried, and had prepared ſpices to anoint him, and now came for that purpoſe; for not merely to ſee the ſepulchre, and weep at the grave, did ſhe with the reſt come, but to perform this piece of funeral ſervice: early when it was yet dark; as it was when ſhe ſet out, the day juſt began to dawn; tho' by that time ſhe got to the ſepulchre, the ſun was riſing: unto the ſepulchre; where ſhe ſaw the body of Jeſus laid by Joſeph, in a tomb of his, and in his garden; by whoſe leave, it is probable, being aſked over night, ſhe with her companions were admitted: and ſeeth the ſtone taken away from the ſepulchre; which Joſeph rolled there, and the Phariſees ſealed and ſet a watch to obſerve it. This was removed by an angel; for though Chriſt himſelf could eaſily have done it, it was proper it ſhould be done by a meſſenger from heaven, by the order of divine juſtice, who had laid him as a priſoner there. Mary's coming ſo early to the grave, ſhews her great love and affection to Chriſt, her zeal, courage, and diligence, in manifeſting her reſpect unto him: and oftentimes ſo it is, that the greateſt ſinners when converted, are moſt eminent for grace, particularly, faith, love, and humility; and are moſt diligent in the diſcharge of duty.

Ver. 2. Then ſhe runneth and cometh to Simon Peter, &c.] That is, after ſhe had not only ſeen that the ſtone was took away, but had looked into the ſepulchre, and ſaw that the body of Chriſt was removed; for otherwiſe ſhe could not have ſaid, that it was took away out of it: upon which ſhe made all the haſte ſhe could to Peter; who, where he was ſhe knew; and ſhe was particularly bid by the angel ſhe ſaw in the ſepulchre, to go to him: and to the other diſciple whom Jeſus loved; John the writer of this Goſpel; for theſe two were together, as they uſually were; nor were they alone, for the reſt of the diſciples were with them: and ſaith unto them, they have taken away the Lord out of the ſepulchre, and we know not where they have laid him. The Oriental verſions, the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic read, I know not where they have laid him; who they were that had taken the body of Chriſt away, whether friends or enemies, ſhe could not ſay; nor did ſhe, or any of the women that were with her, know where it was put; whether in ſome other grave, or was expoſed to the inſults of men, or to birds and beaſts of prey; whether it was laid in a more ſuitable and convenient place, or in a ſcandalous one; and whether this removal was for his greater honour, or reproach; to know this, gave her great concern and uneaſineſs, as ſhe knew it muſt the diſciples alſo: ſo Chriſt in a ſpiritual ſenſe, may be removed from his people for a time, and they know not where he is; ſometimes he removes himſelf, to chaſtize them for their former carriage, to try and exerciſe their grace, to enflame their love to him, and ſharpen their deſires after him, and to endear his preſence to them the more, when they enjoy it again; ſometimes he is taken away from them by preachers, when they leave him out of their diſcourſes; and by their own ſins and tranſgreſſions, which ſeparate between him and them, with reſpect to communion; and who for a time may not know where to find him: and for the direction of ſuch it may be obſerved, that he is to be found in the miniſtration of his word and ordinances, in his churches.

[f] Jechus haabot, p. 43. Ed. Hottinger. [g] Maſſech. Semacot, c. 24. fol. 16. 3. [h] Ib. [i] Miſn. Moed Katon, c. 1. §. 6. [k] Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

Ver. 3. Peter therefore went forth, &c.] Out of the houſe where he was, upon hearing the account Mary gave: and that other diſciple; John, the Evangeliſt and Apoſtle; the reſt of the diſciples ſtaying at home and continuing together, waiting to hear what account theſe two would bring: and came to the ſepulchre; to ſee with their own eyes what was done, and whether things were as Mary had related; and to make a more particular enquiry into, and examination of them.

Ver. 4. So they ran both together, &c.] At firſt ſetting out, and for a while; not content to walk, they ran, being eagerly deſirous to know the truth of things: and that other diſciple did outrun Peter, and came firſt to the ſepulchre; John was a younger man than Peter, and ſo more nimble, and ſwift of foot, and got to the ſepulchre before him; and beſides, had not that concern of mind to retard him, Peter might have; as, ſuppoſing Chriſt was riſen, and he ſhould ſee him, how he ſhould be able to look him in the face, whom he had ſo ſhamefully denied.

Ver. 5. And he ſtooping down and looking in, &c.] That is, John; when he came to the ſepulchre, ſtooped down to look into it, and ſee what he could ſee; he only went into the court, or ſtood upon the floor, where the bearers uſed to ſet down the bier, before they put the corps into one of the graves in the ſepulchre, which were four cubits lower; ſee the note on Mark xvi. 5. Hence he was obliged to ſtoop down, e're he could ſee any thing within: when he ſaw the linen cloaths lying; in which the body had been wrapped, but that itſelf not there: yet went he not in; to the ſepulchre itſelf, but waited in the court or porch, till Peter came; and perhaps might be timorous and fearful, of going into ſuch a place alone; the Arabic verſion reads it, he dared not go in.

Ver. 6. Then cometh Simon Peter following him, &c.] In a very little time after him: and went into the ſepulchre; itſelf, though not without firſt ſtooping down, as John did; ſee Luke xxiv. 12. And ſeeth the linen cloaths lie; as John did; and as by the mouth of two or three witneſſes, every thing is confirmed, ſo was this; both ſaw the linen in which the body was wrapped, but that was gone; and which was a ſign that the body was not ſtolen away, otherwiſe the linen would not have been left; and beſides, it would have taken up ſome time, and given a good deal of trouble to have unwrapped the body, when 'tis conſidered how many foldings the Jews uſed to wind up their corpſe in.

Ver. 7. And the napkin that was about his head, &c.] The word σουδαριον, rendered napkin, is thought to be originally Latin, and ſignifies an handkerchief, with which the ſweat is wiped off the face, and ſo it is uſed in Acts xix. 12. but Nonnus ſays it is a common word with the Syrians, and the word, סודרא, is uſed in the Syriac verſion; and which he renders, κεφαλης ζωστηρα, the girdle, or binding of the head, for with this the head and face of the dead perſon were bound; ſee John xi. 44. Now Peter, by going into the ſepulchre, and looking about him, and examining things more ſtrictly and narrowly, obſerved that which neither he nor John had taken notice of, when only ſtooping they looked in; and that is, that this head binder, or napkin, was not lying with the linen cloaths, but wrapped together in a place by itſelf: and was plainly the effect of thought, care, and compoſure; and clearly ſhewed, that the body was not taken away in a hurry, or by thieves, ſince every thing lay in ſuch order and decency; and which was done, either by our Lord himſelf, or by the angels.

Ver. 8. Then went in alſo the other diſciple, &c.] John, being animated by the example of Peter, went down into the ſepulchre likewiſe; whither Peter alſo might becken, or call him to be witneſs with him, of the order and ſituation in which things lay: which came firſt to the ſepulchre; yet went laſt into it; ſo it was, that the firſt was laſt, and the laſt firſt: and he ſaw; the linen cloaths lie in one place, and the napkin folded up in order, lying by itſelf in another: and believed; that the body was not there, but either was taken away, or was raiſed from the dead; but whether as yet he believed the latter is doubtful, by what follows; unleſs what follows, is conſidered as an illuſtration, eſpecially of the faith of John, that he ſhould believe the reſurrection of Chriſt, though till now he did not know nor underſtand, the ſcriptures that ſpake of it.

Ver. 9. For as yet they knew not the ſcripture, &c.] Meaning not ſome particular paſſage of ſcripture, but the writings of the Old Teſtament in general, and the various places in it, which ſpoke of the reſurrection of Chriſt, either in a way of type, or prophecy; ſuch as Gen. xxii. 3, 4. x. 13. Jonas ii. 17. Pſal. xvi. 10. Hoſ. vi. 2. Iſa. xxvi. 19. and though our Lord had often referred to ſome of them, at leaſt as in Matt. xii. 40. and xvi. 21. and xx. 16. yet ſuch was the dulneſs of the diſciples, or ſuch their prejudices in favour of the Meſſiah being to continue, and ſet up a temporal kingdom, that even John, who leaned on his breaſt, and Peter, who was ſo inquiſitive and deſirous of knowing our Lord's meaning in every thing, did not underſtand the ſenſe of his words, nor of thoſe places of ſcripture he had reference to: that he muſt riſe again from the dead; ſo it was determined, thus it was predicted, and the juſtification and ſalvation of God's elect required it; and yet they knew not the thing, nor the neceſſity and importance of it.

Ver. 10. Then the diſciples, &c.] Peter and John, after they had ſeen and examined things, and ſatisfied themſelves as much as they could: went away again unto their own home; or to themſelves, as in the original text, and ſo the Vulgate Latin reads it; not that the meaning is, that they had been out of their minds, and proper exerciſe of them, and now came to themſelves; but they returned to their own company, to the reſt of the diſciples they left at home, who were as themſelves. The Syriac renders it, לדוכתהון, to their own place, and ſo the Arabic and Perſic verſions; the place from whence they came, and where the reſt were aſſembled together, to pray, converſe, and conſult together, what was to be done at this juncture.

Ver. 11. But Mary ſtood without at the ſepulchre, &c.] She returned from the city to the ſepulchre again, following Peter and John thither, who continued here when they departed, being willing to get ſome tidings of her Lord, if poſſible. The word without, is omitted by the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions, but is in the Greek copies; and is properly put by the Evangeliſt, when rightly underſtood; for the meaning is not, that ſhe ſtood without the ſepulchre, taken in its full extent; for ſhe ſtood, בחצר, in the court, where the bearers ſet down the corpſe, in order to carry it into the cave, or vault; ſhe ſtood without the innermoſt part of the ſepulchre, but not without ſide the ſepulchre itſelf; as appears from her ſtooping and looking into it: weeping; that the body of her dear Lord was taken away, and ſhe prevented of ſhewing that reſpect unto it, ſhe deſigned; and not knowing in whoſe hands it was, but fearing it would be inſulted and abuſed by wicked men, her heart was ready to break with ſorrow: and as ſhe wept, ſhe ſtooped down and looked into the ſepulchre; to ſee if ſhe could ſee him, if ſhe and the diſciples were not miſtaken, being loth to go without finding him: ſo it is in a ſpiritual ſenſe, the abſence of Chriſt is cauſe of great diſtreſs and ſorrow to gracious ſouls; becauſe of the excellency of his perſon, the near and dear relations he ſtands in to them; and on account of the nature of his preſence and company, which is preferable to every thing in this world; nor can ſuch ſouls, when they have loſt ſight of Chriſt, ſit down contented; but will ſeek after him in the ſcriptures, under the miniſtry of the word, and at the ordinances of the Goſpel, where a crucified, buried, riſen Jeſus is exhibited.

Ver. 12. And ſeeth two angels in white, &c.] Matthew and Mark ſpeak but of one, but Luke of two, as here; whom he calls men, becauſe they appeared in an human form, and in ſhining garments, or white apparel; and which appearance is entirely agreeable to the received notion of the Jews, that as evil angels or devils, are cloathed in black, ſo good angels, or miniſtring ſpirits, לבושי לבנים, are cloathed in white [1], expreſſive of their ſpotleſs purity and innocence: ſitting the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of Jeſus had lain; in what poſition the body of Chriſt was laid, whether from weſt to eaſt, as ſome, or from north to ſouth, as others, is not certain; ſince the Jews obſerved no rule in this matter, as appears from the form of their ſepulchres, and the diſpoſition of the graves in them; ſome lying one way, and ſome another, in the ſame vault; ſee the note on Luke xxiv. 12.

Ver. 13. And they ſay unto her, woman, why weepeſt thou? &c.] Signifying, that ſhe had no reaſon to weep, but to rejoice and be glad; ſince, though the body of her Lord was not there, yet he was riſen from the dead, and was alive. This they ſaid, partly to rebuke her for her grief, and to comfort her under it: Beza's ancient copy adds here, as in ver. 15. whom ſeekeſt thou? and ſo does the Ethiopic verſion: ſhe ſaith unto them; without any concern of mind about what they were, and as if they had been of the human kind; for her grief made her fearleſs, and ſhe cared not who ſhe opened the caſe to, ſo that ſhe could get any relief, and any tidings of her Lord: becauſe they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him; and which ſhe thought was reaſon ſufficient, for her weeping; could ſhe but have known, that if he was taken away, it was by his friends, and was well uſed, and ſhe could have had the opportunity of paying her laſt reſpects to him, it would have been a ſatisfaction; but nothing ſhort of this could dry up her tears.

Ver. 14. And when ſhe had thus ſaid, &c.] As ſoon as the words were out of her mouth, before ſhe could have an anſwer from the angels: ſhe turned herſelf back; perceiving, either by the looks and geſture of one of the angels, or by hearing a noiſe, that ſomebody was behind her: and ſaw Jeſus ſtanding, and knew not that it was Jeſus; ſhe ſaw a perſon, but did not know who he was, by reaſon of the form of his appearance, the difference of his cloaths, and not expecting to ſee him alive; or through modeſty, ſhe might not look wiſhfully at him; and beſides, her eyes were filled with tears, and ſwoln with weeping; ſo that ſhe could not ſee clearly; and her eyes might be holden alſo, as the diſciples were, that as yet ſhe might not know him: ſo ſometimes, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, Chriſt is with, and near his people, and they know it not: Chriſt, as God, is omnipreſent; he is every where, and in all places; the ſpiritual preſence of Chriſt, is more or leſs, in ſome way or another, always in all his churches, and among his dear people; but the ſight of him is not always alike to them, nor does he appear to them always in the ſame form; ſometimes againſt them, at leaſt in their apprehenſions, nor always in a manner agreeable to their expectations; nor is his grace always diſcovered in the ſame way, nor has it the ſame effect.

Ver. 15. Jeſus ſaith unto her, woman, why weepeſt thou? &c.] The ſame queſtion he puts to her, as was put by the angels: adding, whom ſeekeſt thou? for ſhe was not only weeping for the loſs of him, but was enquiring after him, if any one ſaw him removed from thence, and where he was carried: ſhe ſuppoſing him to be the gardener; that had the care of the garden, in which the ſepulchre was; for not the owner of the garden, who was Joſeph, but the keeper of it is meant; ſhe could not imagine that Joſeph ſhould be there ſo early in the morning, but might reaſonably think the gardener was: ſaith unto him, Sir, if thou have born him hence, tell me where thou haſt laid him, and I will take him away; ſhe addreſſes him, though ſhe took him to be but the gardener, in a very civil and courteous manner; which was rightly judged, eſpecially ſince ſhe had a favour to aſk of him: ſhe does not mention the name of her Lord, but imagined, he knew who ſhe meant, being ſo lately buried there; and ſuggeſts, that perhaps it might not have been ſo agreeable to the gardener to have his body lie there, and therefore had removed it; and would he but be ſo kind as to let her know where he was put, ſhe, with the aſſiſtance of her friends hard by, would take him away with them: ſo in a ſpiritual ſenſe, a truly gracious ſoul is willing to do any thing, and to be at any trouble, ſo that it may but enjoy Chriſt; it dearly loves him, as this good woman did; it early, and earneſtly, and with its whole heart, ſeeks after him, as ſhe did; and abſence of him, or loſs of his preſence for a while, ſharpens the deſire after him, and makes his preſence the more welcome.

Ver. 16. Jeſus ſaith unto her, Mary, &c.] He might alter the tone of his voice, and ſpeak unto her as he uſed to do, calling her by her name in his uſual manner: ſo Chriſt has perſonal knowledge of all his people, and can call them by name; he knows them, and makes himſelf known to them, before they can know him; and though he may abſent himſelf from them for a while, yet not always: ſhe turned herſelf, and ſaith unto him, Rabboni, which is to ſay, Maſter; it ſeems, as if ſhe had dropped her converſation with the ſuppoſed gardener at once, and ſcarce waited for an anſwer from him, but turns herſelf to the angels again, if ſhe could hear any tidings from them; acting like a perſon in the utmoſt diſtreſs, hurry and confuſion; looking this way and that way, to this or the other perſon: and now upon Chriſt's ſpeaking to her, in this plain, familiar manner, ſhe turns herſelf again; when fully knowing him, ſhe addreſſes him with the greateſt faith and affection, reverence and humility; calling him her Lord and maſter, and throws herſelf at his feet: thus when Chriſt is pleaſed to manifeſt himſelf to his people, there goes a power along with his word, making himſelf known; and a word from Chriſt, attended with divine power, will give a ſoul a turn to him from the moſt excellent creatures, even angels; and when Chriſt is known, he'll be acknowledged with all love, humility, and obedience. The word Rabboni, is of the Chaldee and Syriac form, and ſignifies my Lord, or Maſter; and is commonly applied to one, that has a deſpotic power over another; though all the Oriental verſions ſay, that ſhe ſaid to him in Hebrew. The Syriac and Ethiopic, Rabboni, but the Arabic and Perſic, Rabbi. The titles of Rab, Rabbi, and Rabban, are frequent with the Jewiſh doctors; who ſay [m], that Rabbi is greater than Rab, and Rabban is greater than Rabbi; and a man's own name, greater than Rabban: but the word in the form here uſed Rabbon, I don't remember ever to have obſerved applied to any of the doctors; but is frequently uſed of the divine being, who in their prayers, is often addreſſed in this manner, רבונו של עולם, Lord of the world [n]. I conjecture therefore, that Mary uſed this word, as expreſſive of her faith in his power and Godhead, ſeeing him alive from the dead; though it might be a name ſhe was uſed to call him by before, being convinced from what he had done to her, and by the miracles ſhe had obſerved performed by him on others, of his proper deity; as the poor blind man expreſſes his faith in the power of Chriſt to cure him, by addreſſing him in the ſame language, uſing the ſame word, Mark x. 51.

[1] Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Kidduſhin, fol. 72. 1.

Ver. 17. Jeſus ſaith unto her, touch me not, &c.] Not that his body was an aerial one, or a mere phantom, which could not be touched; the prohibition itſelf ſhews the contrary; and beſides, Chriſt's body was afterwards preſented to Thomas, to be touched by him, and to be handled by all the diſciples; and his feet were held by the women, which is what Mary would have now done: upon the diſcovery of him, ſhe threw herſelf at his feet, and was going to embrace and kiſs them, to teſtify her affection and joy, when ſhe is forbid; not as unworthy of the favour, becauſe ſhe ſought him among the dead, for which the angels reproved her and the reſt; but either becauſe he was not to be converſed with, as before his death, his body being raiſed immortal and glorious; or rather, becauſe he had an errand to ſend her on to his diſciples, which required haſte; nor need ſhe ſtay now to ſhew her reſpect to him, ſince ſhe would have opportunity enough to do that, before his aſcenſion; which though it was to be quickly, yet not directly and immediately; and this ſeems to be the ſenſe of our Lord's reaſon: for I am not yet aſcended to my Father; nor ſhall I immediately go to him; I ſhall make ſome ſtay upon earth; as he did, forty days before his aſcenſion; when he intimates, ſhe might ſee him again, and familiarly converſe with him; at preſent he would have her ſtay no longer with him: but go to my brethren; this he ſays, to ſhew that their carriage to him, being denied by one of them, and forſaken by them all, and the glory he was raiſed unto, as all this made no alteration in their relation to him, ſo neither in his affection to them: Mary was a very proper perſon to be ſent unto them, ſince ſhe had lately been with them, and knew where they were all aſſembled together: and ſay unto them; as from himſelf, perſonating him as it were: I aſcend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God; God was his Father, not by creation, as he is to angels, and the ſouls of men, and therefore is called the father of ſpirits; nor by adoption, as he is to the ſaints; nor with reſpect to the incarnation of Chriſt, for as man, he had no father; or with regard to his office as mediator, for as ſuch he was a ſervant, and not a ſon; but he was his Father by nature, or with regard to his divine perſon, being begotten of him, and ſo his own proper ſon, and he his own proper Father; which hold forth the natural and eternal ſonſhip of Chriſt, his equality with him, and diſtinction from him: and God was the father of his diſciples by adopting grace, in virtue of the covenant of grace made with Chriſt, and through their ſpiritual relation to him, as the natural and eternal Son of God: God the father, is the God of Chriſt as man, who prepared, formed, anointed, ſupported, and glorified his human nature; and in which nature, he prayed to him as his God, believed in him, loved and obeyed him as ſuch; wherefore the Jew [o] very wrongly infers from hence, that he is not God, becauſe the God of Iſrael was his God; ſince this is ſpoken of him as he is man: and he was the God of his diſciples, in and by the covenant of grace made with Chriſt, as their head and repreſentative; ſo that their intereſt in God, as their covenant God and father, was founded upon his being the God and father of Chriſt, and their relation to, and concern with him; and which therefore muſt be firm and laſting, and will hold as long as God is the God and father of Chriſt: this was good news to be brought to his diſciples; which, as it carried the ſtrongeſt marks of affection, and expreſſions of nearneſs of relation; and implied, that he was now riſen from the dead; ſo it ſignified, that he ſhould aſcend to God, who ſtood in the ſame relation to them, as to him; when he ſhould uſe all his intereſt and influence on their behalf, whilſt they were on earth; and when the proper time was come for a remove, that they might be with him, and with his God and father and theirs, where they would be to all eternity.

Ver. 18. Mary Magdalene came, &c.] Directly and immediately, being ready and willing to obey the commands of her Lord, with the utmoſt chearfulneſs; and glad to go on ſuch an errand, and carry ſuch news to his diſciples, even though her private intereſt and perſonal affection, might have inclined her to deſire to ſtay with Chriſt: and told the diſciples that ſhe had ſeen the Lord; not only that he was riſen from the dead, and ſhe had been told ſo by the angels, but ſhe had ſeen him herſelf, and was an eye witneſs of his reſurrection, and which ſhe firmly believed; this ſhe ſaid, not only with all the marks of pleaſure, joy and tranſport, but with an air of aſſurance and confidence: and that he had ſpoken theſe things unto her; as that he called them brethren, and bid her go unto them, and acquaint them, that as he was riſen, he ſhould in a ſhort time aſcend to his Father and theirs, to his God, and theirs; all which ſhe faithfully related to them.

Ver. 19. Then the ſame day at evening, &c.] The ſame day Chriſt roſe from the dead, and appeared to Mary; at the evening of that day, after he had been with the two diſciples to Emmaus, about eight miles from Jeruſalem, and they had returned again to the reſt; and after there had been ſuch a buſtle all day in Jeruſalem, about the body of Jeſus; the ſoldiers that watched the ſepulchre, giving out, by the direction of the elders, that the diſciples of Chriſt had ſtolen away the body, while they ſlept: being the firſt day of the week; as is ſaid in ver. 1. and here repeated, to prevent any miſtake; and that it might be clear, what day it was the diſciples were aſſembled together, and Chriſt appeared to them: when the doors were ſhut; the doors of the houſe, where they were, which 'tis plain was in Jeruſalem, Luke xxiv. 33. but whether it was the houſe where Chriſt and his diſciples eat the paſſover together, or whether it was John's home or houſe, to which he took the mother of Chriſt; ſince he and Peter, and the reſt, ſeem to be afterwards together in one place, is not certain: however, the doors were ſhut; which is not merely expreſſive of the time of night, when this was uſually done; but ſignifies, that they were really locked and bolted, and barred, for which a reaſon is given as follows: where the diſciples were aſſembled for fear of the Jews; after their ſcattering abroad upon the taking of Chriſt, and after his crucifixion was over; and eſpecially after the report of his body being took away, they gathered together, and made faſt the doors of the place, leſt the Jews ſhould come in upon them, and ſurprize them; for they might fear, that ſince they had took away their maſter's life, theirs muſt go next; and eſpecially ſince it was rumoured abroad, that they had ſtole away his body, they might be under the greater fear, that ſearch would be made after them, and they be apprehended and brought into trouble on that account: came Jeſus and ſtood in the midſt of them; on a ſudden, at once, and when they had no thought or fear of any one's coming upon them, without ſome previous notice; but he being the almighty God, did, by his omnipotent power, cauſe the bars and bolts, and doors, in the moſt ſecret and unobſerved manner, to give way to him, and let him in at once among them; when as a preſage and pledge of the accompliſhment of his promiſe, to be with, and in the midſt of his, when met together, either in private or publick, he ſtood and preſented himſelf in the midſt of them: and to let them know at once, he was no enemy, he ſaith unto them, peace be unto you; שלום לכם, peace be unto you, is an uſual form of ſalutation among the Jews; ſee Gen. xliii. 23. expreſſive of all proſperity in ſoul and body, inward and outward, ſpiritual and temporal; and here may have a ſpecial regard to that peace, he ſaid he gave unto them, and left with them, upon his departure from them; and which he had obtained by the blood of his croſs, and now preached unto them.

Ver. 20. And when he had ſo ſaid, &c.] The above ſalutation, in the moſt kind, tender and affectionate manner: and to put them out of all pain, and that they might know certainly who he was, he ſhewed them his hands and his ſide; his hands, which had been pierced with the nails, the marks of which were then to be ſeen; and which they all knew muſt be the caſe, ſince he was crucified; and his ſide, which was pierced with a ſpear, and which left a wide open wound, and which John, who was among them, was an eye witneſs of. Theſe he ſhewed, partly to convince them that he was not a ſpirit, or an apparition, which at firſt ſight they took him to be, from his ſudden appearance among them, the doors being locked and barred; and partly to aſſure them of the truth of his reſurrection, and in the ſame body, as well as to lead them into a view of his great love in ſuffering the death of the croſs for them; and alſo to obſerve to them, from whence that peace and happineſs ſprung, he had juſt now ſaluted them with. 'Tis needleſs to enquire, whether theſe marks in his hands, feet, and ſide, ſtill continue; he was raiſed with them, that he might ſhew them, for the reaſons above given; and ſhould they be thought to continue till all the effects of his death are wrought, ſince he appears in the midſt of the throne and elders, a lamb, as it had been ſlain, and till his ſecond coming, when they that pierced his hands and feet, and ſide, ſhall look and mourn, it is not very unreaſonable: then were the diſciples glad when they ſaw the Lord; for by theſe marks in his hands and feet, and ſide, they were fully convinced, and entirely ſatisfied, that it was he; and that he was riſen from the dead; and who now appeared to them, than which a more delightful ſight could not be enjoyed by them; whereby was fulfilled, what he had foretold and promiſed, ch. xvi. 22. So a ſpiritual ſight of Chriſt, is always rejoicing to a diſciple of his; that is, one that has learned of Chriſt, and learned Chriſt, who has believed in him, and is enabled to deny ſinful, righteous, civil, worldly, and natural ſelf, for Chriſt; and is made willing to take up the croſs, bear it, and follow after him: a ſight of Chriſt as God and man, of his perſonal beauties and excellencies, of his fulneſs and ſuitableneſs, as a Saviour and Redeemer, and ſo as to have ſenſible communion with him, is exceeding delightful to ſuch an one; eſpecially when under a ſenſe of ſin, when accuſed or tempted by ſatan, or when Chriſt has been long abſent, or when under affliction, and on a death-bed; for Chriſt is a believer's all; he ſtands in all relations to him; and ſuch a ſoul never ſees Chriſt aright, but it receives ſomething from him.

Ver. 21. Then ſaid Jeſus to them again, &c.] The words he ſaid before: peace be unto you; which he repeated, to put them out of their fright, by reaſon of which they returned him no anſwer; and to raiſe and engage their attention to what he was about to ſay; and to pacify their conſciences, diſtreſſed with a ſenſe of their conduct towards him; and with a view to the Goſpel of peace, he was now going to ſend them to preach: as my Father hath ſent me, even ſo ſend I you; Chriſt's miſſion of his diſciples, ſuppoſes power in him, honour done to them, authority put upon them, qualifications given them, and hence ſucceſs attended them; what they were ſent to do, was to preach the Goſpel, convert ſinners, build up ſaints, plant churches, and adminiſter ordinances. The pattern of their miſſion, is the miſſion of Chriſt by his Father, which was into this world, to do his will, preach the Goſpel, work miracles, and obtain eternal redemption for his people; and which miſſion does not ſuppoſe inferiority in his divine perſon, nor change of place, but harmony and agreement between the Father and Son: the likeneſs of theſe miſſions, lies in theſe things; their authority is both divine; they are both ſent into the ſame place, the world; and in much the ſame condition, mean, deſpicable, hated and perſecuted; and in part for the ſame end, to preach the Goſpel, and work miracles, for the confirmation of it; but not to obtain redemption, that being a work done ſolely by Chriſt; in which he has no partner, and to whom the glory muſt be only aſcribed.

Ver. 22. And when he had ſaid this, &c.] That is, declared he ſent them forth in like manner, as his Father ſent him: he breathed on them; in alluſion to God's breathing the breath of life into man, at his creation; or rather, to the Spirit himſelf, who is the breath of God, and proceeds from him, as from the Father; and who breathes both upon perſons in regeneration, and in qualifying for miniſterial ſervice, at the inſtance and influence of Chriſt: and ſuch an opinion the Jews have of the ſpirit of the Meſſiah, who ſay [p], that "the ſpirit "went from between the wings of the cherubim, "ונתביח, and breathed upon him (Menaſſeh) by the "decree, or order of the word of the Lord." And ſaith unto them, receive ye the Holy Ghoſt; meaning not the grace of the Holy Ghoſt in regeneration, which they had received already; but the gifts of the Spirit, to qualify them for the work he now ſent them to do, and which were not now actually beſtowed; but this breathing on them, and the words that attended it, were a ſymbol, pledge, and confirmation, of what they were to receive on the day of Pentecoſt: hence it appears, that it is the Spirit of God, who by his gifts and grace, makes and qualifies men to be miniſters of the Goſpel; and our Lord by this action, and theſe words, gives a very conſiderable proof of his deity: the Papiſts ſhew their impudence and wickedneſs, in imitating Chriſt by their inſufflations, or breathing on men; pretending thereby, to convey the Holy Spirit to them.

Ver. 23. Whoſe ſoever ſins ye remit, &c.] God only can forgive ſins, and Chriſt being God, has a power to do ſo likewiſe; but he never communicated any ſuch power to his apoſtles; nor did they ever aſſume any ſuch power to themſelves, or pretend to exerciſe it; it is the mark of antichriſt, to attempt any thing of this kind; who, in ſo doing, uſurps the divine prerogative, places himſelf in his ſeat, and ſhews himſelf as if he was God: but this is to be underſtood only in a doctrinal, or miniſterial way, by preaching the full and free remiſſion of ſins, through the blood of Chriſt, according to the riches of God's grace, to ſuch as repent of their ſins, and believe in Chriſt; declaring, that all ſuch perſons as do ſo repent and believe, all their ſins are forgiven for Chriſt's ſake: and accordingly, they are remitted unto them; in agreement with Chriſt's own words, in his declaration and commiſſion to his diſciples; ſee Mark xvi. 16. Luke xxiv. 47. On the other hand he ſignifies, that whoſe ſoever ſins ye retain, they are retained; that is, that whatſoever ſins ye declare are not forgiven, they are not forgiven; which is the caſe of all final unbelievers, and impenitent ſinners; who dying without repentance towards God, and faith in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, according to the Goſpel declaration, ſhall be damned, and are damned; for God ſtands by, and will ſtand by and confirm the Goſpel of his Son, faithfully preached by his miniſtring ſervants; and all the world will ſooner or later, be convinced of the validity, truth, and certainty, of the declarations on each of theſe heads, made by them.

Ver. 24. But Thomas, one of the twelve, called Didymus, &c.] The perſon here ſpoken of, is deſcribed by his Hebrew name Thomas, and his Greek one Didymus, which both ſignify a twin; and perhaps he was one. It was common with the Jews to have two names, a Jewiſh and a Gentile one; by the one they went in the land of Iſrael, and by the other when without the land [q]; nay, they often went by one name in Judea, and by another in Galilee [r]; where Thomas might go by the name of Didymus with the Greeks, that might inhabit with the Jews in ſome of thoſe parts: he is alſo ſaid to be one of the twelve apoſtles, which was their number at firſt, tho' Judas now was gone off from them, and therefore are ſometimes only called the eleven; but this having been their complement, it is ſtill retained; but what is obſerved of him to his diſadvantage and diſcredit is, that he was not with them when Jeſus came: Beza's ancient copy reads, he was not there with them; and ſo read the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions; he either had not returned to the reſt after their ſcattering one from another upon the apprehending of Chriſt; or did not chuſe to aſſemble with the reſt, for fear of the Jews; or was taken up with ſome buſineſs and affair of life; however, he was not with the reſt of the diſciples, when they were aſſembled together, and Jeſus appeared among them: as it is of good conſequence to attend the aſſemblies of Chriſt's diſciples and followers, ſo it is of bad conſequence to neglect or forſake them: 'tis frequently to good purpoſe that perſons attend them; here God comes and bleſſes his people, Jeſus grants his preſence, the graces of the Spirit are increaſed, and drawn forth into exerciſe; ſouls that have loſt ſight of Chriſt find him, diſconſolate ones are comforted, weak ones ſtrengthened, and hungry ones fed: on the other hand, not to attend is of bad conſequence; neglect of aſſembling together, expoſes to many ſnares and temptations; brings on a ſpiritual leanneſs; leads to an indifference and lukewarmneſs; iſſues in a low degree of grace, and a non-exerciſe of it, and in a loſs of Chriſt's preſence.

Ver. 25. The other diſciples therefore ſaid unto him, &c.] Some time in the ſame week, as they had opportunity of ſeeing him, with great joy, and full aſſurance of faith in Chriſt's reſurrection: we have ſeen the Lord; they had not only the teſtimony of the women, and the declaration of the angels, but they ſaw him with their own eyes, and beheld even the very prints of the nails in his hands and feet, and of the ſpear in his ſide, and therefore could not be miſtaken and impoſed upon: a ſpiritual ſight of Chriſt, is a bleſſing often enjoyed by attending the aſſembly of the ſaints; to ſee Chriſt, is the deſire of every gracious ſoul; this is the end of their meeting together for ſocial worſhip; the word and ordinances, have a tendency in them to lead ſouls to a ſight of him; and it may be expected, becauſe it is promiſed; and whenever it is enjoyed, it is very delightful; and a ſoul that meets with Chriſt in an ordinance, can't but ſpeak of it to others; and which he does with joy and pleaſure, in an exulting, and even in a kind of a boaſting manner; and that for the encouragement of others to attend likewiſe: but he ſaid unto them, except I ſhall ſee in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thruſt my hand into his ſide, I will not believe. That nails were uſed in the crucifixion of Chriſt, is certain from this place, though no where elſe mentioned; whereby the prophecy of him in Pſal. xxii. 16. was fulfilled; for theſe were not always uſed in this kind of death. The bodies of men were ſometimes faſtened to the croſs with cords, and not nails[s]. How many were uſed, whether three, as ſome, or four, as others, or more, as were ſometimes uſed[t], is not certain, nor material to know. The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Perſic verſions read, the place of the nails; that is, the place where the nails were drove. Thomas knew that Chriſt was faſtened to the croſs with nails, and that his ſide was pierced with a ſpear; which he, tho' not preſent, might have had from John, who was an eye-witneſs thereof; but though they had all ſeen him alive, he'll not truſt to their teſtimony; nay, he was determined not to believe his own eyes; unleſs he put his finger into, as well as ſaw, the print of the nails, and thruſt his hand into his ſide, as well as beheld the wound made by the ſpear, he is reſolved not to believe. And his ſin of unbelief is the more aggravated, inaſmuch as this diſciple was preſent at the raiſing of Lazarus from the dead by Chriſt, and had heard Chriſt himſelf ſay, that he ſhould riſe from the dead the third day. We may learn from hence how great is the ſin of unbelief; that the beſt of men are ſubject to it; and that tho' this was over-ruled by divine providence to bring out another proof of Chriſt's reſurrection, yet this did not excuſe the ſin of Thomas: and it may be obſerved, that as Thomas would not believe, without ſeeing the marks of the nails and ſpear in Chriſt's fleſh; ſo many will not believe, unleſs they find ſuch and ſuch marks in themſelves, which often prove very enſnaring and diſtreſſing. Juſt ſuch an unbeliever as Thomas was, the Jews make Moſes to be, when Iſrael ſinned: they ſay, "he "did not believe that Iſrael had ſinned, but ſaid, "אם איני רואה איני מאמין, if I do not ſee, I will "not believe[u]."

[r] Ib. fol. 45. 3.

Ver. 26. And after eight days, &c.] That is, after another week, that day ſennight, which taking in the day in which Chriſt roſe and appeared to Mary Magdalene, and his diſciples, and the day in which he now appeared to the diſciples with Thomas, made eight days; a like way of ſpeaking ſee in Luke ix. 28. compared with Matt. xvii. 1. And Dr. Hammond has proved from Joſephus[w], that the Jews uſed to expreſs a week by eight days. Again, his diſciples were within; within doors, in ſome private houſe; probably the ſame as before, in ſome part of the city of Jeruſalem: and Thomas with them; which ſhews their harmony and agreement, their frequency and conſtancy in meeting together, and their chriſtian forbearance with Thomas, notwithſtanding his unbelief; whom they looked upon as a good man, and retained in their company, hoping by one means or other he would be convinced: and it alſo ſhows Thomas's regard to them, and affection for them, by meeting with them, tho' he had not the ſame faith in the reſurrection of Chriſt: then came Jeſus; when the diſciples, with Thomas, were together; ſo making good his promiſe to meet with his people when they meet; and thereby putting an honour upon, and giving encouragement to attendance with the ſaints: if it ſhould be aſked, why did not Chriſt come ſooner? it may be replied, that the reaſon, on his part, was, it was his will and pleaſure to come at this time, and not before; Chriſt has his ſett times to himſelf, when he will appear and manifeſt himſelf to his people: on Thomas's part the reaſons might be, partly to rebuke him for his ſin, and that the ſtrength of his unbelief might appear the more, and that ſome deſire might be ſtirred up in him to ſee Chriſt, if he was riſen. And on the part of the diſciples, becauſe they did not meet together ſooner; and for the further trial of their faith, whether it would continue or no, Thomas obſtinately perſiſting in his unbelief: the doors being ſhut; as before, and for the ſame reaſon, for fear of the Jews, as well as for the privacy of their devotion and converſation: and ſtood in the midſt; having in the ſame powerful manner as before cauſed the doors, locks, and bars to give way, when at once he appeared in the midſt of them all, not to Thomas alone, but to all the eleven; and this the rather, becauſe the diſciples had bore a teſtimony to Chriſt's reſurrection, and which he meant now to confirm; and to rebuke Thomas publickly, who had ſinned before them all: and ſaid, peace be unto you; which he had ſaid before, and now, ſaluting Thomas in like manner as he did the reſt, notwithſtanding his unbelief.

Ver. 27. Then ſaith he to Thomas, &c.] For whoſe ſake he chiefly came, and whom he at once ſingled out from the reſt, and called by name in the moſt friendly manner, without upbraiding or reproaching him for not believing the teſtimony that had been given him: reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands, and reach hither thine hand and thruſt it into my ſide; that is, make uſe of every way by ſeeing, feeling, and examining the ſcars in my hands, and the hole in my ſide, and ſatisfy thyſelf in the manner thou haſt deſired; which ſhows the omniſcience of Chriſt, who knew what had paſſed between him and the other diſciples, and the very words Thomas had expreſſed himſelf in; alſo his great humility and condeſcenſion in ſubmitting himſelf to be examined in the very manner he had fixed; and likewiſe the reality of his reſurrection: and be not faithleſs, but believing; in which words Chriſt diſſuades him from unbelief, which is very evil in its own nature, and in its effects; it is the root of all evil; it unfits for duty, and renders the word unprofitable, and leads men off from Chriſt; and is the more aggravated in the people of God, by the inſtances, declarations, and promiſes of grace, and diſcoveries of love made unto them: and he alſo encourages him to believe. The exerciſe of the grace of faith is well-pleaſing to Chriſt; it gives glory to him, and makes for the ſoul's comfort; and a word from Chriſt, his power going along with it, will enable men to believe, as it did Thomas; which appears by what follows.

Ver. 28. And Thomas anſwered and ſaid unto him, &c.] Without examining his hands and ſide, and as aſtoniſhed at his condeſcenſion and grace, and aſhamed of his unbelief: my Lord and my God; he owns him to be Lord, as he was both by creation and redemption; and God, of which he was fully aſſured from his omniſcience, which he had given a full proof of, and from the power that went along with his words to his heart, and from a full conviction he now had of his reſurrection from the dead. He aſſerts his intereſt in him as his Lord and his God; which denotes his ſubjection to him, his affection for him, and faith in him; ſo the divine word is called in Philo the Jew, κυριος μȣ, my Lord[x].

Ver. 29. Jeſus ſaith unto him, Thomas, &c.] The word Thomas is omitted in the Alexandrian copy, and in Beza's ancient copy, and in ſome others, and in the the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions. Becauſe thou haſt ſeen me, thou haſt believed; which carries in it a tacit and gentle reproof for his unbelief, and ſuggeſts, that if he had not ſeen, he would not have believed; but is not ſo harſh as if that had been expreſſed; and which the Jews were wont to do in a ſevere manner[y]. "One ſaid to R. Jochanan, expound Rabbi; for 'tis beautiful for thee to expound; for as thou ſayeſt, ſo I ſee: he replied to him, Raka, אלמלא לא ראית לא האמנת, if thou ſeeſt not, thou wilt not believe." Chriſt here allows that Thomas had believed, that he was riſen from the dead, and that he was his Lord and God; and though his faith was late and ſlow, it was ſure and certain, and was appropriating; it was a faith of intereſt, tho' upon ſight, and not on hearing, or the report of the other diſciples: now faith on ſight may be in perſons who have no true ſpiritual faith; as in ſome that ſaw both the perſon and miracles of Chriſt on earth, and in others who will ſee him come in the clouds of heaven; and it has been in others who have truly believed in Chriſt, as the Apoſtles of the Lamb: but yet, tho' it may be, as in many it has been, right, yet not ſo commendable as that without it. From hence may be obſerved, that Chriſt allows of the epithets and titles given him by Thomas, and therefore muſt be Lord and God; and approves of Thomas's faith, and therefore that muſt be right; though he prefers faith without perſonal ſight of him to it, in the next clauſe. Bleſſed are they that have not ſeen, and yet have believed. The author of the apocryphal book of Eſdras 2, ch. i. 37. ſays of the people to come, whoſe little ones rejoice in gladneſs, in the perſon of the almighty Lord, though they have not ſeen me with bodily eyes, yet in ſpirit they believe the thing that I ſay. It ſeems as if there were ſome at this time in the city of Jeruſalem, who firmly believed that Chriſt was riſen from the dead, upon the teſtimony of others, tho' they had not ſeen him themſelves. Faith without ſight, in other reſpects, may be conſidered as oppoſed to the beatific viſion in heaven; and as deſtitute of ſenſible communion with God; and as giving credit to doctrines and things above carnal ſenſe and reaſon; ſuch as the doctrines of the Trinity, the Sonſhip of Chriſt, his incarnation, and the union of the two natures in him, and the reſurrection of the dead; and as believing whatever is ſaid in the word of God, upon the credit of his teſtimony; and which has for its objects things paſt, as what were done in eternity, in the council and covenant of grace; the works of creation and providence in time, the birth, ſufferings, death, and reſurrection of Chriſt; and alſo things preſent, Chriſt, and the bleſſings of grace, and things to come, the inviſible glories of the other world. Now ſuch are happy that have true faith in theſe things, for they enjoy many bleſſings now, as a juſtifying righteouſneſs, pardon of ſin, adoption, freedom of acceſs to God, and ſecurity from condemnation; they have ſpiritual peace, joy, and comfort in their ſouls, and ſhall at laſt be ſaved with an everlaſting ſalvation.

Ver. 30. And many other ſigns truly did Jeſus, &c.] Beſides theſe wonderful appearances to his diſciples once and again, when the doors were ſhut about them: and which ſigns refer not to what was done before, but after his reſurrection; and which he did, in the preſence of his diſciples; for he appeared to, and converſed with no other but them after his reſurection: which are not written in this book; of John's Goſpel; though they may be elſewhere; ſuch as his appearing to the two diſciples going to Emmaus, and to the eleven on a mountain in Galilee, and to five hundred brethren at once, which other inſpired writers ſpeak of: and many there are which he did, which are not particularly written in this, nor in any other book; for he was ſeen of his diſciples forty days, and ſhewed himſelf alive, by many infallible proofs; all of which are not recorded.

Ver. 31. But theſe are written, &c.] The ſeveral ends of recording what is written in this book, in proof of Chriſt's reſurrection, are as follow: one is, that ye might believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God; that Jeſus, who was diminutively called Jeſus, the ſon of Mary, the ſon of Joſeph, the carpenter's ſon, Jeſus of Nazareth, and of Galilee, was the Chriſt, or true Meſſiah; which ſignifies anointed, and takes in all his offices of prophet, prieſt, and king, to which he was anointed; and is an article of faith of the greateſt importance; and is to be believed thro' the ſigns proving his reſurrection, who, according to the ſcriptures, was to riſe again; and which, by the ſigns here recorded, it appears he is riſen indeed, and therefore muſt be the true Meſſiah of the prophets, and alſo the Son of God; which was a known title of the Meſſiah among the Jews; and is not a name of office, but of nature and relation to God, and deſigns Chriſt in his divine nature, or as a divine perſon; and is an article of great moment, and well atteſted, by God, by angels, and men; and receives a further confirmation by the reſurrection of Chriſt, who is thereby declared to be the Son of God with power; and with this view did this Evangeliſt write the ſigns, proving it, herein to be found. And his other end in recording them, is, and that believing ye might have life through his name: believers have their ſpiritual and eternal life thro' Chriſt; their life of grace, of juſtification on him, of ſanctification from him, and communion with him; the ſupport and maintenance of their ſpiritual life, and all the comforts of it: and alſo their life of glory, or eternal life they have thro', or in his name; it lies in his perſon, it comes to them thro' him as the procuring cauſe of it; 'tis for his ſake beſtowed upon them, yea, it is in his hands to give it, and who does give it to all that believe: not that believing is the cauſe of their enjoyment of this life, or is their title to it, which is the name, perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; but faith is the way and means in which they enjoy it; and therefore theſe ſigns are written by the Evangeliſt for the encouragement of this faith in Chriſt, which is of ſuch uſe in the enjoyment of life, in, through, and from him. Beza's ancient copy, two of Stephens's, the Coptic, Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read, eternal life.

CHAP. XXI.

Ver. 1. AFTER theſe things, &c.] The reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead, his appearance to Mary Magdalene, and twice to his diſciples; once when Thomas was abſent, and at another time when he was preſent: Jeſus ſhewed himſelf again to the diſciples; a third time, as in ver. 14. tho' not to them all; ſeven are only mentioned, as together, when he appeared to them: at the ſea of Tiberias; the ſame with the ſea of Galilee; ſee John vi. 1. for after the ſecond appearance of Chriſt to his diſciples, they went from Jeruſalem to Galilee, by the order of Chriſt, who appointed to meet them there, Matt. xxviii. 10, 16. and on this way ſhewed he himſelf; the manner in which he made his appearance, and the perſons to whom, are as follow.

Ver. 2. There were together, &c.] In one place, in one houſe, in ſome town, or city of Galilee, not far from the ſea of Tiberias; nor, as very likely, not far from the mountain where Chriſt had promiſed to meet them. Simon Peter; who tho' he had denied his Lord, dearly loved him, and truly believed in him, kept with the reſt of his diſciples, and was waiting for another interview with him: and Thomas called Didymus; who, tho' for a while an unbeliever with reſpect to the reſurrection of Chriſt, was now fully aſſured of it, and, for the future, was unwilling to loſe any opportunity of meeting with his riſen Lord. And Nathanael of Cana in Galilee; an Iſraelite indeed, in whom there was no guile. Dr. Lightfoot thinks he is the ſame with Bartholomew, and ſo one of the eleven. The Syriac verſion reads it, Cotne, and the Perſic, Catneh of Galilee; no doubt the ſame place is meant, where Jeſus turned water into wine, of which Nathanael was an inhabitant: and the ſons of Zebedee; who were James, whom Herod killed with the ſword, and John, the writer of this Goſpel: and two other of his diſciples; who are thought to be Andrew and Philip; which is very likely, ſince they were both of Bethſaida, John i. 44. a city in Galilee, and not far from the ſea of Tiberias. Andrew is particularly mentioned by Nonnus: ſo that here were ſeven of them in all; four of them, according to this account, being wanting; who muſt be James the leſs, the brother of our Lord, Judas called Lebbeus, and ſurnamed Thaddeus, Simon the Canaanite, or Zelot, and Matthew the publican.

Ver. 3. Simon Peter ſaith unto them I go a fiſhing, &c.] Which was his buſineſs before his converſion; and now having nothing to do, and his Lord and maſter having, as yet, no ſervice for him in the miniſtry of the word, until the Spirit was poured down in an extraordinary manner, which was given to be expected, in the mean while he was inclined to, and reſolved upon taking up his former employment; partly that he might not live an idle life, and partly to obtain a livelihood, which was now to be ſought after in another manner, ſince the death of Chriſt; and theſe inclinations and reſolutions of his he ſignifies to the reſt of the diſciples, who agreed with him: they ſay unto him, we alſo go with thee; that is, a fiſhing; for it ſeems to have been the buſineſs and employment of them all formerly: the place they went to was the ſea of Tiberias, as appears from ver 1. a place free for any to fiſh at. This is ſaid to be one of the ten traditions which Joſhua delivered to the children of Iſrael, when he divided the land among them[z]: "that any man ſhould be free to catch fiſh "in the waters (or ſea) of Tiberias; and he might "fiſh with an hook only; but he might not ſpread "a net, or place a ſhip there, except the children "of the tribe to whom that ſea belong'd in their "diviſion." But now theſe diſciples, or the greater part of them at leaſt, belonging to the tribe and diviſion in which this ſea was, had a right to carry a ſhip or boat thither, and make uſe of a net, as they did. Beſides, there was another reaſon for fiſhing here, becauſe there were no unclean fiſh; for the Jews ſay[a], that "in a place of "running water no clean fiſh goes along with "unclean fiſh, and lo, the ſea of Tiberias is, "כגון המים מהלכין הן, as running waters." They went forth; from the houſe, town, or city where they were, whether Capernaum, or Bethſaida, or Tiberias itſelf: and entered into a ſhip immediately; which was either one of their own, that belonged to ſome one of them before their call; which tho' they had left, had reſerved their right and claim unto; ſee Luke v. 3. or which they hired for their preſent purpoſe: the word immediately is not in the Vulgate Latin, nor in the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, nor in Beza's ancient copy: and that night they caught nothing. They went out in the evening of the day, and fiſhed all night, that being a proper time for ſuch buſineſs, and the moſt likely to ſucceed in, but caught no fiſh, or very little: and ſo it is ſometimes with Goſpel-miniſters, who are fiſhers of men, tho' they take every opportunity, and the moſt proper methods to gain ſouls to Chriſt, yet ſometimes do not ſucceed; which makes things look dark and gloomy in their apprehenſions.

Ver. 4. But when the morning was now come, &c.] The day began to dawn, and light to appear, very early in the morning; for Chriſt viſits his right early, and is a preſent help to them in their time of trouble. Jeſus ſtood on the ſhore; on firm ground, whilſt his diſciples were beating about in the waves, and toiling to no purpoſe. So Chriſt, riſen from the dead, is glorified, is in heaven; but not unmindful of his people amidſt all their afflictions in this world: but the diſciples knew not that it was Jeſus; tho' he was ſo near them that they could hear what he ſaid; but it not being broad daylight they could not diſtinctly diſcern him, or their eyes might be held that they could not know him. So Chriſt is ſometimes near his people, and they know it not.

Ver. 5. Then Jeſus ſaith unto them, children, &c.] And ſtill they knew him not, tho' he uſed this indearing and familiar appellation, and which they had been wont to hear from him; and he had called them by a little before his departure from them, John xiii. 33. and which he uſes here as expreſſive of his tender affection for them, their relation to him, and that he might be known by them: have ye any meat? that is, as the Syriac renders it, מדם למלעם, any thing to eat; meaning fiſh that they had catched; and whether they had got a ſufficient quantity to make a meal of for him and them. They anſwered him no; they had got nothing at all; or at leaſt what they had, was far from being enough to make a breakfaſt of; for ſo a meal early in a morning may be moſt properly called, tho' it is afterwards called dining. Chriſt's children, true believers, are ſometimes without ſpiritual food; there's always indeed enough in Chriſt, and he has an heart to give it; but either through prevailing iniquity they feed on ſomething elſe, or don't go to him for food, or go elſewhere; but he will not ſuffer them to ſtarve; for as he has made proviſions for them in the miniſtry of the word and ordinances; and he himſelf is the bread of life; if they don't aſk him for food, he'll aſk them whether they have any; will kindly invite them to the proviſions he himſelf makes; will bid them welcome, and bleſs them to them.

[z] Maimon. Hilch. Nezike Mammon, c. 5. §. 3. Vid. T. Bab. Bava Kama, fol. 81. 1.

[a] T. Hieroſ. Avoda Zara, fol. 42. 1.

Ver. 6. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] Willing to make himſelf known by a miracle, ſince they knew him not by his perſon, nor voice: caſt the net on the right ſide of the ſhip, and ye ſhall find; that is, a large multitude of fiſh, as they did. The ſhip was an emblem of the church in its preſent afflicted ſtate; the right ſide of it points to the elect, and where they are to be found in this world; the caſting of the net ſignifies the preaching of the Goſpel; the promiſe of finding fiſh, the aſſurance Chriſt gives of the ſucceſs of his word, which he owns and bleſſes for the converſion of elect ſinners: they caſt therefore; the net, willing to try what ſucceſs they might have at the inſtance of this perſon, whom they knew not. The Ethiopic verſion reads the paſſage thus, and they ſaid unto him, we have laboured all night, and have found nothing, but at thy word we will let down; which ſeems to be taken out of Luke v. 5. However, they obeyed his orders and directions, as the faithful miniſters of the Goſpel do, and ſhould, and ſucceeded. And now they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fiſhes. The Syriac adds, which it held; being in number, as in ver. 11. an hundred and fifty, and three great fiſhes; which was an emblem and preſage of that large number of ſouls both among the Jews and Gentiles, which they ſhould be inſtrumental in bringing to Chriſt, through the preaching of the Goſpel.

Ver. 7. Therefore that diſciple whom Jeſus loved, &c.] Which was John the Evangeliſt and Apoſtle, the writer of this Goſpel: ſaith unto Peter, it is the Lord; which two diſciples were very intimate with each other, and communicated their thoughts freely to one another. John knew that it was the Lord, either by ſome ſpecial revelation, or from the multitude of fiſhes which were taken, and which ſhewed a divine hand and power to be concerned. So faithful miniſters of the Goſpel know when Chriſt is with them, by his power attending their miniſtrations to the converſion of ſouls. The Cambridge copy of Beza's reads, our Lord; as do the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions; and it is reaſonable to think, John ſpeaking to a fellow-diſciple, who had equal intereſt in him with himſelf, might ſo ſay. Now when Simon heard that it was the Lord; faith came by hearing, he was immediately convinced, and thoroughly ſatisfied, having received the hint upon a reflection on the ſurprizing capture of the fiſhes, that it muſt be the Lord: he girt his fiſher's coat unto him. The Greek word επενδυτης, here uſed, is manifeſtly the אפונדת of the Hebrews; and which, the Jewiſh writers ſay [b], was a ſtrait garment, which a man put on next his fleſh to dry up the ſweat; and a very proper one for Peter, who had been toiling all night, and very fit for him to ſwim in; and, by what follows, appears to be put on him next his fleſh: for he was naked; for to ſuppoſe him entirely naked, whilſt fiſhing, being only in company with men, and thoſe parts of nature having a covering, which always require one, was not at all indecent and unbecoming: and did caſt himſelf into the ſea; the Syriac adds, that he might come to Chriſt; and the Perſic, and he came to Chriſt; ſhewing his great love and eagerneſs to be with him; and, as fearleſs of danger, riſques all to be with Chriſt; his love being ſuch that many waters could not quench, nor floods drown.

Ver. 8. And the other diſciples came in a little ſhip, &c.] The ſame that they were fiſhing in, in which they came to Chriſt as ſoon as they could, not chuſing to expoſe themſelves, as Peter did; nor was it proper that they ſhould leave the ſhip, and, as it was, might have hands few enough to bring ſhip and net, ſo full of fiſh, ſafe to ſhore; and the rather, they did not think fit to do as he did, for they were not far from land, but, as it were, two hundred cubits; which was about an hundred yards: dragging the net with fiſhes; towing the net full of fiſhes all along in the water, till they came to land; an emblem of laborious Goſpel-miniſters, who being once imbarked in the work of the miniſtry, continue in it to the end, notwithſtanding all toil, labour, and difficulties that attend them; and will at laſt bring the ſouls with them they have been made uſeful to, with great ſatisfaction and joy, to their dear Lord and Maſter.

Ver. 9. As ſoon then as they were come to land, &c.] As ſoon as they were come out of the ſhip, and ſafe on ſhore, not only Peter, but all the reſt of the diſciples: they ſaw a fire of coals there; on the ſhore, to their great ſurprize: and fiſh laid there; which could not be any that they had taken, for, as yet, the net was not drawn up, and the fiſh took out: and bread; not upon the coals baking, but hard by, being ready prepared to eat with the fiſh, when ſufficiently broiled. This was all of Chriſt's preparing, and a conſiderable proof of his deity; and a confirmation of that proviſion he'll make for his miniſtring ſervants, whilſt they are about his work, and in this world; and a repreſentation of that ſpiritual and eternal refreſhment they ſhall have with him in heaven to all eternity, when they have done their work.

Ver. 10. Jeſus ſaith unto them, &c.] The diſciples: bring of the fiſh which ye have now caught; for they might have caught ſome before, tho' ſo few and ſmall, as ſcarcely to be reckoned any; nor were they bid to bring all they had taken, only ſome of them, to add to theſe Chriſt had prepared for them on land; they being both indeed of a miraculous production, and the effects of his divine power. Chriſt's view in ordering to bring ſome of them, and put to thoſe that lay upon the coals, was partly that they might have enough to make a meal of for them all; and alſo, that they might have a more perfect knowledge of the miracle wrought, by ſeeing the number and largeneſs of the fiſhes, and by bringing the net full of them to ſhore unbroken; and may be an emblem of the bringing of ſouls to Chriſt by the miniſtry of the word, thereby adding to thoſe that are already gathered.

Ver. 11. Simon Peter went up, &c.] Either to the ſea, that being higher than the land, or to the ſhip which lay by the ſhore: he went aboard it, and drew the net to land full of great fiſhes; not alone, but others of the diſciples with him; tho' he only is mentioned, being the leading perſon in this affair; an emblem of the whole number of God's elect being brought ſafe to ſhore, to Chriſt, and to heaven, thro' various tribulations and afflictions in the world, fitly ſignified by the waves of the ſea. What myſtery there may be in the number, I know not. The conjecture of Grotius, that it is a figure of the proſelytes in the days of David and Solomon, ſeems to be without foundation; ſince they were not only ſo many thouſands, but ſix hundred over. And as little to be regarded is the thought of others, that the larger number, one hundred, regards the converted among the Gentiles, and the leſſer thoſe among the Jews; much better is the obſervation of others, that it may deſign a collection, out of all ſorts of people, to Chriſt, and his church. And for all there were ſo many; in number, and theſe ſo large and big, and the weight of them ſo great. The Syriac reads, בהנא כלה יוקרא, with all this weight, or burden, and ſo the Perſic; but the Arabic, with ſuch a number; both ideas of number and weight are to be preſerved, to make what follows the more obſervable: yet was not the net broken; which muſt be aſcribed to the divine power of Chriſt; and is an emblem of the power of God attending the Goſpel to the regeneration, converſion, and ſalvation of his people, and of the great uſefulneſs of it, however mean and deſpicable it may be in the eyes of men, and of its permanence and duration, until all the elect of God are gathered in by it.

[b] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Sabbat, c. 10. §. 3.

Ver. 12. Jeſus ſaith unto them, come and dine, &c.] One would think it ſhould rather have been ſaid, come and take a breakfaſt than a dinner, ſince it was ſo early in the morning: but Grotius has obſerved, out of Homer, that αριστον is uſed for food taken in a morning; ſo that it may ſignify here, not what we properly call dining, but eating a morning's meal; and may be an emblem of that ſpiritual refreſhment believers enjoy with Chriſt in his houſe and ordinances now, and of thoſe everlaſting pleaſures they will partake with him in the reſurrection morn: and it is to be obſerved, that he does not ſay go and dine, but come and dine; that is, along with himſelf: he does not ſend his diſciples elſewhere for food, but invites them to come to him, to hear his word, which is food for faith, to wait in his houſe, where plenty of proviſions is made, and to attend on his ordinances, and in all to feed upon himſelf, and to feed with him; to all which they are heartily welcome. And none of the diſciples durſt aſk him, who art thou? knowing that it was the Lord: to aſk ſuch a queſtion was altogether unneceſſary, and would have been impertinent, and they might juſtly have been upbraided and rebuked for it: it would have looked like inſolence, or unbelief, or both, and that greatly aggravated, when it was ſo clear a caſe that it was the Lord; who might be known by his voice and perſon, eſpecially when they came near to him, and alſo by the miracles which he wrought: ſo at the laſt day, when every eye ſhall ſee him coming in the clouds of heaven, none will aſk who he is; all will know him.

Ver. 13. Jeſus then cometh and taketh bread, &c.] After they had taken the fiſh out of the net, and all was prepared for the meal, and the diſciples were ſet down to eat, Chriſt came and took his place as the maſter of the feaſt, and head of the family; and taking up the bread, as was his uſual method, he aſked a bleſſing over it, and gave thanks for it. Beza's ancient copy, and one of Stephens's, read, and having given thanks he gave, &c. which is agreeable to his uſual practice at meals. And giveth them, and fiſh likewiſe; he diſtributed both bread and fiſh to his diſciples. So, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, he provides plentifully for his people; gives them to eat of the hidden manna, and tree of life, and leads to fountains of living waters; encourages them to eat and drink freely, what is of his own preparing, and at his own expence provided for them.

Ver. 14. This is now the third time, &c.] Or day of Chriſt's appearance to his diſciples: he appeared to them firſt on the ſame day he roſe, and then a ſecond time eight days after, or that day ſennight, and now at the ſea of Tiberias; for within this compaſs of time he had made more appearances than three, tho' to particular perſons, and not to ſuch a number of the diſciples as at theſe three times: that Jeſus ſhewed himſelf to his diſciples after that he was riſen from the dead: and thus, as by the mouth of two or three witneſſes, every thing is eſtabliſhed; ſo by theſe three principal appearances of Chriſt to his diſciples, his reſurrection from the dead was confirmed.

Ver. 15. So when they had dined, &c.] The Perſic verſion adds, Jeſus turned his face to Simon Peter; he did not interrupt them whilſt they were eating; but when they had comfortably refreſhed themſelves, he looked at Peter, and ſingled him out from the reſt, and directed his diſcourſe to him; and ſaith unto Simon Peter, Simon, ſon of Jonas; not John, as the Vulgate Latin, and Nonnus, and ſome copies read; for this anſwers not to the Hebrew word Jochanan, but Jonah, the ſame name with the prophet. Some have obſerved, that Chriſt ſpoke to him particularly by his original name, and not by that which he himſelf had given him, with a view to his ſtrong faith, as Cephas, or Peter; but it ſhould be known that Chriſt calls him by this name of Simon bar Jonah, when he made the moſt ample profeſſion of his faith in him, and was pronounced bleſſed by him, Matt. xvi. 16, 17. loveſt thou me more than theſe? meaning, not than the fiſhes he had caught, nor the net and boat, or any worldly enjoyment, nor than he loved the diſciples; but the queſtion is, whether he loved Chriſt more than the reſt of the diſciples loved him: the reaſon of which was, becauſe he had ſometime ago declared, tho' all the diſciples were offended at Chriſt, and ſhould deny him, he would not; and had juſt now thrown himſelf into the ſea to come to him firſt, as if he loved him more than they did: which queſtion is put, not out of ignorance, or as if Chriſt knew not whether he loved him or no, and what was the degree of his affection to him; but becauſe the exerciſe of this grace, and the expreſſions of it, are very grateful to him; and that Peter alſo might have an opportunity of expreſſing it before others, who had ſo publickly denied him: he ſaith unto him, yea, Lord, thou knoweſt that I love thee; not in word and tongue, but in deed and in truth; in ſincerity, and without diſſimulation, fervently and ſuperlatively; for the truth of which he appeals to Chriſt himſelf; for he was ſo conſcious to himſelf of the reality of his love, and the ſincerity of his affection, that he chuſes to make Chriſt himſelf judge of it, rather than ſay any more of it himſelf; tho' he modeſtly declines ſaying that he loved him more than the reſt of the diſciples did, having had an experience of his vanity and ſelf-confidence. He was ſure he loved Chriſt heartily; but whether he loved him more than the reſt did, he choſe not to ſay: he ſaith unto him, feed my lambs; the younger and more tender part of the flock, weak believers, Chriſt's little children, new-born babes, the day of ſmall things, which are not to be deſpiſed, the bruiſed reed that is not to be broken, and the ſmoking flax that is not to be quenched; but who are to be nouriſhed, comforted, and ſtrengthened, by feeding them with the milk of the Goſpel, and by adminiſtring to them the ordinances and breaſts of conſolation. Theſe Chriſt has an intereſt in, and therefore calls them my lambs, being given him by the Father, and purchaſed by his blood, and for whom he has a tender concern and affection; and nothing he looks upon as a firmer and clearer proof and evidence of love to him, than to feed theſe lambs of his, and take care of them.

Ver. 16. He ſaith unto him again the ſecond time, &c.] Willing to have the expreſſions of his love repeated and confirmed; Simon, ſon of Jonas, loveſt thou me? he leaves out the words, more than theſe, tho' Nonnus expreſſes them; he ſaw Peter's heart, and obſerved the modeſty of his anſwer, and would not urge him any more in that comparative way, only required a repetition of his ſincere and hearty love to him: he ſaith unto him, yea, Lord, thou knoweſt that I love thee; expreſſing himſelf in the ſame language as before; and it is, as if he ſhould ſay, Lord, what can I ſay more? I can ſay no more than I have done, and by that I abide: he ſaith unto him, feed my ſheep; both the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, and his other ſheep among the Gentiles, whom the Father had given him, and he had paid a price for, and muſt be brought in; theſe being called, he would have fed with the word and ordinances, with the bread of life, and water of life; not lorded over, and fleeced, and much leſs worried and deſtroyed; every inſtance of care and love ſhewn to theſe, he takes as a mark of affection and reſpect to himſelf.

Ver. 17. He ſaith unto him the third time, &c.] That by theſe three teſtimonies, out of his mouth, the thing might be eſtabliſhed, and be out of all doubt: Simon, ſon of Jonas, loveſt thou me? is it ſo indeed that thou loveſt me? is thy love really ſo hearty and ſincere as thou ſayeſt? may it be depended upon? Peter was grieved, becauſe he ſaid unto him the third time, loveſt thou me? becauſe it put him in mind of his having denied his Lord three times; the remembrance of which cut him to the heart; and it added to his grief, that his love, which he knew was unfeigned, notwithſtanding his conduct, ſhould ſeem to be ſuſpected: and he ſaid unto him, Lord, thou knoweſt all things, thou knoweſt that I love thee; he appeals with great warmth and earneſtneſs to him, as the omniſcient God, and the ſearcher of all hearts, who knows all perſons and things, and the ſecret thoughts, diſpoſitions, and affections of mens minds, for the truth of his love to him; for tho' he knew the treachery of his own heart, and durſt not truſt to it; and therefore choſe not to be determined by his own aſſertions, and was well aware that the ſincerity of his love might be called in queſtion by fellow-chriſtians, becauſe of his late conduct; but as every thing was naked and open to his Lord, with whom he had to do, he lodges and leaves the appeal with him: ſo every ſoul that truly loves Chriſt, whatever ſatan, the world, profeſſors, or their own hearts under unbelieving frames, may ſuggeſt to the contrary, can appeal to Chriſt, as the trier of the reins of the children of men, that he it is whom their ſouls love; and tho' their love may be greatly tried, and they themſelves be ſorely tempted by ſatan, and ſuffered to fall greatly; yet their love to Chriſt can never be loſt; the fervency of it may be abated, the exerciſe of it may be very languid, but the principle itſelf always remains, as it did in Peter: Jeſus ſaith unto him, feed my ſheep. It may be obſerved from the repetition of this phraſe following upon Peter's declaration of his love to Chriſt, that ſuch only are proper perſons to feed the lambs and ſheep of Chriſt, who truly and ſincerely love him; and in doing which they ſhew their love to him: and who indeed would be concerned in this ſervice, but ſuch? ſince the work is ſo laborious, the conduct of thoſe to whom they miniſter, oftentimes is ſo diſagreeable, the reproach they meet with from the world, and the oppoſition made unto them by ſatan, and all the powers of darkneſs: 'tis true indeed, there are ſome that take upon them this work, and pretend to do it, who don't love Chriſt; but then they are ſuch who feed themſelves, and not the flock; and who feed the world's goats, and not Chriſt's lambs and ſheep, and in time of danger leave the flock; only the true lovers of Chriſt faithfully perform this ſervice, and abide in it by preaching the pure Goſpel of Chriſt, by adminiſtring his Ordinances, in their right manner, and by directing ſouls in all to Chriſt, the heavenly manna, and bread of life. Dr. Lightfoot thinks that by the threefold repetition of the order to feed Chriſt's lambs and ſheep, is meant the threefold object of Peter's miniſtry; the Jews in their own land, the Gentiles, and the Iſraelites of the ten tribes, that were in Babylon.

Ver. 18. Verily verily I ſay unto thee, &c.] A way of ſpeaking often uſed by Chriſt, when about to deliver any thing of conſiderable moment, partly to raiſe the attention, and partly for the more ſtrong aſſeveration of what is ſpoken; and may have reference both to what went before, confirming Peter's declaration of his love, which would be demonſtrated by dying for him, and the teſtimony of his omniſcience, by foretelling his death, and the kind of it; and to what follows after, which contains an account of Peter in his younger years, and a prophecy of what ſhould befal him in old age: when thou waſt young; not that he was old now, and capable he was of doing, and he did do but juſt now, what our Lord aſcribes to his younger years: thou girdeſt thy ſelf, and walkeſt whither thou wouldſt; that is, he could put on his clothes himſelf, and gird them about him with a girdle, as was the cuſtom of the eaſtern nations, who uſually wore long garments; and as he, a little before, had girt his fiſher's coat about him, and walked where he pleaſed; denoting the liberty of his will in things natural and civil, which every man is poſſeſſed of, tho' not in things ſpiritual, without the grace of God; and alſo his power of doing what was moſt grateful to him, without being hindred by, or obliged to aſk the leave of others: but when thou ſhalt be old; implying, that he ſhould live to a good old age, and be continued to be uſeful and ſerviceable in the cauſe of Chriſt, in preaching his Goſpel, and feeding his lambs and ſheep, as he did; for he lived to the times of Nero[e], under whom he ſuffered, about forty years after this: thou ſhalt ſtretch forth thy hands, and another ſhall gird thee. This refers not ſo much to an inability thro' old age to gird himſelf, and therefore ſhould ſtretch forth his hands, that another might with more eaſe do it for him, and which would be the reverſe of his former and preſent caſe; for the word gird is uſed in another ſenſe than before, and ſignifies the binding of him as a priſoner with cords, or chains; ſo girding with the Jews, is the ſame as הקשירה והאסירה, tying and binding[d]: but either to the ſtretching out of his hands upon the croſs, when he ſhould be girt and bound to that; for perſons were ſometimes faſtened to the croſs with cords, and not always with nails[e]: or, as others think, to his carrying of his croſs on his ſhoulders, with his hands ſtretched out and bound to the piece of wood which went acroſs; tho' his being girded or bound may as well be thought to follow the former, as this: indeed, what is added beſt ſuits with the latter, and carry thee whither thou wouldſt not; to a painful, cruel, ſhameful, and accurſed death, the death of the croſs; not that Peter in ſpirit would be unwilling to die for Chriſt, nor was he; but it ſignifies, that he ſhould die a death diſagreeable to the fleſh.

[e] Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 2. c. 25.

Ver. 19. This ſpake he, &c.] Theſe are the words of the Evangeliſt, explaining the meaning of Chriſt in like manner, as in chap. xii. 33. ſignifying by what death he ſhould glorify God; for by the above words Chriſt not only intimated that Peter ſhould die, not a natural, but a violent death, or that he ſhould die a martyr in his cauſe, but the very kind of death he ſhould die, namely by crucifixion; and that Peter was crucified at Rome, Eccleſiaſtical hiſtory confirms[f], when Chriſt was magnified, and God was glorified by his zeal and courage, faith and patience, conſtancy and perſeverance to the end: and when he had ſpoken this; concerning the uſage and treatment he ſhould meet with, the ſufferings he ſhould undergo, and death he ſhould die for his ſake, for the preſent trial of him, and to ſee how theſe things would be reliſhed by him: he ſaith unto him, follow me; which may be underſtood literally, Jeſus now riſing up, and ordering him to come after him; and yet as a ſign of his following him, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, exerciſing every grace upon him, diſcharging every duty towards him, faithfully and conſtantly performing his work and office, as an apoſtle and preacher of the Goſpel, in which he had now reinſtated and confirmed him, and patiently bearing and ſuffering all kind of reproach, perſecution, and death for his name's ſake.

Ver. 20. Then Peter turning about, &c.] After he was riſen, and was following Chriſt: ſeeth the diſciple whom Jeſus loved following alſo; by whom is deſigned John the Evangeliſt, and writer of this Goſpel; who hearing Chriſt bid Peter follow him, roſe up likewiſe, and went after him, in token of his willingneſs to ſerve him, and ſuffer for him too: which alſo leaned on his breaſt at ſupper; at the paſchal ſupper, as the Perſic verſion here reads it: and ſaid Lord, which is he that betrayeth thee? This diſciple had a peculiar ſhare in the love of Chriſt, as man, and was admitted to great nearneſs and freedom with him, ſignified by his leaning on his breaſt; and who being ſo near his perſon, and allowed to uſe a liberty with him, every one did not take, at the motion of Peter, aſked our Lord at ſupper, who the perſon was he meant that ſhould betray him; all this is ſaid as deſcriptive of the diſciple here ſpoken of, which leaves it without any doubt, that it was the apoſtle John; and who, from ver. 2. appears to be one of this company, and is farther confirmed at ver. 24.

Ver. 21. Peter ſeeing him, ſaith to Jeſus, &c.] Peter took a great deal of notice of John, and very likely underſtood, that he meant by his riſing up and following Chriſt, to ſignify his readineſs for ſervice and ſuffering in the cauſe of Chriſt: and therefore ſays, Lord, and what ſhall this man do? The phraſe in the original is very ſhort and conciſe, Lord, and this what? The Arabic verſion renders it, and this, of what mind is he? it looks as if he was of the ſame mind with me to follow thee; but it is better rendered by us, what ſhall this man do? in what work and ſervice ſhall he be employed, who ſeems as willing as I am to ſerve thee? or it may be rendered thus, and what ſhall this man ſuffer? ſhall he ſuffer at all? and if he ſhall, what kind of death ſhall he undergo? what will become of him? what will be his end? how will it fare with him? this he ſaid, partly out of curioſity, and partly out of concern for him, they two being aſſociates and intimates, who had a ſtrong affection for each other.

Ver. 22. Jeſus ſaith unto him, &c. Chriſt vouchſafes an anſwer to Peter, but not a very clear one, nor ſuch an one as he wiſhed for, and not without a rebuke to him: if I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? meaning, that if it was his pleaſure that he ſhould live, not till his ſecond coming to judge the quick and dead at the laſt day, but till he ſhould come in his power and take vengeance on the Jewiſh nation, in the deſtruction of their city and temple by the Romans, and in diſperſing them thro' the nations of the world; till which time John did live, and many years after; and was the only one of the diſciples that lived till that time, and who did not die a violent death; what was that to Peter, it was no concern of his. The queſtion was too curious, improper, and impertinent; it became him to attend only to what concerned himſelf, and he was bid to do: follow thou me; whence it may be obſerved, that it becomes the ſaints to mind their duty in following Chriſt, and not concern themſelves in things that don't belong to them. Chriſt is to be followed by his people as their leader and commander; as the ſhepherd of the flock; as a guide in the way, and the fore-runner that is gone before; as the light of the world; as the pattern and example of the ſaints, and as their Lord and Maſter; and that in the exerciſe of every grace, as humility and meekneſs, love, zeal, patience, and reſignation to the will of God; and alſo in the diſcharge of duty, both with reſpect to moral life and converſation, and inſtituted worſhip, as attendance on publick ſervice, and ſubmiſſion to ordinances; and likewiſe in enduring ſufferings patiently and chearfully for his ſake. Saints are under obligation to follow Chriſt; it is their intereſt ſo to do; 'tis honourable, ſafe, comfortable, and pleaſant, and ends in happineſs here and hereafter.

Ver. 23. Then went this ſaying abroad among the brethren, &c.] It not being rightly underſtood by ſome one or more of the diſciples preſent; it was divulged with a wrong ſenſe annexed to it among other perſons; who, though not of the eleven, yet were followers of Chriſt, children of God, that belong'd to the ſame family, and was, in a ſpiritual relation, brethren to each other, and to the Apoſtles: that that diſciple ſhould not die; but ſhould remain till the ſecond coming of Chriſt, and be found among them that ſhall be then alive, and be changed. And ſuch a notion not only was among the ancients; but Beza, in his notes on this text, tells us of a ſtroling wicked fellow, that gave out that he was the Apoſtle John; and was encouraged by ſome, particularly Poſtellus, a Sorbonic doctor, but was afterwards burnt at Tholouſe. Yet Jeſus ſaid not unto him he ſhall not die, but if I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Theſe are the words of John himſelf, the diſciple ſpoken of, who gives a true and juſt account of Chriſt's words, freeing them from the falſe ſenſe that was put upon them; which ſhews his ingenuous diſpoſition, his integrity and love of truth; being unwilling that ſuch an error ſhould obtain among the diſciples, and paſs in the world for truth.

Ver. 24. This is the diſciple which teſtifieth of theſe things, &c.] Recorded in this chapter concerning the appearance of Chriſt to his diſciples at the ſea of Tiberias, and what were done by him in their preſence, what paſſed between them; particularly the converſation he had with Peter, both concerning himſelf, and the diſciple John; and alſo, of all things that are written in this whole Goſpel. Theſe are teſtified to be true by this very diſciple John, concerning whom the above report went upon a miſtaken ſenſe of Chriſt's words, and who himſelf wrote theſe things; all that is contained in this book, as well as the particulars relating to this converſation of Chriſt with Peter: and we know that his teſtimony is true. The teſtimony of one that was an eye and ear-witneſs, as John was, of all that he teſtified and wrote muſt be known, owned, and allowed by all to be true, firm, and unqueſtionable; and therefore the apoſtle ſpeaks in the plural number, as being not only his own ſenſe, but the ſenſe of all men. Tho' ſome take this to be the atteſtation of the Epheſine church, or of the biſhops of the Aſiatic churches, who put John upon writing this Goſpel; of which they give their judgment and teſtimony, as believing it to be a true and faithful narrative.

Ver. 25. And there are alſo many other things which Jeſus did, &c.] Which refer not to his doctrines and diſcourſes, his ſermons and prayers, and the converſation he had with his diſciples, and others, on different accounts; but to the ſigns, and wonders, and miraculous operations, which were done by him, that are neither recorded in this, nor in any of the Evangeliſts: the which, if they ſhould be written every one; with all the particular circumſtances relating to them: I ſuppoſe that even the world itſelf could not contain the books that ſhould be written. The Arabic verſion renders it, the things written in the books; and the Syriac, that the world would not be ſufficient for the books that ſhould be written; and ſo the Perſic, which adds, and the Scribes of the world would fail, or be deficient; there would not be Scribes enough in the world to write them; nor could they be read by men, if they were written; the world would be overloaded with them; and therefore the Holy Ghoſt has not thought fit to lay ſuch a burden on men they could not bear, as to read ſuch numbers of volumes; but has reduced them into a brief compendium, which may be read with eaſe, delight, and pleaſure; and which is abundantly ſufficient to atteſt the truth of Chriſt's incarnation, miracles, doctrines, obedience, ſufferings, death, reſurrection, aſcenſion, ſeſſion at God's right hand, &c. and of the whole of Chriſtianity, and all that appertains to it, or whatever is neceſſary to be known, for the ſalvation of men: for this cannot be underſtood of the carnal and unbelieving part of the world, not receiving and bearing what would be contained in ſuch volumes, were they written; for they are not able to receive and bear what is now written, but reject and deſpiſe it as fooliſhneſs. Some underſtand this as an hyperbolical expreſſion; but the ſenſe above given, may be admitted without an hyperbole; tho' an hyperbole may very well be allowed of; nor taken literally will it appear greater than ſome others uſed in ſcripture; as when the poſterity of Abraham are ſaid to be as numerous as the ſtars of the ſky; and eſpecially when ſaid to be as the ſand by the ſea-ſhore, innumerable, Heb. xi. 12. Hoſ. i. 10. and when Capernaum is ſaid to be exalted unto heaven, or to reach unto it, Matt. xi. 23. ſee Gen. xi. 4. and particularly the Jews have no reaſon to object, as one of them does [g], to ſuch a way of ſpeaking, whoſe writings abound in hyperbolical expreſſions, and in ſome like to this; as when one of their Rabbins ſays [h], "if all the ſeas were ink, and the bulruſhes pens, "and the heavens and the earth volumes, and all the "children of men Scribes, אין מספיקין לכתוב תורה, "they would not be ſufficient to write the law, which "I have learned, &c." and it is commonly ſaid [i] by them, if this, or that, or the other thing was done, לא יכיל עלמא למסבל, the world would not be able to bear them. And a later writer [k] of theirs, ſpeaking of the different interpretations given by ſome of their Rabbins, of a certain paſſage, ſays, they are ſo many, that an aſs is not able to carry their books. And the intention of this expreſſion, ſuppoſing it hyperbolical, is to ſhew, that but a few of the wonderful things done by Chriſt were recorded by the Evangeliſt, in compariſon of the many which he every day did, in all places where he came; for he was continually going about doing good, and healing all manner of diſeaſes; but theſe that were written are ſufficient to prove him to be the true Meſſiah, and to require faith in him as ſuch. To all which the Evangeliſt ſets his Amen, as atteſting and confirming the truth of all he had written; and which may be depended upon, and aſſented to, as truth, by all that read this Goſpel. The Alexandrian copy, and Beza's Cambridge copy have not the word Amen; nor have the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions. In ſome copies the following words are added, "the Goſpel according "to John was given out thirty-two years after the "aſcenſion of Chriſt;" which would fall on the year of Chriſt 66, and ſo before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; which is contrary to the common opinion of learned men, ſome placing it in the year 97. others in the year 99.

AN EXPOSITION, &c.

The ACTS of the APOSTLES.

THIS book, in ſome copies, is called, The Acts of the holy Apoſtles. It contains an hiſtory of the miniſtry and miracles of the apoſtles of Chriſt, and is a ſort of a journal of their actions, from whence it takes its name. It begins at the aſcenſion of Chriſt, and reaches to the impriſonment of the apoſtle Paul at Rome; and is a hiſtory of upwards of thirty years: it gives an account of the firſt Goſpel-church at Jeruſalem, and of the progreſs of the Goſpel there, and in Judea, by the means of all the apoſtles, and particularly Peter, the miniſter of the circumciſion, and who alſo firſt opened the door of faith to the Gentiles: it ſhews, how the Goſpel went forth from Jeruſalem, and was ſpread in the Gentile world, eſpecially by the apoſtle Paul, whoſe companion Luke was, that was the writer of this book; for that it was written by him, is very evident from the beginning of it, it being dedicated to the ſame perſon his Goſpel is, and of which he makes mention; and in the Complutenſian edition, the book is called, The Acts of the Apoſtles of Saint Luke the Evangeliſt; and ſo the title of it in the Syriac verſion is, the Book of the Acts; that is, the hiſtory of the bleſſed apoſtles, which my Lord Luke the Evangeliſt collected for the ſaints. It was by him written in the Greek language; and we are told [a], that there was a verſion of it into the Hebrew language, and which was laid up in the library of the Jews at Tiberias; and is cited by R. Azarias [b] under the name of הפעולות, the Acts: of the authority of this book there has been no doubt, among the ancients, only Cerinthus the heretick endeavoured to diſcredit it; and it was not received by another ſort of hereticks called Severiani, from Severus, a diſciple of Tatian [c]. It is a moſt excellent and uſeful work, ſhewing the firſt planting of chriſtianity, and of chriſtian churches, both among the Jews and Gentiles; the ſpread and progreſs of the Goſpel in ſeveral parts of the world; what ſufferings the apoſtles endured for the ſake of it; and with what patience and courage they bore them; and what ſucceſs attended them; and is a ſtanding proof and confirmation of the chriſtian religion.

CHAP. I.

Ver. 1. THE former treatiſe have I made, &c.] Meaning the Goſpel written by him the Evangeliſt Luke, for from that he makes a tranſition to this, beginning here where he there left off; namely, at the aſcenſion of Chriſt; ſee Luke xxiv. 51. O Theophilus; ſee the note on Luke i. 3. of all that Jeſus began both to do and teach. This is a ſummary of his former treatiſe, his Goſpel, which gave an account of what Chriſt began to do, and did; not of the common and private actions of his life; or of what was done, either in public, or private, throughout the whole of his life; for excepting that of his diſputing with the doctors at twelve years of age, no account is given by him of what he did, till he was about thirty years of age; but of his extraordinary actions, of the miracles he wrought; and theſe not all, and every one of them; but many of them, and which were ſufficient to prove him the Meſſiah; and particularly of all things he did relating to the ſalvation of his people; of the whole of his obedience; of his compliance with the ceremonial law; of his ſubmiſſion to baptiſm; of his holy life and converſation, and entire conformity to the law; of his ſufferings and death, how that thereby he made full atonement for ſin, brought in an everlaſting righteouſneſs, and obtained eternal redemption for his people: and not only Luke, in his Goſpel, gave an account of theſe his actions, but alſo of many of his excellent diſcourſes, his parables, and his ſermons, whether delivered to the people in common, or to his own diſciples: and now, as this was the ſubject of his former book he intended in this latter to treat, as he does, of what the apoſtles of Chriſt began to do and teach.

Ver. 2. Until the day in which he was taken up, &c.] That is, into heaven. The hiſtorian ſuggeſts, that his former treatiſe took in the main and principal things Jeſus did and taught, until ſuch time that he aſcended to heaven: after that he, thro' the holy Ghoſt, had given commandments unto the apoſtles, whom he had choſen: our Lord having choſen twelve of his own free-grace and goodneſs, and not according to their worth and merit, to be his apoſtles, a little before his aſcenſion to heaven, gave them more expreſs and explicit commands and orders where they ſhould go, into all the world, to all nations; and what they ſhould preach, the whole Goſpel, ſalvation by faith in him, and particularly repentance and remiſſion of ſins; and what ordinances they ſhould require believers to attend to; and how they themſelves ſhould conduct and behave in their work: the phraſe, thro' the holy Ghoſt, may either be read in connexion with, had given commandments, as the Vulgate and Arabic verſions read, and as we do; and the ſenſe be, that theſe commands which Chriſt gave to his apoſtles, were not merely his orders, as man, but were what the holy Ghoſt was equally concerned in with him, and were from him as God, and ſo carried a divine authority with them; and at the ſame time that he gave them to them, he breathed into them the holy Ghoſt, whereby they had a more clear view of his doctrines and ordinances, and were more qualified to miniſter them; and beſides, had an intimation given them, that they might expect ſtill greater gifts of the holy Ghoſt: or it may be read with the latter clauſe, whom he had choſen; as in the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions; and then the meaning is, that juſt before his being taken up to heaven, he gave ſome ſpecial orders and directions to his apoſtles, whom he had choſen to that office thro' the holy Ghoſt, and not thro' human affection in him, or according to any deſert of theirs; but as under the influence of the holy Spirit with which, as man, he was anointed without meaſure; and whoſe gifts and graces he communicated to his diſciples, to fit them for the ſervice to which they were appointed: or with the apoſtles; they being ſent by the holy Ghoſt, as well as by Chriſt.

Ver. 3. To whom alſo he ſhewed himſelf alive after his paſſion, &c.] That is, after his ſufferings and death; for that he ſuffered many things, and at laſt death itſelf, is certain from the acknowledgment of the Jews themſelves, who own, that they put him to death on the paſſover eve[d]; as well as from the accounts of the Evangeliſts; and from the ſoldiers not breaking his legs, when the reſt that were crucified with him were broken, becauſe he was already dead; and from his pericardium being pierced with a ſpear, from whence blood and water ſprung, after which it was impoſſible he ſhould be alive; and from the teſtimony of the centurion who watched him, to whom Pilate ſent to know if he was dead, and how long he had been dead; and from his being buried, and lying in the grave ſo long as he did: and yet after, and notwithſtanding this, he ſhewed himſelf alive; he raiſed himſelf from the dead, and hereby declared himſelf to be the ſon of God with power, which cannot be ſaid of others; there were others that were alive after death, but not by their own power; as the widow of Sarapta's ſon, the daughter of Jairus, Lazarus, and the widow of Naim's ſon; but theſe did not ſhew themſelves alive, as Chriſt did, who appeared often to his apoſtles: for after he had firſt appeared to Mary Magdalene, he ſhewed himſelf to the two diſciples going to Emmaus; then to ten of them, Thomas being abſent; after that to them all, Thomas being preſent, when he convinced him of the truth of his reſurrection; after that he appeared to ſeven of the diſciples at the ſea of Tiberias; and then to all the apoſtles; and to five hundred brethren at once on a mountain in Galilee; and once to James alone, and to them all again when he was parted from them and went up to heaven; and ſo they muſt be proper and ſufficient witneſſes of his reſurrection: and this evidence of his being alive, he gave to them, by many infallible proofs; or by many ſigns and tokens, and which were moſt ſure and unqueſtionable arguments of his being alive; as his eating and drinking with them, walking and talking with them in a free and familiar manner, ſhewing them his hands and his feet, and ſide, that they might ſee the ſcars which the nails and ſpear had made; and which were not only a proof that he was riſen again, but riſen again in the ſame body in which he ſuffered; and that they might feel and handle him, and know that he was not a ſpirit, a phantom, a mere apparition, but was really riſen and alive: being ſeen of them forty days; not that he was ſeen by them for forty days together continually, but at certain times, within the ſpace of forty days; for between his firſt and laſt appearance, many others intervening, ſuch a length of time run out; ſo that it was not a ſingle and ſudden appearance that ſurpriſed them; but there were many of them, and a diſtance between them, and this for a conſiderable term of time; hence they had opportunity of reflecting upon theſe appearances, and of ſatisfying themſelves of the truth of things. This number of forty days is a remarkable one in ſcripture. The flood was forty days upon the earth; and ſo long Moſes was in the mount with God; ſuch a number of days the ſpies were ſearching the land of Canaan; ſo many days Goliath preſented himſelf to the armies of Iſrael; and ſo long a time Elijah went in the ſtrength of the meat the angel provided for him; and for ſuch a length of time the prophet Ezekiel was to bear the iniquity of the houſe of Judah; and ſuch a term of time was given out by Jonah for the deſtruction of Niniveh; and ſo many days Chriſt faſted, and was tempted in the wilderneſs. The Jews pretend[e], that forty days before Jeſus was put to death he was led forth, and a crier went before him, declaring, that whoever would, had liberty to teſtify to his innocence if they could, but no man appeared for him: but this is falſe; the truth of the matter is, that for forty days after his reſurrection he ſhewed himſelf to his diſciples, and by proving the truth of his reſurrection, he proved his own innocence and uprightneſs. If the teſtimony of Rabbenu Hakadoſh, as cited by Galatinus, could be depended on, the Jews had a notion of this forty days converſation of the Meſſiah with his diſciples, after his reſurrection; who ſay[f], "the Meſſiah, after his reſurrection, ſhall converſe with the righteous, and they ſhall hear his precepts forty days, anſwerable to thoſe forty days in which he ſhall be in the wilderneſs to afflict his ſoul, before they ſhall kill him; and theſe being finiſhed, he ſhall aſcend to heaven, and ſit at the right hand of God, as it is ſaid, Pſal. cx. 1." But this ſeems rather to be the pious fraud of ſome chriſtian, than the words of a Jew: however, they do ſay[g], that "the days of the Meſſiah are forty days, as it is ſaid, Pſ. xcv. 10. forty years long was I grieved; or, as they interpret it, ſhall I be grieved with this generation:" intimating, that the generation of the Meſſiah, and of the wilderneſs, would be much alike, and equally grieving to God, and reckoning a day for a year, as the Lord did with that generation, Numb. xiv. 33, 34. Theſe forty days Chriſt were with his diſciples, may be an emblem of the forty years which were to run out from his death, to his coming again to take vengeance on the Jewiſh nation; for ſo long time was there from thence to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. And Chriſt was not only ſeen of the diſciples at certain ſeaſons during this ſpace of time, but he was alſo heard by them: for it follows, and ſpeaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God; the kingdom of the Meſſiah, the Goſpel diſpenſation; concerning the doctrines of the Goſpel they were to preach, and the ordinances of it they were to adminiſter; concerning the church of God, the nature, order, and officers of it, and the laws and rules by which it ſhould be governed; concerning the kingdom of grace, what it conſiſts of, and wherein it lies; and of the kingdom of glory, of meetneſs for it, his own grace, and of the right unto it, his own juſtifying righteouſneſs: ſome of theſe things they might have before, but very little knowledge of; and may be theſe are the things he had to ſay to them, and which, till now, they could not bear; and being no more to be with them in perſon, he inſtructs them in them.

Ver. 4. And being aſſembled together with them, &c.] At their laſt meeting at Bethany, or mount Olivet, which was by appointment: ſome render the words, as the Vulgate Latin, and eating with them; which was one of the proofs he gave of his being alive; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, and when he had eat bread with them; and the Ethiopic verſion, and dining with them, which he might do more than once; ſee John xxi. 12, 15. this was the laſt time, when he commanded them that they ſhould not depart from Jeruſalem; which does not neceſſarily infer, that they were then at Jeruſalem; for they might be, and they ſeem rather to be at Bethany, or on the mount of Olives, from whence they afterwards returned to Jeruſalem; and from thence they had orders not to depart, where the blood of Chriſt had been ſhed, and where were his greateſt enemies, and where the diſciples might have no inclination to have gone, and much leſs to abide: but ſo it muſt be, partly for the glorifying of Chriſt by the effuſion of his Spirit on the Apoſtles in the place where he had ſuffered the moſt reproach; and partly becauſe the Goſpel, the word of the Lord was to go out of this place, according to the prophecy in Iſ. ii. 3. as alſo becauſe a Goſpel-church was to be fixed there, and a very large number of ſouls to be converted, and added to it: wherefore they were bid to go thither, and not ſtir from thence, but wait for the promiſe of the father; that is, the pouring forth of the Spirit, which God the Father of Chriſt, and of his people, had promiſed ſhould be in the laſt days, Joel ii. 28. and which Chriſt had promiſed his diſciples from the Father, John xiv. 16. and xv. 26. and xvi. 7. which, ſaith he, ye have heard of me; or by, or out of my mouth, as the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions, and Beza's moſt ancient copy read; referring to the above paſſages, or to what follows: and which he the rather mentions, to aſſure them of its accompliſhment, ſince it was both a promiſe of the Father, all whoſe promiſes are yea and Amen; and he had alſo told them of it, neither of whoſe words could poſſibly fall to the ground.

Ver. 5. For John truly baptized with water, &c.] Or in water, as he himſelf ſays, Matt. iii. 11. John's baptiſm was water-baptiſm, an immerſion of perſons in water: he was the firſt adminiſtrator of it, and therefore is here mentioned by name; and his, and the baptiſm of the Spirit are oppoſed; for there were others, as the diſciples of Chriſt, that baptized in water, as well as John: and theſe words are not to be underſtood of the words of the Lord, by the mouth of John, which the diſciples heard, for they were not then called when John ſpoke the words in Matt. iii. 11. nor indeed are they the ſame with theſe; but theſe are the words of Chriſt himſelf, and which the Apoſtles heard from his own mouth, as is clear from Acts xi. 16. tho' they are not recorded by any of the Evangeliſts; and theſe are not the only words which Luke repeats, that the Evangeliſts are ſilent about; ſee ch. xx. 35. but ye ſhall be baptized with the Holy Ghoſt; that is, by himſelf; for it is Chriſt's prerogative to baptize with the Spirit, as John foretold of him; and it deſigns ſuch an extraordinary and plentiful donation of the gifts of the Spirit, as may be expreſſed by a baptiſm; in which the Apoſtles, on the day of Pentecoſt, were, as it were, to be immerſed, and with them covered; as Cyril of Jeruſalem[h] obſerves, "as he, ο ενδυνων εν τοις υδασι, who is plunged in water, "and baptized, is encompaſſed by the water on "every ſide, ſo are they that are wholly baptized "by the Spirit." Not many days hence; within ten days, for this was on the fortieth day from his death, which was at the paſſover, theſe words were ſaid; and on the fiftieth day from thence was the feaſt of Pentecoſt, when this had its fulfilment.

Ver. 6. When they therefore were come together, &c.] That is, Chriſt, and his eleven Apoſtles; for not the hundred and twenty diſciples hereafter mentioned, nor the five hundred brethren Chriſt appeared to at once, are here intended, but the Apoſtles, as appears from ver. 2, 3, 4. they aſked of him, ſaying, wilt thou at this time reſtore again the kingdom to Iſrael? The kingdom had been for ſome time taken away from the Jews, Judea was reduced to a Roman province, and was now actually under the power of a Roman governour. And the nation in general was in great expectation, that upon the Meſſiah's coming they ſhould be delivered from the yoke of the Romans, and that the ſon of David would be king over them. The diſciples of Chriſt had imbibed the ſame notions, and were in the ſame expectation of a temporal kingdom to be ſet up by their maſter, as is evident from Matt. xx. 21. and tho' his ſufferings and death had greatly damped their ſpirits, and almoſt deſtroyed their hopes, ſee Luke xxiv. 21. yet his reſurrection from the dead, and his diſcourſing with them about the kingdom of God, and ordering them to wait at Jeruſalem, the metropolis of that nation, for ſome thing extraordinary, revived their hopes, and emboldened them to put this queſtion to him: and this general expectation of the Jews is expreſſed by them in the ſame language as here; "the days of the Meſſiah "will be the time when שתשוב המלכות לישראל, "the kingdom ſhall return, or be reſtored to Iſrael; "and they ſhall return to the land of Iſrael, and "that king ſhall be exceeding great, and the houſe "of his kingdom ſhall be in Zion, and his name "ſhall be magnified, and his fame ſhall fill the "Gentiles more than king Solomon; all nations ſhall "be at peace with him, and all lands ſhall ſerve "him, becauſe of his great righteouſneſs, and the "wonderful things which ſhall be done by him; "and whoever riſes up againſt him God will deſtroy, and he ſhall deliver him into his hands; "and all the paſſages of ſcripture teſtify of his and "our proſperity with him; and there ſhall be no "difference in any thing from what it is now, only "the kingdom ſhall return to Iſrael[i]."

Ver. 7. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] To his diſciples, it is not for you to know the times or the ſeaſons; meaning, not the times that are paſt from Adam to Chriſt; as how long the world ſtood; when the flood came; when Sodom and Gomorrha were burned to aſhes; when the children of Iſrael came out of Egypt, and the law was given to them; when the kingdom of Iſrael began, and when the Jews were carried captive, and when they returned; when the ſceptre departed from Judah, and Daniel's week had an end: or the particular ſeaſons of the year, and the times for planting, plowing, ſowing, reaping, &c. but when ſhould be the time, the day, and hour of the coming of the ſon of man, when he ſhall ſet up his kingdom in a more glorious manner, and the kingdoms of this world ſhall become his; or when the kingdom ſhall be reſtored to Iſrael. This, by the Jews, is ſaid to be one of the ſeven things hid from men[k]: "ſeven things "are hid from the children of men, and theſe are "they; the day of death, and the day of conſolation, and the depth of judgment, and a man "knows not what is in the heart of his neighbour, "nor with what he ſhall be rewarded, and when "the kingdom of the houſe of David ſhall return, "and when the kingdom of Perſia ſhall fall." Which the Father hath put in his own power; and not in the power of a creature, no, not of the angels; ſee Matt. xxiv. 36. wherefore it is vain and ſinful, as well as fruitleſs, to indulge a curious enquiry into theſe things, or into the times and ſeaſons of what is future; as of the time of a man's death, of the end of the world, of the ſecond coming of Chriſt; only thoſe things ſhould be looked into which God has revealed, and put it into the power of man to know by diligent ſearch and enquiry. Says R. Simeon [l], "fleſh and blood, (i. e. "man) which knows not, עתיו ורגעיו, its times and "its moments, (and ſo the Vulgate Latin renders "the words here) ought to add a void ſpace to "the bleſſed God, who knows the times and moments."

[h] Catecheſ. 17. §. 8. p. 247.

[i] Maimon. in Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 11. §. 1.

Ver. 8. But ye ſhall receive power, &c.] From on high, with which they were to be endued, Luke xxiv. 49. meaning the power of the Holy Ghoſt, ſtrength from him to preach the Goſpel, and work miracles in confirmation of it, and courage and greatneſs of mind, amidſt all reproaches and perſecutions, to face and oppoſe their enemies, profeſs the name of Chriſt, abide by his truths and ordinances, make their way through all oppoſition and difficulties, and ſpread the Goſpel all over the world; for inſtead of enjoying worldly eaſe, honour, wealth, and riches, they were looking for, our Lord gives them to underſtand that they muſt expect labour, ſervice, afflictions, and trials, which would require power and ſtrength, and which they ſhould have: after that the Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon you; from above, from heaven, as he did, and ſat upon them in the form of cloven tongues, and of fire; upon which they were filled with knowledge and zeal, with ſtrength and courage, and with all gifts and abilities neceſſary for their work: and ye ſhall be witneſſes unto me; of the perſon of Chriſt, of his deity and Sonſhip, of his incarnation, his miniſtry, and his miracles, of his ſufferings and death, of his reſurrection from the dead, and his aſcenſion to heaven. This was to be their work, and what belonged to them, and not to enquire about a temporal kingdom, and the ſetting up of that, and the times and ſeaſons of it; their buſineſs was to teſtify of the ſufferings of Chriſt, and the glory that followed, and to preach a crucified Jeſus, as the only Saviour of loſt ſinners: and this both in Jeruſalem, the metropolis of the nation, and there, in the firſt place, where ſuch dwelt who had been concerned in the crucifixion of Chriſt, many of whom were to be called by grace, and converted thro' their miniſtry: and in all Judea; that part of the land of Iſrael which was diſtinct from Samaria and Galilee, and from beyond Jordan; where churches were to be planted, as afterwards they were; ſee ch. ix. 31. And in Samaria; where Chriſt had before forbid his diſciples to go; but now their commiſſion is enlarged, and they are ſent there; and here Philip went upon the perſecution raiſed againſt the church at Jeruſalem, and preached Chriſt with great ſucceſs, to the converſion of many; and hither Peter and John went to lay their hands on them, and confirm them; ſee ch. viii. 5, 14. and unto the uttermoſt part of the earth; throughout the whole world, whither the ſound of the Apoſtles, and their words went, Rom. x. 18.

Ver. 9. And when he had ſpoken theſe things, &c.] That the times and ſeaſons were not to be known by them, but to be kept a ſecret by the Father; that they ſhould tarry at Jeruſalem, and in a few days be baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, and receive ſuch power, ablities, ſtrength, and courage thereby, as to bear a noble teſtimony for Chriſt, not only there, but in all the world; and when he had given them a freſh commiſſion, and told them where they ſhould go, what they ſhould preach, and what miracles they ſhould perform, and bleſſed them. While they beheld; all the Oriental verſions add, him; that is Chriſt, while they looked wiſhly at him, being attentive to what he ſaid to them, ſo that they were not aſleep; nor did Chriſt become inviſible to them, or diſappear before his aſcenſion, but was viſible to them in it; hence they were eye-witneſſes of it: he was taken up. Luke, in his Goſpel ſays, carried up; very likely by angels, ſince theſe not only attended him in his aſcenſion, but are the chariots of the Lord, in which he went up to heaven; ſee Pſ. lxviii. 17, 18. nor is this at all inconſiſtent with his proper deity, or that divine power he had of elevating himſelf, which he could do without the aſſiſtance of others; but this makes for the glory of his majeſty. And a cloud received him out of their ſight; which was done partly for the ſame purpoſe, to add to the grandeur and magnificence of Chriſt's aſcenſion; and partly to check the curioſity of the diſciples, and prevent their gazing any more at him: and it may be that this cloud was no other than a number of angels that appeared in this form; juſt as Elijah was taken up to heaven by angels, who appeared in the form of horſes and chariots of fire; and the rather this may be the ſenſe here, ſince it is certain, that there was a large number of angels which attended Chriſt at his aſcenſion; and by whom he was then ſeen, Pſ. lxviii. 17, 18. John i. 51. 1 Tim. iii. 16. whereas, if theſe are not intended by the cloud, no more than two are here taken notice of, and theſe not as going along with Chriſt, but ſtaying behind to converſe with his diſciples; to which may be added, that Chriſt was received by this cloud which deſcended to meet him, and joining him, eſcorted him to heaven: at leaſt it may be thought, if it was a real cloud, that there was a multitude of angels in it, which accompanied him to the heavenly regions; for it can hardly be thought that a multitude of the heavenly hoſt ſhould deſcend at his birth, and ſing glory to God upon his coming into this world; and not as large a number attend him with ſhouts and acclamations, at his going out of it, when he had done his work he came about, and was aſcending to his God and Father, to take his place at his right hand on his throne; ſee Pſ. xlvii. 5. The Ethiopic verſion adds, and he aſcended to heaven.

Ver. 10. And while they looked ſtedfaſtly toward heaven, &c.] For tho' he was taken out of their ſight by the cloud, they kept looking upwards, and after him, if they could ſee him again, or any more of him: as he went up; they looked up to heaven after him, as he went up from the earth, before the cloud took him out of their ſight; and ſtill they continued looking, as the cloud carried him up, until it was out of the reach of their ſight, being willing to ſee the laſt of him in this way: behold two men ſtood by them in white apparel; that is, two angels in the form of men; it being uſual with them to appear in human form: theſe on a ſudden appeared and ſtood on the earth juſt by them; tho' the Ethiopic verſion renders it, they ſtood above them, as if they were in the air over their heads; and they appeared in white apparel, as the angel at the ſepulchre in Matt. xxviii. 2. 3. which was a ſymbol both of their purity and holineſs, and of their luſtre and glory. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, they were clothed with lightning; they appeared in ſuch a dazzling form, that it looked as if they were covered with lightning; as the angel that appeared at Chriſt's reſurrection, his countenance is ſaid to be as lightning; which muſt at once fix the attention of the diſciples to them, and ſtrike them with ſurprize: hence a behold is prefixed to this; and hereby they knew that they were not common and ordinary men, or mere men, but angels in ſuch a form.

[k] T. Bab. Peſachim, fol. 54. 2. Vid. Bereſhit Rabba, §. 65. fol. 57. 4.

Ver. 11. Which alſo ſaid, ye men of Galilee, &c.] And which was ſaid by them, not to reproach them with their country, but partly to let them know that they knew them, who they were, and from whence they came; and partly to obſerve the rich and diſtinguiſhing grace of God in chuſing ſuch mean and contemptible perſons to be the apoſtles of Chriſt, and eye-witneſſes of his majeſty: why ſtand ye gazing up into heaven? reproving them for their curioſity in looking after Chriſt with their bodily eyes, who was no more in common to be ſeen this way, but with an eye of faith; and for their deſire after his corporeal preſence, which they were not to look for; and as if they expected he would return again immediately, whereas his return will not be till the end of the world: and beſides, they were not to remain on that ſpot, or ſtand gazing there; they were to go to Jeruſalem, and abide there, as Chriſt had ordered, till they ſhould receive the holy Spirit in an extraordinary way; and then they were to preach a crucified Chriſt, and declare that he was riſen from the dead, and was gone to heaven, and was ordained to be the judge of quick and dead. This ſame Jeſus; and not another; the ſame in perſon, in body and ſoul: which is taken up from you into heaven; who was taken up in a cloud out of their ſight, and received into heaven, where he will be till the times of the reſtitution of all things; and which might be matter of grief to them, becauſe of the loſs of his bodily preſence; tho' it ſhould have been rather joyful to them, ſince he was gone to the Father, and as their fore-runner, to prepare a place, and make interceſſion for them: ſhall ſo come in like manner as ye have ſeen him go into heaven; he ſhall come in the ſame fleſh, in the ſame human nature; he ſhall come in the clouds of heaven, and ſhall be attended with his mighty angels, as he now was; he ſhall deſcend himſelf in perſon, as he now aſcended in perſon; and as he went up with a ſhout, and with the ſound of a trumpet, ſee Pſ. xlvii. 5. ſo he ſhall deſcend with a ſhout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God; and, it may be, he ſhall deſcend upon the very ſpot from whence he aſcended; ſee Zech. xiv. 4. and it is a notion of the Jews, that the reſurrection of the Iſraelites will be there: they ſay [m], that "when the dead ſhall "live, the mount of Olives ſhall be cleaved aſunder, "and all the dead of Iſrael ſhall come out from "under it; yea, even the righteous which die in "captivity ſhall paſs thro' ſubterraneous caverns, "and come out from under the mount of Olives."

Ver. 12. Then returned they unto Jeruſalem, &c.] With great joy, after the angels had told them that he ſhould come again in like manner: from the mount called Olivet; which was on the eaſt ſide of Jeruſalem, a mountain Chriſt much frequented, and from whence he aſcended to heaven. This is the hill which in 1 Kings xi. 7. it is ſaid to be before Jeruſalem; and accordingly Jarchi interprets it of the mount of Olives; and in Zech. xiv. 4. it is expreſly ſaid to be before Jeruſalem on the eaſt; hence, when our Lord ſat upon it, he is ſaid to be over-againſt the temple, Mark xiii. 3. It has its name from the multitude of olive trees which grew upon it: it is by the Jewiſh writers ſometimes called הר הזיתים, the mount of Olives [n], as in Zech. xiv. 4. and ſometimes הר המשחה [o], and טור משחא [p], the mount of oil; i. e. of olive oil, which was made out of the olives that grew upon it. It is ſaid, that in an old edition of the Latin verſion of this text it is called the mountain of three lights; and this reaſon is given for it, becauſe on the weſt ſide it was enlightened in the night by the continual fire of the altar in the temple; and on the eaſt ſide it had the firſt beams of the ſun before the city was enlightened with them; and it produced plenty of olives, by which the light is maintained in the lamps. Joſephus [q] relates, that in the earthquake in the times of Uzziah, half part of this mountain, which was to the weſt, was divided from it, and was rolled four furlongs to the eaſtern part of it, ſo that the ways and king's gardens were ſtopped up. Which is from Jeruſalem a ſabbath-day's journey. The Syriac verſion renders it, about ſeven furlongs, or near a mile; tho' Joſephus [r] writes, that the mount of Olives was but five furlongs from Jeruſalem: perhaps this may be a miſtake in the preſent copies of Joſephus, ſince Chryſoſtom on this place cites this paſſage of Joſephus, and reads ſeven furlongs; which exactly agrees with the Syriac verſion. A ſabbath-day's journey, according to the Jews, was two thouſand cubits from any city or town, and which they often called, תחום שבת, the bound of the ſabbath [s]; and which they collect partly from Numb. xxxv. 4, 5. which they underſtand thus [t]: "a thouſand cubits are the "ſuburbs (of the city), and two thouſand cubits "the bounds of the ſabbath." And theſe were ſo many middling paces; for ſo they ſay [u], "a "walk of two thouſand middling paces, this is the "bound of the ſabbath." And that this was the proper ſpace they alſo gather from Joſh. iii. 4. it being the diſtance between the ark and the people when they marched; and tho' this was not fixed by the law, yet being a tradition of the elders, was ſtrictly obſerved by them: ſo when Ruth deſired to become a proſelyteſs, the Targumiſt on Ruth i. 16. introduces Naomi thus ſpeaking to her; "ſays "Naomi, we are commanded to keep the ſabbaths, "and the good days, (or feaſts) and not to walk "above two thouſand cubits;" i. e. on thoſe days; for to go further was reckoned a prophanation of them: ſo it is ſaid [w], "the ſabbath-day is prophan-"ed with the hands by work, and with the feet by "walking more than two thouſand cubits." Yea, this was puniſhable with beating [x]: "a man might go on the ſabbath without the city two thouſand cubits on every ſide —— but if he went beyond two thouſand cubits, they beat him with the beating of rebels," or in the ſame manner a rebellious ſon was beaten. Nay, not only they might not go out of a city or town where they were, further than this, but from whatſoever place they happened to be, as appears by theſe following rules[y]; "if any one falls aſleep in the way, (or on the road) and he does not know that it was dark, (and ſo that the ſabbath is begun) he has two thouſand cubits (allowed him) on every ſide. — Whoever is on a journey, and it is dark, and he knows a tree, or a hedge, and ſays, let my ſabbath (or ſabbatical ſeat) be under it, he ſays nothing; but if he ſays, let my ſabbath be at the root of it, then he may go from the place of his feet, and to the root of it, two thouſand cubits, and from the root of it to his houſe two thouſand cubits; by which means he may go four thouſand cubits after it is dark. But if he does not know (any), and is not expert in walking, and ſays, let my ſabbath be in my place, (i. e. in which he ſtands) then from his place he has two thouſand cubits on every ſide." Hence, in ſome copies it is here inſerted, ſuch being the diſtance that the Jews could walk; that is, were allowed to walk by their canons. They call two thouſand cubits a mile[z]; and if the mount of Olives was ſeven furlongs from Jeruſalem, it was pretty near a mile; but if but five furlongs, it was little more than half a mile: perhaps the true diſtance might be ſix furlongs, ſince Joſephus ſays[a], the tenth legion was ordered to encamp ſix furlongs from Jeruſalem, at the mount of Olives, which was over-againſt the city to the eaſt; agreeable to which Epiphanius[b], who had been a Jew, and was born in Paleſtine, ſays, "it was not lawful to go on the ſabbath-day beyond ſix furlongs", which were three quarters of a mile.

Ver. 13. And when they were come in, &c.] Into it, as the Arabic verſion reads; that is, into the city of Jeruſalem, and into ſome houſe in that city; but what houſe it was is needleſs to enquire, ſince it cannot be known. Some think it was the houſe of John the Evangeliſt, whither he had taken Mary the mother of our Lord, John xix. 27. which is not improbable: others, that it was the houſe of Mary, the mother of John Mark, where the diſciples met for prayer when Peter was put into priſon, Acts xii. 12. others, that it was the houſe of Simon the leper; but his houſe was not at Jeruſalem, but in Bethany, Matt. xxvi. 6. Some have thought it was the houſe of Nicodemus, or of Joſeph of Arimathea; but after all it ſeems moſt likely, that it was not any private houſe, but the temple into which the diſciples immediately went, and where they continued; ſee Luke xxiv. 52, 53. and Acts ii. 46. they went up into an upper room; which, if in a private houſe, they might chuſe for retirement and ſecrecy; and might be the ſame in which they had eat the paſſover; and ſo a Syriac ſcholiaſt, in manuſcript, on the place, ſays it was the ſame. It was uſual to meet in upper rooms for devotion and religious converſation; ſee the note on Mark ii. 4. tho' this upper room might be one of the chambers in the temple; for not only from the ſcriptural account of the temple, there were chambers round about it, and upper chambers; ſee 1 Kings vi. 5. 1 Chron. xxviii. 11. 2 Chron. iii. 9. and one of theſe is called the chamber of Gemariah, in which Baruch read the prophecies of Jeremiah, Jer. xxxvi. 10. but alſo from the Jewiſh writings, in which frequent mention is made of the chamber Palhedrin, where the high-prieſt was brought ſeven days before the day of atonement[c]; and the chamber of the counſellors[d]; and the chamber Gazith, where the Sanhedrim ſat; and the chamber of the houſe of Abtines[e]; and the chamber of wood; and the chamber of the lepers; and the chamber of the houſe of oil[f]; and the chamber of ſalt; and the chamber of Parvah; and the chamber of them that waſh, beſides others[g]. And into a chamber, or upper room in the temple they might be let by Joſes Barnabas, a Levite, one of their own company, Acts iv. 36. who might have the care of it, for they are ſaid to be continually in the temple, Luke xxiv. 53. Where abode both Peter, and James, and John. The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, Peter, and John, and James; and ſo the Alexandrian copy. Theſe were the three favourite diſciples of Chriſt, and often mentioned together, as here firſt; and Andrew, Philip, and Thomas, Bartholomew and Matthew. The Syriac and Ethiopic verſions put Matthew before Bartholomew. James the ſon of Alpheus, and Simon Zelotes, and Judas, the brother of James; all the Oriental verſions read, Judas the ſon of James: of the names of the Apoſtles, ſee the notes on Matt. x. 2, 3, 4. They are all here mentioned but Judas the betrayer, who was dead, to ſhew, that tho' one had diſbelieved the reſurrection of Chriſt, another had denied him, and all of them had forſook him, and fled; yet they were got together again, and were firm and ſtedfaſt in the faith of Chriſt, waiting for the pouring forth of the Spirit.

Ver. 14. Theſe all continued, with one accord, in prayer and ſupplication, &c.] For the promiſe of the ſpirit Chriſt had given them reaſon to expect; and that they might be preſerved from their enemies, and kept faithful to their Lord; and be abundantly qualified for the preaching of the Goſpel, and ſucceeded in it; and that their hearts might be comforted, and knit together in love: and they were unanimous in their requeſts, and ſo were under the promiſe of being heard; and in this work they were conſtant, and aſſiduous, and followed it with importunity. The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions leave out the laſt clauſe, and ſupplication; and ſo likewiſe the Alexandrian copy: with the women; that followed Chriſt from Galilee, and were at his croſs, and at his grave; among whom were Mary Magdalene, and Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Salome the wife of Zebedee. Some render the words, with their wives; the wives of the apoſtles; and as many as had wives, no doubt but they were with them; and it was neceſſary they ſhould be, that they might be ſtrengthened and confirmed in the faith of Chriſt. Beza's moſt antient copy adds, and children; and Mary the mother of Jeſus. This is the laſt we hear of her; how long ſhe lived after this, is not certain: her continuance with the apoſtles of Chriſt, ſhows her religion and piety, and was both for the increaſe of her faith, and ſpiritual comfort: and with his brethren; ſee Matt. xiii. 55. and the note there.

Ver. 15. And in thoſe days Peter ſtood up, &c.] That is, in one of the days after Chriſt's aſcenſion, and before the day of Pentecoſt, whilſt the diſciples were waiting for the promiſe of the Spirit. The Ethiopic verſion reads, on that day; as if it was the ſame day they came firſt into Jeruſalem, and went into the upper room; and which is likely enough; for no time was to be loſt in chuſing one in the room of Judas; when Peter, not only as a forward perſon, and who had been uſed to be the firſt mover and actor in any affair; but as willing to ſhew his zeal for Chriſt, whom he had ſo lately denied, and as being the ſenior man in company, as well as the miniſter of the circumciſion, riſes, and ſtands up, as perſons uſed to do, when about to make an oration, and in reſpect and reverence to the perſons addreſſed: in the midſt of the diſciples; not only the other ten, but the whole hundred and twenty. The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, read, in the midſt of the brethren, and ſo reads the Vulgate Latin verſion; and the Ethiopic verſion, in the midſt of his own brethren; and he ſaid what is expreſſed in the following verſes, which before the hiſtorian relates, he inſerts in a parentheſis this clauſe, the number of the names; that is of perſons; ſee Rev. xi. 13. Some copies read, of the men, and ſo the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions; who together, all put together in one ſum, or as meeting together in one and the ſame place, or as agreeing in the ſame faith and judgment, ſo the Arabic verſion, and there was there a company whoſe names and wills agreed in this ſame opinion; they were all in one place, and of the ſame mind; and the ſum of them were about an hundred and twenty; among whom were the eleven apoſtles, and ſeventy diſciples, which made eighty one; ſo that there were thirty-nine perſons more in this company: not that it is to be thought that theſe were all that were in Jeruſalem that believed in Chriſt; but theſe were the number of the perſons that met and imbodied together in a church-ſtate, and who not only gave themſelves to the Lord, but to one another, by the will of God; and their names being taken and regiſtred, the hiſtorian calls the account of them, the number of the names, and not perſons; tho' he means perſons. This was a number pretty famous among the Jews; the Sanhedrim of Ezra, called the men of the great ſynagogue, conſiſted of an hundred and twenty elders; the laſt of which was Simeon the juſt, and he comprehended the hundred and twenty [h]. And ſuch a number was requiſite for a Sanhedrim in any place; it is aſked, "how many muſt there be in a city, that it may "be fit for a Sanhedrim? an hundred and twenty; "R. Nehemiah ſays two hundred and thirty [i]:" but the deciſion is according to the former: hence they ſay [k], that "they fix in every city in Iſrael, "where there is an hundred and twenty, or more, a "leſſer Sanhedrim.——A city in which there is not "an hundred and twenty, they place three judges, "for there is no Sanhedrim leſs than three."

Ver. 16. Men and brethren, &c.] Which is ſaid not ſo much by Peter to expreſs his modeſty, and humility, and his brotherly love; or on account of the ſpiritual relation that ſubſiſted between him and the perſons he ſpeaks to, as it was a common form uſed in addreſſes; ſee Acts vii. 2. and xv. 7. and xxii. 1. and xxiii. 1. it ſhould ſeem, that the women were not reckoned into the number of the hundred and twenty here addreſſed; and the Syriac verſion calls that number, the number of men, unleſs they are ſuppoſed to be included in them: this ſcripture muſt needs have been fulfilled; or muſt needs be fulfilled; referring either to Pſal. xli. 9. or rather to the paſſages after cited out of Pſal. lxix. 25. and cix. 8. There was a neceſſity of the fulfilling of it, conſiſtent with the preſcience of God, his counſel, and decree, and the veracity of the ſcripture; which neceſſity does not at all excuſe the ſin of Judas, who acted freely from the wickedneſs of his own heart, and not from any force that this laid upon him: and the apoſtle might obſerve this alſo, to make the minds of the diſciples eaſy, under this awful providence, ſince it was no other than what was predicted: and which the Holy Ghoſt, by the mouth of David, ſpake before; even many hundreds of years before the event; and which ſhews the omniſcience, and ſo the deity of the Holy Ghoſt, and the divine authority of David's pſalms; as well as the honour that was put upon him to be the inſtrument by which the Holy Ghoſt ſpeaks, and to be his amanuenſis: the particular referr'd to, is, concerning Judas; who is ſometimes called Iſcariot, to diſtinguiſh him from another apoſtle of the ſame name; and what is hereafter ſaid ſufficiently does that; or concerning that Judas, as the Syriac verſion renders it: which was a guide to them that took Jeſus; to the band of ſoldiers and officers, who came with ſwords and ſtaves, as to take a thief, or a robber; before theſe Judas went and ſhewed them, not only the place where he was, but gave them a ſign by which they ſhould know him, and alſo advice to take him and hold him faſt, and lead him away ſafely; ſo that he was not only a guide as to the way, but was a director, and conductor, and manager of the whole affair. And it may be obſerved, that tho' Peter did not conceal, but declares the ſin of Judas; yet not in a rough manner, aggravating it, but with much ſoftneſs and tenderneſs; tho' with no deſign to leſſen it, as appears by what follows, and which may be inſtructive to us in ſpeaking of other mens ſins.

Ver. 17. For he was numbered with us, &c.] He was choſen an apoſtle with the reſt, and was ordained into that office when they were, and was always reckoned one of the twelve, and ſtands in the catalogue when they are mentioned: and had obtained part of this miniſtry; by lot, as the word ſignifies; the providence of God ſo ordering it, according to his eternal purpoſe and decree, that he was not only called an apoſtle, and enrolled among them, but he really had a part in that miniſtry; he preached, and baptized, and wrought miracles; and beſides all this, carried the bag, was the treaſurer, and a ſort of a ſteward in Chriſt's family, and provided for it.

Ver. 18. Now this man purchaſed a field, &c.] This verſe, with the following, ſeem to be the words of Luke the hiſtorian, which ſhould be read in a parentheſis; for there was no need to have acquainted the diſciples with the manner of Judas's death, which was ſo well known to all the inhabitants of Jeruſalem; nor would Jeruſalem, and the inhabitants of it, be mentioned with that propriety by Peter, when he, and thoſe he ſpoke of, were upon the ſpot; nor could there be any neceſſity of his explaining a word in their own tongue, which they underſtood, and that in a language unknown unto them; nor does it ſeem likely, that in ſo ſhort a time, as five or ſix weeks, the field ſhould have obtained the name of Aceldama, and be commonly known by it. The Ethiopic verſion calls this field, a vineyard; and ſo it might be, and yet the potters field too. It is ſomewhat difficult, that Judas ſhould be ſaid to purchaſe it, when Matthew ſays the chief-prieſts bought it, Matt. xxvii. 7. Both are true; Judas having received his money of the chief-prieſts two days ago, might not only intend to purchaſe, but might really ſtrike a bargain with the potter for his field; but repenting of his ſin, inſtead of carrying the money to make good the agreement, went and threw it to the chieſt-prieſts, and then hanged himſelf; when they, by a ſecret providence, might be directed to make a purchaſe of the ſame field with his money; or he may be ſaid to purchaſe it, becauſe it was purchaſed with his money. The Vulgate Latin, and Arabic verſions render it, he poſſeſſed it; not in perſon, unleſs he was buried there, as he might be; and ſo all that he got by his wretched bargain, was only ſo much ground as to be buried in; or the ſenſe may be, he cauſed it to be poſſeſſed; by returning the money which the chief prieſts uſed this way: with the reward of his iniquity; that is, with the thirty pieces of ſilver, given him as a reward for that vile action of his betraying of his Lord and maſter: ſo the reward of divination, or what Balaam got by ſoothſaying, which was an iniquitous and wicked practice, is called, the wages of unrighteouſneſs, 2 Peter ii. 15. and falling headlong he burſt in the midſt; either falling from the gallows, or tree on which he hanged himſelf, the rope breaking, upon a ſtone, or ſtump, his belly was broke, and burſt; or falling from the air, whither he was violently ſnatched up by ſatan, who was in him, and by whom he was thrown down to the earth, and who went out of him by a rupture made in his belly; or being in deep melancholy, he was ſtrangled with the ſquinancy, and fell down on his face to the ground, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions render it, and burſt aſunder: and all his bowels guſhed out; thro' the rupture that was made. So we read of a man that fell from the roof of a houſe, פקעיה כרסיה ונפיק מעייניה, and his belly burſt, and his bowels came out[l]. And this was the miſerable end of Judas. The death of Arius, as related by Athanaſius[m], from Macarius the preſbyter, who was preſent, was much after the ſame manner; who reports, that having ſwore to the orthodox faith, and being about to be introduced into the church at Conſtantinople, after the prayer of Alexander, the biſhop of it, he went out to the ſeat, to eaſe nature; when he, on a ſudden, fell down headlong, and burſt in the middle, and immediately expired: and Epiphanius[n] compares his exit with this of Judas, who obſerves, that he went out in the night to the vault, as before related, and burſt aſunder, as Judas of old did; and came to his end in a filthy and unclean place. Ruffinus ſays[o], that as he ſat, his entrails, and all his bowels, came from him into the vault; and ſo he died in ſuch a place, a death worthy of his blaſphemous and corrupt mind. As to the ſeeming difference between the Evangeliſt Matthew, and the Apoſtle Peter, it may be reconciled by either of the ways before mentioned; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 5. tho' it ſeems moſt likely, that Judas, not being able to bear the torments of his mind, he hanged himſelf, as Achitophel did, and was not ſtrangled by the devil, or by any diſeaſe; and that he fell down from the tree on which he hung, either the rope breaking, or the tree falling; and ſo the things happened to him which are recorded: or he might fall from hence, either thro' a violent ſtrong wind which blew him down; or thro' the ruſhing of wild beaſts againſt the gallows, on which he hung; or by the devil himſelf, who might throw him down from hence after he had diſpatched himſelf, as ſome have conjectured: or, which ſeems beſt of all, he might be caſt down from hence by men, either of themſelves, or by the order of the civil magiſtrates, not enduring ſuch a ſight, that one that had deſtroyed himſelf ſhould hang long there; and which, according to the law, was not to be admitted; and theſe not taking him down, in a gentle manner, but uſing ſome violence, or cutting the rope, the body fell, and burſt aſunder, as is here ſaid: and it ſhould be obſerved, that the Evangeliſt Matthew ſpeaks of the death of Judas, in which he himſelf was concerned; and the Apoſtle Peter reports what befel his carkaſs after his death, and in which others were concerned. The Vulgate Latin renders it, and being hanged, he burſt in the middle; as if this happened to him upon the gallows, without falling.

Ver. 19. And it was known unto all the dwellers at Jeruſalem, &c.] As that he betrayed Jeſus of Nazareth into the hands of the chief-prieſts, for thirty pieces of ſilver; that this was the reward of his iniquity; and that with this a field was purchaſed for the burying of ſtrangers in; and that he died in ſuch a miſerable way: there was ſcarce an inhabitant in Jeruſalem but knew all this, inſomuch as that field is called in their proper tongue; or in their own dialect, the Jeruſalem dialect, which was now Chaldee, or Syriac; and ſuch is the word that follows, Aceldama; that is to ſay, the field of blood; becauſe it was bought with the price of Chriſt's blood: and if, as ſome ſay, Judas hanged himſelf here, or was thrown headlong here by ſatan, and that this was the place where his bowels guſhed out; then it may be likewiſe ſo called, becauſe it was ſprinkled with his blood. It is called in the Alexandrian copy Acheldamach; and often by Jerom[p] Acheldemach, but very wrongly; for not Demach, but Dema, in the Syriac and Chaldee dialect, ſignifies blood; which Peter calls the dialect of the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, being now ſpoken by them, in diſtinction from the Galilean dialect uſed by him; which, it is plain, was different from the Jeruſalem dialect by what is ſaid, Mark xiv. 70. This field, as it is reported by ſome, was by the appointment of the empreſs Helena compaſſed about with four walls, in the manner of a tower, upon the top of which are ſeven diſtinct doors, like windows, by which the dead bodies of Chriſtians are let down into it; and that it is fifty foot wide, and ſeventy-two long: it ſtands not far from the valley of Hinnom, and is upon the ſouth ſide of mount Zion, where, as Jerom ſays[q], it was ſhewed in his time. Maſius[r] affirms, there was a very high mountain near Jeruſalem, called mount Aceldama, from the adjacent field, which was bought with the price of Chriſt's blood, to bury ſtrangers in.

Ver. 20. For it is written in the book of pſalms, &c.] In Pſal. lxix. 25. Theſe are the words of Peter, citing the ſcripture he had ſaid muſt be fulfilled, which the Holy Ghoſt, by David, had ſpoke concerning Judas: let his habitation be deſolate. The Arabic and Ethiopic verſions render it, his city; meaning, perhaps, the city of Jeruſalem; and which afterwards did become deſolate, and was utterly deſtroyed: and let no man dwell therein; in his habitation. The Pſalm, out of which theſe words are cited, is a pſalm concerning the Meſſiah, and there are many paſſages cited out of it in the New Teſtament, and applied to him, or referred unto; ſee [r] Comment. in Joſuam, p. 283.

John ii. 17. and xv. 25. and xix. 28. Rom. xv. 3. compared with Pſal. lxix. 4, 9, 21. and what the pſalmiſt ſays of the enemies of the Meſſiah in general, is applied by the apoſtle to Judas in particular. In the Hebrew text, in Pſ. lxix. 25. the words are in the plural number, let their habitation be deſolate, and let none dwell in their tents; and refer to all the enemies of Chriſt, the chief-prieſts, elders of the people, Scribes and Phariſees, who covenanted with Judas to give him ſo much money to betray Chriſt into their hands; and who delivered him to the Roman governour, by whom, at their inſtigation, he was crucified; and particularly may well be thought to include Judas, who betrayed him to them; and therefore are very fitly interpreted of him; tho' not to be underſtood to the excluſion of the others, whoſe houſe was to be left deſolate, and was left deſolate, as our Lord predicted, Matt. xxiii. 38. The firſt word in the Hebrew text rendered habitation, ſignifies a very magnificent dwelling; it is ſometimes tranſlated a caſtle, Gen. xxv. 16. Numb. xxxi. 10. 1 Chron. vi. 54. and ſometimes a palace, Cant. viii. 9. Ezek. xxv. 4. and it is interpreted by ארמון, a palace, here by ſeveral Jewiſh writers [s]; and ſo may intend the dwelling-places of the richer ſort of Chriſt's enemies, as the palaces of the high-prieſt, and of the prince, or preſident of the Sanhedrim, and the ſtately houſes of the members of it, of the chief-prieſts and elders of the people, and of the Scribes and Phariſees; all which became deſolate at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: the other word, rendered tents, may deſign the cottages of the meaner ſort of people, who with united voices cried aloud for the crucifixion of Chriſt; and which alſo ſhared the ſame fate when Jeruſalem was deſtroyed: now inaſmuch as Judas was of the meaner ſort, the Apoſtle here makes uſe of a word which ſignifies but a poor and mean habitation, tho' it is ſometimes uſed of grander ones, and which ſeems to anſwer to the latter; for as there are two words in the original text expreſſive of habitation, he might chuſe which he would, and did chuſe that which was moſt pertinent in the application of the paſſage to Judas. However, a Jew has no reaſon to find fault with this verſion, ſince the Targum renders both words by habitation, thus; let their habitation be deſolate, and in their habitations let no one dwell: where Judas's habitation was is not certain; but that he might have one as well as the Apoſtle John, is not at all improbable, and from hence ſeems evident: and his biſhoprick let another take; which paſſage ſtands in Pſal. cix. 8. and is fitly applied to Judas, and was verified in him, who not only died a violent and infamous death, by which he was in conſequence ſtripped of his office, as a biſhop, or overſeer; but another was to be put into it, inveſted with it, and exerciſe it; and therefore very pertinently does Peter produce it, his intention being to move the diſciples to chuſe another in his room. Theſe words are produced by the Apoſtle, as if they were to be found in the ſame place with the preceding; whereas they ſtand in another pſalm, as has been obſerved: and this is no unuſual thing with the writers of the New Teſtament to put ſeveral paſſages of ſcripture together, as if they were in one place, when they are to be ſought for in different places; an inſtance of this, among many, that might be mentioned, is in Rom. iii. 10—18. and this is a very common way of citing ſcripture with the Jews. Surenhuſius [t] has given a variety of inſtances, in proof of this out of their writings, as in the margin [u], which the learned reader may conſult and compare at leiſure. The pſalm, out of which this paſſage is cited, is not to be underſtood of David literally, and of what he met with from his enemies, and of his imprecations upon them, either Doeg the Edomite, as Kimchi interprets it, or Achitophel, as others; but of the Meſſiah, with whom the whole agrees; againſt whom the mouth of the wicked Jews, and particularly of the deceitful Phariſees, were opened; and againſt whom the falſe witneſſes ſpoke with lying tongues; and who, all of them, compaſſed him with words of hatred to take away his life, and acted a moſt ungenerous and ungrateful part; oppoſed him without a cauſe, and became his enemies for his love ſhewed to them, both to ſoul and body, preaching the Goſpel, and healing diſeaſes, ver. 2, 3, 4, 5. The poverty and diſtreſs he ſubmitted to; the griefs and ſorrows which he bore; the fatigues he underwent at his examination; and the weakneſs of body he was then reduced to, as well as the reproach caſt upon him on the croſs, when his enemies ſhook their heads at him, are, in a very lively manner deſcribed, ver. 22, 23, 24, 25. and whereas one of his enemies particularly is ſingled out from the reſt, what is ſaid concerning him, by way of imprecation, ſuits with Judas, and had its accompliſhment in him, ver. 6, 7, 8. who had a wicked man ſet over him, as over the reſt of the Jews, Pilate, the Roman governour, a very wicked man; and at whoſe right hand ſatan ſtood, as one of his council, as Aben Ezra interprets it, and put it into his heart to betray his maſter, and prompted him to it, and then accuſed him of it, and brought him to black deſpair for it; and who, when this affair was brought home to his own conſcience, and there arraigned for it, was convicted and ſelf-condemned, as he alſo will be at the general judgment; and as he found no place of mercy then, whatever prayers or intreaties he might make, ſo neither will he hereafter: his days were but few, being cut off in the prime of them, as may be concluded from the many years which ſome of his fellow-apoſtles lived after him; and his biſhoprick, or office, as an apoſtle, was taken by another, even by Matthias, who was choſen in his room, of which we have an account in the following part of this chapter; for this is to be underſtood neither of his money, nor of his wife, nor of his own ſoul committed to his truſt, as ſome of the Jewiſh writers [w] explain it; but of his apoſtleſhip, with which he was inveſted by Chriſt. The word ſignifies an over-ſight, care, or charge; and ſo the Hebrew word פקודה, is rendred in Numb. iii. 32, 36. and deſigns any office, as the office of the prieſts and Levites in the houſe of God; ſee Numb. iv. 16. Jarchi interprets it here by גדולתו, his greatneſs, or dignity; and explains it by the Spaniſh word provoſtia, an office of honour and authority, as this of being an apoſtle of Chriſt was; than which, a greater external dignity could not be enjoyed in the church of God, in which he has ſet firſt apoſtles, 1 Cor. xii. 28. That this pſalm refers to Judas Iſcariot, and to his affair, was ſo clear a point with the ancients, that they uſed to call it the Iſcariotic pſalm. I lay no ſtreſs upon the obſervation ſome have made, that thirty curſes are contained in it, the number of the pieces of ſilver for which he betrayed his maſter, ſince this may be thought to be too curious.

Ver. 21. Wherefore of theſe men which have companied with us, &c.] Seeing there was ſuch an imprecation, which carried in it the nature of a prophecy, that another ſhould take the biſhoprick of Judas, or be made an apoſtle in his room, it was abſolutely neceſſary that one ſhould be immediately choſen to that office; and this is the force of the illative particle, wherefore; and it was highly proper that this choice ſhould be of one among the men, and not the women; whom it did not become to bear any office, and exerciſe any authority in the church; hence it is ſaid, of theſe men, to the excluſion of women: and it was exceeding right, and a very good notion, that the choice ſhould be of one from among themſelves, and who was known unto them; with whoſe abilities, integrity, wiſdom, and holy converſation, they were acquainted: and therefore 'tis added, which have companied with us; one of our own company, and not a ſtranger; with whom we have familiarly converſed, and whoſe character is well known to us: a rule which ought to be attended to, in the choice of inferior officers, as paſtors and deacons; who ought to be of the body and community, among whom they are choſen to an office; and their qualifications for it be well known, and that for ſome time paſt, as follows: all the time that the Lord Jeſus went in and out among us; that is, ever ſince Chriſt called them to be his diſciples and followers; and converſed with them, and diſcharged his office among them, governed, directed, taught, and inſtructed them; for it was not proper that a novice, a new plant, or one that was lately become a diſciple, ſhould be put into ſuch an office; and the ſame holds good in proportion in other offices; men called to office ſhould be of ſome ſtanding, as well as of ſuperior gifts.

Ver. 22. Beginning from the baptiſm of John, &c.] Not from the time that John firſt adminiſtered the ordinance of baptiſm; for Chriſt was not ſo ſoon made known, or had followers; but from the time of the adminiſtration of it by John, to Chriſt, when he was made known to Iſrael; and quickly upon this he called his diſciples, and entered on his publick miniſtry: now Peter moves, that one who had been ſo early a follower of Chriſt, who had heard his excellent diſcourſes, and ſeen his miracles, and who had ſtedfaſtly and conſtantly adhered to him, might be choſen in the room of Judas; one whoſe faith in Chriſt, love to him, and firmneſs of mind to abide by him, had been ſufficiently tried and proved; who had continued with Chriſt and his apoſtles, from the beginning of his miniſtry, to that time: or as Peter adds, unto the ſame day that he was taken up from us; by angels, and received by a cloud, and carried up to heaven; or he aſcended from us, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; or lifted up himſelf from us, as the Arabic verſion; for as he raiſed himſelf from the dead by his own power, by the ſame he could raiſe himſelf up from earth to heaven; the ſenſe is, to the time of his aſcenſion to heaven, whether by himſelf, or by the miniſtry of angels: muſt one be ordained; there was a neceſſity of this, partly on the account of the above prophecy, and partly to keep up the number of the twelve apoſtles, Chriſt had thought fit to pitch upon; anſwering to the twelve tribes of Iſrael, and to the twelve gates, and twelve foundations of the new Jeruſalem: and this choice or ordination, was moved to be made, and was made, not by the other eleven apoſtles, but by the whole company of an hundred and twenty; for theſe are the perſons addreſſed by the apoſtle, and to whom he ſaid, as the Arabic verſion renders it, one of theſe men ye muſt chuſe; and if the choice and ordination of ſuch an extraordinary officer, was made by the whole community, then much more ought the choice and ordination of inferior officers be by them: the end of this choice was, to be a witneſs with us of his reſurrection; the reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead, which ſuppoſes his incarnation and life, and ſo his obedience, miniſtry, and miracles in it; and alſo his ſufferings and death, with all the benefits and advantages thereof; and is particularly mentioned, becauſe it not only ſuppoſes and includes the above things, but is the principal article, baſis, and foundation of the chriſtian religion; and the ſign which Chriſt gave to the Jews, of the truth of his being the Meſſiah; and was what the diſciples were choſen to be witneſſes of; and a principal part of their miniſtry was to teſtify it to men: and ſince this was their work and buſineſs, it was neceſſary that one ſhould be choſen, and joined with them, who had been with them, and with Jeſus, from the beginning, to the time of his aſcenſion; and who was an eye-witneſs of his reſurrection, that he might join with the apoſtles in their teſtimony.

Ver. 23. And they appointed two, &c.] The motion made by Peter, was attended to by the whole company; they approved of it, and accordingly propoſed two perſons by name; one of which was to be choſen, not by the apoſtles, but by the whole aſſembly. The Arabic verſion reads, he appointed two, as if Peter ſingly did this; contrary to all copies, and other verſions, and to the context; which ſhews, that the whole body of the people were concerned in this affair, who prayed and gave forth their lots and ſuffrages: the perſons nominated were, Joſeph called Barſabas, who was ſurnamed Juſtus, and Matthias. The former of theſe has three names; in one ancient copy of Beza's, he is called Joſes; and by ſome thought to be the ſame with Joſes, ſurnamed Barnabas, in ch. iv. 36. partly becauſe in one copy, and in the Syriac verſion there, that Joſes is called Joſeph; and partly, becauſe of the nearneſs in ſound between Barſabas and Barnabas: hence the Ethiopic verſion here reads, Joſeph, who was called Barnabas, and ſo Beza's moſt ancient copy; but though Joſes is here meant, for Joſe, or Joſes is with the Jews an abbreviation of Joſeph; yet not Joſes the Levite, who was of the country of Cyprus, but Joſes of Galilee, the ſon of Alpheus and Mary; and who had two brothers, James and Jude, already apoſtles; ſee Matt. xiii. 55. Mark xv. 40. Moreover, though the two names Barnabas and Barſabas differ little in ſound, yet much in ſenſe; the former is interpreted the ſon of conſolation, ch. iv. 36. but the latter ſignifies much the ſame with Bathſheba; as that may be interpreted the daughter, this the ſon of an oath; or as others, a ſon of wiſdom; and by others, the ſon of fulneſs; I ſhould chuſe to take it to be the ſame name with, בר סבא, and interpret it, the ſon of an old man; as Alpheus might be, when Joſes, or Joſeph was born, and he be the younger brother of James and Jude; as for his ſurname Juſtus, this was a name not only in uſe among the Grecians and Romans, eſpecially the latter, but among the Jews: hence we often read of Rabbi יוסטא, Juſta, and ſometimes, יוסטי, Juſti, and at other times, יוסטאי, Juſtai [x]: whether he had this ſurname from his being a very juſt man, as Ariſtides was called Ariſtides the juſt; and ſo Simeon the high-prieſt, the laſt of Ezra's great ſynagogue, was called Simeon the juſt [y]; and ſo James the brother of this Joſeph, or Joſes, was called by the Jews [z]; and it may be, that he himſelf might have his name from the patriarch Joſeph, who uſed to be called by them, Joſeph, הצדיק, the juſt [a]: for Matthias, his name is Jewiſh, and he was no doubt a Jew; hence we read of, ר״ מתיא, Rabbi Matthia ben Charaſh [b]; his name ſignifying the ſame as Nathanael does, namely the gift of God, made Dr. Lightfoot conjecture they might be the ſame; but this agrees not with another conjecture of that learned man, who elſewhere thinks, that Bartholomew and Nathanael were the ſame; and if ſo, he muſt have been an apoſtle already; Clemens of Alexandria was of opinion, that this Matthias was Zaccheus [c].

Ver. 24. And they prayed and ſaid, &c.] Having propoſed the above two perſons, and not well knowing which to pitch upon, they being both very agreeable and fit for ſuch ſervice; they choſe not to determine the affair without ſeeking to God for direction; a method to be taken in all caſes, and eſpecially in matters of importance: and the ſubſtance of their petition, though perhaps not in juſt the ſame words, was, thou Lord, which knoweſt the hearts of all men; which is a character peculiar to the one only living, and true God; for none knows the hearts of men, but God, who is the maker of them; and he knows all the thoughts, counſels, and purpoſes of them, and the good or bad that is in them: ſhew whether of theſe two thou haſt choſen; being deſirous of having their choice directed by the choice God had made, in his eternal mind; and which they deſired might be ſignified and pointed out to them, in ſome way or another, that they might be certain of the mind and will of God, and act according to it.

Ver. 25. That he may take part of this miniſtry and apoſtleſhip, &c.] Of the miniſtry of the apoſtles, or of the apoſtolical miniſtration; which lay in preaching the Goſpel, adminiſtring ordinances, planting churches, and working miracles; and which part, lot, or inheritance, Judas had; ſee ver. 17. And from which Judas by tranſgreſſion fell; by betraying his Lord, whoſe apoſtle he was, he was turned out of his office, and had no longer part in the apoſtolical miniſtry: that he might go to his own place; which may be underſtood of Judas, and of his going to hell, as the juſt puniſhment of his ſin; which is commonly ſo called by the Jews, who often explain this phraſe, his place, by hell; as when it is ſaid of Laban, Gen. xxxi. 55. that he returned to his place, it intimates ſay they [d], that he returned to his place, which was prepared for him in hell; and ſo likewiſe when it is ſaid of Balaam, Numb. xxiv. 25. that he returned to his place, they obſerve [e], that "he did not return "from his evil way, but returned to his place; "and ſo intimates by ſaying, to his place, that "which was prepared for him in hell, as the Rabbins of bleſſed memory ſay [f]; they came every one from his own place, Job ii. 11. a man from "his houſe, a man from his country it is not "written, but a man from his place, which was "prepared for him in hell; and becauſe they came "to ſhew mercy to Job, they were delivered from "hell, and became worthy of the world to come; "and ſo here, and he returned to his place, "המוכן לו בגהינם, which was prepared for him "in hell." And another of their writers [g], on the ſame paſſage, has this remark, and he returned to his place, and he does not ſay, "he went on his way, "for he was driven out of his way, and went "down to hell." And agreeably to what is ſaid of Job's friends, the Targumiſt on Job ii. 11. paraphraſes the words thus; "and there came a man, "or every one from his place, and by this merit "they were delivered from the place, prepared "for them in hell." And which place the ſame Targumiſt on Job viii. 4. calls, אתר מרדיהון, the place of their rebellion; that is, procured by it: and ſo Judas's own place was, what he had merited by his ſin, and was righteouſly appointed for him; and though it was not peculiar to him, but common to all impenitent ſinners, yet very proper for him, as a betrayer; for it is a ſettled point with the Jews [h], that "he that betrays an Iſraelite into the hands of "the Gentiles (ſo Judas betrayed his maſter) whe"ther in his body, or in his ſubſtance, has no part "in the world to come." This clauſe is by ſome underſtood not of Judas, but of Matthias, or of him that was to come in the room of Judas; and by his own place 'tis thought is meant, the part of the miniſtry and apoſtleſhip, in the former clauſe, and which the Alexandrian copy reads, the place of this miniſtry, he was to take; and now Judas by his iniquity falling from it, made way for another, for Matthias to go to his own place, which God had in his counſel and purpoſes deſigned for him; or into his place, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it; that is, into the place of Judas, to take his place among the apoſtles, in his room and ſtead: the Alexandrian copy reads, into that righteous place.

Ver. 26. And they gave forth their lots, &c.] Or gave forth lots for them, as the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions; for Joſeph and Matthias; ſome for one, and ſome for another; and which were caſt into a man's lap, or into a veſſel, and was no other than balloting for them; and ſo he that had the majority upon caſting them up, when taken out, was declared the perſon choſen: or they caſt their lots; that is, into an urn, or veſſel; which lots had the names of the two perſons on them; and into another veſſel, as is thought, were put two other lots; the one had the name of apoſtle upon it, and the other nothing; and theſe being taken out by perſons appointed for that purpoſe, the lot with Matthias's name on it, was taken out againſt that which had the name of apoſtle on it, upon which he was declared to be the apoſtle: it may be that this was done in the ſame manner, as the goats on the day of atonement had lots caſt on them, Lev. xvi. 8. which the Jews ſay was thus performed: there was a veſſel which they call Kalphi, ſet in the court, into which two lots, which were made of wood, or ſtone, or metal, were put; the one had written on it, for Jehovah, and on the other was written, for the ſcape goat; the two goats being, the one at the right-hand of the prieſt, and the other at the left; the prieſt ſhook the veſſel, and with his two hands took out the two lots, and laid the lots on the two goats; the right on that which was at his right-hand, and the left on that which was at his left [i]; and ſo the goat which had the lot put upon him, on which was written, for the Lord, was killed; and that which had the other lot, on which was written, for the ſcape goat, was preſented alive; ſo the lot here, is ſaid to fall upon Matthias: or the lots being caſt into the veſſel, as above related, theſe two drew them out themſelves; and Matthias taking out that which had the word apoſtle on it, the lot fell on him: the manner of Moſes's chooſing the ſeventy elders, is ſaid to be this[k]; "Moſes took ſeventy-"two papers, and on ſeventy of them he wrote, "זקן, an elder; and upon two, חלק, a part; and "he choſe ſix out of every tribe, and there were "ſeventy-two; he ſaid unto them, take your pa-"pers out of the veſſel; he into whoſe hand came "up an elder (i. e. the paper on which it was ſo "written) he was ſanctified, (or ſet apart to the "office;) and he, in whoſe hand came up a part "(the paper that had that on it) to him he ſaid, "the Lord does not delight in thee." And the lot fell upon Matthias; that is, either he had the largeſt number for him, their minds being ſo diſpoſed by the providence of God; and it may be, contrary to the firſt thoughts and general ſenſe of the body; ſince Joſeph is mentioned firſt, and was a man of great character, and of many names and titles; but God, who knows the hearts of men, and can turn them as he pleaſes, and to whom they ſought for direction, inclined their minds to vote for the latter; or it was ſo ordered by divine providence, that in the caſting or drawing the lots, the lot of the apoſtleſhip ſhould fall on him: and he was numbered with the eleven apoſtles; either choſen by the common ſuffrages of the people, as the word uſed ſignifies; or rather, he took his place among the apoſtles; he was regiſtered among them, and ever after was reckoned one of them; Beza's ancient copy reads, with the twelve apoſtles, their number being now compleat.

CHAP. II.

Ver. 1. AND when the day of pentecoſt was fully come, &c.] Or was come, was begun and entered upon; for it was not over, or ended, it being but the third hour of the day, or nine of the clock in the morning, when Peter began his ſermon; ſee ver. 15. The Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions read, when the days of pentecoſt were fulfilled; not that there were more days than one, kept at this feſtival; for though the feaſts of paſſover and tabernacles, were obſerved each of them ſeven days, according to the law, and eight days according to the Scribes, yet the feaſt of pentecoſt was kept but one day; and hence it is often ſaid by the Jews, that Atzereth, which is one of the names they call this feaſt by, is but one day[l]; in the captivity they kept two days[m], as they did for the beginning of the year, becauſe of the uncertainty of calculations; but the ſenſe is, when the whole fifty days from the paſſover to this time, were fully come, or fulfilled, when the fiftieth day from thence, which was properly the day of pentecoſt was come: on the ſecond day of the paſſover, on the ſixteenth of Niſan, the ſheaf of the firſt-fruits was offered up; after which, and not before, it was lawful to reap the corn, Levit. xxiii. 10, 11. from this time the Jews reckoned their feaſt of weeks, or ſeven weeks, or fifty days; ſee Exod. xxxiv. 22. Deut. xvi. 9. Levit. xxiii. 15, 16. which meaſured out the time of their harveſt. Now the laſt of theſe fifty days was the day of pentecoſt, on which day was offered the two wave loaves, as a thankſgiving that their harveſt was ended. Joſephus calls[n] this feaſt by the ſame name, that Luke here does; and ſays[o], the Jews ſo call it, from the number of the days, that is fifty; and ſo R. Sol. Jarchi[p] calls this day, יום חמישים, the fiftieth day: on this day the Jews ſay[q], the law was given; and obſerve[r], that "from the day that Iſrael went "out of Egypt, unto the day that the law was "given, were fifty days." And on this day, and which was the firſt day of the week, the Spirit was poured forth upon the diſciples; the Goſpel began to be preached to all nations, and a harveſt of ſouls was gathered in: they were all with one accord in one place; in two ancient copies of Beza's, and in ſome others 'tis read, all the apoſtles; Matthias, and the eleven, with whom he was numbered, who are laſt ſpoken of, in ch. i. 26. Though this need not be reſtrained to the twelve apoſtles, but may be underſtood of the hundred and twenty, on whom, as well as on the apoſtles, the Holy Ghoſt might be poured forth, that ſo they might ſpeak with tongues; ſince among theſe, were many miniſters of the Goſpel, as the ſeventy diſciples, and it may be more; and that his extraordinary gifts ſhould be beſtowed on others, is but what was afterwards done; ſee ch. viii. 17. and x. 14. and xi. 15. and though there were ſo many of them together, they were very unanimous and peaceable; there were no jars nor contentions among them; they were of the ſame mind and judgment in faith and practice, and of one heart and ſoul, and had a cordial affection for one another; and were all in one place, which ſeems to be the temple; ſee ver. 46. And indeed, no other place or houſe, could hold ſo many as came to hear them, of which number three thouſand were converted.

Ver. 2. And ſuddenly there came a ſound from heaven, &c.] Which is expreſſive of the original of the gifts and graces of the Spirit of God, which come from above, from heaven, from the Father of lights; and of the freeneſs of them, being unmerited; and ſo come ſuddenly, at an unawares, being unthought of, undeſired, and unexpected, and ſo certainly undeſerved; and may be a ſymbol of the ſound of the Goſpel, which from hence was to go forth into all the earth; and may likewiſe expreſs the riſe of that, and the freeneſs of the grace of God in it, and its ſudden ſpread throughout the world: as of a ruſhing mighty wind; it was not a wind, but like one; and the noiſe it made, was like the ruſhing noiſe of a ſtrong and boiſterous wind, that carries all before it: the Spirit of God is ſometimes compared to the wind, becauſe of the freeneſs of his operations; as that blows where it liſteth, ſo he works when and where, and on whom he pleaſes; and alſo becauſe of the power and efficacy of his grace, which is mighty and irreſiſtable, and works with great energy upon the minds of men; and as the wind is ſecret and inviſible, ſo the operations of the Spirit, are in a manner ſecret and imperceptible unto men: this may likewiſe be applied to the Goſpel, when it comes with the Holy Ghoſt, and with power; it makes its way into the heart, and throws down the ſtrong holds of ſin and ſatan; there it works effectually, though ſecretly, and is the power of God to ſalvation: and it filled all the houſe where they were ſitting; which was the temple, or the upper room or chamber in it, where they were aſſembled; ſo in the Ethiopic confeſſion of faith [s] it is ſaid, “ the Holy Ghoſt deſcended “ upon the apoſtles, in the upper room of Zion;” this may be a ſymbol of the Goſpel filling the whole world.

Ver. 3. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, &c.] An emblem of the various tongues and languages, in which they were to preach the Goſpel; theſe appearances were like flames of fire parted, and theſe parted flames looked like tongues; ſo a flame of fire is with the Jews called, לשון אש, a tongue of fire, Iſa. v. 24. hence the apoſtle James compares a tongue to fire, James iii. 6. this was the baptiſm with fire, John the Baptiſt ſpeaks of, in Matt. iii. 11. ſee the note there; and the Jews ſay [t], “ the holy bleſſed God bap- “ tizeth with fire, and the wiſe ſhall underſtand.” Through this baptiſm of the Holy Ghoſt and fire, the apoſtles became more knowing, and had a greater underſtanding of the myſteries of the Goſpel, and were more qualified to preach it to people of all nations and languages. The Holy Spirit, in his gifts and graces, is compared to fire, becauſe of its purity, light, and heat, as well as conſuming nature; the Spirit ſanctifies, and makes men pure and holy, purges from the droſs of ſin, error and ſuperſtition; and enlightens the minds of men, and gives them knowledge of divine and ſpiritual things; and fills them with zeal and fervour for the glory of God and Chriſt, and the good of his church and intereſt, and for the doctrines and ordinances of the Goſpel; as well as fortifies them againſt their enemies, whom he conſumes, according to Zech. ii. 5. a paſſage of ſcripture the Jews make uſe of in an uncommon ſenſe; for they ſay [u], that as “ Jeruſalem was deſtroyed by fire, by fire “ it ſhall be built again; as it is ſaid, Zech. ii. 5. “ For I, ſaith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of “ fire round about.” The pouring forth of the Spirit upon the apoſtles, in this form of cloven tongues, as of fire, was indeed the means of rebuilding Jeruſalem, in a ſpiritual ſenſe; or of founding the Goſpel church-ſtate, in the world: and it ſat upon each of them; the fire, or the Holy Ghoſt in the appearance of fire. The Syriac and Arabic verſions read, and they ſat upon each of them; and ſo Beza's moſt ancient copy; that is, the cloven tongues ſat on them; either one upon one of them, and another upon another, or many upon each of them: where they ſat, whether on their lips, or on their heads, is not certain, probably on the latter; nor how long they ſat; however, their ſitting upon them, may denote the continuance of the gifts and graces of the Spirit with them. Theſe cloven tongues, cannot but bring to mind the diviſion and confuſion of the tongues, or languages, at Babel; which gave riſe to different nations, and different religions; but theſe divided tongues, gave riſe to the ſpreading of the Goſpel, and ſettling the true religion among the nations of the world. The Jews [w] ſeem to have reſpect to this account, when they tell us of “ lights from above, that came forth and dwelt “ in the ſynagogues, בריישיהון, on the heads of “ thoſe that prayed, and the lights, מתפלגין, were “ divided upon their heads.”

Ver. 4. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghoſt, &c.] With the gifts of the holy Spirit; they had received the Spirit before, as a Spirit of grace, and were endowed with great gifts; but now they had great plenty of them, a large abundance; they were like veſſels filled to the brim; they were as it were covered with them; there was an overflow of them upon them; and now it was, that they were baptized with him; ſee the note on ch. i. 5. Not only the twelve apoſtles, but the ſeventy diſciples; and it may be all the hundred and twenty, that were together, even women as well as men; ſee ver. 17, 18. And began to ſpeak with other tongues; beſides, and different from that in which they were born and brought up, and uſually ſpake; they ſpake divers languages, one ſpoke one language, and another, another; and the ſame perſon ſpoke with various tongues, ſometimes one language, and ſometimes another. Theſe are the new tongues, Chriſt told them they ſhould ſpeak with, Mark xvi. 17. ſuch as they had never heard, learned, nor known before: as the Spirit gave them utterance; they did not utter any thing of themſelves, and what came into their minds, things of little or no importance; nor in a confuſed and diſorderly manner; but they were wiſe and weighty ſentences, they delivered, as the word ſignifies; even the wonderful works of God, ver. 11. the great doctrines of the Goſpel; and though in different languages, yet in a very orderly and diſtinct manner, ſo as to be heard and underſtood by the people. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read, as the holy Spirit, &c.

Ver. 5. And there were dwelling at Jeruſalem, Jews, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion adds, proſelytes; but they were not all ſuch, as appears from the following account of them; many, and it ſeems the moſt of them were of Jewiſh extract and deſcent, and others were proſelytes to the Jewiſh religion: theſe were not natives of Jeruſalem, but ſuch as were born in other countries, ver. 8. but were come to Jeruſalem, either to learn the Hebrew language, which was neceſſary to their reading and underſtanding the books of Moſes, and the prophets written in it; or for an increaſe of ſpiritual knowledge and piety; or, as is generally thought, to keep the feaſt of pentecoſt; or rather, as Dr. Lightfoot thinks, they were come hither in great numbers from all parts, in expectation of the Meſſiah and his kingdom; the time being up, according to Daniel's weeks, and other prophecies, that he ſhould appear: and theſe were devout men; men of religion and piety, of faith and holineſs; and as the Syriac verſion renders it, who feared God; for in theſe worſt of times, among this wicked generation of men, there were ſome who had the fear of God before their eyes, and on their hearts; and theſe were collected from different quarters, to be witneſſes of this amazing diſpenſation: for they came out of every nation under heaven; that is, wherever the Jews were diſperſed; being the deſcendants of thoſe that were carried captive at different times, and into different places; as by Salmanezer, Nebuchadnezzar, Ptolomy Lagus, Antiochus, and in other leſſer diſperſions.

Ver. 6. Now when this was noiſed abroad, &c.] Or when this voice was made; referring either to the ſound, as of a mighty ruſhing wind, which came from heaven; and might not only be heard by thoſe in the houſe, into which it came, but by the inhabitants of the city, as it came down from heaven; ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, when the aforeſaid ſound was made: or elſe to the apoſtles voice, and their ſpeaking with divers tongues; which being heard by ſome, was told to others, and a rumour of it being made through the city, the multitude came together; to the houſe, or temple, where the diſciples were; and this multitude did not conſiſt only of the devout Jews, before mentioned; but of others who ſcoffed and mocked at the apoſtles, and who had been concerned in the crucifying of Chriſt: and were confounded; or confuſed; they ran and came together in a diſorderly and tumultuous manner; the whole city was in an uproar, the aſſembly on this occaſion was a perfect mob; their numbers were ſo large, that they were ready to thruſt each other down, and trample one another under foot: the Vulgate Latin adds, in mind; they did not know what to think of things, they were ſo aſtoniſhed at what they heard, that they were ſcarcely themſelves; they were as perſons ſtupid and ſenſeleſs; being filled partly with ſhame and confuſion, and partly with wonder and amazement, that theſe illiterate men, the followers of Jeſus of Nazareth, whom they had crucified, and whoſe diſciples they had in ſo much contempt, ſhould have ſuch extraordinary gifts beſtowed on them: becauſe that every man heard them ſpeak in his own language; which ſhows, what has been before obſerved, that one ſpake in one language, and another in another language; or the ſame perſon, ſometimes ſpoke one language, and ſometimes another; ſo that in courſe, all languages were ſpoken by them; whence it appears, that it was not one language only which was ſpoken by the apoſtles, which men of different languages heard and underſtood, as if it was their own; for then the miracle muſt have been in the hearers, and not in the ſpeakers; and the cloven tongues, as of fire, ſhould rather have ſat on them, than on the diſciples; and theſe men be ſaid to be filled with the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, rather than they.

Ver. 7. And they were all amazed, and marvelled, &c.] They were ſtruck with ſurprize, they were as it were out of themſelves, like perſons in an exſtaſy, not knowing what could be the cauſe or meaning of this: ſaying one to another; the phraſe one to another, is left out in the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions, and ſo it is in the Alexandrian copy: behold, are not all theſe which ſpeak Galileans? rude, unpoliſhed, and unlearned men; who had never been brought up in any ſchool of learning, and had never learned any language but their mother tongue; and that they pronounced with an ill grace, and in a very odd manner; and which made the thing the more aſtoniſhing to them. The apoſtles were inhabitants of Galilee, and ſo very likely were the greateſt part of thoſe that were with them: hence the chriſtians afterwards, by way of contempt, were called Galileans; as they are by Julian[x] the apoſtate, and others[y].

Ver. 8. And how hear we every man in our own tongue, &c.] Them ſpeaking, as the Ethiopic verſion reads; that is, we every one of us hear one or another, ſpeak in the ſame language, wherein we were born; our native language; for though theſe men were Jews by deſcent, yet were born and brought up in other countries, which language they ſpake; and not the Hebrew, or Syriac, or Chaldee.

Ver. 9. Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, &c.] Theſe are the words of the men continued, and not of the hiſtorian, as appears from ver. 10. and ſo the Arabic verſion reads, of us Perſians, Parthians, and Medes; that is, we hear them ſpeak in the language of every one of us: the order in this verſion is inverted, otherwiſe the ſame perſons are intended; for the Elamites and Perſians are the ſame: by the Parthians are meant, Jews that were born in Parthia, and had dwelt there, and who ſpoke the language of that country; and that there were Jews in thoſe parts, is clear from Joſephus[z], who ſpeaks of them together with the Jews of other nations. Many of the Parthian Jews were afterwards converted to the chriſtian faith; to whom the apoſtle John is thought, by ſome, to have written his firſt epiſtle; and which, by ſome of the ancients, is called the epiſtle to the Parthians. The kingdom of Parthia, according to Pliny[a], Ptolomy[b], and Solinus[c], had Media on the weſt, Hyrcania on the north, Aria, or Ariana on the eaſt, and the deſert of Carmania on the ſouth; the metropolis of it was Hecatompylos, ſo called from the hundred gates that belonged to it; and which, 'tis thought, ſtood on the ſame ſpot of ground that Iſpahan does now, the ſeat of the Sophies of Perſia. And by the Medes are intended the Jews that were natives of Media; ſo called from Madai, one of the ſons of Japhet, Gen. x. 2. and this according to Ptolomy[d], has on the north the Hyrcanian, or Caſpian ſea, on the weſt Armenia Major and Aſſyria, and on the eaſt Hyrcania and Parthia, and on the ſouth Parthia. The Elamites are ſo called, from Elam the ſon of Shem, Gen. x. 22. and theſe, according to Joſephus[e], were the founders of the Perſians, or from whom they ſprung; and ſo we find Elam and Media, and the kings of Elam, and the kings of the Medes, mentioned together in ſcripture, Iſa. xxi. 2. Jer. xxv. 25. And certain it is, that Elam was at leaſt a part of the empire of Perſia, in Daniel's time; for Shuſhan, where the kings of Perſia then kept their palace, was in the province of Elam, Dan. viii. 2. and it is evident, that hither the Jews were carried captive, Iſa. xi. 11. Jer. xlix. 34—39. So that there might be ſome remaining in thoſe parts, that were their deſcendants; and from hence alſo were people brought by Aſnapper, into the cities of Samaria, to ſupply the room of thoſe who were carried captive, and are called Elamites, Ezr. iv. 9. And that there were Elamite Jews, may be concluded from the writings of the Jews; for ſo they ſay[f], that "the Hagiographa, or holy writings, which were written in the Coptic, Median, Hebrew, עילמית, Elamite, and Greek tongues; though they did not read in them (on the ſabbath-day in time of ſervice) they delivered them from the fire," when in danger of being burned: ſo the Megilla, or book of Eſther, might not be read in the Coptic, Hebrew, Elamite, Median, and Greek languages; but it might be read in Coptic to Coptites, in Hebrew to Hebrews, עילמית לעילמים, in Elamite to the Elamites, and in Greek to the Greeks[g]; and ſuch ſort of Jews as the Elamite ones, were theſe in the text: the Syriac verſion reads Elanites; and ſo R. Benjamin in his Itinerary[h], makes mention of a country called, אלניה, Alania, and of a people called, אלאן, Alan; and whom he ſpeaks of in company with Babylon, Perſia, Choreſan, Sheba, and Meſopotamia; and may intend the ſame people as here: now theſe Parthian, Median, and Elamite Jews were ſuch who deſcended from the captives of the ten tribes, carried away by Shalmaneſar king of Aſſyria, whom he placed in Halah and Habor, and in the cities of the Medes, 2 Kings xvii. 6. and xviii. 11. But beſides theſe, there were alſo at Jeruſalem, at this time, thoſe who are next mentioned: and the dwellers in Meſopotamia, and in Judea, and Cappadocia, in Pontus and Aſia; who came not quite ſo far off as the former: Meſopotamia is the ſame with what is called in the Hebrew text of the Old Teſtament, Aram-Naharaim, or Syria between the two rivers; that is, Tigris and Euphrates; the former was on the eaſt of it, and the latter on the weſt, and Babylon was on the ſouth, and Caucaſus on the north; and ſo the Greek word Meſopotamia, ſignifies a place between two rivers; ſee Gen. xxiv. 10. Deut. xxiii. 4. Judg. iii. 8, 10. and 1 Chron. ix. 6. And the Jews have adopted it into their own language, calling it, מספוטמיא, Meſpotamia [i]; and the ſame name obtains with other writers [k], and it has ſince been called Azania and Halopia; it belonged to that part of Aſſyria, called Chaldea; and theſe Meſopotamian Jews, were the remains of thoſe who were carried captive by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon; and though the Chaldean, or Syriac language was now ſpoken by the Jews, yet in a different manner than it was in Chaldea and Syria: and there were alſo the dwellers in Judea; by which is meant, that part of the land of Iſrael, which was diſtinct from Galilee, and where they uſed a different dialect from the Galilean Jews; and there were others, who were born, and had lived in Cappadocia. This was a country in Aſia, in which were many famous cities; as Archalais, where Claudius Cæſar put a Roman colony; and Neocæſarea (the birth-place of Gregory Thaumaturgus;) and Melita, built by Semiramis; and Mazaca [l], which was the chief city; and ſo called from Meſhech, the ſon of Japhet, ſince called Cæſarea. The inhabitants of this country, Herodotus ſays [m], "were by the Greeks called Syrians, "and they were Syrians; and before the Perſians "had the government, they were ſubject to the "Medes, and then to Cyrus." And by Pliny [n] they are called, Leucoſyrians. This country, according to Ptolomy [o], had Galatia, and part of Pamphylia on the weſt, and on the ſouth Cilicia, and part of Syria, and on the eaſt Armenia the great, and on the north, part of the Euxine Pontus; it is now called Amaſia, or Almaſia: here were many Jews ſcattered abroad, ſome of which were afterwards believers in Chriſt, to whom Peter ſent his epiſtles, 1 Pet. i. 1. It had its former name from the river Cappadox, which, as Pliny [p] ſays, divided the Galatians and Leucoſyrians, and this indeed is the reaſon of its name; in the Syriac language it is called, קפדך, Capdac, which comes from קפד; which ſignifies to cut off, or divide, as this river did the above people from one another; and hence the country was called Cappadocia, and the inhabitants Cappadocians: in the Jewiſh writings it is called, קפוטקיא, Capotakia; and which Maimonides [q] ſays, is the ſame with Caphtor; and in the Arabic language, is called Tamiati; and ſo Caphtor is rendered Cappadocia, and the Caphtorim Cappadocians, in the Targums of Onkelos, Jonathan, and Jeruſalem, in Gen. x. 14. Deut. ii. 23. Jer. xlvii. 4. and Amos ix. 7. and ſo in the Septuagint verſion of Deut. ii. 23. and Amos ix. 7. This country was near the land of Iſrael, and in it dwelt many Jews; they had ſchools of learning here, and had traditions peculiarly relating to it: as for inſtance, "if a man married a "wiſe in the land of Iſrael, and divorced her in "Cappadocia, he muſt give her (her dowry) of the "money of the land of Iſrael; and if he marries "a wife in Cappadocia, and divorces her in the land "of Iſrael, he may give her of the money of the "land of Iſrael; Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel ſays, "he muſt give her of the money of Cappadocia [r];" for it ſeems the Cappadocian money was larger, and weighed more than that in the land of Iſrael: however, "if a man marries a wife in Cappadocia, and "divorces her in Cappadocia, he muſt give her of "the money of Cappadocia." And ſo R. Akiba ſpeaks [s] of one, that he ſaw ſhipwrecked at ſea; and when, ſays he, I came to the province of Cappadocia, he came and ſat, and judged before me in the conſtitutions and traditions of the elders: from whence it is manifeſt, that here were people of the Jewiſh nation that dwelt in this country, and ſo at this time. As alſo in Pontus; hence the firſt epiſtle of Peter is ſometimes called the epiſtle to the Pontians; that is, to the Jews of Pontus, then become chriſtians: Pontus was a country in leſſer Aſia, and according to Ptolomy [t], it had on the weſt the mouth of Pontus, and the Thracian Boſphorus, and part of Propontis, on the north, part of the Euxine ſea, and on the ſouth the country which is properly called Aſia, and on the eaſt Galatia by Paphlagonia; it was the birth-place of Marcion the heretick, of which Tertullian gives a moſt diſmal account [u]: Aſia here intends, neither Aſia the greater, nor the leſs, but Aſia properly ſo called; which had Lycia and Phrygia on the eaſt, the Ægean ſhores on the weſt, the Egyptian ſea on the ſouth, and Paphlagonia on the north [w]; in which were Epheſus the chief city, and Smyrna and Pergamus, and where were many Jews; theſe might be the remains of thoſe that were carried captive, and diſperſed by Ptolomy Lagus; thoſe who dwelt in the three laſt places, ſpoke the Greek language.

Ver. 10. Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, &c.] Phrygia was a country in Aſia, and had part of Galatia on the north, Lycaonia, Piſidia, and Mygdonia on the ſouth, and on the eaſt Cappadocia [x]; here the apoſtle Paul afterwards travelled, and ſtrengthened the chriſtians; ſee Acts xvi. 6. and xviii. 23. Pamphylia, now called Setilia, is another country in Aſia, formerly called Mopſopia [y]; which had on the weſt Lycia, and part of Aſia, on the north Galatia, on the eaſt Cilicia, and part of Cappadocia, and on the ſouth the ſea of Pamphylia [z], of which mention is made in Acts xxvii. 5. The chief city in it was Perga, where was a temple of Diana [a], and here the apoſtle Paul alſo was; ſee Acts xiii. 13. and xiv. 24, 25. and xv. 38. Others of theſe ſojourning Jews lived in Egypt, which was a large country in Africa; which had on the eaſt the deſarts of Arabia, on the weſt Libya, on the ſouth Ethiopia, and on the north the Mediterranean ſea; hither many Jews were carried captive by Ptolomy Lagus, and theſe ſpoke the Egyptian language: and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene; there were others at Jeruſalem, which came from hence. The Arabic verſion reads this clauſe, and in the parts of Africa, which is our country; and Pliny ſays [b], the Greeks call Africa, Libya. The Jews ſay [c], Libya in Egypt; and for proſelytes from Libya, they wait three generations; that is, before they receive them: Cyrene, or Cyreniaca, which is no other than upper Libya, is called by Pliny [d], the Pentapolitan country, from the five cities in it; Berenice, Arſinoe, Ptolemais, Apollonia, and Cyrene: to theſe are added, and ſtrangers of Rome, Jews and proſelytes; that is, as the Syriac verſion renders it, thoſe that came from Rome; to which the Arabic agrees: they were natives and inhabitants of the city of Rome, though now they were at Jeruſalem; and ſome of theſe were Jews by birth, and lineal deſcent, tho' born at Rome; and others were ſuch as were proſelytes of righteouſneſs, who were originally Gentiles, but were now circumciſed, and had embraced the Jewiſh religion; concerning ſuch, ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 15. Theſe doubtleſs ſpoke in the Roman, or Latin tongue.

Ver. 11. Cretes and Arabians, &c.] The former are either the ſame with the Cretians, Tit. i. 12. the inhabitants of the iſland of Crete, Acts xxvii. 7. now called Candia or Candy, which has on the north the Ægean ſea, on the ſouth the Libyan or African ſea, on the weſt the Adriatic ſea, and on the eaſt the Carpathian ſea. In it were an hundred cities; the moſt famous of which were, Gnoſos, Cortyna, Lyctos, Lycaſtos, Holopixos, Phæſtos, Cydon, Manethuſa, Dyctynna [e], and others; theſe ſpoke the Greek language; yet not the Attic, for the Cretian and Attic ſpeech are diſtinguiſhed [f]: or elſe, as Dr. Lightfoot thinks, theſe were the ſame with the Cherethim or Cherethites, in Ezek. xxv. 16. Zeph. ii. 5. whom the Septuagint interpreters call Cretes, as here; ſince theſe are mentioned with the Philiſtines, to whoſe land Arabia joined; the inhabitants of which are next mentioned here. There were three Arabias; Arabia Petræa, which had on the weſt part of Egypt, and on the north Judea, and part of Syria, on the ſouth the red ſea, and on the eaſt Arabia Felix. The ſecond was called Arabia deſerta, and had on the north part of Meſopotamia, on the eaſt Babylonia, on the ſouth Arabia Felix, and on the weſt, part of Syria and Arabia Petræa. The third was called Arabia Felix, and had on the north the ſouth ſides of Petræa and Arabia deſerta, and the more ſouthern part of the Perſian gulph, on the weſt the gulph of Arabia, and on the ſouth the red ſea, and on the eaſt, part of the Perſian gulph [g]; and here dwelt Jews who ſpoke the Arabic language. Now theſe Jews, of different nations, declared concerning the Apoſtles, ſaying, we do hear them ſpeak in our tongues the wonderful works of God; not the works of creation and providence, though theſe are great and wonderful; but of redemption, pardon, atonement, juſtification, and ſalvation, by the Meſſiah, by his obedience, ſufferings, and death, and alſo of his reſurrection from the dead; things which ſtruck them with amazement, and the more, that ſuch illiterate perſons ſhould have ſuch knowledge of them, and ſhould be able to ſpeak of them in ſuch a clear, diſtinct, and powerful manner; and ſtill the more, that they ſhould ſpeak of them in their ſeveral tongues in which they were born, and to which they were uſed, and which the Apoſtles had never learned; and this they heard with their own ears, and were fully ſatisfied that they did ſpeak divers languages.

Ver. 12. And they were all amazed, &c.] That is, all theſe devout men, Jews and proſelytes, which came from other nations before mentioned: and were in doubt; not whether the Apoſtles ſpoke in various languages, nor about the ſenſe of their words; for they not only heard them with their ears, and were aſſured of the facts, but they ſeem alſo to underſtand what was ſaid, ſince they call the things delivered, the great or wonderful things of God; but they were at a loſs in their minds what ſhould be the cauſe of this, or the reaſon of ſuch a diſpenſation, ſaying, one to another, what meaneth this? from whence is it? what is the deſign of it? or what the end to be anſwered by it? or what will follow upon it? ſurely ſomething conſiderable.

Ver. 13. Others mocking, ſaid, &c.] Theſe were the native inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the common people; and it may be alſo the Scribes and Phariſees who did not underſtand the languages in which the Apoſtles ſpake, and therefore derided them both by words and geſtures: theſe men are full of new wine; the Syriac verſion adds, and are drunk; a very fooliſh and impertinent cavil this; there was, at this time of the year, no new wine, juſt preſſed, or in the fat; and if there had been any, and they were full of it, it could never have furniſhed them with a faculty of ſpeaking with many tongues; men generally loſe their tongues by intemperance. They were indeed filled with wine, but not with wine, the juice of the grape, either new or old; but with ſpiritual wine, with the gifts of the Spirit of God, by which they ſpake with divers tongues. They might hope this inſinuation, that they were drunk with wine, would take and be received, ſince it was a feaſting time, the feaſt of pentecoſt; though, as Peter afterwards obſerves, it was too early in the day to imagine this to be their caſe.

Ver. 14. But Peter ſtanding up with the eleven, &c.] Apoſtles; their number being now complete, Matthias being choſen in the room of Judas. Theſe all at once roſe up, as abhorring the fact they were charged with, and to ſhew the falſhood of it, and to vindicate themſelves; when Peter, as their mouth, ſtood in the midſt of them, as the Ethiopic verſion reads, with great courage, boldneſs, and intrepidity of mind: and lift up his voice; that he might be heard by the whole multitude, that was gathered together, as well as to ſhew his zeal and fervour of ſpirit, and fortitude of mind; for being endued with the Spirit from on high, he was fearleſs of men, who but a little while ago was frightned by a ſervant-maid. And ſaid unto them, ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jeruſalem; which ſhews that they were the natives and citizens of Jeruſalem that mocked and ſcoffed; for to theſe the Apoſtle addreſſes himſelf. Be this known unto you, and hearken to my words; as follow.

Ver. 15. For theſe are not drunken, &c.] Meaning not only the eleven Apoſtles, but the reſt of the hundred and twenty, on whom alſo the Spirit was poured forth, and who were endowed with his extraordinary gifts: as ye ſuppoſe; and had given out that they were: and this ſhows the ſenſe of being filled with new wine; that they meant that they were really drunk, and which they believed, or at leaſt would have had others believe it; the unreaſonableneſs of which ſuppoſition and ſuggeſtion the Apoſtle argues from the time of day: ſeeing it is but the third hour of the day; or nine of the clock in the morning: for till this time it was not uſual with the Jews, if men of any ſobriety or religion, ſo much as to taſte any thing: the rules are theſe[h], "it is forbidden a man to taſte any "thing, or do any work after break of day, until "he has prayed the morning-prayer." Now "the "morning-prayer, the precept concerning it is, "that a man ſhould begin to pray as ſoon as the "ſun ſhines out; and its time is until the end of "the fourth hour, which is the third part of the "day[i]." So that a man might not taſte any thing, either of eatables or drinkables, until the fourth hour, or ten o'clock in the morning: hence it is ſaid[k], that "after they offered the daily ſacri"fice they eat bread, בזמן ארבע שעין, at the time "of four hours:" or on the fourth hour, and ſooner than this, it was not lawful to eat, even ever ſo little; and whoever did, was not reckoned fit to be converſed with. "Says R. Iſaac[l], who"ever eats a green or herb before the fourth hour, "it is forbidden to converſe with him; and the "ſame ſays, it is unlawful to eat a raw herb be"fore the fourth hour. Amemar, and Mar Zutra, "and Rab Aſhe were ſitting, and they brought be"fore them a raw herb before the fourth hour. "Amemar and Rab Aſhe eat, and Mar Zutra did "not eat: they ſaid to him, what's thy meaning? "(he replied) that R. Iſaac ſaid, whoever eats a "herb before the fourth hour, it is forbidden to "converſe with him." The time for taking food by perſons of different characters, is thus expreſſed by them: "the firſt hour is the time of eating for "the Lydians, the ſecond for thieves, the third for "heirs, the fourth for labourers, the fifth for every "man; is it not ſo? Saith R. Papa, the fourth "is the time of repaſt for every man; but (the "truth is) the fourth is the time of eating for "every man, the fifth for labourers, and the ſixth "for the diſciples of the wiſe men[m]." Hence that advice[n], "at the fourth hour go into a cook's "ſhop, (or tavern) if thou ſeeſt a man drinking "wine, and holding the cup in his hands, and "ſlumbring, enquire about him, if he is one of "the wiſe doctors, &c." The gloſs upon it is, "at the fourth hour, for that is the time of eat"ing, when all go into the ſhops (or taverns) to "eat." Now whereas they that are drunken are drunken in the night, and not in the day, and much leſs ſo ſoon in the day, when it was not uſual, at leaſt with religious men, to have taſted any thing by this time; and whereas the Apoſtles, and their company, were ſober and religious men, and had never done any thing to forfeit their character, it was unreaſonable to ſuppoſe any thing of this kind in them.

Ver. 16. But this is that which was ſpoken by the prophet Joel.] This affair, which is a matter of wonder and amazement with ſome, and of ſpeculation with others, and of ridicule and contempt with the moſt, is not the effect of wine, but the fulfilment of a prophecy in Joel ii. 28—32. and is that effuſion of the Spirit there foretold; and this prophecy is by the Jews themſelves allowed to belong to the world to come, or to the times of the Meſſiah. Some of their commentators[o] ſay, that it refers, לעתיד, to time to come; by which they frequently mean the times of the Meſſiah; and another ſays[p] expreſly, that they belong לימות המשיח, to the days of the Meſſiah; and in one of their Midraſhes[q], 'tis obſerved, that "the holy bleſſed God "ſays, in this world they propheſy ſingle; (parti"cular perſons) but in the world to come all Iſrael "ſhall become prophets, as it is ſaid, Joel ii. 28. "and it ſhall come to paſs afterward, that I will "pour out my Spirit upon all fleſh, and your ſons and "your daughters ſhall propheſy, and your old men, "&c. So expounds R. Tanchuma with R. Aba."

Ver. 17. And it ſhall come to paſs in the laſt days, &c.] In Joel it is afterwards; inſtead of which Peter puts, in the laſt days; the ſenſe is the ſame: and ſo R. David Kimchi, a celebrated commentator with the Jews, obſerves, that afterwards is the ſame as in the laſt days, and which deſign the times of the Meſſiah; for according to a rule given by the ſame writer on Iſ. ii. 2. where-ever the laſt days are mentioned, the days of the Meſſiah are intended. Saith God, or the Lord, as the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read. This clauſe is added by Peter, and is not in Joel; and very rightly, ſince what follow are the words of God ſpeaking in his own perſon: I will pour out of my Spirit upon all fleſh; not upon every animal, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it: this is extending the ſenſe too far, as the interpretation the above-named Jewiſh writer gives, limits it too much, reſtraining it to the people of Iſrael. It being a maxim with them, that the Shekinah does not dwell but in the land of Iſrael; and alſo that prophecy, or a ſpirit of prophecy, does not dwell on any but in the holy land[r]. For tho' as it regards the firſt times of the Goſpel, it may chiefly reſpect ſome perſons among the Jews, yet not to the excluſion of the Gentiles; and it deſigns all ſorts of perſons of every age, ſex, ſtate, and condition, as the diſtribution afterwards ſhews. Jarchi's note upon it is, "upon every "one whoſe heart is made as tender as fleſh; as "for example, and I will give an heart of fleſh, "Ezek. xxxvi. 26." By the ſpirit is meant the gifts of the Spirit, the ſpirit of wiſdom and knowledge, of underſtanding the myſteries of the Goſpel, of explaining the ſcriptures, and of ſpeaking with tongues; and by the pouring of it out, is intended the abundance and great plenty of the gifts and graces of the Spirit beſtowed; but yet not all of him, or all his gifts and grace in the large extent of them: therefore it is ſaid, not my ſpirit, but of my ſpirit, or out of it; as out of an unfathomable, immeaſurable, and inexhauſtible fountain and fulneſs: and your ſons and your daughters ſhall propheſy; or foretel things to come, as Agabus, and the four daughters of Philip the Evangeliſt, ch. xx. 9, 10, and your young men ſhall ſee viſions; as Ananias, ch. ix. 10. and Peter, ch. x. 17. and Paul when a young man, ch. xxii. 18. and xxvi. 19. and John, the youngeſt of the Apoſtles, Rev. i. 10. tho' he was in years, when he ſaw the viſions in the Revelations: and your old men ſhall dream dreams; or ſhall have night-viſions, as Paul at Troas, ch. xvi. 9. and in his voyage when at ſea, ch. xxvii. 23. The order of the words is inverted, this laſt clauſe ſtands firſt in Joel; perhaps the change is made, becauſe the Apoſtles were young men, on whom the Spirit was poured; and the thing was the more wonderful that ſo it ſhould be, than if they had been old men.

Ver. 18. And on my ſerva nd on my handmaidens, &c.] In Joel it is he ſervants and the handmaids; and which K interprets of ſtrangers that ſhould ſtand in the land of Iſrael, and ſerve the Iſraelites. But theſe phraſes do not ſeem ſo much to deſcribe the civil ſtate and condition of thoſe perſons, as their religious character, being ſuch as were brought, by the power of divine grace, to yield a chearful obedience to the will of God; tho' it may alſo regard the former, and ſhew, that with God there is no diſtinction and difference of bond or free, of rich or poor; contrary to a maxim of the Jews [s], that the Shekinah does not dwell but upon a wiſe man, a mighty man, and a rich man. I will pour out, in thoſe days, of my ſpirit, and they ſhall propheſy; ſee the note on the preceding verſe, from whence this clauſe, and they ſhall propheſy, is repeated; for it is not in the text in Joel; which is done to point at the end and effect of the Spirit being poured down upon them.

Ver. 19. And I will ſhew wonders in heaven above, &c.] The word above is not in Joel, nor in the Syriac verſion here, as neither the word beneath, in the next clauſe. This may refer either to the appearance of angels, and of an extraordinary ſtar at the birth of Chriſt; or rather to comets and blazing ſtars, and particularly to that comet which, in the form of a flaming ſword, hung over Jeruſalem, and the forms of armies in the heavens engaged together, which were ſeen before, and portended the deſtruction of that city [t]: and ſigns in the earth beneath; meaning either the miracles done by Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, on earth; or thoſe ſurprizing events in Judea and in Jeruſalem, a flame was ſeen in the temple, the doors of it opened of themſelves, and a voice was heard in it, ſaying, let us go hence; and an ideot went about ſeveral years together, ſaying, wo to the people, wo to the city, &c. blood, and fire, and vapour of ſmoke: by blood is meant, not the blood of Chriſt, either his bloody ſweat in the garden, or what he ſhed on the croſs, but the blood of the Jews, ſhed in war, and in inteſtine ſeditions and murders: and by fire is deſigned, not the Holy Ghoſt, who now appeared in cloven tongues, as of fire, but the conflagration of the city and temple of Jeruſalem, and of many other towns and villages. And by vapours of ſmoke; or, as in the Hebrew text, pillars of ſmoke, aſcending in upright columns, like palm-trees, are intended literally, the vaſt quantities of ſmoke that would ariſe from ſuch burnings; ſo that the very heavens would be beclouded and darkened with them, and ſun and moon appear in the following form.

Ver. 20. The ſun ſhall be turned into darkneſs, &c.] As at the death of Chriſt, by a total eclipſe of it: and the moon into blood; as at the opening of the ſixth ſeal, Rev. vi. 12. before that great and notable day of the Lord come; when he ſhall come in power and great glory, as he did in a few years after this, to take vengeance on the Jews, and deſtroy their nation, city, and temple; in which there was a diſplay of his greatneſs, and power, and which was awful and terrible to them, as in Joel it is called; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 29.

Ver. 21. And it ſhall come to paſs, &c.] Even at that time, when theſe ſigns ſhall appear, and the deſtruction is haſtening on, that whoſoever ſhall call on the name of the Lord; ſhall believe in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt with the heart, and ſhall confeſs him with the mouth, and ſhall worſhip him in ſpirit and in truth, and ſubmit to all his ordinances and commands; for invocation of the Lord includes the whole of worſhip, internal and external: ſhall be ſaved; or delivered from that temporal deſtruction which came upon the Jews, as the Chriſtians were by removing from Jeruſalem to Pella, as they were directed [u]; and ſhall be ſaved with a ſpiritual and everlaſting ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt; ſee the note on Rom. x. 13.

Ver. 22. Ye men of Iſrael, hear theſe words, &c.] The Arabic verſion prefaces this paſſage with theſe words, in thoſe days Peter ſtood and ſaid unto the people; as if it was not on the ſame day, and the following oration was a new one, and not a continued diſcourſe with the former; whereas it was delivered at the ſame time, and is in connexion with what goes before. Only the Apoſtle having finiſhed the vindication of his brethren, and the whole ſociety, and ſet that matter in a clear light; and being willing to take this opportunity of preaching Chriſt to the Jews, addreſſes them under another character in a new form of words, tho' to the ſame ſenſe as in ver. 14. in order to ſoften their minds, and raiſe their attention, and proceeds to deſcribe the perſon, the ſubject of his following diſcourſe: Jeſus of Nazareth; firſt by his name Jeſus, which the angel gave him before his birth; and that for this reaſon, becauſe he is the ſaviour of his people from their ſins, and which his name ſignifies; and next by the place, not where he was born, for that was Bethlehem, but where he was educated and brought up, and where he lived the greateſt part of his life, Nazareth, a city in Galilee; whence he was ſo called, generally by way of contempt, and not ſo much to diſtinguiſh him from any of the ſame name: a man approved of God; he was truly and really a man, who in his incarnation aſſumed a true body, and a reaſonable ſoul; but he was not a mere man, and much leſs a common and ordinary man: he was the famous ſon of man the ſcriptures ſpeak of; the man of God's right hand, the man his fellow, a great, mighty, and wonderful man: approved by God; or ſhewn, declared, and demonſtrated by him, to be ſent by him in human nature, to be the true Meſſiah and Saviour of the world, who was the choſen of God, loved and honoured by him, whom he ſealed, and bore a teſtimony to; and that not privately, but openly and publickly: among you; in the face of all the people in Jeruſalem, and in the temple, and at the time of public feaſts: by miracles, and wonders, and ſigns; by diſpoſſeſſing devils, cleanſing lepers, reſtoring ſight to the blind, cauſing the deaf to hear, the dumb to ſpeak, and the lame to walk, and by raiſing the dead: which God did by him in the midſt of you; not but that he did the miracles himſelf, as God, and the Son of God; but as he was man, God did them, by his human nature, as the inſtrument: the meaning is, that his miracles were wrought by a divine power, and not by a diabolical influence, by Beelzebub the prince of devils, as the Phariſees blaſphemouſly ſaid of him; and theſe were done, not in a corner, but in the midſt of them: as ye yourſelves alſo know; for they muſt be ſenſible and convicted in their own conſciences, not only that theſe things were done by him, but that they could not be done by him, unleſs God was with him, or he was from God; and ſo were teſtimonies both of the divine approbation of him, and of his deity and Meſſiahſhip.

Ver. 23. Him being delivered, &c.] By himſelf, according to his own will, for he gave, or delivered himſelf for his people; and by his Father, who ſpared him not, but delivered him up for us all; and by Judas, one of his diſciples, who, for a ſum of of money, delivered him into the hands of the Jews; and by them he was delivered up to Pilate, the Roman governour; and by him back again to the Jews, and to the ſoldiers, to crucify him: and all this by the determinate counſel and foreknowledge of God; God not only foreknew that it would be, but determined that it ſhould be, who does all things after the counſel of his own will; and this for the ſalvation of his people, and for the glorifying of his divine perfections: tho' this fixed reſolution, ſettled purpoſe, and wiſe determination of God, did not in the leaſt excuſe the ſin of Judas in betraying him, or of Pilate in condemning him, or of the Jews in crucifying him; nor did it at all infringe the liberty of their wills in acting, who did what they did, not by force, but voluntarily: ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and ſlain; they took him in the garden, and bound him, and had him firſt before the high-prieſt, then before Pilate, the Roman governour, and cried out with one voice, in a moſt vehement manner, for the crucifying of him, which, at their importunity, was granted, tho' no fault was found in him; and therefore are juſtly charged with ſlaying, or murdering him.

[u] Vid. Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 3. c. 5.

Ver. 24. Whom God raiſed up, &c.] From the dead; for tho' his life was taken away by men, he was raiſed to life again by God the Father, to whom the reſurrection of Chriſt is generally aſcribed, tho' not to the excluſion of Chriſt himſelf, and the bleſſed Spirit; and this being what the Apoſtles were witneſſes of, and the Jews endeavoured to ſtifle as much as they could, it being the ſign Chriſt gave them of the truth of his Meſſiahſhip; and this being alſo a fundamental article of the Chriſtian religion, the Apoſtle enlarges upon it: having looſed the pains of death; this may be underſtood either of what Chriſt had done for his people by dying for them; he had aboliſhed death; he had took away its ſting, and delivered them from the curſe of it, having fulfilled the law, ſatisfied juſtice, and made full atonement for their ſin; ſo that though they die, death is not a penal evil to them, nor ſhall they always continue under the power of it: or of what God did in raiſing Chriſt from the dead; he delivered him from the power of death, by which he was held in the grave, and which is expreſſed by a word which ſignifies pains and ſorrows, even thoſe of a woman in travail; which tho' he felt not now, he had gone through them; his low ſtate in the grave was the effect of them; and theſe are ſaid to be looſed when he was raiſed up, he being ſo entirely delivered from them, as that they ſhould never come upon him more: and it is to be obſerved, that the ſame word in the Hebrew language, and ſo in the Chaldee and Syriac, in which Peter might ſpeak, ſignifies both cords and ſorrows; and we often read in Talmudic and Rabbinic [w] writings, of חבלו של משיח, the ſorrows, or pains of the Meſſiah. The death which Chriſt died, being the death of the croſs, was a very painful one: he endured great pains in his body, by being ſmote with rods, and buffeted with the hands of men; by being ſcourged and whipped, and having a crown of thorns platted on his head; but the pains of the croſs were ſtill greater, his body being ſtretched out upon it, and faſtened to it by nails drove thro' his hands and feet, and then reared up, and jogged in the earth, where he hung upon it, in extreme agony, till he expired: and theſe pains he endured, not thro' want of love to him in his Father, who, as he does not willingly grieve and afflict the children of men, ſo neither would he his own Son; nor was it on account of any ſin of his, for he knew none, nor did he commit any; but he was wounded, and bruiſed, and endured theſe ſorrows and pains for the ſins of his people: as he was their ſurety, it was neceſſary he ſhould die, becauſe the wages of ſin is death, and the juſtice and veracity of God required it; and it was proper he ſhould die the painful death of the croſs, becauſe of the types and propheſies of it, and chiefly that he might appear to be made a curſe for his people: tho' more muſt be meant here than the pains he endured in the moment and article of death, ſince they ceaſed at death, and he was then freed from them; whereas the text ſpeaks of a looſing him from them at his reſurrection, which ſuppoſes that they continued on him until that time; wherefore theſe pains of death alſo ſignify the power and dominion death had over him, and continued to have over him in the grave; with the cords of which he was bound and held, till he was looſed by raiſing him from the dead. Dr. Goodwin is of opinion, that theſe words are to be underſtood, not of the reſurrection of Chriſt's body from the pains and power of death, but at leaſt chiefly of the recovery and revival of his ſoul from thoſe ſpiritual agonies which attended him, and from which he was looſed and delivered before his death; and the rather, becauſe, as before obſerved, at death the pains of it are gone, the bitterneſs of it is over, and nothing is felt in the grave: beſides, the word here uſed ſignifies the pains of a woman in travail, 1 Theſſ. v. 3. and ſeems beſt to agree with thoſe inward ſufferings of Chriſt, which are called the travail of his ſoul, Iſ. liii. 11. and which, like the pangs of a woman in labour, came upon him gradually: four or five days before his death he ſaid, now is my ſoul troubled, John xii. 27. The night in which he was betrayed, when he came into the garden, he began to be ſorrowful, and heavy, and ſore amazed; and at length he breaks out, and ſays, my ſoul is exceeding ſorrowful, even unto death, Matt. xxvi. 37, 38. and after ſome time his pains increaſe, and being in agony, he prayed more earneſtly, and his ſweat was, as it were, great drops of blood, Luke xxii. 44. but the ſharpeſt pains were yet to come, and which he endured when on the croſs, being forſaken by his God and Father, Matt. xxvii. 46. and which aroſe partly from the ſins of his people, the filth and guilt of them laid upon him, which muſt be very diſtreſſing to his pure and holy mind; and from the wrath of God, and curſe of the law, which he ſuſtained as the puniſhment for them; and it was neceſſary he ſhould bear the whole puniſhment due to ſin, the puniſhment of ſenſe, or feel the wrath of God, and the ſtrokes of divine juſtice, and the puniſhment of loſs, or be deprived of the divine preſence: and theſe ſorrows of ſoul may be well called the pains or ſorrows of death, becauſe they were unto death, and iſſued in it; a corporal death followed upon them; and when he was in the garden, and on the croſs, it might be truly ſaid, the ſorrows of death compaſſed him about, Pſ. xviii. 4. but from theſe he was looſed juſt before his death, when he ſaid, it is finiſhed; the darkneſs was over; the light of God's countenance broke out upon him; he heard his cry, and helped him in the acceptable time, in the day of ſalvation; his anger, as a judge, was turned away from him, juſtice being entirely ſatisfied; and therefore it was not poſſible he ſhould be held any longer with theſe cords and ſorrows of death; for he being an infinite perſon, was able to bear all the wrath of God at once, which was due to ſin, and therefore did not bring on him an eternal death, as on the wicked, he ſuſtaining and ſatisfying for all at once; and, like another Sampſon, broke aſunder theſe cords like threads, and was looſed from them. But after all, tho' theſe are very great truths; yet, according to the order in which theſe words lie, being placed after the account of the crucifixion and death of Chriſt, they ſeem rather to reſpect the reſurrection of his body, and the looſing it from the power and dominion of death; and in ſuch ſenſe as never to return to it, or any more feel the pains of it. One of Stephens's copies reads, the pains of Hades, or the inviſible ſtate; and the Vulgate Latin verſion, the pains of hell, as in Pſ. xviii. 5. where the grave is meant; and the Syriac verſion here, חבליה דשיול, the pains, or cords of the grave: the word cords, or bands, beſt agrees with the word looſing; and the Ethiopic verſion renders it, the bands of death. Becauſe it was not poſſible he ſhould be holden of it; of death, and under the power of it; partly, becauſe of the power and dignity of his perſon, as the Son of God, he being ſtill the prince of life, and who by dying aboliſhed death, and him that had the power of it; and partly, becauſe as the ſurety of his people he had made full ſatisfaction for ſin, and had brought in an everlaſting righteouſneſs, and therefore ought in juſtice to be diſcharged, and detained a priſoner no longer; as alſo becauſe of the propheſies of the Old Teſtament concerning his reſurrection, which muſt be fulfilled, as follows.

[w] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 118. 2. & Sanhedrin, fol. 98. 2. Alkath Rocel, l. 1. p. 1. & paſſim.

Ver. 25. For David ſpeaketh concerning him, &c.] The Meſſiah, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in Pſ. xvi. 8, 9, 10, 11. The whole pſalm belongs to the Meſſiah, and every thing concerning the perſon in it agrees with him; ſuch as his truſt in God, ver. 1. as he was man and mediator; his very great regard to the ſaints, and delight in them, ver. 2, 3. his diſregard to others who were haſtening after another God, or another Saviour, whoſe ſacrifices, as an high-prieſt, he would not offer up, nor make interceſſion for them, ver. 4. his exceeding great ſatisfaction in having the God of Iſrael for his portion, and in having his lot caſt among his peculiar people, who were a delightful inheritance to him, ver. 5, 6. his thankfulneſs for advice and direction in the time of his ſorrows and ſufferings; and his dependance on the almighty power of God to ſupport and protect him, ver. 7, 8. and the joy and comfort he was filled with in the view of his reſurrection from the dead, and his enjoyment of the heavenly glory, ver. 9, 10, 11. I foreſaw the Lord always before my face; Chriſt always had Jehovah in view throughout the whole of his life; and in his laſt moments he had reſpect unto the glory of his perfections, as the ultimate end of his obedience and ſufferings; and to his purpoſes, council, and covenant, which were to be accompliſhed by him; and to his will and command in preaching the Goſpel, working miracles, going about to do good, in obeying the precept, and bearing the penalty of the law; as well as to his promiſes, and his power to aſſiſt, ſupport, and preſerve him, as man and mediator: for he is on my right hand; which expreſſes his nearneſs to him, his preſence with him, his readineſs to aſſiſt him, and his protection of him; as if he was his ſecond that ſtood by him, to take his part, and, if need be, to take up his cauſe, and defend him from his enemies; ſee Pſ. cix. 31. and cx. 5. that I ſhould not be moved; from his ſtation, place, and duty; from the cauſe he was engaged in, ſo as to relinquiſh it; or with the fear of men, or fury of devils, or wrath of God, whilſt he was doing and ſuffering, according to the will of God.

Ver. 26. Therefore did my heart rejoice, &c.] Becauſe that he had always the truth, faithfulneſs, and power of God in his view, and the preſence and protection of God with him; and which are ſufficient to make the hearts of his people, as well as of him, to rejoice: and my tongue was glad; in the Hebrew text it is, my glory; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it here; which Kimchi explains of the ſoul, becauſe that is the glory of the body; but our Apoſtle rightly interprets it of the tongue, which is ſo called, Pſ. xxx. 12. and lvii. 8. and cviii. 1. becauſe it is both the glory of man, for that being endowed with the faculty of ſpeaking, gives him a glory above the brute creatures; and becauſe it is that by which he glorifies God, by aſcribing greatneſs to him, ſpeaking of his marvellous works, and ſinging his praiſes, as Chriſt did, in the great congregation, among his Apoſtles, a little before his death. Moreover alſo my fleſh ſhall reſt in hope, or ſafely; meaning, that his body ſhould lie quietly in the grave, as in its reſting-place from all toil and labour, pains and ſorrows, and be ſecure from worms, or any corruption. Or this may be underſtood of his perſon being in a quiet, firm, and full hope of the reſurrection of the dead, and of eternal life and glory.

Ver. 27. Becauſe thou wilt not leave my ſoul in hell, &c.] This is an apoſtrophe, or an addreſs to his Father, who he believed would not leave his ſoul, as ſeparate from his body, in Hades, in the inviſible world of ſouls, in the place where the ſouls of departed ſaints are, but would quickly return it to its body, and re-unite them; or elſe, that he would not leave his dead body, for ſo נפש ſometimes ſignifies; ſee Lev. xix. 28. and xxi. 1. Numb. ix. 10. and xix. 11, 13. in the grave; which is no unuſual ſenſe of שאול; ſee Gen. xlii. 38. Iſ. xxxviii. 18. that is, ſo long as to be corrupted and putrify, as the next clauſe ſhews: neither wilt thou ſuffer thine holy one to ſee corruption. The character of an holy one well agrees with Chriſt, both as God, or with reſpect to his divine nature, holineſs being a perfection in it, and in which he is glorious; and as man, he being holy in his nature, harmleſs in his life and converſation: all his doctrines were pure and holy, and ſo were all his works; and all his adminiſtrations in the diſcharge of every branch of his office; and he is the efficient cauſe and fountain of all the holineſs of his people; they are ſanctified in him, and by him, and have all their ſanctification from him. The word may be rendered, thy merciful, or bountiful one; and ſuch Chriſt is, a merciful, as well as faithful high-prieſt; and who has ſhown great compaſſion both to the bodies and ſouls of men, and has been very beneficent and liberal in the diſtributions of his grace and goodneſs. Now, tho' he died, and was laid in the grave, and buried, yet God would not ſuffer him to lie there ſo long as to be corrupted and putrified, which is the ſenſe of ſeeing corruption: and ſo the Jews themſelves explain the laſt clauſe of the preceding verſe, in connexion with this, my fleſh ſhall reſt in hope, that no worm or maggot ſhould have power over it, or corrupt it. "Seven fathers, they "ſay[x], dwell in eternal glory, and there is no "רמה ותולעה, worm or maggot, rules over them; "and theſe are they, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, [x] Maſſecheth Derech Eretz Zuta, c. 1. fol. 19 1.

“and Moſes, and Aaron, and Amram their father; and there are that ſay alſo David, as it is ſaid, Pſ. xvi. therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth, my fleſh alſo ſhall reſt in hope.” And which ſenſe alſo is mentioned by one of their commentators of note[y], who thus paraphraſes the words: “whilſt I am alive it ſhall reſt ſafely, for thou wilt deliver me from all hurt; and in the myſtical ſenſe, or according to the Midraſh, after death; intimating, that no maggot or worm ſhould have power over him;” which was not true of David, but is of the Meſſiah.

Ver. 28. Thou haſt made known to me the ways of life, &c.] That is, thou haſt raiſed me from the dead. When God raiſed Chriſt from the dead, he ſhewed him, or made him to know experimentally the way of life, or the way of the reſurrection from death to life; and this path of life, or of the reſurrection to an immortal and eternal life, was firſt ſhown to Chriſt, who is the firſt-fruits of them that ſlept, and the firſt-begotten from the dead. Thou ſhalt make me full of joy with thy countenance; or glorious preſence, in which is fulneſs of joy; which Chriſt, as man, is in, and fully poſſeſs'd of, being exalted at the right hand of God, and crowned with glory and honour, and has all the joy that was ſet before him in his ſufferings and death.

Ver. 29. Men and brethren, let me freely ſpeak unto you, &c.] The Apoſtle calls the Jews, brethren, whom he before only ſtiled men of Judea, and men of Iſrael, becauſe they were his brethren according to the fleſh, as many of them afterwards were in a ſpiritual relation; and the rather he adds this affectionate appellation to ſoften their minds, and prepare them to receive the account he was about to give of David, and of his prophecy of the Meſſiah, and his reſurrection; in which he uſed much freedom of ſpeech, conſiſtent with truth, good ſenſe, and ſtrong reaſoning; which he thought he might be allowed to take, and they would not be diſpleaſed at, in diſcourſing to them of the patriarch David; who was a head of the Fathers, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it; a prince of the tribes of Iſrael; one of the greateſt kings the tribes of Iſrael ever had; and therefore this name well becomes him; tho' it is more commonly given to Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and the heads of the twelve tribes: that he is both dead, and buried, and his ſepulchre is with us unto this day; it is a plain caſe, and a certain matter of fact, which no body diſputes or denies, that David really died, and was laid in the grave, and that his monument, or tomb, was ſtill extant, ſo that he was not riſen from the dead; and therefore the above citation could not reſpect him, but another, even the Meſſiah, and had been literally fulfilled in Jeſus. The Jews ſay[z], that David died on the day of Pentecoſt; which was the very day on which Peter was now preaching; he was buried in Jeruſalem, and his ſepulchral monument was in being when Peter ſaid theſe words. And Joſephus relates[a], that the ſepulchre of David was opened by Hyrcanus, who took out of it three thouſand talents; and that it was afterwards opened by Herod[b]: which, if true, may ſerve to render credible what Peter ſays concerning its continuance to that day. Tho' it may be queſtioned whether any ſuch treaſure was ever in it, or taken out of it; and ſtill leſs credible is the account which R. Benjamin[c] gives of two men in his time, who, under the wall of Zion, found a cave, which led them to a large palace built on pillars of marble, and covered with gold and ſilver; and within it was a table, and a golden ſcepter, and a crown of gold; and this, ſays the author, was the ſepulchre of David, king of Iſrael.

Ver. 30. Therefore being a prophet, &c.] Who could foretel things to come, as he did many things concerning the ſufferings and death of Chriſt, and the circumſtances attending it, concerning his reſurrection, aſcenſion, and ſeſſion at the right hand of God. So the title of his pſalms, in the Syriac verſion, runs thus; “the book of the pſalms of David, king and prophet:” and in the Arabic verſion, “the firſt book of the pſalms of David the prophet, king of the children of Iſrael.” Tho' the Jews[d] will not allow him, nor Solomon, nor Daniel, to be ſtrictly and properly prophets. They make a difference between prophecy, and the holy Spirit. They own, that the book of pſalms was written under the influence of the holy Spirit, but not by prophecy; and therefore they place it among the Hagiographa, or holy writings, but not among the prophets: tho' after all, Kimchi allows David to be a prophet, ſince he is called a man of God; for he ſays this name is not ſaid of any but על נביא, of a prophet[e]; and Peter is right in calling him ſo: and knowing that God had ſworn with an oath to him; as he did in Pſ. cxxxii. 11. that of the fruit of his loins; of one that ſhould be of his ſeed, that ſhould ſpring from him, even the virgin Mary, who was of the houſe and lineage of David: according to the fleſh, he would raiſe up Chriſt; would ſend him forth, according to the human nature; for this phraſe reſpects not his reſurrection from the dead, but his incarnation or exhibition in the fleſh, as in ch. iii. 26. and xiii. 23. This clauſe is wanting in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, and in the Alexandrian copy, and ſhould be read in a parentheſis; ſince it is not in the text in Pſ. cxxxii. 11. to ſit on his throne; on the throne of David his father; ſee Luke i. 32. and the note upon it.

Ver. 31. He ſeeing this before, &c.] Or by a ſpirit of prophecy foreſeeing it, that according to God's promiſe and oath, the Meſſiah would be raiſed up, and ſpring from his ſeed; and alſo by the ſame ſpirit foreſaw that he would ſuffer and die, and be laid in the grave, the pit of corruption: ſpake of the reſurrection of Chriſt; from the dead, to the ſenſe of the following words, in Pſ. xvi. 10. that his ſoul was not left in hell; neither his ſeparate ſoul in Hades, nor his body in the grave; neither his fleſh did ſee corruption; or his body, or his carkaſs, as the Syriac verſion renders it, did not lie ſo long in the grave as to rot and putrify.

Ver. 32. This Jeſus hath God raiſed up, &c.] That is, from the dead, whereof we are all witneſſes; namely, of his reſurrection, they having ſeen him, and heard him, and eat, and drank, and converſed with him ſince his reſurrection; and which was true, not of the twelve Apoſtles only, but of the whole company: or we are all his witneſſes; either of God, who raiſed Chriſt from the dead; or of Chriſt who was raiſed by him; and indeed, they bore teſtimony to the whole of this, to Chriſt, and to his reſurrection, and to its being done by God the Father.

Ver. 33. Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, &c.] After his reſurrection he aſcended to heaven, and was exalted in human nature; to the right hand of God, as the Ethiopic verſion, and the Arabic verſion uſed by de Dieu read; an honour that never was conferred on any creature, angels or men beſides: or he was exalted and raiſed to the high honour and dignity of a prince and ſaviour, of lord, head, and king, ſo as to have a name, dominion, and authority over all, by the mighty power of God, which is ſometimes called his right hand; ſee Pſ. cxviii. 15, 16. and having received of the Father the promiſe of the Holy Ghoſt; which the Father had promiſed to pour forth in the laſt days, Iſ. xliv. 3. Joel ii. 28. and which Chriſt had promiſed to ſend from the Father, John xiv. 16, 26. and xv. 26. and xvi. 7. and which upon his aſcenſion and exaltation, he received as mediator from him; ſee Pſ. lxviii. 18. compared with Eph. iv. 8. he hath ſhed forth this; this holy Spirit, or promiſed Spirit, theſe gifts of his; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, he hath ſhed forth this gift; which expreſſes both the plenty and abundance of the gifts beſtowed, and the liberality of Chriſt in the donation of them: 'tis added, which ye now ſee and hear; meaning the cloven tongues, as of fire, which they ſaw ſitting on the diſciples, and the various languages which they heard them ſpeak. The Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions leave out the word now; and the Syriac, in the room of it, reads, behold.

Ver. 34. For David is not aſcended into the heavens, &c.] In his body, that being ſtill in the grave, in his ſepulchre, which remained to that day, tho' in his ſoul he was aſcended to heaven; his ſpirit had returned to God that gave it, and was among the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect: but he ſaith himſelf, in Pſ. cx. 1. the Lord ſaid unto my Lord, ſit thou on my right hand; ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 44.

Ver. 35. Until I make thy foes thy footſtool.] See the note on Matt. xxii. 44.

Ver. 36. Therefore let all the houſe of Iſrael know aſſuredly, &c.] With certain knowledge, as the Arabic verſion renders it; with full aſſurance of it: this is a caſe that is plain and clear, a matter of fact that may be depended on; which all the people of Iſrael, called the houſe of Iſrael, a phraſe frequently uſed of that people in the Old Teſtament, which every individual of that body of men might be aſſured of: that God hath made that ſame Jeſus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Chriſt; that is, that God the father had not only conſtituted and appointed, Jeſus of Nazareth to be the Meſſiah, the Lord of Lords, and King of Kings, and had inveſted him with that office, power, and authority, but he had made him manifeſt to be ſo by the holy Spirit which he had received, and now poured forth the ſame, and not another; even him whom they had rejected with ſo much contempt; whom they had treated in ſuch a ſcornful and brutiſh manner; had ſpit upon, buffeted, and ſcourged, and at laſt crucified; and yet, now, even he had all power in heaven, and in earth, given him, and was exalted above every name? that in his name every knee ſhould bow. The phraſe of making a Meſſiah, or Chriſt, is uſed in the Talmudic writings[f]. “The holy bleſſed God ſought to make Hezekiah the Meſſiah, or Chriſt, and Sennacherib Gog and Magog; the property or attribute of juſtice ſaid before the holy bleſſed God, Lord of the world, and what was David, the king of Iſrael, who ſaid ſo many ſongs and hymns before thee, and thou didſt not make him Chriſt? Hezekiah, for whom thou haſt done all theſe wonders, and he hath not ſaid a ſong before thee, wilt thou make him the Meſſiah, or Chriſt? wherefore his mouth was ſhut up? and the earth opened, and ſaid a ſong before him; Lord of the world, I have ſaid a ſong before thee, for this righteous one, ועשהו משיח, and he made him Meſſiah, or Chriſt.”

Ver. 37. Now when they heard this, &c.] Or him, as the Arabic verſion; that is, Peter ſpeaking theſe things, deſcribing the character of Jeſus of Nazareth; opening the prophecies concerning him; aſſerting his reſurrection from the dead, and exaltation at the right hand of God; aſcribing this wonderful affair, of ſpeaking with divers tongues, to his effuſion of the Spirit; and charging them home with the iniquity of crucifying him: they were pricked in their hearts; the word of God entred into them, and was as a ſharp ſword in them, which cut and laid open their hearts, and the ſin and wickedneſs of them; they ſaw themſelves guilty of the crime laid to their charge, and were filled with remorſe of conſcience for it; they felt pain at their hearts, and much uneaſineſs, and were ſeized with horror and trembling; they were wounded in their ſpirits, being hewn and cut down by the prophets and apoſtles of the Lord, and ſlain by the words of his mouth; they were as dead men in their own apprehenſion; and indeed, a prick, a cut, or wound in the heart is mortal: and ſaid unto Peter, and to the reſt of the apoſtles, men and brethren, what ſhall we do? the perſons they before mocked at, they are glad to adviſe with, what ſhould be done in this their ſad and wretched caſe; what they ſhould do to obtain the favour of God, the forgiveneſs of their ſins, and everlaſting ſalvation. Convinced, awakened ſinners, are generally at firſt upon a covenant of works; are for doing ſomething to atone for their paſt crimes, to ſet themſelves right in the ſight of God, to ingratiate themſelves into his favour, and procure the pardon of their ſins, and the inheritance of eternal life. And they ſeem alſo to be at a loſs about the way of ſalvation, what is to be done to attain it, or how, and by what means it is to be come at; and are almoſt ready to deſpair of it, their ſin appearing in ſo dreadful a light, and attended with ſuch aggravating circumſtances. Beza's ancient copy reads, ſome of them ſaid to Peter, &c. not all that heard, but thoſe that were pricked to the heart.

Ver. 38. Then Peter ſaid unto them, &c.] Being the mouth of the apoſtles, and being ready to give advice, and ſpeak a word of comfort to their diſtreſſed minds: repent; change your minds, entertain other thoughts, and a different opinion of Jeſus of Nazareth, than you have done; conſider him, and believe in him, as the true Meſſiah and Saviour of the world; look upon him, not any more as an impoſtor, and a blaſphemer, but as ſent of God, and the only redeemer of Iſrael; change your voice and way of ſpeaking of him, and your conduct towards his diſciples and followers; a change of mind will produce a change of actions in life and converſation: bring forth fruits meet for repentance; and make an open and hearty profeſſion of repentance for this your ſin. And this the apoſtle ſaid, to diſtinguiſh between a legal and an evangelical repentance; the former is expreſſed in their being pricked to the heart, on which they were not to depend; the latter he was deſirous they might have, and ſhew forth; which ſprings from the love of God, is attended with views, or at leaſt hopes of pardoning-grace and mercy, and with faith in Chriſt Jeſus: it lies in a true ſight and ſenſe of ſin, under the illuminations and convictions of the ſpirit of God; in a ſorrow for it, after a godly ſort, and becauſe it is committed againſt a God of love, grace, and mercy; and it ſhews itſelf in loathing ſin, and in ſhame for it, in an ingenuous acknowledgment of it, and in forſaking it: and this is moreover urged, to ſhew the neceſſity of it, as to ſalvation, for ſuch that God would not have periſh, he will have come to repentance; ſo to their admiſſion to the ordinance of baptiſm, to which repentance is a pre-requiſite; and to which the apoſtle next adviſes: and be baptized every one of you; that repents and believes; that is, in water, in which John adminiſtred the ordinance of baptiſm; in which Chriſt himſelf was baptized, and in which the apoſtles of Chriſt adminiſtred it; in this Philip baptized the Eunuch; and in this were the perſons baptized that were converted in Cornelius's houſe; and it is diſtinguiſhed from the baptiſm of the ſpirit, or with fire, the extraordinary gifts of the ſpirit mentioned in the laſt clauſe of this verſe; and which ordinance of water-baptiſm was adminiſtred, by immerſion, as the places, Jordan and Ænon, where John performed it, and the inſtances of it particularly in Chriſt, and in the Eunuch, and the end of it, which is to repreſent the death, burial, and reſurrection of Chriſt, as well as the primary ſignification of the word ſhow. And this is to be done, in the name of Jeſus Chriſt; not to the excluſion of the Father, and of the Spirit, in whoſe name alſo this ordinance is to be adminiſtred, Matt. xxviii. 19. but the name of Jeſus Chriſt is particularly mentioned, becauſe of theſe Jews, who had before rejected and denied him as the Meſſiah; but now, upon their repentance and faith, they are to be baptized in his name, by his authority, according to his command; profeſſing their faith in him, devoting themſelves to him, and calling on his name. The end for which this was to be ſubmitted to, is, for the remiſſion of ſins; not that forgiveneſs of ſin could be procured either by repentance, or by baptiſm; for this is only obtained by the blood of Chriſt; but the apoſtle adviſes theſe awakened, ſenſible, repenting, and believing ſouls, to ſubmit to baptiſm, that by it their faith might be led to Chriſt, who ſuffered and died for their ſins, who left them buried in his grave, and who roſe again for their juſtification from them; all which is, in a moſt lively manner, repreſented in the ordinance of baptiſm by immerſion: the encouragement to it follows, and ye ſhall receive the gift of the Holy Ghoſt; not the grace of the Spirit, as a regenerater and ſanctifier; for that they had already; and is neceſſary, as previous to baptiſm; unleſs it ſhould mean confirmation of that grace, and ſtability in it, as it appears from ver. 42. they afterwards had; but rather the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, particularly the gift of ſpeaking with tongues, which Chriſt had received from the Father, and had now ſhed on his apoſtles; ſee Acts xix. 5, 6.

Ver. 39. For the promiſe is unto you, &c.] Either of the Meſſiah, and ſalvation by him, which was particularly given forth to the people of the Jews; or of the remiſſion of ſins, which was a branch of the new covenant made with the houſe of Iſrael, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, even the whole houſhold of God; or of the pouring forth of the Spirit: and this promiſe was not only to them, but to theirs, even to as many of them as belonged to the election of grace; and whom the Lord their God would effectually call by his grace, as the laſt and limiting clauſe of the text, and which is to be connected with every part of it, ſhows: and to your children; this is the rather mentioned, becauſe theſe awakened, and converted ſouls, were not only in great concern about themſelves, for their ſin of crucifying Chriſt; but were in great diſtreſs about their children, on whom they had imprecated the guilt of Chriſt's blood, as upon themſelves; the thought of which cut them to the heart, and made their hearts bleed within them: wherefore to relieve them, and adminiſter comfort to them in this their diſtreſs, the apoſtle informs them, that the promiſe of Chriſt, and of his grace, was not only to them, who were now called, but it was alſo to their children; to as many of them as the Lord God ſhould call; and who are the children of the promiſe, which all the children of the fleſh were not, Rom. ix. 6. and to theſe the promiſe ſhould be applied, notwithſtanding this dreadful imprecation of theirs: and to all that are afar off; either in place, as thoſe that were diſperſed among the ſeveral nations of the world; and ſo carried in it a comfortable aſpect on the multitude of Jews, that were of every nation under heaven; or in time, who ſhould live in ages to come; or elſe the Gentiles are intended, who were afar off from God and Chriſt, and the way of life and ſalvation by him; ſee Epheſ. ii. 12, 13, 17. even as many as the Lord our God ſhall call; not externally only, by the miniſtry of the word, but internally, by his grace and ſpirit; with that calling, which, is according to the purpoſe and grace of God, and is inſeparably connected with eternal glory; the promiſe is to all ſuch, and is made good to all ſuch, whether they be Jews or Gentiles, fathers, or children, greater or leſſer ſinners. The Syriac verſion reads, whom God himſelf ſhall call.

Ver. 40. And with many other words did he teſtify and exhort, &c.] For Luke does not give the ſermons of the apoſtles at length, but a compendium, or ſpecimen of them, and ſome of the more remarkable things in them; and which it ſeems, lay partly in teſtifying concerning Chriſt, his perſon, office, grace, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation; and againſt ſins and errors, and falſe doctrine; and in exhorting to the exerciſe of grace, and the diſcharge of duty; or in comforting diſtreſſed minds: for the word uſed ſignifies to comfort, as well as to exhort; tho' it ſeems to have the latter ſenſe here, ſince it follows: ſaying, ſave yourſelves from this untoward generation; meaning, the chief-prieſts, Scribes, and Phariſees, and elders of the people, chiefly, who were a perverſe generation of men; and upon whom, for their impenitence and unbelief, for their rejection of the Meſſiah, and their evil treatment of him, wrath and ruin would come upon them, to the uttermoſt, very quickly; wherefore the apoſtle exhorts to ſeparate from them, and not partake of their ſins, leſt they ſhould alſo of their plagues; but come out from among them, and ſo, in a temporal ſenſe, ſave themſelves from the deſtruction that would quickly come on their nation, city, and temple; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, eſcape from this rough generation.

Ver. 41. Then they that gladly received his word, &c.] The Syriac verſion adds, and believed; what Peter ſaid concerning repentance and baptiſm, and eſpecially concerning remiſſion of ſins, and the gift of the Holy Ghoſt; and concerning the promiſe of Chriſt, and ſalvation by him, of the pardon of ſin, and of the holy Spirit; which doctrine they received with great joy and gladneſs, it being ſuitable to their caſe; and very readily, and willingly, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it; for they were now made a willing people in the day of God's power, and now that promiſe, or prophecy, in Pſal. cx. 3. had a remarkable accompliſhment; theſe converts were the dew of Chriſt's youth, as well as inſtances of his powerful and efficacious grace: not all that heard this ſermon of Peter's received his doctrine in this manner, only ſome; and ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions render the words, and ſome of them readily received, &c. which ſhews the diſtinguiſhing grace of God in this inſtance. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions leave out the word gladly, which ſhould not be omitted: and as ſoon as they had received the word, and were comforted by it, they were baptized; in water, by immerſion, for which there was great conveniency in Jeruſalem, and in the temple, where the apoſtles now were: in the city of Jeruſalem, in private houſes, they had their baths for purifications, by immerſion, as in the caſe of menſtruas, gonorrhæas, and other defilements, by touching unclean perſons, and things, which were very frequent; ſo that a digger of ciſterns, for ſuch uſes, and others, was a buſineſs in Jeruſalem. “ Says Simeon Sicana[g], who was a digger of ciſterns, “ ditches, and caves, in Jeruſalem, to R. Jochanan “ ben Zaccai, I am as great a man as thou art; he “ made anſwer to him, why? (or your reaſon for “ it;) he replied to him, becauſe I am employed “ in the neceſſary affairs of many, (or of the public) “ as you are; for ſays he, if a man comes to you “ for judgment, or to aſk a queſtion, you ſay to “ him drink out of this ciſtern, whoſe waters are “ pure, and cold; or, if a woman aſks thee con- “ cerning her menſtruas, you ſay to her, טבלי, dip “ in this ciſtern, whoſe waters purify.” And in the temple there was an apartment, called בית טבילה, the dipping-place, or room, where the high-prieſt dipped himſelf on the day of atonement[h]: and beſides, there were ten lavers of braſs, made by Solomon; and every laver held forty baths of water, and each was four cubits broad and long, ſufficient for immerſion of the whole body of a man; and to theſe Herbanus[i] the Jew, ſeems to have reſpect, when he ſays, that in the outer part of Solomon's temple there were λȣτῆρες, lavers, in every ſide, (or all around) which were free, or open, for the uſe of all; to which he thinks, the prophet Iſaiah has reſpect, in Iſ. i. 16. Thoſe were for the prieſts, both to waſh their hands and feet at, and alſo to waſh the burnt-offerings; ſee Exod. xxx. 18, 19. 2 Chron. iv. 6.[k]: and who were likewiſe obliged, very often, to bathe, or dip their whole bodies in water; for if a prieſt went out of the temple for a little while to ſpeak with a friend, טעון טבילה, he was obliged to dipping; and if he nodded, he was obliged to waſh his hands and his feet; but if he ſlept, he was obliged to dip himſelf; yea, a man might not go into the court, or to ſervice, even tho' he was clean, עד שהוא טובל, until he dip himſelf[l]. Add to this, that there was the molten ſea alſo for the prieſts to waſh in, 2 Chron. iv. 6. which was done by immerſion; on which one of the Jewiſh commentators[m] has theſe words: “ the ſea “ was, לטבילת, for the dipping of the prieſts; for “ in the midſt of it, they dipped themſelves from “ their uncleanneſs; but in the Jeruſalem Talmud[n] “ there is an objection, is it not a veſſel? as if it “ was ſaid, how can they dip in it, for is it not a “ veſſel? and there is no dipping in veſſels: R. “ Joſhua ben Levi replied, a pipe of water was laid “ to it from the fountain of Etam, and the feet of “ the oxen, (which were under the molten ſea) “ were open at the pomegranates; ſo that it was as “ if it was from under the earth, and the waters “ came to it, and entred, and aſcended, by the way “ of the feet of the oxen, which were open beneath “ them, and bored.” The reaſon of the objection is, becauſe bathing, or dipping for purification, was not made in veſſels, but in gatherings, or pools of water upon the ground; and which objection is removed, by obſerving, that a pipe was laid from the fountain of Etam, which ſupplied it with ſpring, or running-water; ſo that the molten ſea, and the lavers, were looked upon all one, as pools of water, or ſprings of water, and as fit for immerſion. This ſea was ten cubits from brim to brim, and five cubits high, and held two thouſand baths, 1 Kings vii. 23, 26. Yea, three thouſand, as in 2 Chron. vi. 5. and every laver held forty baths, 1 Kings vii. 38. and every bath held four gallons and a half, and between ſeven and eight gallons of wine-meaſure. And it may be obſerved, that there were alſo in Jeruſalem the pool of Betheſda, into which perſons went down at certain times, John v. i. and the pool of Siloam, where perſons bathed, and dipped themſelves, on certain occaſions; ſee the note on John ix. 7. So that there were conveniencies enough for baptiſm by immerſion in this place: and the ſame day there were added; unto them, or to the church, as in ver. 47. the whole company of the hundred and twenty diſciples; the Arabic verſion ſupplies, among the believers: the number of thoſe, that were added to them, were about three thouſand ſouls; or perſons, men, and women; and their number is no objection to their being baptized by immerſion. As for convenient places to baptize in, there were enough, as we have ſeen already; and there were adminiſtrators ſufficient for this work: had there been no more than the twelve apoſtles, it was but two hundred and fifty men apiece; and there were twelve ſeparate places in the temple, where they might be baptizing at the ſame time; there were the ten lavers, the molten ſea, and the dipping room, ſo that the work was not ſo very heavy nor difficult; but beſides, there were ſeventy diſciples, who, as they were preachers of the word, were adminiſtrators of this ordinance; and ſuppoſing them all employed, as they might be, at the ſame time, either in the temple, or at the pools in Jeruſalem, or at the baths, and ciſterns, in private houſes; they would not have more than ſix or ſeven and thirty perſons a piece to baptize: and there was time enough in the day for it; it was but the third hour, or nine o'clock in the morning, when Peter began his ſermon; and allowing an hour for that, there were eight hours more in the day, according to the Jewiſh reckoning of twelve hours in a day; ſo that the buſineſs might be done without any hurry, or great fatigue: and indeed, the objection, as to time, would equally lie againſt ſprinkling, or pouring, as dipping; at leaſt the difference is very inconſiderable; for the ſame form of words muſt be pronounced in adminiſtring the ordinance by the one, as by the other; and a perſon being ready, is very near as ſoon dipped into water, as water can be taken, and ſprinkled, or poured on the face. Beſides after all, tho' theſe perſons were added to the church the ſame day, it does not neceſſarily follow from the text, that they were all baptized in one day; the words do not oblige us to ſuch a ſenſe: I own, I am of opinion, that they were all baptized in one day; and that on the ſame day they were baptized, they were joined to the church; and that day was the day of Pentecoſt, the day on which the law was given on mount Sinai, and on which now the Goſpel was publiſhed to men of all nations under the heavens; the day on which the firſt-fruits were offered to the Lord, and on which now the firſt-fruits of the death, reſurrection, and aſcenſion of Chriſt were brought in to him. Let the order be obſerved, they were firſt baptized, and then added to the church.

Ver. 42. And they continued ſtedfaſtly in the apoſtles doctrine, &c.] And which is the ſame with the doctrine of Chriſt, of which he is the author, preacher, and ſubject; the ſubſtance of which is peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by him: this the apoſtles received from Chriſt, and conſtantly taught in their miniſtry; for which reaſon, it is called theirs; and this theſe young converts had embraced gladly; and were not only believers of it, but perſevering believers; they were conſtant hearers of it; they continually attended on the miniſtry of the apoſtles, and held faſt the form of ſound words they had received from them; and ſtood faſt in the faith of the Goſpel, notwithſtanding all the reproach caſt upon it, and the afflictions they endured for it: and alſo in fellowſhip; with the apoſtles and other ſaints, in ſpiritual converſation with them, in private, and in communion with them at the Lord's table in public: and ſo the Vulgate Latin reads this clauſe, in connexion with the next, thus, in the communication of breaking of bread; to which agrees the Syriac verſion, and they communicated in prayer, and in breaking of the Euchariſt; tho' it ſeems better to underſtand this of a diſtinct branch of fellowſhip, or communication, and may rather intend liberality and beneficence, in which ſenſe it is uſed, Rom. xv. 26. 2 Cor. viii. 9. Heb. xiii. 16. and ſo expreſſes their conſtant contributions towards the ſupport of the apoſtles, as miniſters of the word and of the poor members of the church; a duty, which in both its branches, is incumbent on thoſe who have it in their power to perform, and which theſe firſt chriſtians were remarkable for: and in breaking of bread; or of the Euchariſt, as the Syriac verſion renders it, which was an uſual name with the ancients for the Lord's ſupper; and which ſeems to be intended here, and not eating common bread, or a common meal; ſeeing it is here mentioned with religious exerciſes: and tho' the Jews uſed to begin their meals with breaking of bread, yet the whole repaſt, or meal, is never by them called by that name; and for what reaſon theſe ſaints ſhould be commended for keeping their common meals, cannot be ſaid, unleſs to ſhew their ſociableneſs, agreement, and brotherly love in eating together; and which is not hinted at here, but in ver. 46. where it is mentioned as ſomething diſtinct from this: it ſeems rather therefore to deſign, that they were conſtant at the Lord's table, kept their places there, and duly attended whenever the ordinance was adminiſtred: and in prayers; not only in their cloſets, and in their families, but in the church; in the public prayers of the church, they obſerved all opportunities of this kind, and gladly embraced them.

Ver. 43. And fear came upon every ſoul, &c.] Upon every inhabitant of Jeruſalem, at leaſt upon a great many of them; and upon all, or the greater part of them that ſaw, and heard theſe things; that heard the Apoſtles ſpeak with divers tongues, and Peter preach in the awful manner he did, and ſaw ſo many thouſands at once embrace the Goſpel of Chriſt, and profeſs his name, when it now, by reaſon of his crucifixion, but a few weeks ago, lay under the greateſt reproach and ſcandal; and ſuch a number baptized in water; and alſo becauſe of the miracles done by the Apoſtles, after mentioned. The Ethiopic verſion is very odd, and all animals feared the Apoſtles; as if the very brute creatures ſtood in awe of them: and many wonders and ſigns were done by the Apoſtles; the Vulgate Latin, and Syriac verſions, add, in Jeruſalem; ſuch as caſting out devils, healing the ſick, cauſing the lame to walk, &c. which were promiſed by Chriſt ſhould be done by them; and which were neceſſary for the confirmation of the Goſpel, and of the Apoſtles miſſion to preach it. The Vulgate Latin verſion adds another clauſe, much like the firſt part of the text, and great fear was upon all; and the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, read, in Jeruſalem there was great fear upon all.

Ver. 44. And all that believed were together, &c.] Not in one place, for no one houſe could hold them all, their number was now ſo large; but they agreed together, as the Arabic verſion renders it: all theſe believers were of one mind and judgment, as to doctrines, they agreed in their ſentiments and principles of religion; and they were of one heart and ſoul, were cordially affected to each other, and mutually were aſſiſting to one another in temporals, as well as in ſpirituals: and had all things common; that is, their worldly goods, their poſſeſſions and eſtates; no man called any thing peculiarly his own; and whatever he had, his brother was welcome to, and might as freely take, and uſe it, as if it was his own.

Ver. 45. And ſold their poſſeſſions and goods, &c.] Their houſes and lands, their fields and vineyards, their goods, moveable or immoveable: and parted them to all men; that were of their ſociety, not to others: as every man had need; the rich ſold their eſtates, and divided them among the poor, or gave them ſuch a portion thereof as their preſent exigences required. This was done by Jews, and by Jews only; who, when they embraced the Goſpel of Chriſt, were informed, that the deſtruction of their city, and nation, was at hand; and therefore they ſold their eſtates before-hand, and put them to this uſe; which was neceſſary to be done, both for the ſupport of the Goſpel in Judea, and for the carrying and ſpreading of it among the Gentiles; but is not to be drawn into a precedent, or an example in after-times; nor is ever any ſuch thing propoſed to the Chriſtian churches, or exhorted to by any of the Apoſtles.

Ver. 46. And they continued daily with one accord in the temple, &c.] Every day they went up to the temple, at the time of prayer, or whenever any religious ſervice was to be performed; this was their conſtant practice, and in this they agreed: and breaking bread from houſe to houſe; either adminiſtring the Lord's ſupper in private houſes, as the Jews kept their paſſover, ſometimes adminiſtring it at one houſe, and ſometimes at another; or becauſe their number was ſo large, that one houſe could not hold them, they divided themſelves into leſſer bodies; and ſome met, and had the ordinance adminiſtred to them in one houſe, and ſome in another: or this may be underſtood of their common meals, which they eat together at one another's houſes in great love and friendſhip; for they did eat their meat with gladneſs; with great thankfulneſs to the God of their mercies for their daily food, acknowledging that all came from him, and that they were undeſerving of it, and with much chearfulneſs and affability one among another, without murmuring and repining at their lot, or envying each other, or grudging what each other partook of: and alſo with ſingleneſs of heart; without deceit and hypocriſy; either in their thankſgivings to God, or in their welcome and entertainment of each other; and with great ſincerity, openneſs, and frankneſs before God, and one another. The Syriac verſion joins this clauſe with the beginning of the next verſe, with ſingleneſs of heart, praiſing God.

Ver. 47. Praiſing God, &c.] Not only for their temporal mercies and enjoyments of life, which they partook of in ſo delightful and comfortable a manner; but for their ſpiritual mercies, that the Lord had been pleaſed to call them by his grace, and reveal Chriſt to them, and pardon them who had been ſuch vile ſinners, give them a name, and a place in his houſe, and favour them with the ordinances of it, and ſuch agreeable and delightful company as the ſaints were, they had fellowſhip with: having favour with all the people; they not only behaved with ſuch true and ſincere love towards one another in their church-ſtate, but with ſo much wiſdom, courteouſneſs, and affability towards them that were without, and walked ſo becoming the profeſſion they made, that they gained the good-will of the generality of the people: and the Lord added to the church daily ſuch as ſhould be ſaved; partly by the converſation of theſe young converts, and chiefly by the miniſtry of the word, many ſouls were won and gained to Chriſt, were wrought upon, and converted, whoſe hearts the Lord inclined to give up themſelves to the church, and walk with them in all the ordinances and commandments of the Lord; and theſe were ſuch whom God had choſen to ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt, and whom he had redeemed by his precious blood, and who were now regenerated and ſanctified by the Spirit of God, and ſo ſhould certainly be ſaved; which is not always the caſe of perſons added to churches, many of whom have not the root of the matter in them, and ſo fall away; but is of thoſe who are added by the Lord, for there is a difference between being added by the Lord, and being added by men.

CHAP. III.

Ver. 1. NOW Peter and John went up together into the temple, &c.] Theſe two diſciples were intimate companions, and great lovers of each other; they were often together: they are thought, by ſome, to have been together in the high-prieſt's palace at the trial of Chriſt; and they ran together to his ſepulchre, John xviii. 15, 16. and xx. 2, 3, 4. and they now went together to the temple, not to attend the daily ſacrifice which was now aboliſhed by the ſacrifice of Chriſt; but to attend to the duty of prayer, which was ſtill in force, and that they might have an opportunity of preaching Chriſt, where there was a number of people together: at the hour of prayer; being the ninth hour, or three o'clock in the afternoon. This was one of their hours of prayer; it was cuſtomary with the Jews to pray three times a day, Dan. vi. 10. which, according to the Pſalmiſt in Pſ. lv. 17. were evening, morning, and at noon; to which ſeem to anſwer the three times that are taken notice of by Luke in this hiſtory: that in the morning was at the third hour, as in ch. ii. 15. or nine o'clock in the morning; that at noon was at the ſixth hour, as in ch. x. 9. or twelve o'clock at noon; and that in the evening at the ninth hour, as here, or three o'clock in the afternoon. Not that theſe were times of divine appointment. The Jews [o] themſelves ſay, " there's no number of prayers from the law, and " and there is no repetition of this or that prayer " from the law, and there is no זמן קבוע, fixed " time for prayer from the law." But according to the traditions of the elders, " the morning- " prayer was to the end of the fourth hour, which " is the third part of the day——the prayer of the " Minchah, (or evening-prayer) they fixed the time " of it to anſwer to the evening daily ſacrifice; " and becauſe the daily ſacrifice was offered up " every day from the ninth hour and a half, they " ordered the time of it to be from the ninth hour " and a half, and it is called the leſſer Minchah; and " becauſe in the evening of the paſſover, which falls " upon the evening of the ſabbath, they ſlay the daily " ſacrifice at the ſixth hour and a half, they ſay, " that he that prays after the ſixth hour and a half is " excuſed; and after this time is come, the time " to which he is obliged is come, and this is called " the great Minchah —— lo, you learn, that the " time of the great Minchah is from the ſixth hour " and a half, to the ninth hour and a half; and " the time of the leſſer Minchah is from the ninth " hour and a half, until there remains of the day " an hour and a quarter; and it is lawful to pray " it until the ſun ſets." So that it was at the time of the leſſer Minchah that Peter and John went up to the temple; which ſeems to be not on the ſame day of Pentecoſt, but on ſome day, or days after; it may be the ſabbath following, when there was a great number of people got together.

Ver. 2. And a certain man lame from his mother's womb, &c.] He was born ſo; his lameneſs came not thro' any diſeaſe or fall, or any external hurt, but from a defect in nature, in one of his limbs, or more; which made the after miracle the more extraordinary: and he was ſo lame that he was carried; he could not walk of himſelf, or go, being led, but they were obliged to carry him: whom they laid daily at the gate of the temple; it had been a common uſage, it may be, for years paſt, to bring him every day, at prayer time, and lay him at the gate of the temple where the people went in; hence he was well known by the people, and and to have been of a long time lame, even ever ſince he was born; ſo that there could be no impoſture in this caſe: and it was at the gate of the temple he lay, which is called beautiful; which ſome think was the gate Shuſhan, which was the eaſtern gate of the mountain of the houſe, or the outmoſt wall, and was ſo called, becauſe Shuſhan, the metropolis of Perſia, was pourtrayed upon it [q], which made it look very beautiful. The reaſon commonly given by the Jewiſh commentators [r] why this was done, is this; when the Jews returned from captivity, the king of Perſia commanded that they ſhould make a figure of the palace of Shuſhan upon one of the gates of the temple, that they might fear the king, and not rebel againſt him; and accordingly they drew one upon the eaſtern gate: but ſome ſay [s], that the children of the captivity did this (upon their return) that they might remember the wonder of Purim, (their deliverance from Haman) which was done in Shuſhan; moreover, it might be ſo called from the word Shuſhan, which ſignifies joy and gladneſs: but this does not bid ſo fair to be the gate here meant, ſince it was lower than all the reſt; for as the eaſtern wall was lower than the reſt of the walls, that when the high-prieſt burnt the red heifer on the top of mount Olivet, he might ſee the gate of the temple at the time of the ſprinkling of the blood; ſo the gate itſelf was four cubits lower than the others[t], and therefore could not look ſo grand and beautiful as the reſt. Indeed, concerning this eaſtern gate of the mountain of the houſe, it is ſaid[u], that "in the time "when the ſanctuary ſtood, when they prayed "on the mountain of the houſe, they went in by "the way of the eaſtern gate." And as this was now the hour of prayer, and the people were going to the temple to pray, whoſe entrance was at the eaſt gate; here it might be thought, in all probability, was laid the lame man: tho' it ſeems rather to be the eaſtern gate of the court of the women, which was made of Corinthian braſs, and looked brighter than gold itſelf; of which Joſephus[w] thus "ſpeaks: nine of the gates were covered all over with "gold and ſilver, likewiſe the ſide-poſts and lintels; "but there was one, without the temple, of Corinthian braſs, which in dignity greatly exceeded "the ſilver and golden ones." And ſince at this gate was the greateſt frequency of perſons, both men and women entering here; it is moſt likely, that here lay the lame man a begging: this is thought, by ſome, to be the higher gate of the houſe of the Lord; ſaid to be built by Jotham, the ſon of Uzziah, king of Judah, 2 Kings xv. 35. upon which text, a Jewiſh commentator of great note[x] has this remark, "obſerve it is ſaid of Jotham, that he "built it, becauſe he made a building on it, "נכבד וגדול, more glorious and great than it had "been:" and this is alſo called the new gate of the houſe of the Lord, Jer. xxvi. 10. and which both the Targum and Kimchi on the place ſay is the eaſtern gate." To aſk alms of them that entered into the temple; who going to religious exerciſes, might be thought to be more diſpoſed to acts of liberality and charity: and beſides, theſe were known to be Jews, of whom only alms were to be aſked and taken; for ſo run their canons[y], "it is "forbidden to take alms of Gentiles publickly, "except a man can't live by the alms of Iſraelites; and if a king, or a prince of the Gentiles, "ſhould ſend money to an Iſraelite for alms, he "muſt not return it, becauſe of the peace of the "kingdom, but muſt take it of him, and give it to "the poor of the Gentiles ſecretly, that the king "may not hear."

Ver. 3. Who ſeeing Peter and John about to go into the temple, &c.] Juſt as they were entering thro' the gate at which he lay, he looked at them; and tho' they were ſtrangers to him, he concluded they were Iſraelites by their going into the temple at that time: aſked an alms; of them; prayed them to give him ſomething for his relief and ſupport.

Ver. 4. And Peter faſtning his eyes upon him, &c.] Or looking very wiſhly and intently at him, being, no doubt, under ſome uncommon impulſe of the Spirit of God to take notice of him, and cure him of his diſeaſe: with John; who was alſo under a like impulſe at the ſame time; and who was equally concerned in this cure, as appears by the notice the man, when healed, took of the one, as well as the other; and by Peter's declaration, ver. 11, 12. as alſo by the following words: ſaid, look on us; which was ſaid to raiſe his attention to them, to put him upon obſerving what manner of men they were, and how unlikely to perform the following cure, and to take notice of the manner in which it would be done. The Jews ſpeak of a ſupernatural cure effected in ſuch a manner, uſing ſuch words; and which perhaps is told, with a view to leſſen the glory of this[z]. "Elias appeared to one in the "likeneſs of R. Chiyah Rabbah; he ſaid to him, "how does my Lord do? he replied to him, a "certain tooth diſtreſſes me; he ſaid to him, "חמי לי, look on me; and he looked on him, and "put his finger on it, and he was well."

Ver. 5. And he gave heed unto them, &c.] Or he looked at them, as the Syriac verſion renders it, as they bid him: he was not only attentive to them in his mind, but he directed his eyes towards them, and looked wiſhly at them. This clauſe is left out in the Ethiopic verſion. Expecting to receive ſomething of them; not a cure for his lameneſs, which he little thought of, but ſome money, as an alms.

Ver. 6. Then Peter ſaid, ſilver and gold have I none, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion reads, we have none; and ſo it reads the next clauſe in the firſt perſon plural; that is, they had no money either of gold or ſilver coin; they had none about them, nor any of their own perhaps any where; none but what was brought to them, and put into their hands as a common ſtock for the whole church, or the poor of it: nor indeed might any money be carried in a purſe into the temple; ſee the notes on Matt. x. 9. and Mark xi. 16. tho' doubtleſs they might carry it in their hands, or otherwiſe, for the offerings, or for the poor, or this man would not have lain here for alms. But ſuch as I have, give I thee; meaning the gift of healing; not that he communicated that to him, but exerciſed the gift upon him, by curing him of his lameneſs; and which was much preferable to large quantities of gold and ſilver, had he had them to give unto him: in the name of Jeſus Chriſt of Nazareth; ſignifying, that it was by the command of Chriſt he ſaid what follows; and by his power he wrought the cure which commenced upon it; even by the authority and virtue of him, who was treated with ſo much contempt by the Jews, and had lately been crucified by them: in his name he bid him riſe up and walk; without making uſe of any medicines, or applying any thing to him; but believing that power would go along with the words, and ſtrength would be communicated to him, by him in whoſe name he ſpoke, he ſaid theſe words: and herein lies the difference between the miracles wrought by Chriſt, and by his diſciples; thoſe that were done by him were done in his own name, and by his own power; thoſe that were performed by his diſciples, were done in the name of Chriſt, and by his power alone; and the Jews themſelves own, that the diſciples performed cures, בשמיה ישו, in the name of Jeſus[a].

Ver. 7. And he took him by the right hand, &c.] In imitation of Chriſt, whom he had often ſeen, uſing the ſame action on ſuch occaſions: and lift him up; believing he was cured, and that it might be manifeſt. The word him is expreſſed in the Alexandrian copy, and in ſome others, and in the Oriental verſions, which is a ſupplement in our tranſlation: and immediately his feet and ankle-bones received ceived ſtrength; where, it ſeems, his lameneſs lay. The Vulgate Latin renders it, his baſes and ſoles, which may include his legs and thighs, as well as feet; and the Syriac verſion, his feet and ſoles; and the Arabic verſion, his ſoles, and the muſcles adjoining to his heels; and the Ethiopic verſion furtheſt off of all, he was ſtrengthened in his feet, and in his loins; his diſorder might be of the paralytic kind.

Ver. 8. And he leaping up, &c.] From off the bed or couch, or ground on which he lay: ſtood and walked; ſtood firm and ſtrong upon his feet, and walked about; by which it was abundantly manifeſt to himſelf and others, that he had a perfect cure. The Ethiopic verſion is a very ridiculous one, and he went with them catching fiſhes; as if upon this, before they went into the temple, he and the Apoſtles went a fiſhing together, which has not the leaſt foundation in the text: and entered with them into the temple; to join with them in divine worſhip, to acknowledge the goodneſs of God to him, and to ſhew reſpect to the inſtruments he made uſe of in his cure: and leaping; for joy of the mercy, and that it might appear to all that he was thoroughly cured of his lameneſs: and thus the prophecy in Iſ. xxxv. 6. then ſhall the lame man leap as an hart, was literally fulfilled: and praiſing God; and not the Apoſtles; for he knew that this was owing to the power of God, and could never have been done by man; tho' he might not be ungrateful to the inſtruments.

Ver. 9. And all the people, &c.] That were in the temple, ſaw him walking; who before lay on a couch, or on the ground, and was ſo lame, that he was obliged to be carried: and praiſing God; for this miraculous cure. The Arabic verſion renders it, ſaw him walking to praiſe God; that is, entering into the temple with the Apoſtles, in order to offer up the ſacrifice of praiſe to God there.

Ver. 10. And they knew it was he that ſat for alms, &c.] The Syriac verſion renders it, they knew him to be that beggar that ſat daily and aſked alms. As he was daily brought thither, and had, for many years, 'tis very likely, ſat there to aſk alms of the people as they went into the temple; he was well known by them, and they had but juſt now paſſed him, and obſerved him in the ſame condition he had for a long time been, and knew him to be the ſame. It was a clear and indiſputable point with them. At the beautiful gate of the temple; ſee the note on ver. 2. And they were all filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him; that he ſhould have a cure ſo ſuddenly, and in ſuch an extraordinary manner; they wondered at the power of God, which was ſeen in it, and that he ſhould make uſe of ſuch mean and contemptible perſons as the Apoſtles were.

Ver. 11. And as the lame man which was healed, &c.] This is left out in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, and in the Alexandrian copy, which only read, and as he held Peter and John; by their clothes or arms, either thro' fear, leſt his lameneſs ſhould return on their leaving him; or rather out of affection to them for the favour he had received, and therefore hung about them, and was loth to part with them; unleſs it was to make them known, and point them out as the authors of his cure, that they might be taken notice of by others, and the miracle be aſcribed unto them: all the people ran together unto them; to the man that was healed, and to Peter and John, when they ſaw him ſtanding, walking, and leaping, and clinging about the Apoſtles; who were in the porch that is called Solomon's; ſee the note on John x. 23. greatly wondering; at the man that was cured; at the cure that was wrought upon him; and ſtill more at the perſons who did it, and the manner in which it was done.

Ver. 12. And when Peter ſaw it, &c.] That the people ran to them, and looked wiſhly upon them, and wondered at what was done: he anſwered unto the people, ye men of Iſrael, why marvel ye at this? either at this man, who was cured of his lameneſs, or at the cure itſelf: or why look ye ſo earneſtly on us; ſuggeſting, that they ought to look to God, and obſerve his divine power, and to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, whom they had crucified, whoſe Apoſtles they were, and in whoſe name, and by whoſe power they had wrought this miracle; which ſhows that they were not ſelf-ſeeking and vain-glorious men, but diſcovers great ſincerity and integrity, much love to Chriſt, and great regard to his honour, and to the glory of God: as tho' by our own power and holineſs we had made this man to walk? as if it was any natural power of theirs; or for any merit of theirs, becauſe of their ſtrict religion and piety; or laudable converſation, as the Arabic verſion; becauſe they were mightier in themſelves and holier than others, that they had ſuch a faculty of curing lame perſons; all which they utterly reject, and place it to a right account in the next verſe. Inſtead of holineſs, the Syriac verſion reads authority; and to the ſame, or like ſenſe, the Vulgate Latin, which ſeems moſt agreeable.

Ver. 13. The God of Abraham, and of Iſaac, and of Jacob, &c.] Theſe titles and epithets of God, which are uſed in the Old Teſtament, Exod. iii. 6, 15, 16. and iv. 5. the Apoſtle chuſes to retain, partly to diſtinguiſh him from the Gods of the Gentiles, and partly to ſhew his regard to the God of Iſrael, the one, only true, and living God; and that, tho' he and his fellow Apoſtles were preachers of Chriſt, yet they were not ſetters forth of another, or a ſtrange God, but believed in the ſame God their forefathers did, and to whom they aſcribe the glory of this miracle: the God of our fathers hath glorified his ſon Jeſus; by raiſing him from the dead, ſetting him at his own right hand, and giving him the gifts of the Spirit for men; which he having beſtowed on the Apoſtles, by virtue of this they wrought this miracle, which was a means of ſetting forth the glory of Chriſt, and of putting men upon glorifying him, or aſcribing honour and glory to him. And in order to awaken their minds, to convict them of their ſin, ingratitude, and folly, the Apoſtle adds, whom ye delivered up; to Pilate, the Roman governour; having firſt ſeized him as a thief, bound him as a malefactor, and arraigned, and condemned him to death in the high-prieſt's palace as a blaſphemer: and denied him in the preſence of Pilate; or to, or againſt the face of Pilate; contrary to his ſenſe of things, who more than once called him the king of the Jews, and wrote this as the ſuperſcription over him, when they denied him to be their king Meſſiah, and the Son of God, ſaying, they had no king but Cæſar: when he was determined to let him go; or releaſe him; that is, when he judged it right that he ſhould be releaſed, as the Syriac verſion renders it; for he never came to a point, to a reſolution to let him go; tho' he thought it was but juſt and equitable that he ſhould be diſmiſſed, being, in his apprehenſion, an innocent man; and therefore preſſed it on the people to agree to releaſe him, to which he was hmſelf ſtrongly inclined.

Ver. 14. But ye denied the holy one, and the juſt, &c.] Who is holy both in his divine and human nature, and the fountain of holineſs to his people; ſee Pſ. xvi. 10. and who is juſt or righteous, both in his perſon, and in the diſcharge of his office, and has wrought a righteouſneſs for his people, which is imputed to them. Theſe characters may have a particular regard to the purity of Chriſt, as man, and to the innocence of his life, and the harmleſſneſs of his actions, in oppoſition to the unjuſt charges of his enemies, and the baſe treatment he met with from them who denied him to be the Chriſt, the redeemer and ſaviour: and deſired a murtherer to be granted unto you; when it was put to their choice, who they would have releaſed, Chriſt or Barabbas; they requeſted it as a favour, and deſired they might be gratified in having Barabbas, a thief, and a robber, who, with others, had raiſed an inſurrection, and committed murder in it, releaſed, and Chriſt crucified. They deſired an act of grace for him, and a ſentence of condemnation to a moſt ſhameful and painful death on Chriſt.

Ver. 15. And killed the prince of life, &c.] Or author of life, natural, ſpiritual, and eternal; who not only is the living God, and has life in himſelf; and as man, had ſuch a power over his own life, as no man ever had; but he is the author of a ſpiritual reſurrection from the death of ſin, to a life of grace, and has procured eternal life for his people, and gives it to them. Now this Lord of life and glory they crucified. His death is laid to them becauſe it was at their requeſt, and thro' their inſtigation, and at their earneſt ſolicitations, that Pilate condemned him, and delivered him to his ſoldiers to crucify him. Whom God hath raiſed from the dead; notwithſtanding all their ſpite and malice; ſo that they had not their whole will, and all their end, not being able to retain him under the power of death, and under the ſhame and reproach of the croſs; and this the Apoſtle the rather mentions, as being the reaſon why ſuch gifts, and ſuch power were beſtowed on them to do the miracles they did. Whereof we are witneſſes; either of Chriſt, for it may be rendered, whoſe witneſſes we are; they teſtifying of his perſon, office, grace, and righteouſneſs; or of the reſurrection of Chriſt, of which they were eye-witneſſes; and of which they had the fulleſt proof, and were capable of bearing a ſufficient teſtimony, and for which they were choſen and appointed.

Ver. 16. And his name through faith in his name, &c.] That is, the name of Chriſt, or the power of Chriſt, thro' the faith of the Apoſtles in him, while they made uſe of his name, and ſaid, in the name of Jeſus Chriſt of Nazareth, &c. ver. 6. or Chriſt, thro' the faith of the lame man in him; and when his name was uſed in this manner by the Apoſtles; not that either their faith, or his, had any cauſal influence on the cure, but was the way and means in which they, glorifying Chriſt, he was pleaſed to effect this cure: hath made this man ſtrong; who was before exceeding weak; ſtrengthened the parts that were infirm, his feet and ankles, and conſolidated them, ſo that he could uſe them, and walk with them: whom ye ſee and know; they knew him before, when he was lame, and now knew him to be the ſame man, and whom they ſaw now perfectly well; ſo that they could be appealed to that there was no fraud or impoſture in the caſe: yea, the faith which is by him; by Chriſt, of which he is the object, and the author, and finiſher: this is repeated out of affection to Chriſt, and a paſſionate concern for the glory of his name; or becauſe that faith, in one clauſe, may regard the faith of the Apoſtles, and in the other, the faith of the man that was cured: hath given him this perfect ſoundneſs in the preſence of you all; he had perfect ſoundneſs both in body and mind; tho' the former may chiefly be deſigned, it being that which was only viſible to theſe perſons; and which was done, not in a corner, but publickly, before them all, at the gate of the temple, where the multitude paſſed to and fro.

Ver. 17. And now, brethren, &c.] He calls them brethren, becauſe they were ſo according to the fleſh; and to teſtify his cordial love and affection for them. I wot, or I know, that through ignorance ye did it; delivered up Jeſus into the hands of Pilate; denied him to be the Meſſiah before him; preferred a murderer to him, and put him to death. As did alſo your rulers; the members of the Sanhedrim, ſome of them; ſee 1 Cor. ii. 8. for others of them knew him to be the Meſſiah, to be ſent of God, by the miracles he did, and yet blaſphemouſly aſcribed them to ſatan; and ſo ſinning againſt light and knowledge, in ſuch a malicious manner, ſinned the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, to which ignorance is here oppoſed; and which did not excuſe from ſin; nor was it itſelf without ſin; nor is it oppoſed to any ſin, but to this now mentioned.

Ver. 18. But thoſe things which God before had ſhewed, &c.] In the ſcriptures of the Old Teſtament, concerning the betraying of the Meſſiah, and his ſufferings and death, with the various cauſes, concomitants, and circumſtances of them: by the mouths of all his prophets; which were ſince the world began; ſome pointing out one thing or circumſtance, and ſome another: that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer. The Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions read, that his Chriſt ſhould ſuffer; but then they leave out the word his in the preceding clauſe, which they put into this; and this entire clauſe is omitted in the Alexandrian copy: he hath ſo fulfilled; in the manner he has, ſo exactly, ſo perfectly agreeable to the predictions of them, and yet were unknown to the perſons by whom they were fulfilled. So wiſely and ſurprizingly are things ordered and overruled by the wiſe providence of God, who is a God of knowledge, and by whom all actions are weighed.

Ver. 19. Repent ye therefore, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion adds, and be baptized, as in ch. ii. 38. ſee the note there: and be converted. The Apoſtles ſenſe is, repent of the ſin of crucifying Chriſt, which is what he had been charging them with, and turn unto him, and acknowledge him as the Meſſiah; receive his doctrines, and ſubmit to his ordinances; externally reform in life and converſation, and bring forth fruits meet for repentance, ſuch as will ſhew it to be true and genuine: that your ſins may be blotted out; or forgiven, ſee Pſ. li. 9. Iſ. xliii. 25. and xliv. 22. Not that repentance and reformation procure the pardon of ſin, or are the cauſes of it, for forgiveneſs is intirely owing to the free grace of God, and blood of Chriſt; but inaſmuch as that is only manifeſted and applied to repenting and converted ſinners; and who are encouraged to repent, and turn to the Lord from the promiſe of pardon; it is incumbent on them, and is their intereſt ſo to do, that they may have a diſcovery of the remiſſion of their ſins by the blood of Chriſt. Though no other repentance and converſion may be here meant than an external one; and the blotting out of ſin, and forgiveneſs of it, may intend no other than the removing a preſent calamity, or the averting a threatened judgment, or the deliverance of perſons from national ruin, Exod. xxxii. 32. 1 Kings viii. 34—39. Theſe Jews had crucified the Lord of glory, and for this ſin were threatened with miſerable deſtruction; the Apoſtle therefore exhorteth them to repentance for it, and to a converſion to the Meſſiah, that ſo when ruin ſhould come upon their nation, they might be delivered from the general calamity; when it would be terrible times to the unbelieving and impenitent Jews, but times of refreſhment, eaſe, peace, and reſt from perſecution, to the believers, as is next expreſſed. When the times of refreſhing ſhall come from the preſence of the Lord; or that the times of refreſhing may come, as the Syriac verſion; either ſeaſons of ſpiritual refreſhment, joy, and peace, thro' the great and precious promiſes of the Goſpel, and by the application of the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, to ſuch penitent and converted ſinners; which refreſhment and comfort, come from the Lord, and are accompanied with his gracious preſence: or elſe ſeaſons of reſt, and deliverance from the violent heat of perſecution; which was the caſe of the ſaints at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; they were not only ſaved from that ruin, but delivered from the wrath of their moſt implacable enemies. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, and the day of mercy ſhall come from the preſence of the Lord; repenting ſinners find mercy; and a diſcovery of pardon is a time of mercy; and when God grants this, he affords his preſence. The Jews call the world to come a time of refreſhment; and ſay[b], "better is one hour, של קורת רוח, of refreſhment, in the world to come, than the whole life of this world."

Ver. 20. And he ſhall ſend Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] Or that he may ſend Jeſus Chriſt, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it: not in perſon, for this regards neither his firſt, nor his ſecond coming, both which might be terrible to the awakened Jews; the former, becauſe he had been ſent, and was come, and was gone again; and therefore might fear there was no hope for them, who had denied him, and crucified him; the latter, becauſe they might conclude he would be ſent, and come to take vengeance on them, when they ſhould look upon him whom they had pierced with horror and trembling; but here it regards his being ſent, and his coming in the miniſtration of the word, and by his Spirit, to the comfort of their ſouls: which before was preached unto you; in the writings of the Old Teſtament, in the books of Moſes, and of the prophets, ver. 22, 24. or, as it is read in the Alexandrian copy, and in other copies, and in the Complutenſian edition, and in the Syriac and Arabic verſions, who was predetermined or prepared for you; that is, in the purpoſes, council, and covenant of God. The Ethiopic verſion reads, whom he before anointed; to be prophet, prieſt, and king; and from each of theſe conſiderations much comfort might be drawn by ſenſible ſinners.

Ver. 21. Whom the heaven muſt receive, &c.] Hold and retain in his human nature; and which does not at all hinder or confront his miſſion, and coming to his people, in the mean while, in a ſpiritual way and manner, to their joy and comfort: or, who muſt receive heaven; the kingdom, and glory, and reign there: until the times of the reſtitution of all things: not of all created beings to their original eſtate, which there is no reaſon to believe ever will be; or of the churches of Chriſt to purity of doctrine, diſcipline, and converſation, which is to be hoped for, and will be in the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt; but of the accompliſhment of all promiſes and propheſies concerning the bringing in the fulneſs of the Gentiles, and the converſion of the Jews, and ſo the gathering in all the elect of God; and concerning all the glorious things ſpoken of the church of Chriſt in the latter day; which ſenſe is confirmed by what follows: which God hath ſpoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, ſince the world began; ever ſince the world was, God has had more or leſs holy men, ſet apart and ſanctified by him, and on whom he beſtowed the ſpirit of prophecy; and by the mouth of every one of theſe he has ſpoken one thing or another concerning his church and people, and the filling up of the number of them, or the gathering of them all in; and till this is done, Chriſt will remain in heaven and reign there: and this ſenſe is further confirmed by the Syriac and Arabic verſions, the former rendring the words, until the filling or fulfilling of the times of all things; and the latter, until the times which will confirm the perfection of all the words which God hath ſpoken, &c. and from the ſenſe of the word uſed, which ſome lexicographers explain by τελειωσις, perfection or fulfilling.

Ver. 22. For Moſes truly ſaid unto the fathers, &c.] The Jewiſh fathers, the Iſraelites in the times of Moſes. The Ethiopic verſion reads, our fathers. This phraſe, unto the fathers, is left out in the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions, and in the Alexandrian copy: the paſſages referr'd to are in Deut. xviii. 15, 19. a prophet ſhall the Lord your God raiſe up unto you; which is not to be underſtood of a ſucceſſion of prophets, as ſome of the Jewiſh writers[c] think; for the Jews never had a conſtant ſucceſſion of prophets, and thoſe they had, were not like to Moſes: but of a ſingle prophet, and ſo the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan underſtood it; but not to be applied to Joſhua, as ſome[d], or to Jeremiah[e] as others, or to David[f]; but to the Meſſiah, and which is the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who anſwers to all the characters: he was a prophet in every ſenſe, who brought a revelation of the divine will, taught the way, and explained the ſcriptures of truth perfectly, and foretold things to come; he was raiſed up by the Lord God of Iſrael, and was anointed by his Spirit, and ſent by him, and that to the people of the Jews, to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael; he was the miniſter of the circumciſion: of your brethren; in the Hebrew text in Deut. xviii. 15. 'tis alſo ſaid, out of the midſt of thee; but as theſe phraſes are ſynonymous, the apoſtle here only retains one of them, which ſuggeſts that this prophet the Meſſiah, ſhould be of Jewiſh extract; as Jeſus was, of the ſeed of David, and a ſon of Abraham: like unto me; that is to Moſes, who is the perſon ſpeaking, between whom and Chriſt there is an agreement; the law was given by Moſes, and the Goſpel came by Chriſt; Moſes was a mediator between God and the people of Iſrael, and Chriſt is the mediator between God and men; Moſes, under God, was an inſtrument of redeeming the people of Iſrael out of Egypt, and Chriſt, he is the redeemer of his people from ſin, ſatan, and the law, and all their enemies: the Jews[g] have a common ſaying, "as was the firſt redeemer, ſo ſhall be the laſt redeemer;" and they moreover obſerve[h], that "as Iſrael was redeemed in the month Niſan, ſo they ſhall be redeemed in the month Niſan;" in the future redemption by the Meſſiah: let the Jews abide by this; the Meſſiah Jeſus ſuffered in the month Niſan, and obtained eternal redemption for his people: one of their [i] writers has a notion, that when the Meſſiah comes, there will be the ſame diſpoſition of the conſtellations, as when Moſes brought the people out of Egypt, and gave them the law; and that the conjunction will be of Jupiter and Saturn, in the conſtellation Piſces: there was likewiſe between Moſes and Chriſt, an agreement in the miracles they wrought, and in other things: him ſhall ye hear in all things, whatſoever he ſhall ſay unto you; all his doctrines are to be believed, embraced, and profeſſed; and all his commands are to be obeyed, and all his ordinances ſubmitted to; and this is hearing, or hearkening to him in all things, delivered or enjoined by him.

Ver. 23. And it ſhall come to paſs, that every ſoul, &c.] Every perſon, man or woman: which will not hear that prophet; neither believe what he ſays, nor do what he commands; or as it is in Deut. xviii. 19. will not hearken unto my words which he ſhall ſpeak in my name; for he that hears not him, hearkens not to God, in whoſe name he ſpeaks, and whoſe word he delivers: ſhall be deſtroyed from among the people; in the Hebrew text it is, I will require it of him; the Hebrew word, מעמו, there uſed, by having different points, may be rendered of him, or from his people, which ſeems to be the reaſon of this difference: and requiring often intends puniſhment, or a cutting off; or as Aben Ezra explains it here, "death by the hand of heaven;" that is, immediate deſtruction from God; and ſo Maimonides ſays [k], he that tranſgreſſes the words of that prophet, is guilty of death by the hand of heaven; and which was remarkably fulfilled in the Jewiſh nation, for their rejection of Jeſus as the true Meſſiah, and that prophet.

Ver. 24. Yea, and all the prophets from Samuel, &c.] Who was, as the Jews call him, רבן של נביאים, the maſter of the prophets [l]; and they ſay, that Samuel the prophet is, הנביא הרישון, the firſt prophet in the chain of the Kabbala [m]; and therefore is here particularly mentioned, as at the head of the prophets, and next to Moſes; there being but very few prophets between him and Moſes, when there were many after him; and in his days, the ſchools of the prophets were ſet up: now not only Moſes ſpoke of Chriſt, but all the prophets from the time of Samuel; in the books that bear his name, ſtands a famous prophecy concerning Chriſt, 2 Sam. vii. 13, 14, 16. And thoſe that follow after; in order, as David, Solomon, Iſaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, &c. and as many as have ſpoken; any thing by way of prophecy: have likewiſe foretold of theſe days; of the days of the Meſſiah, of his perſon, office, incarnation, obedience, ſufferings, death, reſurrection, aſcenſion, the pouring down of the Spirit, the times of refreſhing, the Goſpel diſpenſation, the converſion of the Jews, the calling of the Gentiles, and the gathering in all the elect of God.

Ver. 25. Ye are the children of the prophets, &c.] Of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, who are called prophets, Pſal. cv. 15. being lineally and naturally deſcended from them; to them belonged the prophecies of the Old Teſtament concerning the Meſſiah, and the promiſes of him; they were heirs of them: and of the covenant which God made with our fathers; ſo the phraſe, בני ברית, children of the covenant, is uſed by the Jews, as peculiar to themſelves; ſee the note on Rom. ix. 8. and ſo, בר אוריין, a ſon of the law [n], is alſo uſed by them in a like ſenſe; the law, the covenant, and the promiſes, externally belonging to them: ſaying unto Abraham, Gen. xxii. 18. and in thy ſeed ſhall all the kindreds of the earth be bleſſed; meaning the Meſſiah, that ſprung from him, and is called the ſon of Abraham; in whom, not only all Abraham's ſpiritual ſeed among the Jews, or the elect of God in that nation, and who were truly the children of Abraham, and of the promiſe, but even all the choſen of God among the Gentiles, in every nation, and of every kindred and family among them, are bleſſed in Chriſt, with all ſpiritual bleſſings; with peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, redemption, and ſalvation: for this is not a form of bleſſing the Gentiles would uſe, when they bleſſed themſelves, or others; ſaying, God bleſs thee, as he bleſſed Abraham's ſeed; for no one inſtance can be produced, when the Gentiles ever uſed ſuch a form of bleſſing as this; but a prophecy of the calling of the Gentiles by the Meſſiah, and of their being bleſſed in him; ſee Gal. iii. 16. and though this ſenſe is departed from by modern Jews, it was what the ancient ſynagogue gave into [o].

Ver. 26. Unto you firſt, God having raiſed his ſon Jeſus, &c.] Which may be underſtood, either of the incarnation of Chriſt, and his exhibition in the fleſh; which is ſometimes expreſſed by raiſing him up, and is no other than the miſſion, or manifeſtation of him in human nature, as in Luke i. 69. Acts xiii. 23. Or of the reſurrection of him from the dead, and the exaltation of him at the right hand of God: ſent him to bleſs you; in perſon, according to the former ſenſe; for he was indeed ſent only to the people of Iſrael, and to them he preached; many of whom were bleſſed with converting grace under his miniſtry; but according to the latter ſenſe, and which ſeems moſt agreeable, he was ſent in the miniſtry of the word, and came by his Spirit, firſt to the Jews, among whom the Goſpel was firſt preached for a while, and was bleſſed to the converſion of many thouſands among them, both in Judea, and in the nations of the world, where they were diſperſed: in turning away every one of you from his iniquities; in this the bleſſing lay, and is rightly in our verſion aſcribed to Chriſt, and to the power of his grace, in the miniſtration of the Goſpel; and not to themſelves, as in many other verſions; as the Syriac verſion, if ye convert yourſelves, and turn from your evils; making it both their own act, and the condition of their being bleſſed; and the Arabic verſion likewiſe, ſo that every one of you departs from his wickedneſs; but that work is Chriſt's, and this is the bleſſing of grace he himſelf beſtows, and is a fruit of redemption by his blood, Tit. ii. 14.

CHAP. IV.

Ver. 1. AND as they ſpake unto the people, &c.] For though only mention is made of Peter's preaching in the preceding chapter, yet doubtleſs John preached as well as he; either in turn, or to a part of the people at ſome diſtance: and this ſhows their diligence, faithfulneſs, and integrity, in the miniſtration of the word; and it is recorded to their honour, that whilſt they were about their maſter's buſineſs, and diſcharging the duty of their office, the prieſts, and the captain of the temple, and the Sadducees came upon them; by agreement, with great violence, and at unawares: the prieſts might be thoſe who kept the watch in the temple; for "in three places the prieſts kept "watch, in the houſe of the ſanctuary; in the "houſe of Abtines, in the houſe of Nitſots, and "in the houſe of Moked, and the Levites in one "and twenty places [p]." And it now being even-tide, they might be about to take their ſtands; and the captain of the temple might be he, whom they call, איש הר בית, the man of the mountain of the houſe; who was, שר, a ruler, or governor, and ממונה, a preſident over all the wards [q]; he is ſometimes called, ראש משמר, the head of the ward [r]; and of him it is ſaid [s], "the man of the moun-"tain of the houſe goes his round through every "ward, with burning torches before him; and every "ward that does not ſtand (is not on his feet) the "man of the mountain of the houſe ſays to him, "peace be to thee; and if he obſerves that he is "aſleep, he ſtrikes him with his ſtaff, and he has "power to burn his garments." The Vulgate Latin and the Oriental verſions read in the plural number, as in Luke xxii. 4, 52. ſee the notes there. The Sadducees were a ſect among the Jews, that denied the reſurrection of the dead; of their riſe, name, and tenets, ſee the note on Matt. iii. 7.

Ver. 2. Being grieved that they taught the people, &c.] Any doctrine, and eſpecially that which follows, and which particularly gave uneaſineſs to the Sadducees; they were exceedingly diſtreſſed by it; it pained them to the very heart, and they were filled with wrath and indignation: and preached through, or in Jeſus, the reſurrection of the dead; they not only preached the doctrine of the reſurrection of the dead in general, but gave an inſtance and proof of it in the reſurrection of Chriſt, affirming that he was riſen from the dead; and they alſo preached up the reſurrection of the dead in his name, and aſſerted, that he would be the author of it, and it would be effected by his power: ſo that their doctrine was equally diſagreeable to the Phariſees and Sadducees; to the Sadducees, who denied that there was, or would be any reſurrection of the dead; and to the Phariſees, who though they believed it, yet were highly offended that it ſhould be ſaid, that Jeſus was riſen from the dead; and that the general reſurrection of the dead ſhould be attributed to him.

Ver. 3. And they laid hands on them, &c.] The Arabic verſion renders it, on both; on Peter and John; ſeized them by force, and drew them out of the temple: and put them in hold unto the next day; not in the common publick priſon, as in ch. v. 18. but they put them into the hands, and under the care and cuſtody of a ſett of men, to keep and guard them; that they might not go away, until they had an opportunity of bringing them before the Sanhedrim, to be examined and puniſhed by them: for it was now even-tide; it was at the ninth hour, or about three o'clock in the afternoon, when Peter and John went up to the temple, where they healed the lame man; after which, both of them preached to the people; ſo that it muſt now be evening; at leaſt, as the Syriac verſion renders it, the evening was near, or was drawing on.

Ver. 4. Howbeit, many of them which heard the word, &c.] The doctrine of the Goſpel, preached by Peter and John: believed; the report of it, and in Chriſt, as riſen from the dead, which was the ſum and ſubſtance of it: and this they did, notwithſtanding the oppoſition made by the prieſts, the captain of the temple, and the Sadducees, and the violence they uſed to the apoſtles; for though they kept their perſons in hold, they could not ſtop the free courſe of the word, which ran and was glorified: and the number of the men was about five thouſand; or was five thouſand, as the Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions read; that is the number, not of the hearers, but of them that believed, was ſo many; and ſo read the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions: there were ſo many perſons converted at this time; for this number does not include the three thouſand that were converted under the firſt ſermon, but regards thoſe who now became true believers, and were added to the church; ſo that there were now eight thouſand perſons added to it; a great increaſe indeed! now had Chriſt the dew of his youth, and now were theſe fiſhermen fiſhers of men indeed: that our Lord's feeding five thouſand men with five barley loaves and two fiſhes, ſhould have any regard to the converſion of theſe five thouſand men, is but a conceit.

Ver. 5. And it came to paſs on the morrow, &c.] The diſciples being kept in cuſtody all night: that their rulers, and elders, and Scribes; that is, their eccleſiaſtical rulers; the chief prieſts, who with the Scribes and elders of the people, made up the great council at Jeruſalem, conſiſting of ſeventy-one perſons, ſo they are called in Matt. xxvi. 3, 57. and xxvii. 1. Mark xiv. 53. and xv. 1.

Ver. 6. And Annas the high prieſt, &c.] So called, either becauſe he had been an high prieſt, though he was not now, but Caiaphas his ſon-in-law; or becauſe he was the Sagan of the high prieſt, and had all the other prieſts under his government; and is mentioned firſt, becauſe he was father-in-law to Caiaphas; ſee the note on Luke iii. 2. he could not be called ſo, becauſe he was, נשיא, prince, or preſident of the council; for not he, but Gamaliel was preſident at this time. And Caiaphas; who was properly high prieſt, and continued ſo for three years after the death of Chriſt: and John; who is thought by Dr. Lightfoot to be the ſame with Jochanan, or John ben Zaccai; a famous Jewiſh Rabbi, who lived at this time, and until, and after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: this Rabbi was, כהן, a prieſt [t], as this John was, of the kindred of the high prieſt; he lived alſo at Jeruſalem; for it is ſaid of him [u], that he ſat in the ſhadow of the temple, and expounded all the whole day; and a very remarkable ſtory is told of him, which happened pened juſt about this time[w]; which is, that "forty years before the deſtruction of the temple—— the doors of the temple opened of themſelves, when Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai reproved them, ſaying, O temple, temple, wherefore doſt thou fright thyſelf; I know thee, that thine end ſhall be, to be deſtroyed; for ſo propheſied of thee Zechariah, the ſon of Iddo, Zech. xi. 1. Open thy doors, O Lebanon, &c." The chief objection to him, as that learned writer obſerves, is, that he lived and died a Phariſee, whereas this John ſeems to have been a Sadducee; ſee ch. v. 17. This puts me in mind of John the high prieſt, who miniſtred in the high prieſthood fourſcore years, and at laſt became a Sadducee[x]: Beza's ancient copy reads Jonathan: and Alexander; whoſe ſurname was Lyſimachus, and had the title of Alabarcha; he was a very rich man[y]: after Alexander the great had been at Jeruſalem, this name became frequent among the Jews; and it is ſaid[z] to be promiſed him, and was fulfilled, that every ſon that was born to the prieſts that year he entered Jeruſalem, ſhould be called Alexander; and therefore it is no wonder, to hear of an Alexander among the kindred of the high prieſt; frequent mention is made of, ר' אלכסנדרי, Rabbi Alexander, in the Jewiſh writings[a]: and as many as were of the kindred of the high prieſt; by whoſe means they were become members of the Sanhedrim: were gathered together at Jeruſalem; where the great council only ſat, until the deſtruction of it; it ſeems by this, that ſome of the members of it lived in the country; it may be in ſome of the villages adjacent, where they might be eaſily and quickly ſent for, upon any occaſion, as they very likely now were; the Syriac verſion leaves out the words at Jeruſalem.

Ver. 7. And when they had ſet them in the midſt, &c.] Of the aſſembly, as the Ethiopic verſion adds; in the middle of the Sanhedrim, which ſat in a ſemicircular form; or as the Jews expreſs it, as the half of a round corn floor, or as a half moon, and not in a perfect circle; becauſe it was neceſſary that the contending parties, and the witneſſes, might go in and ſpeak before them all[b]; ſo that thoſe that were ſet before them, were placed in the middle of them: and here Peter and John were ſet; ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, when they ſet both; they ſent for them out of the hold, or cuſtody, where they had been all night, and ordered them to be brought before them, to be examined about their doctrine and practice: they aſked, by what power, or by what name have ye done this? they enquired of them, whether it was by a natural, or by a divine, or by a diabolical power, that they had wrought the cure upon the lame man? whether it was by the uſe of medicine, or by the help of magic art, and the aſſiſtance of the devil, which they were very ready to charge Chriſt and his diſciples with? or whether they pretended to a divine and ſupernatural aid? and alſo what name they had made uſe of, and by whoſe authority they acted?

Ver. 8. Then Peter filled with the Holy Ghoſt, &c.] At that very inſtant, having reeeived a freſh meaſure of the gifts and graces of the Spirit, beſides what he had poured forth upon him at the day of pentecoſt; ſo that he had great courage and preſence of mind, and freedom of ſpeech, as Chriſt had promiſed his diſciples they ſhould have, when they were brought before governours and magiſtrates, Matt. x. 18, 19, 20. Luke xxi. 14, 15. The caſe was much altered with Peter, he who but a little while ago was frightened by a ſervant maid, now ſtands before the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, with undaunted courage and reſolution: and ſaid unto them, ye rulers of the people, and elders of Iſrael; he addreſſes them in a very handſome manner, and gives them their proper titles as magiſtrates; which ought to be done, by men and chriſtians; honour ſhould be given, to whom honour is due: the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, and ſome copies, add hear, which ſeems very neceſſary; he called for audience, or deſired to be heard a few words, in the defence of himſelf and fellow apoſtle, and in anſwer to their queſtions.

Ver. 9. If we this day be examined of the good deed, &c.] Or ſeeing we are; for it was not a matter of doubt, but a clear caſe, that they were brought into court, and were paſſing under an examination, about the cure of the lame man; which the apoſtle rightly calls a good deed, it being done in faith, and to the glory of God, and for the good of the man; and hereby tacitly ſuggeſts, that they were dealt very hardly with, to be ſeized and kept in cuſtody, and be called in queſtion, for doing an action ſo beneficent and kind, as this was, which was done to the impotent man; who could not help himſelf, nor get his bread any other way, than by begging: by what means he is made whole; reſtored to perfect health, and the proper uſe of his limbs; that is, by what power, and in what name this was done; the anſwer is ready, and it is as follows.

Ver. 10. Be it known unto you all, &c.] The members of the Sanhedrim: and to all the people of Iſrael; who might hear of this affair; for the apoſtle was not aſhamed of what he had done, nor of the perſon in whoſe name he had done it: that by the name of Jeſus Chriſt of Nazareth; by calling on that name, and by making uſe of it, and by the power and authority of Jeſus Chriſt, who by way of contempt was called the Nazarene: whom ye crucified; for though Pilate delivered him to be crucified, and the Roman ſoldiers did crucify him, yet this was at the requeſt and inſtigation of the chief prieſts, Scribes, and elders; and therefore it is aſcribed to them, who were bent upon his death; and no other would ſatisfy them, but the ſhameful and painful death of the croſs: whom God raiſed from the dead; of which the apoſtles were witneſſes, having ſeen him and converſed with him after his reſurrection; and this was the doctrine they were ſent to publiſh, and for which they were apprehended and detained in cuſtody; but this did not deter them from preaching it, no, not before the Sanhedrim; which was an inſtance of great courage and faithfulneſs: and this is the rather mentioned, to ſhow, that it was not by the name of one that was dead, but of one that was alive, that this cure was performed; as well as to obſerve to them, that their efforts againſt Chriſt were vain and fruitleſs: even by him doth this man ſtand here before you whole; from whence it appears, as well as from ver. 18. that the man that was healed, was now preſent; and either he was laid hold on, and detained in cuſtody with the apoſtles, in hope to diſcover a fraud if they could; or hearing that the apoſtles were before the Sanhedrim, and examining on his account, might come of himſelf, in order to atteſt and prove the matter of fact, and to vindicate them.

Ver. 11. This is the ſtone, &c.] That is, this Jeſus of Nazareth, by whoſe name the lame man was made whole, is that ſtone ſpoken of, in Pſal. cxviii. 22. by whom is meant the true Meſſiah, comparable to a ſtone, for his ſtrength and duration, and uſefulneſs, as a foundation and corner ſtone, in the ſpiritual building of the church; and yet notwithſtanding is the ſtone which was ſet at nought of you builders; the prieſts, elders, and Scribes; who were fond of being called builders, but made miſerable work of it; deſpiſing and rejecting the ſtone of Iſrael, and inſtead of him as a foundation, built themſelves and others, on the traditions of the elders, and their own righteouſneſs: but though Chriſt was rejected by them, both in perſon and in doctrine, and was ignominiouſly treated, and at laſt put to death, yet he was raiſed from the dead, and exalted at the right hand of God; and is the ſtone, which is become the head of the corner; or the chief corner ſtone, that adorns, ſtrengthens, knits, and keeps together, the whole building; in which Jews and Gentiles, ſaints in all ages and places, even all the elect of God, are united together; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 42.

Ver. 12. Neither is there ſalvation in any other, &c.] Meaning not corporal healing, but ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation; the Syriac verſion renders it, neither is there, פורקנא, redemption in any other: Chriſt is the only Saviour and Redeemer, who was promiſed and propheſied of as ſuch; who has ſaved and redeemed his people from the law, ſin, and ſatan; nor is ſalvation to be ſought and hoped for, from any other; not in a man's ſelf, nor in any other creature, angels or men; not in and by his own works, and legal righteouſneſs; not by obedience to the law of Moſes, moral or ceremonial; nor by the light of nature, much leſs by an obſervance of the traditions of the elders: for there is none other name; thing or perſon, be it ever ſo great, or whatever ſhow of power and ſtrength, of holineſs and religion, it makes; as the name of kings, princes, and the great men in the world; or of miniſters and preachers in the church; or even of chriſtians and believers, which may be only a name to live; none but the name of Jeſus, his perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs: under heaven; throughout the whole earth, in all the nations and kingdoms of it; nor even in heaven itſelf, among all the mighty angels there, thrones, dominions, principalities, and powers; none but the Father and the Spirit, who are one with Chriſt: there is none but he given among men; and he has been freely given by his Father, as an inſtance of his matchleſs love to the world; and alſo freely given by himſelf, to be a ſacrifice for the ſins of his people; and is freely preached among men, as the only Saviour of them; for there is no other, whereby we muſt be ſaved: God reſolved in his purpoſes and decrees, in his council and covenant, upon the ſalvation of his choſen people; and he appointed his Son to be the ſalvation of them, and determined he would ſave them by him, and by no other, and in no other way; wherefore, whoever are ſaved, muſt be ſaved by him; ſee Hoſ. i. 7. the Arabic verſion adds, unleſs by him only.

Ver. 13. Now when they ſaw the boldneſs of Peter and John, &c.] With what courage and intrepidity they ſtood before them, the preſence of mind they had, and the freedom of ſpeech they uſed, as the word properly ſignifies: they obſerved their elocution, the juſtneſs of their diction, the propriety of their language, and the ſtrength and nervouſneſs of their reaſoning; as well as their great reſolution, conſtancy, and firmneſs of mind; not being afraid to profeſs the name of Chriſt, or to charge them with the murder of him; and that they ſeemed to be determined, to abide by him at all events; to aſſert him to be the true Meſſiah, though rejected by the Jewiſh builders; and that he was riſen from the dead; and not only to aſcribe unto him the miracle now wrought, but the ſalvation of men; and to declare, that there was none in any other but him: the Syriac verſion renders it, when they heard the word of Simeon and John, which they ſpoke openly; and freely, without any reſerve: they anſwered readily to the queſtion, that it was by the name of Jeſus of Nazareth, that they had done this miracle; they dealt freely with the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, and told them in ſo many words, that they were the crucifiers of Chriſt, and the rejecters of that ſtone, which God had made the head of the corner, and that there was no ſalvation for them in any other: it appears from hence, that John ſpoke as well as Peter, though his words are not recorded: and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men; not by what they now ſaid, but by what they heard and underſtood of them before: they were informed that they were unlearned men, or who did not underſtand letters; not but that they had learned their mother-tongue, and could read the ſcriptures; but they had not had a liberal education; they had not been brought up at the feet of any of the doctors, in any of the ſchools and univerſities of the Jews; they were not trained up in, and converſant with, the nice diſtinctions, ſubtle argumentations, and deciſions of the learned doctors, in the interpretation of the laws of Moſes, and the traditions of the elders: and underſtood that they were alſo ignorant men, ιδιωται, idiots, or private men; for men might be unlearned, and yet not be ſuch; it ſeems the high prieſts themſelves, were ſometimes unlearned men: hence on the day of atonement, "they uſed to read before him, in the "order of the day, and ſay to him, Lord high-"prieſt, read thou with thine own mouth; perhaps "thou haſt forgot, or it may be, לא למרת, thou "haſt not learned[c]." The Jews have adopted the word here uſed, into their language; and expreſs by it, ſometimes a man that is mean, abject, and contemptible: thus inſtead of children of baſe men, or without a name, the Targumiſt on Job xxx. 8. reads, בני הדיוטין, the children of idiots, or private men: and in the Targum on 1 Sam. xviii. 23. and xxiv. 15. it is uſed for one lightly eſteemed, and comparable to a flea: it ſometimes deſigns perſons in a private life, though men of learning and knowledge, in diſtinction from thoſe that are in office; ſo we read[d], that "three kings, and four הדיוטות, "private perſons, have no part in the world to "come; the three kings are Jeroboam, Ahab, and "Manaſſeh; the four idiots, or private men, are "Balaam, Doeg, Achitophel, and Gehazi." And ſo a bench of idiots, or private men, is diſtinguiſhed from a bench of authorized and approved judges[e]; and ſometimes the word is uſed of ſuch, as are diſtinguiſhed from doctors, or wiſe men; ſo when it is ſaid[f], "the command of plucking off "the ſhoe, is done before three judges, and "though the three are idiots;" the note of Maimonides upon it is, "not wiſe men, but that know "how to read the language," the Hebrew language: and ſuch were the diſciples, in every ſenſe of the word; they were mean and abject, poor fiſhermen, men of no name and figure, that were in no office, and exalted ſtation of life, nor verſed in Jewiſh learning, but common private men: ſo that they marvelled; the Sanhedrim were aſtoniſhed to hear them talk with ſo much fluency and pertinence: and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jeſus; looking wiſhly upon them, they knew them again, and remembered that they were perſons that were the diſciples of Jeſus, and whom they had ſeen in company with him; not in the high-prieſt's palace, when Jeſus was arraigned, examined, and condemed there; tho' Peter, and ſome think John were there at that time, yet not to be obſerved and taken notice of by the Sanhedrim; but in the temple, where Jeſus taught, and where the chief-prieſts, Scribes, and elders came, and diſputed with him about his authority, and cavilled at him, Matt. xxi. 15, 23.

Ver. 14. And beholding the man which was healed, &c.] Who either was taken into cuſtody, and brought before the Sanhedrim, along with the Apoſtles; or rather, who came here of his own accord to be witneſs for them: for he was ſtanding with them; in company with them, and cloſe by them, and on their ſide; and ſo they could, and did point and appeal unto him, who was ready to juſtify, that it was not by the uſe of medicine, or of magic art, or in the name of ſatan and Beelzebub, but by the name of Jeſus Chriſt of Nazareth, that his cure was wrought: they could ſay nothing againſt it; they could not gainſay the fact, for the man was before them, perfectly well, whom they perſonally knew, by his lying ſo long at the gate of the temple; they knew that he had been lame from his mother's womb, who was now above forty years of age; and they could ſay nothing againſt the manner of his cure, who was preſent to atteſt it; nor could they ſay any thing againſt them; the Apoſtles, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read; they could not blame them for doing it, it being a good deed, nor charge them with fraud and impoſture.

Ver. 15. But when they had commanded them, &c.] That is, when the Sanhedrim had ordered the Apoſtles; or commanded that both, as the Arabic verſion reads, both Peter and John; and, it may be, the man that was healed too: to go aſide out of the council; or place where the council, or Sanhedrim ſat; which, whether it was in the chamber Gazith, in the temple where they uſed to ſit[g], or in the ſhops, or in the city, whither they removed is not certain. We are told[h], that "the Sanhedrim "removed from the chamber Gazith to the ſhops, "and from the ſhops to Jeruſalem, and from Jeruſalem to Jabneh;" that is, after the deſtruction of the city. And the firſt remove was much about this time; for it is ſaid[i], that "forty years "before the deſtruction of the temple, the Sanhedrim removed, and ſat in the ſhops." Not in the ſhops where things were ſold for the uſe of the temple, but in a court adjoining to them, which took its name from them. They conferred among themſelves; what was proper to be done, the Apoſtles being withdrawn.

Ver. 16. Saying, what ſhall we do to theſe men? &c.] Whether they ſhould puniſh them, by ſcourging them, or detain them longer in cuſtody, or commit them to priſon, or diſmiſs them: for that indeed a notable miracle hath been done by them; they were convicted that a miracle was wrought; that it was a clear caſe, a well-known thing, of which there was no room to doubt, and that it was done by the Apoſtles; but this was not all the difficulty; had it been a thing only within their knowledge, and which they could have concealed, it would have given them no uneaſineſs; but, as they obſerve, it is manifeſt to all them that dwell in Jeruſalem: for the man having been ſo long lame, and and had lain ſo long at the temple, where all the inhabitants frequently went, he was known and took notice of by them; and his cure being wrought ſo openly, and in ſuch a miraculous way, it was the common talk of the city; ſo that there was no ſmothering it: and we cannot deny it; the fact is ſo certain and evident; nor hide it, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it, it being ſo notorious and public.

Ver. 17. But that it ſpread no further among the people, &c.] Meaning not in Jeruſalem; for the fame of this miracle was ſpread among all the inhabitants of that city; but in other parts of the nation: let us ſtraitly threaten them; or in threatning threaten them; that is, ſeverely threaten them with impriſonment, or with the ſcourging of forty ſtripes ſave one, or with death itſelf. That they ſpeak henceforth to no man in this name; which thro' indignation and contempt they do not mention, but mean the name of Jeſus: and their ſenſe is, that the Apoſtles, from this time forward, ſhould not teach, or preach the doctrine of the reſurrection of the dead, or any other doctrine of the Goſpel, in the name of Jeſus, to any man, Jew or Gentile; or perform any miracle in his name, or call upon his name, and make uſe of it, for the healing of any perſon, or doing any miraculous work. The Ethiopic verſion is a very odd one, and quite contrary to the ſenſe of the Sanhedrim, that they ſhould not ſpeak any more but in the name of the man Jeſus.

Ver. 18. And they called them, &c.] From the apartment where they were; or ordered their ſervants to call them in to them: and commanded them not to ſpeak at all; either privately or publickly, in the miniſtry of the word, or in working of miracles, in the city, or in the country: nor teach in the name of Jeſus; any doctrine whatever; or the name of Jeſus, as the Arabic verſion reads; that is, the doctrine of Jeſus, that which reſpects his perſon, his incarnation, his offices, his ſufferings, death, and reſurrection from the dead.

Ver. 19. But Peter and John anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] With great boldneſs and courage, and without any fear of man, but in the true fear of God: whether it be right in the ſight of God; who is omniſcient, and ſees, and knows all things, all the actions of men, and the ſprings of them; who is holy, juſt, and true, and ſits and judges among the Gods, that which is right: to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye: it is not denied that magiſtrates are to be hearkened to, and obeyed; but not more than God, or in things that are contrary to his nature, will, law, honour, and glory: whatever is agreeable to the law and will of God, commanded by magiſtrates, ſhould be attended to, and chearfully obeyed; but what is not ſhould be diſregarded, whatever follows upon it: and this was ſo juſt and reaſonable, that the Apoſtles appeal to the Sanhedrim, or council itſelf, to determine.

Ver. 20. For we cannot but ſpeak, &c.] It was not phyſically, but morally impoſſible; or it was not lawful, and therefore they would not ſpeak any other, and they could not avoid ſpeaking, ſay they, the things which we have ſeen and heard; as the miracles and doctrines of Chriſt, his reſurrection from the dead, of which they were eye and ear-witneſſes. This ſhows their great fidelity and integrity, their inviolable attachment to Chriſt, and their fearleſſneſs of the diſpleaſure and wrath of men.

Ver. 21. So when they had further threatned them, &c.] Either repeated the ſame, as before; or added ſome more ſevere ones, to terrify them, if poſſible; not being able to anſwer their arguments, or invalidate their reaſoning: they let them go; they did not acquit them as innocent perſons, but diſmiſſed them from cuſtody: finding nothing how they might puniſh them; not being able, though they ſought moſt diligently for it, to fix any thing upon them, which might be a cauſe, or occaſion, or pretence of inflicting any puniſhment upon them: becauſe of the people; they would not have ſtuck at the injuſtice of it, or have been under any concern about offending God; but they were afraid of the people, of loſing their credit among them, and leſt they ſhould riſe up againſt them, and on the ſide of the Apoſtles: for all men glorified God for that which was done; they ſaw the hand of God in it, and aſcribed it to his mercy, goodneſs, and power, and gave him the glory of it; and therefore to puniſh the inſtruments of ſo great and good a work, would have been eſteemed barbarous and wicked, and would have been highly reſented by them; ſince, on the contrary, they judged them worthy of great honour and reſpect.

Ver. 22. For the man was above forty years old, &c.] So that the miracle was the greater, that a man born lame, and who had been ſo above forty years, ſhould have a cure; and he was the more known to the people, and his teſtimony met with more credit: on whom this miracle of healing was ſhewed; both for the good of men, for the glory of God, and for the confirmation of the Goſpel of Chriſt.

Ver. 23. And being let go, &c.] Or diſmiſſed from cuſtody, by the order of the Sanhedrim: they went to their own company; or to their own men, as the Ethiopic verſion reads; or to their own brethren, as the Syriac; either to the other ten Apoſtles; or to the hundred and twenty, who firſt met together; or to the whole multitude of them that believed, ver. 32. the eight thouſand that had been added to them, the whole church. Saints love to be together, and delight in the company of each other; and eſpecially when they have any thing to communicate, that may be for their mutual good, or for the honour of God: and reported all that the chief prieſts and elders had ſaid unto them; what commands and injunctions they had laid upon them, and what threatnings they had given them, and, no doubt likewiſe, what anſwers they had returned to them.

Ver. 24. And when they heard that, &c.] The whole of the report the Apoſtles made; and which they heard with patience, and without making any unworthy reflections upon the Sanhedrim; and being, on the one hand, not over-much terrified, and caſt down, and, on the other hand, not ſluggiſh, careleſs, and ſecure; they betake themſelves, not to plots, conſpiracies, and ſeditions; nor to arms to defend and avenge themſelves, tho' their numbers were large; but to prayer, that they might not be deterred by threatnings, from ſpeaking boldly the word of the Lord: they lift up their voice to God with one accord; being inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt, they not only agreed in the matter of their petitions, which agreement is of great avail with God; for whatever two or more agree in to aſk of God, ſhall be given to them; but, alſo in the very words which were vocally expreſſed by them, and that in a very loud and ſonorous way, to ſignify the vehemency and ardour of their minds and affections: and ſaid, Lord, thou art God; or, as in one of Beza's copies, Lord our God; or, as in the Ethiopic verſion, Lord, thou art our God; addreſſing God, the father of Chriſt, as appears from ver. 27. as their own God, their covenant God and father in Chriſt, from whom they might hope for help, and in whom they might expect ſafety, and every ſupply of grace: which haſt made heaven and earth, and the ſea, and all that in them is; and which is a full proof of the omnipotence of God; an attribute of ſingular uſe to the ſaints in diſtreſſed circumſtances; for what is it he cannot do, who made all things that are? and what is it he will not do for his ſaints, for the accompliſhment of his purpoſes, the making good of his covenant and promiſes, the fulfilment of prophecies, the good of his people, and the glory of his name?

Ver. 25. Who by the mouth of thy ſervant David has ſaid, &c.] In Pſal. ii. 1, 2. from whence we learn, that that Pſalm, tho' it is without a title, and does not bear David's name, yet is one of his; and ſo Kimchi ſays, that David compoſed it at the beginning of his reign; tho' Aben Ezra thinks, that it was compoſed by one of the ſingers for him, on the day he was anointed; yet he afterwards ſeems to doubt of it, and on ver. 7. ſays, they are the words of David, or the words of the ſinger. And certain it is, that in the Apoſtles time this Pſalm was reckoned to be David's by the Jews in common; and therefore they ſpeak of it as ſuch: and it was the ſenſe of the ancient doctors of the ſynagogue, that this Pſalm is to be underſtood of the Meſſiah. Jarchi ſays, our Rabbins expound the buſineſs (of this pſalm) concerning the king Meſſiah; and Kimchi obſerves, that there are ſome that interpret this pſalm of Gog and Magog [k], and the Meſſiah, or anointed, that is the king Meſſiah; tho' one of theſe writers was of opinion, that it is beſt to underſtand it of David himſelf; and Aben Ezra ſays, that it was compoſed either for David, or for the Meſſiah, and to underſtand it of the Meſſiah, the thing is more clear. The 7th and 8th verſes are particularly applied to the Meſſiah in ſome of their moſt ancient writings [l], and alſo in modern ones [m], as is ver. 2. to Meſſiah ben Joſeph [n]: and indeed the whole pſalm belongs to the Meſſiah, as appears from the expreſs mention of him, and the vain attempts of the kings of the earth againſt him; from the decree and reſolution of God to make, and declare him king of Zion, notwithſtanding their utmoſt efforts; from his having the Gentiles for his inheritance, which is true of no other; and eſpecially from that reverence, adoration, and worſhip, which were to be given to him, and that truſt and confidence to be placed in him, which can by no means agree with David, nor with any mere creature. The Syriac verſion reads, who in the Holy Ghoſt, by the mouth, &c. and ſo read Beza's moſt ancient copy, and five other manuſcripts of his; and the Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions, read, who in the Holy Ghoſt, by the mouth of our father David, &c. and ſo the Alexandrian copy, but does not ſeem to be a genuine reading; ſince the [m] Maimon. in Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 11. §. 1. Abarbinel Maſhmiah Jeſhua, fol. 37. 4. & 38. 1.

[n] Pirke Eliezer, c. 19.

Jews were not uſed to call David, but Abraham, their father; nor is it, with propriety, expreſſed, that God the father ſaid in, or by the ſpirit, what follows, why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things? that is, the Gentiles, and the people of the Jews, Pilate, and his council, with the Roman ſoldiers, and the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, with the common people; who raged againſt Chriſt, ſeized him in a furious manner, led him as a malefactor, and hurried him from bar to bar, in a tumultuous way, and with great noiſe and clamour urged the crucifixion of him; nor did their rage ceaſe until they had put him to death: yet it was a vain thing in them to imagine he ſhould be held under the power of death; or that this would put a ſtop to the ſpread of his doctrine, and the enlargement of his kingdom and intereſt; ſince he roſe from the dead, as a triumphant conqueror, over all his enemies, and pouring forth his ſpirit, in an extraordinary way, he ſpread his Goſpel, and his glory throughout the earth.

Ver. 26. The kings of the earth ſtood up, &c.] Herod Antipas, tetrarch of Galilee, ſometimes called a king, Mark vi. 14. and Pilate the Roman governour, who repreſented his maſter Cæſar; theſe ſtood, or roſe up in an hoſtile manner, and ſet themſelves againſt, and oppoſed themſelves to the Meſſiah, Jeſus of Nazareth: and the rulers were gathered together; the Jewiſh rulers, Annas, Caiaphas, and the reſt of the members of the Sanhedrim, who met together more than once; and particularly at the high-prieſts palace, to conſult how they ſhould take Jeſus, and put him to death; and who alſo gathered together at the ſame place, when he was taken, to arraign, examine, and condemn him. And this oppoſition, and theſe conſpiracies and conſultations, were, againſt the Lord; Jehovah, the father of Chriſt who ſent him, and anointed him; ſo that what was done againſt Chriſt, was done againſt the Lord, their views and deſigns, their intereſt and glory being the ſame: and againſt his Chriſt; or anointed one, who was anointed by him with the Holy Ghoſt from his birth, and at his baptiſm, to be prophet, prieſt, and king.

Ver. 27. For of a truth againſt thy holy child Jeſus, &c.] This is the interpretation of the above paſſages in Pſal. ii. 1, 2. and the application of them to Jeſus; who is called the child of God, becauſe the human nature of Chriſt was taken into union with the ſecond perſon, who is the ſon of God: unleſs the word ſhould rather be rendered ſervant, as it is in ver. 25. and which is a character that belongs to Chriſt, and is often given him as mediator, who, as ſuch, is God's righteous ſervant; and he is called holy, becauſe he was ſo in his conception and birth, and in his life and converſation, being free both from original ſin, and actual tranſgreſſion; and which is an aggravation of the ſin and guilt of theſe men, that they ſhould riſe up, and gather together againſt him; and yet it was a clear caſe, a notorious fact, a certain truth, that could not be denied: and for the further aggravation of their crime, as well as for the ſake of explaining the phraſe his Chriſt, 'tis added, whom thou haſt anointed; with the oil of gladneſs, above his fellows. Chriſt was, in ſome ſenſe, anointed to be prophet, prieſt, and king, from eternity, being ſo early ſet up as mediator, or called unto, and inveſted with that office; ſee Prov. viii. 22. Pſ. ii. 6. and he was anointed in time, both at his incarnation and baptiſm, having the Spirit without meaſure given unto him, which is that anointing, that teacheth all things. Both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Iſrael, were gathered together. This Herod was Herod Antipas, the ſon of Herod the great, and who beheaded John the Baptiſt; and Pontius Pilate was the Roman governour of Judea, at the time of Chriſt's death; the Gentiles were thoſe of Pilate's council, and the Roman ſoldiers; and the people of Iſrael, were the Jews, both the rulers, and the common people; the Syriac verſion renders it, the ſynagogue of Iſrael: and theſe, tho' they were of different nations, and of different intereſts, yea enemies to one another, as the Jews and Gentiles in general were; and as were Herod and Pontius Pilate in particular; yet all gathered, conſented, and agreed together to mock, ſcourge, and crucify this innocent and holy perſon. The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions add, in this city; and ſo the above copies of Beza's, and others; meaning, in the city of Jeruſalem, where the Apoſtles now were, and where the above perſons met together, and from whence a prophet could only periſh. The Alexandrian copy reads, in this thy city; which was called the city of God, and the holy city; and yet in this was this wicked convention, and all this wickedneſs done.

Ver. 28. For to do whatſoever thy hand, &c.] It was not the end of their gathering together againſt Chriſt, or it was not their intention and deſign to fulfil the purpoſes and decrees of God, but to fulfil their own luſts, and ſatiate their rage and malice againſt him; but it was ſo in the event, according to the wiſe diſpoſal of providence, that by their gathering together, by their conſultations and conſpiracies, they brought about what God in his everlaſting council had decreed. By the hand of the Lord here is not meant, the grace and favour of God; or the power and providence of God; or his word of precept, his revealed will; but his ſecret will, the counſel of his will, the hidden purpoſe of his heart, the wiſe conſultation of his mind, which is formed according to his infinite wiſdom: ſo in 2 Sam. xiv. 19. it is ſaid, is not the hand of Joab with thee in all this? that is, the head of Joab, the wiſe counſel of Joab; and ſo the Jewiſh writers interpret it, עצתו, his counſel[*]: and ſo the word is explained here immediately; for it follows, and thy counſel determined before to be done: God's decrees are from eternity; there is nothing comes to paſs in time, but what he has before time determined ſhould be done, either by effecting it himſelf, or doing it by others, or ſuffering it to be done, as in the caſe here. Whatever was done to Chriſt, either by Jews or Gentiles, by Herod or Pontius Pilate, was according to the ſecret will of God, the covenant he made with Chriſt, and the council of peace that was between them both: what they wickedly did, God deſigned for good, and hereby brought about the redemption and ſalvation of his people: this neither makes God the author of ſin, nor excuſes the ſinful actions of men, or infringes the liberty of their wills in acting.

Ver. 29. And now, Lord, behold their threatnings, &c.] Meaning not with his eye of omniſcience, which he could not but do; but that he would ſo take notice of them, as in his providence to rebuke them for them, or reſtrain them, or make them fearleſs of them: and grant unto thy ſervants; the Apoſtles, and all the miniſters of the word, who are the ſervants of the moſt high God, and who ſerve him in the Goſpel of his Son, with great chearfulneſs and faithfulneſs: that with all boldneſs they may ſpeak thy word; and not their own, or another's; the Goſpel, which is God's ſpeech, or a word, a meſſage of grace and mercy from him to ſinful creatures. The requeſt of the whole church is, that the miniſters of the word might not be intimidated by the menaces of the Sanhedrim; but go on to declare it with all freedom of expreſſion, with all boldneſs, courage, and intrepidity of mind, and with all openneſs and faithfulneſs, and in the moſt public manner. And ſuch a petition ſhows, that as it is the gift of God to ſpeak his word, or preach his Goſpel, ſo it alſo is, to ſpeak it freely, boldly, and faithfully, as it ſhould be ſpoken.

Ver. 30. By ſtretching forth thine hand to heal, &c.] That is, by exerting his power in healing ſickneſſes, diſeaſes, and lameneſs, as in the above inſtance, by the hands of the Apoſtles; which, as it would be contrary to the ſchemes of the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, and would confirm the doctrines of the Goſpel; ſo it would animate the preachers of the word to preach it with more readineſs, chearfulneſs, and firmneſs of mind; and that ſigns and wonders may be done by the name of thy holy child Jeſus; as had been done already, and by whoſe name particularly the lame man at the temple had received a cure, and in whoſe name the Sanhedrim had forbid the Apoſtles to preach, or to make uſe of it, in doing any other miracle.

Ver. 31. And when they had prayed, &c.] Either while they were praying, or as ſoon as they had done; for ſometimes, as here, prayer is immediately heard, and an anſwer is returned, whilſt the ſaints are ſpeaking, or as ſoon as prayer is ended: the place was ſhaken where they were aſſembled together; which, whether it was a private houſe, or the temple, is not certain: the latter ſeems more probable, becauſe their number was ſo great, that no private houſe could hold them; and ſince this was the place where they uſed to aſſemble: this was now ſhaken with a ruſhing mighty wind, as on the day of Pentecoſt, and was a ſymbol of the divine preſence, and a token that their prayers were heard, and an emblem of the ſhaking of the world by the miniſtry of the Apoſtles: and they were all filled with the Holy Ghoſt; with the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, even with extraordinary ones, ſuch as ſpeaking with divers tongues, as before on the day of Pentecoſt; ſee ch. ii. 4. and this was the caſe not only of the Apoſtles, but of the other miniſters of the word, and it may be of the whole church: and they ſpoke the word of God with all boldneſs; that is, the Apoſtles, and preachers of the Goſpel, ſpoke it with great freedom, and without fear, not only privately, in their community, but publickly, in the temple: this was what was particularly prayed for, and in which they had a remarkable anſwer.

Ver. 32. And the multitude of them that believed, &c.] The Goſpel, and in Chriſt, the ſubſtance of it; and a multitude they were, for they were now about eight thouſand perſons. And though their number was ſo great, they were of one heart and of one ſoul; there was an entire conſent and agreement in doctrine, in matters of faith, they were all of one mind and judgment; and there was a perfect harmony in their practice, they all performed the ſame duties, and obſerved the ſame commands and ordinances; and all purſued the ſame intereſt, and had the ſame ends, and views; and there was a ſtrict union of their affections to each other; their ſouls were knit to one another; ſo that there was, but as it were, one ſoul in this large body of Chriſtians. Ariſtotle being aſked, what a friend was; anſwered, one ſoul dwelling in two bodies[p]: and ſo the Jews ſay, it is fit and proper that lovers or friends ſhould be, בלב אחד כאיש אחד, of one heart, as one man[q]; and ſuch friends and hearty lovers were theſe. Neither ſaid any of them, that ought of the things which he poſſeſſed was his own; tho' he had a peculiar right unto them, yet he did not claim that right, nor inſiſt on it, nor ſo much as ſpeak of it, nor make uſe of his ſubſtance as if it was his own, reſerving it for himſelf, or even diſpoſing of it himſelf; but expoſed it to the free uſe of the whole body, to enjoy it equally with himſelf: but they had all things common; which was what they were not obliged to, but it was a free and voluntary action of their own, and ſo is not binding on others; nor indeed is their practice to be imitated, in the direct manner in which they did it, for their caſe was peculiar. They were not only every day liable to perſecutions, and to have their poſſeſſions ſeized, and their goods confiſcated; but they alſo knew, that in proceſs of time, Jeruſalem would be deſtroyed, and they could not tell how ſoon; and therefore judged it right to ſell off their poſſeſſions, and throw the money into one common ſtock, for their mutual ſupport, and for the carrying on the common cauſe of Chriſt.

Ver. 33. And with great power, &c.] Either in a very powerful way, with great fervency of ſpirit, and ardour of mind, and uncommon zeal; or with great efficacy on the ſouls of men; or with many miracles, and powerful operations in healing the ſick, caſting out devils, &c. gave the Apoſtles witneſs of the reſurrection of the Lord Jeſus; which they were choſen to be witneſſes, and were eye-witneſſes of; and which is a fundamental article of the Goſpel, and was what the Sadducees were particularly diſturbed at, and on account of which they forbad them to preach any more in Chriſt's name. And great grace was upon them all; not only upon the Apoſtles and miniſters, but upon the whole church: and which may be underſtood either of the large gifts of the ſpirit of God, which were poured out upon them, and plentifully beſtowed on them; or of the gracious protection of God over them, preſerving them from the rage and malice of men; or of that grace and favour which they had among the people in common; or of that charity, liberality and beneficence, which were among them, which ſenſe is confirmed by what follows; tho' it may be all theſe ſenſes may be taken in.

Ver. 34. Neither was there any among them that lacked, &c.] Bread to eat, or clothes to wear, or any of the neceſſaries of life; which ſhows their great charity, and gives a reaſon why they were in ſo much favour with the people, becauſe they took ſo much care of their poor; and this flowed from the grace of God beſtowed upon them: for as many as were poſſeſſors of lands and houſes; or vineyard, as the Ethiopic verſion reads, whether in Jeruſalem or elſewhere; ſold them, and brought the prices of the things that were ſold; whether lands, houſes, or vineyards.

Ver. 35. And laid them down at the apoſtles feet, &c.] Shewing great veneration and reſpect to the Apoſtles, and a ſort of neglect and contempt of their worldly ſubſtance; and ſignifying that they entirely delivered them to the Apoſtles, and ſubjected them to their diſpoſal: and diſtribution was made unto every man, according as he had need; tho' they had all things in common, yet there was an order obſerved; a man might not go to the common ſtock and take out of it what he would; but as all was committed to the care of the Apoſtles, and was in their power; the diſtribution was made by them, to every man, to the original proprietors, as well as to others, and that not as much as a man would have, or he might crave; but as much as he needed, for the preſent, of which the Apoſtles were the judges.

Ver. 36. And Joſes, &c.] The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read Joſeph, and ſo do Beza's moſt ancient copy, and two of his manuſcripts, and the Alexandrian copy, and others; for Joſe or Joſes is only an abbreviation or contraction of Joſeph; tho' according to others it is the ſame with Joſiah: there is one of this name, who was the ſon of Alpheus, and brother to two of the Apoſtles, James and Jude, Matt. xiii. 55. and another called Joſes Barſabas; and it may be to diſtinguiſh the one from the other, this is called Joſes Barnabas; for ſo it follows, who by the Apoſtles was ſurnamed Barnabas: his name before his converſion was Joſes, or Joſeph, or Joſiah; and afterwards, or at leaſt after he came to be acquainted with the Apoſtles, and to be in their company, they called him Barnabas. The Arabic and Ethiopic verſions read, who was of the Apoſtles; and ſo Barnabas is ſpoken of, as if he was an Apoſtle, 1 Cor. ix. 5, 6. which is, being interpreted, the ſon of conſolation; or of exhortation; from the excellent gift and talent he had at exhorting; ſee chap. xi. 23. and xiv. 22. and from the uſe he was of for the comforting of diſtreſſed minds; for נבא, Naba, to prophecy, includes both exhortation and comfort; and he having the gift of prophecy or preaching the Goſpel, was called ברנבא, Barnabas, a ſon of comfort, or a comforter, or an exhorter: and ſo Jerom [r] interprets it, the ſon of a prophet. Druſius conjectures that his right name was בר נחמא, Bar Nachama, and by contraction Barnama, and with a Greek termination Barnamas; which properly ſignifies in the Chaldee and Syriac languages, the ſon of conſolation, as it is here interpreted; and he obſerves, that the letters M and B are ſometimes uſed one for another; thus one and the ſame man is called Berodach and Merodach, 2 Kings xx. 12. Iſ. xxxix. 1. and the ſame river is called Abana, 2 Kings v. 12. and in the margent Amana; but others think he had his name from the ſame word that Noah had his, and which ſignifies reſt and comfort, as appears from the reaſon of his name. This ſame ſhall comfort us, &c. And ſo the name of this man in the Chaldee or Syriac language was, בר נח אבא, which may be literally rendered the ſon of the fathers reſt, or comfort. And this man is ſaid to be, a Levite; of the tribe of Levi, and of the prieſtly race: and of the country of Cyprus; or by birth, or nation, a Cyprian; for tho' he was a Jew, as is clear from his being of the tribe of Levi, and was born of Jewiſh parents, yet in Cyprus, and ſo was a native of that place. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, of the city of Cyprus; but Cyprus was not a city, but a country; wherefore the Syriac verſion renders it, of the place, or country of Cyprus, as we do: it was an iſland in the further part of the Mediterranean ſea; it had its name from the plant Cyprus, and is now by the Turks called Kibris. According to Pliny [s], it lay to the eaſt and weſt of Cilicia, and was over-againſt Syria, and was formerly the ſeat of nine kingdoms; its circumference was three hundred and ſeventy miles, and had been called by various names; as Acamantis, Ceraſtis, Aſpelia, Amathuſia, Macaria, Crypton, and Colinia; in it were fifteen towns or cities, which were Paphos, Palæpaphos, Curias, Citium, Corineum, Salamis, Amethus, Lapethos, Solæ, Tamaſeus, Epidarum, Chytri, Arſinoë, Carpaſium, and Golgi. According to the ſame writer [t], it was by an earthquake divided from Syria; and that part of it which lay to the eaſt from Syria, is ſaid to be leſs than a hundred miles diſtant from it. And according to Mela [u], its chief cities were Salamis and Paphos, mentioned in Acts xiii. 5, 6. And according to Ptolomy [w], it had on the weſt Pamphylia, on the ſouth the Egyptian and Syrian ſeas, and on the eaſt the Syrian ſea, and on the north the ſtraights of Cilicia: it was inhabited by people of various nations, and among the reſt, by Jews; and R. Benjamin makes mention of Jewiſh Rabbans in Cyprus, in his time [x].

Ver. 37. Having land, ſold it, &c.] Whether this was in Cyprus, or in Judea, is not certain; nor how he came by it, whether he had bought it, as the prieſts and levites might, and as Jeremiah, who was of the prieſts, bought a field at Anathoth, Jer. xxxii. 9. or, whether it was his wife's dowry; for the levites had nothing by inheritance: they had forty-two cities, and the ſix cities of refuge to dwell in, and the field of the ſuburbs of theſe cities; which field or land was never to be ſold, but to be a perpetual poſſeſſion, Lev. xxv. 34. but now the ceremonial law was aboliſhed, and this precept was not attended to, if the land was of this ſort. Moreover, the Jewiſh doctors interpret the above law otherwiſe, and underſtand it only of changing, and not of ſelling, which they allow of; one of their canons runs thus [y], "the prieſts and levites, מוכרים, ſell always, and redeem always, as it is ſaid Lev. xxv. 32. the Levites may redeem at any time." Upon which canon, one of their commentators [z] ſays, "they ſell always; and not as an Iſraelite, who can't ſell leſs than two years before the jubilee;—but theſe ſell even near the jubilee; and they redeem always: if they ſell houſes in walled towns, they are not confirmed at the end of the year, as the houſes in the walled towns of Iſraelites; and if they ſell fields, it is not neceſſary that they ſhould remain in the hands of the buyer two years, but they may redeem them immediately, if they will." And another of them [a], has this obſervation, "all agree that the levites may not change a city, or ſuburb, or field, which are theirs, becauſe it is ſaid, Lev. xxv. 34. but the field of the ſuburbs of their cities may not be ſold; and the wiſe men of bleſſed memory ſay, the meaning of it is, it ſhall not be changed, for they don't change any thing from what it was before." And agreeable to this, is what Maimonides [b] elſewhere ſays, "they don't make in the cities of the levites a city a ſuburb, or a ſuburb a city, or a ſuburb a field, or a field a ſuburb, as it is ſaid, Lev. xxv. 34. but the field of the ſuburbs of their cities ſhall not be ſold; from report (or tradition) we learn, that that is ſaid, ſhall not be ſold, means, ſhall not be changed; but the field, ſuburbs, and city, every one of theſe three ſhall be as they are for ever——prieſts and levites who ſell a field, of the fields of their cities, or an houſe of any of the houſes of their walled towns, don't redeem according to this order (i. e. as the other Iſraelites,) but they ſell fields; and even near to the jubilee, and redeem them immediately." So that if this land of Barnabas lay in Judea, as is moſt likely, it might be ſold, and much more, if in Cyprus. But, be it what and where it will, he ſold it: and brought the money; from Cyprus or Judea, or that part of the land of Canaan where it lay, and where he had ſold it: and laid it at the apoſtles feet; perhaps he might be the firſt perſon that did ſo, and ſet an example, which was univerſally followed; however, he is particularly mentioned, being a man of note among the apoſtles, and of great uſefulneſs in after-times, and of whom frequent mention is made in other places.

CHAP. V.

Ver. 1. B*UT a certain man named Ananias*, &c.] A name common among the Jews, the ſame with Hananiah, Jer. xxviii. 1. ſee Acts ix. 10. and xxiii. 2. it ſignifies not the humility of the Lord, or the affliction of the Lord, or the anſwer of the Lord, as ſay ſome, as if it was derived from ענה; but the grace of the Lord, or the Lord's gracious one, coming from חנן: there is no dependance on names; tho' this man's name ſignified one that was in the grace and favour of God; he was not ſo, but a graceleſs perſon, as appears by what follows. It is very likely he was a miniſter of the word, ſince the account of him follows upon that of Barnabas, and is oppoſed to it; it may be he was one of the hundred and twenty, on whom the Holy Ghoſt fell, on the day of Pentecoſt; and yet, tho' he had great gifts, had no grace. This ſhows there are hypocrites among men of the greateſt names and characters, and in the pureſt churches; this firſt and pure church, which in the preceding chapter, has ſuch large encomiums, was not free from them: with Sapphira his wife; whether this is the ſame name with Shiphrah, Exod. i. 15. or Zipporah, Exod. ii. 21. both which are by the Septuagint called Sephora, or whether another, and may ſignify beautiful, is not very material. Jerom[c] ſays, in the Syriac language this name ſignifies beautiful; tho' he firſt gives other explanations of it, as narrantem, literatam, ſive librariam, as tho' it was derived from the Hebrew word ספר. The precious ſtone called Sapphire ſeems to come from the ſame root as this, and to be ſo called becauſe of its beautiful azure colour. The name Sappho, which was the name of a famous poetreſs, the inventreſs of a kind of verſe called Sapphic verſe, is ſaid to be the diminutive of this name Sapphira. Druſius obſerves it may be read צפירא, Tzephira; which comes near to Zipporah, and among other things ſignifies a ſhee goat; and it was uſual to give women names taken from ſuch creatures. So Rachel a ſheep, and Tabitha, or Dorcas, a doe. But whatever her name or perſon were, her actions were diſagreeable: ſold a poſſeſſion; which was their own. So the Arabic and Syriac verſions read, their own field, or farm; and the Ethiopic verſion, their own vineyard: it might be his wife's dowry or jointure, and ſo her conſent was neceſſary; or they might be jointly concerned in this ſale, to ſhew not only their concord and harmony among themſelves; but that they agreed in their devotion and religious actions, and that being both filled with zeal for God, and love to the brethren, ſold their eſtate to ſupport the common cauſe.

Ver. 2. And kept back part of the price, &c.] At which the poſſeſſion was ſold; he reſerved it for his own uſe, after he had given out that he ſold it for the ſervice of the church: his wife alſo being privy to it; to this private reſerve: and brought a certain part; whether the greater part, or an equal part, half of it, or a leſſer part; ſome little part of it, ſo the phraſe ſeems to ſignify, is not certain: and laid it at the Apoſtles feet; as the reſt did, thereby to make a ſhew of the charity, and cover the deceit.

Ver. 3. But Peter ſaid, Ananias, &c.] Peter, by divine revelation, or by a ſpirit of diſcerning, ſuch as Eliſha had, who knew what his ſervant Gehazi had done, knowing what a reſerve Ananias had made, calls him by his name, and ſays to him, why hath ſatan filled thine heart? or emboldened thee, given thee ſo much ſpirit and courage to act in ſuch an impudent and audacious manner; ſo the phraſe is uſed in Eſth. vii. 5. and Eccl. viii. 11. ſee the Septuagint there, and often in Talmudic writings. "Says R. Joſhua, I never מלאני לבי, filled my " heart; or my heart never filled me to ſay to a " man, go and take the change of theſe three things, " &c.[d]" And ſays another Rabbi[e], "though I " ſay ſo, לא מלאני לבי, I never filled my heart, " or my heart never filled me to tranſgreſs the " words of the companions;" that is, I never durſt do ſo. And again[f], it being obſerved, that Iſaiah ſhould ſay, hear, O heavens, 'tis ſaid, "who, or " what is this, who מלאו לבו, hath filled his heart, " or whoſe heart has filled him to call to the heavens to hear." But this inſtance of Ananias was ſuch, that none but ſatan could have put him upon, or emboldened him to have done; who from hence appeared to have the power over him, and to have poſſeſſed him, to have great acceſs to him, even to his heart, and great influence upon it, ſo as to prompt him to lye to the Holy Ghoſt; who was in the Apoſtles, and by whom they were acted, and to whom he had given a diſcerning of ſpirits; ſo that it was a daring action, and downright madneſs, to go about to deceive them: or he pretended he had an impulſe from the Spirit of God to ſell his eſtate, and give the whole price of it to the Apoſtles, and yet kept back part of it; which was acting contrary to that ſpirit he pretended to be influenced by. And to keep back part of the price of the land; that is, he lyed againſt the Holy Ghoſt, by keeping back part of the price the land was ſold for; when he had declared he ſold it with this view to give the whole for charitable uſes, and affirmed that what he brought was the whole.

Ver. 4. Whiles it remained, was it not thine own, &c.] Before it was ſold, it was his own proper eſtate; he had the ſole propriety in it, and could have kept it, or diſpoſed of it as he pleaſed: he was not obliged to ſell it, he might have kept it as his own property; for ſelling of poſſeſſions at this time was a voluntary thing; it was what no man was forced to; it was a pure act of liberality, and what was not enjoined by the Apoſtles; every man was left to his liberty. And after it was ſold, was it not in thine own power? that is, the price for which it was ſold: before he had declared that he ſold it, in order to give the whole of it to the church, and brought it to the Apoſtles as the whole; it was in his own power to diſpoſe of, as he pleaſed, whether to give the whole, or a part of it, or any of it. He might have kept it all if he had thought fit, or have given what portion he pleaſed. Why haſt thou conceived this thing in thine heart? for tho' ſatan had an hand in it, and greatly ſoli-cited him to it, and ſpirited him up to do it, yet in conjunction with his own heart; and perhaps it began there, which ſatan helped forward. It was not ſo of ſatan as to excuſe the wickedneſs of his heart. It was owing partly to the ſin of covetouſneſs, which reigned in him, and partly to a deſire of vain-glory, and being thought a very religious man, that he acted ſuch a part, and was ſo notoriouſly guilty of lying and hypocriſy. Thou haſt not lyed unto men, but unto God; that is, not to men only, for he had lyed to the Apoſtles; but to God alſo, to the Holy Ghoſt, who is truly and properly God, of which this paſſage is a full proof; and it was owing to his omniſcience, which is a peculiar attribute of deity, that this wicked man, and this fraud of his, were diſcovered.

Ver. 5. And Ananias hearing theſe words, &c.] Of Peter's; by which he found his ſin was detected, and by which he was convicted of it; and which ſet forth the evil nature of it, with its aggravated circumſtances; and ſuch power went along with them, and they cut ſo deep, as that immediately he fell down and gave up the ghoſt; which is an inſtance of what the Jews call death by the hand of heaven: and this was done either by an angel; or rather by an extraordinary gift beſtowed on Peter, being ſuch an one as the Apoſtle Paul had, and uſed, when he ſmote Elymas the ſorcerer with blindneſs, and delivered the inceſtuous perſon, and Alexander and Hymeneus to ſatan. And great fear came upon all them that heard theſe things; both upon the members of the church, and ſo was of ſervice to make them careful of their words and actions, and cautious and circumſpect in their lives and converſations; and upon thoſe that were without, and might be a means of making them fearful of ſpeaking againſt them, or mocking at them, or of joining themſelves to them, without being thoroughly ſatisfied that they ſhould, and had a right, and were meet for it.

Ver. 6. And the young men aroſe, &c.] The younger brethren of the church, who were robuſt, and ſtrong, and fit for the following ſervice: theſe roſe up from their ſeats at once, not willing that ſuch an awful ſpectacle ſhould lie long before them: and wound him up; in linen clothes, as was the manner of the Jews: and carried him out; of the houſe where they were, and out of the city; for the burying places of the Jews were without the city: and buried him; which was all done in a very ſhort time, as appears by what follows.

Ver. 7. And it was about the ſpace of three hours after, &c.] The death of Ananias. So much time was taken up in burying of him; and in leſs time it could not well be, ſince the burying-places of the Jews were without the city, as before obſerved: and if they were as diſtant from other cities, as they were from the cities of the Levites, they were, as Dr. Lightfoot ſhews from Maimonides [g], above a mile and half off: though there is a Jewiſh canon which runs thus [h]; “they put carkaſſes, graves, “and tanners, fifty cubits from a city.” So that to go thither, open the grave, interr the dead, and return, muſt take up ſo much time; and ſo much time his wife had to reflect upon what ſhe and her huſband had done, but ſeems not to have had any thought about it, at leaſt not any remorſe of conſcience for it: when his wife not knowing what was done; ſhe knew that her huſband kept back part of the price of the land, and how much it was, and what he brought to the Apoſtles; but ſhe did not know that the fraud was detected, nor what followed; as that her huſband was immediately ſtruck dead, and was carried out and buried; which 'tis pretty much ſhe ſhould not in this time, when the thing was awful and ſhocking, the news of which muſt fly apace all over the city: but it looks as if the company of the ſaints was not broke up all this while, and that no one went out to carry it abroad, but the young men that went to bury him. Sapphira therefore being ignorant of the whole affair, came in; to the temple or houſe where the apoſtles were, expecting to ſee her huſband among the apoſtles, and chief men, in great honour and eſteem for what he had done; and that he would be on equal foot with Barnabas and others, who had ſold all they had, and brought the whole price of their poſſeſſions into the common ſtock.

Ver. 8. And Peter anſwered unto her, &c.] Who might be enquiring for her huſband; tho' ſuch a way of ſpeaking was common with the Jews, when nothing goes before to which the anſwer is made; of which there are frequent inſtances in the ſacred writings: tell me whether ye ſold the land for ſo much; naming the ſum of money which Ananias had brought; tho' the hiſtorian does not mention it. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read, tell me, O woman, &c. not calling her by her name, as he did her huſband, ver. 3. yea, ſhe ſaid for ſo much; juſt that ſum, and no more.

Ver. 9. Then Peter ſaid unto her, how is it that ye have agreed together, &c.] For huſband and wife to agree together in what is good, in things civil, honeſt, and lawful, and in religious matters, is very commendable; but to agree in a fraud, in a lye, is very dreadful: to tempt the Spirit of the Lord; to try whether the apoſtles had the Spirit of the Lord, or no; and whether the Spirit of the Lord that was in them, was omniſcient and omnipotent, would take any notice of it, and inflict puniſhment for it: behold, the feet of them which have buried thy huſband are at the door; which Peter knew either by hearing the ſound of their feet, as Abijah the prophet heard the ſound of the feet of Jeroboam's wife, as ſhe came in at the door, 1 Kings xiv. 6. or by the ſame Spirit as Eliſha knew that Gehazi ran after Naaman, and received money and garments from him, 2 Kings v. 26. and ſhall carry thee out; of this houſe dead, and bury thee, as they have thy huſband.

Ver. 10. Then fell ſhe down ſtraightway at his feet, &c.] In like manner, and by the ſame hand of God as her huſband before: and yielded up the ghoſt; died directly: and the young men came in and found her dead; the young men who had been to interr her huſband, came into the houſe at that inſtant, and found her dead upon the floor, at the feet of the apoſtle Peter: and carrying her forth, buried her by her huſband; as it was uſual with the Jews to do. So they ſay [i], that in the cave of Macpelah were buried Adam and Eve, Abraham and Sarah, Iſaac and Rebekah, and Jacob and Leah.

Ver. 11. And great fear came upon all the church, &c.] Which was ſtill more increaſed by this inſtance of Sapphira's death: and upon as many as heard theſe things; who were not of the church; ſee the note on ver. 5.

Ver. 12. And by the hands of the apoſtles were many ſigns and wonders wrought, &c.] That is, by their means, or by them as inſtruments, or thro' the impoſition of their hands on perſons, many miraculous and wonderful cures, as well as other extraordinary actions, were performed: among the people; the common people, who attended in great numbers on their miniſtry, when the chief men and rulers of the nation deſpiſed them. (And they were all with one accord in Solomon's porch; which is to be underſtood not of the whole church, nor of the hundred and twenty diſciples, but of the twelve apoſtles, who met in this place to preach the Goſpel to the people; and they were agreed in their doctrine and practice, and were united in their affections to one another. Of Solomon's porch, ſee the note on John x. 23. Theſe words, with what follow to the 15th verſe, are to be read in a parentheſis.

[i] Cippi Hebraici, p. 4. T. Bab. Sota, fol. 13. 1.

Ver. 13. And of the reſt durſt no man join himſelf to them, &c.] By the reſt are meant, either thoſe that were without the church, and thoſe either the profane and perſecuting ſort, who durſt not come nigh the apoſtles to touch them, or ſay one word to them, for fear of being ſtruck dead; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, and then there was no more any man that durſt reſtrain them, or go about to hinder them from preaching: or the better ſort, ſuch who attended on the word, and were either real believers or hypocrites, who durſt not, one nor the other, join themſelves to them, becauſe of what happened to Ananias and Sapphira; which not only deterred hypocrites from coming into the church, but alſo kept off ſuch who were really converted perſons; but this ſenſe ſeems to be contradicted in the following verſe. Rather therefore by them are meant thoſe within the church, and not only the private members of it, but the miniſters of the word, of which number Ananias might have been; theſe, the reſt of them, durſt not come nigh the apoſtles, or familiarly converſe with them, much leſs put themſelves upon an equal foot with them, but with great reverence of them kept their diſtance from them: but the people magnified them; both the miniſters of the word, as Barnabas and others, who ſhewed ſuch a reſpect to the apoſtles, they having extraordinary gifts, and extraordinary things alſo being done by them, and eſpecially the twelve apoſtles; theſe, the people in general ſpoke well of, praiſed and cried up as marvellous men, becauſe of what was done by them.

Ver. 14. And believers were the more added to the Lord, &c.] That is, to the church, as in chap. ii. 47. over which Chriſt was Lord and head; for they were added to the Lord before, by believing in him, when they gave up themſelves to him, to be ſaved by him; and now to the apoſtles, and the church by the will of God; and this caſe of Ananias and Sapphira was ſo far from hindring perſons from coming into the church, that there were greater additions made to it, than before, even of ſuch as were true believers in Chriſt. The Ethiopic verſion reads, and many were added who believed in our Lord; the Arabic verſion, they that believed in the Lord increaſed; the Syriac verſion, and they more increaſed who believed in the Lord; and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion, but the multitude of them that believe in the Lord were the more increaſed; all of them reading the phraſe, the Lord, not in conſtruction with the word added, but with believers: multitudes both of men and women; the weaker ſex were not intimidated any more than the men, ſuch power went along with the word, and ſuch grace was beſtowed upon them. This church muſt now be prodigiouſly numerous, for before theſe additions, eight thouſand had been added to the hundred and twenty; ſuch ſucceſs the Goſpel had, and ſuch progreſs it made in the hands of ſuch mean and contemptible perſons, notwithſtanding the oppoſion of the chief men of the nation to it.

Ver. 15. Inſomuch that they brought forth the ſick into the ſtreets, &c.] Theſe words are to be read in connexion with the former part of the twelfth verſe. Such miraculous cures being wrought by the apoſtles, the people who had ſick perſons in their houſes, hearing of it brought them out; either into the ſtreets, as we render it, and as the Alexandrian copy reads; or in every ſtreet in Jeruſalem, waiting for the Apoſtles as they came, to receive a cure from them: and laid them on beds and couches; for the better conveniency of carrying them to the Apoſtles, or for their lying upon them until they came by that way: that at the leaſt, the ſhadow of Peter paſſing by, might overſhadow ſome of them. The Vulgate Latin verſion adds, and be delivered from their infirmities; but this is not ſupported by any copy, nor is it in any other verſion. Peter is only mentioned becauſe he was moſt known, he being the chief ſpeaker and actor. Who theſe were that fancied there was ſuch a virtue in Peter's ſhadow, and whether any were cured by it, is not certain. However, it is a vain thing in the papiſts to conclude from hence, the primacy of Peter, the worſhipping of images, and that the pope is Peter's ſhadow, and has his power.

Ver. 16. There came alſo a multitude out of the cities round about, &c.] The fame of the Apoſtles miracles ſpread in the cities round about Jeruſalem; thoſe that were at ſome diſtance as well as near, and large numbers of people came from thence, unto Jeruſalem; where the Apoſtles were: the Syriac verſion adds, unto them, that is, to the apoſtles; and the Arabic verſion, with them; along with thoſe of the city of Jeruſalem, who brought out their infirm perſons into the ſtreets to be cured: bringing ſick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean ſpirits; with devils, by whom they were not only poſſeſſed, but greatly haraſſed and afflicted; ſometimes tearing and convulſing them, and ſometimes throwing them on the ground, and bruiſing them; or into fire and water, of which there are ſome inſtances in the Evangeliſts: and they were healed every one; none went without a cure, which ſerved greatly to confirm the Goſpel, preached by the Apoſtles, and to irritate and provoke their enemies, as appears by what follows.

Ver. 17. Then the high prieſt roſe up, &c.] Annas, or rather Caiaphas; ſee the note on chap. iv. 6. he having heard what miracles were wrought by the Apoſtles, and what additions were made to them, roſe up from his ſeat and went out of the Sanhedrim, in great haſte, and in much wrath and paſſion: and all they that were with him; in council, that were of his kindred or his party, as John and Alexander, and others, chap. iv. 6. which is the ſect of the Sadducees; who denied the reſurrection of the dead; which doctrine the Apoſtles preached; and this made the high-prieſt and his party very uneaſy; whence it ſeems that the then high-prieſt was a Sadducee, and alſo the Sanhedrim at that time, and which was ſometimes the caſe. Great care indeed was taken of an high-prieſt, that he ſhould not be a Sadducee; on the eve of the day of atonement they always ſwore the high-prieſt, leſt he ſhould be a Sadducee, that he would make no innovation in what was ordered him; and particularly that he would not put the incenſe upon the fire without, and then carry it in a cenſor into the moſt holy place, as the Sadducees underſtood[k], Lev. xvi. 3. But notwithſtanding all their care, ſometimes they had a Sadducee for an high-prieſt; we read of one John an high-prieſt, who miniſtred in that office fourſcore years, and at laſt became a Sadducee[l]. And ſometimes a

Sanhedrim conſiſted only of Sadducees: hence we read of, בית דין של צדוקי, a Sanhedrim of Sadducees[m]; and ſuch an one was this; and therefore it is not to be wondered at what follows, and they were filled with indignation; or zeal, for Sadduciſm; and which was a blind zeal, and not according to knowledge: or with envy at the Apoſtles for the miracles done by them, and becauſe of the ſucceſs that attended them; fearing leſt, ſhould they go on at this rate, their religion and authority would come to nothing. Sadduciſm now ſeemed greatly to prevail among men in power; and the Jews ſay[n], "the ſon of David will not come until the "whole government is turned to the opinion of the "Sadducees."

Ver. 18. And laid their hands on the apoſtles, &c.] That is, laid hold on them, and took them, and carried them away; at leaſt their ſervants did ſo, by their orders: and put them in the common priſon; where malefactors were put; and this both for greater ſecurity, and for greater diſgrace.

Ver. 19. But the angel of the Lord, &c.] Or of God, as the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions read; whether Michael, as ſome have thought, or Gabriel, or what particular angel, is not material to know. However, it was a good angel, an elect angel, one of thoſe miniſtring ſpirits ſent by God to miniſter to the heirs of promiſe; one of thoſe angels that excel in ſtrength, as appears by what he did: for he by night opened the priſon doors; where the Apoſtles were put, and which had more doors than one, and theſe ſtrong and cloſe ſhut, and guarded by keepers; but were eaſily opened by the angel. It was very likely at, or towards the evening, when the Apoſtles were taken, and therefore they were committed to priſon, there to lie all night, till next morning, when the Sanhedrim would meet together to conſult what to do with them: and brought them forth; out of the priſon, leading them out at the doors he had opened for them: and ſaid; the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions add, to them; that is, to the Apoſtles, as follows.

Ver. 20. Go, ſtand and ſpeak in the temple to the people, &c.] They were not delivered out of priſon, in order to go and ſecure themſelves from danger; but to go about the work they were called to, to preach the Goſpel in the temple, the place of worſhip; and a proper place to meet with perſons to preach to, being a public place, whither the Jews always reſorted; and there they were to ſtand, and continue with courage and intrepidity, not fearing the reproach and wrath of men, ſeeing they had both Chriſt and truth on their ſide; and there declare it to the people, the common people, the multitude, even all that came to hear: the Goſpel is to be preached to all; the Spirit of God makes it effectual to ſome, and others are rendred inexcuſable: the ſubſtance of what they were to ſpeak, follows, all the words of this life; all the doctrines of the Goſpel; none of them are to be dropped or concealed, but to be ſpoken out, fully, freely, and faithfully, with all boldneſs and conſtancy; tho' they cannot be comprehended by reaſon, and are rejected by learned men, and the majority of the people; tho' charged with novelty and licentiouſneſs, and attended with reproach and perſecution: and theſe may be called, the words of life, even of eternal life, as in John vi. 68. becauſe they ſhew the nature of it, and point out the way unto it; not by the law and obedience to that, but by Chriſt and his righteouſneſs; and are the means of quickning dead ſinners, of reviving drooping ſaints, and of nouriſhing them up unto eternal life: and alſo the words of this life; not of this preſent frail, mortal, and ſinful life; but of life by Chriſt, which is begun to be enjoyed now, and will be perfectly enjoyed hereafter: and particularly the doctrine of the reſurrection unto life, may be intended; in oppoſition to the Sadducees, who denied it, and were the men that being filled with indignation againſt them for preaching it, had ſeized them, and put them into priſon; and being now delivered from priſon, they are bid to go and preach this ſame doctrine again, in the moſt public manner: tho' ſome think there is an hypallage in the words; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders them, all theſe words of life; and the Ethiopic verſion, this word of life; meaning the Goſpel, and the doctrines of it, they had in commiſſion to preach, and for which they were reproached and perſecuted.

Ver. 21. And when they heard that, &c.] Or his word, as the Arabic verſion ſupplies; that is, the word of the angel, the orders enjoined them by him, to go to the temple, and there preach the Goſpel; this clauſe is left out in the Syriac verſion: they entred into the temple early in the morning; they were obedient to the command of the angel, believing him to be a meſſenger of God, who declared his will, which they readily complied with, and were indeed eager of doing it; and therefore early in the morning, as ſoon as ever the temple doors were opened, and there were any people got together, they went in: and taught; as the Ethiopic verſion adds, the people, this word of life; the doctrine or doctrines of the Goſpel which the angel had bid them teach: but the high-prieſt came, and they that were with him; as before, to the place where the Sanhedrim uſed to meet; either the chamber Gazith, or the ſhops, or ſome other place in Jeruſalem; ſee the note on chap. iv. 15. and called the council together; the Sanhedrim, conſiſting of ſeventy-one, which uſually met at the time of the morning daily ſacrifice; perhaps on this occaſion they might be called together ſooner, and every one of them ſummoned to attend; for otherwiſe it was not neceſſary that every particular member ſhould be preſent, but when there was any buſineſs of importance which required it, they were all gathered together[o]: and all the ſenate of the children of Iſrael; or the elders, as the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions read, the reſt of the elders of the city, beſides thoſe of the great Sanhedrim. Dr. Lightfoot thinks, that the two other Sanhedrim or courts of judicature in Jeruſalem, which conſiſted of twenty-three perſons apiece, are deſigned; and who, as he rightly obſerves from Maimonides[p], ſat the one in the gate of the court, the other in the gate of the mountain of the houſe; ſo that all the courts in Jeruſalem were called together at this time; and if they all met, they made up a hundred and ſeventeen men: and ſent to the priſon to have them brought; that is, the Apoſtles, as the Syriac verſion reads. The ſenſe is, that the high-prieſt, and thoſe that were with him at the ſame time, that they convened all the courts of judicature in Jeruſalem together, ſent their officers to the priſon, to fetch the Apoſtles; or elſe the Sanhedrim, and ſenate of Iſrael being met, they ordered their officers to go to the common jail, and bring the Apoſtles before them, to be examined, tried, and judged by them.

Ver. 22. But when the officers came, &c.] The Arabic verſion adds, to it; that is, to the priſon; and found them not in the priſon. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, the priſon being opened they found them not; when they came to the priſon, they opened the doors of it, or the keepers for them; for tho' the angel had opened them for the Apoſtles, yet he ſhut them again, as he brought them out; for theſe men found the doors ſhut, as the following verſe ſhows, and who upon opening them and ſearching the priſon, for the Apoſtles, could find none of them in it; wherefore they returned; the Arabic verſion reads, to them; to the Sandhedrim: and told; that is, them, as both the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions read.

Ver. 23. Saying, the priſon truly found we ſhut with all ſafety, &c.] Locked, barred and bolted; and the keepers ſtanding without before the doors; both inner and outer in their proper places, diligently diſcharging their office: but when we had opened we found no man within; that is, none of the Apoſtles, for there might be other priſoners in it, who were not releaſed by this means.

Ver. 24. Now when the high-prieſt, &c.] Or the prieſts, as it is read in moſt copies; the Complutenſian edition reads, the high-prieſt; and he is certainly deſigned, ſince he is diſtinguiſhed from the chief-prieſts after mentioned; the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, leave out this word, as does alſo the Alexandrian copy: and the captain of the temple; the ſame verſions read in the plural number; ſee the notes on Luke xxii. 4, 52. and Acts iv. 1. and the chief prieſts heard theſe things; which the officers related, that the priſon doors were ſhut and ſafe, and the keepers upon their watch, and yet the Apoſtles gone: they doubted of them, whereunto this would grow; they did not doubt of the truth of the things their officers told them, but they were amazed at them, and heſitated in their minds about them, and were anxiouſly thoughtful; what this would, or ſhould be, or how this ſhould be done; that the priſon doors ſhould be ſhut, and yet the priſoners gone; they were in ſuſpenſe and anxiety of mind, what to impute it to; whether to a divine and ſupernatural power, or to magic art; and were uneaſy in their minds what would be the iſſue of ſo ſtrange and ſurprizing an event.

Ver. 25. Then came one and told them, ſaying, &c.] Who this man was, is of no conſequence to know; it can hardly be thought that he was one of the number of the diſciples, or a member of the church, or a profeſſor of the chriſtian religion; but rather an enemy, and one that ſought his own intereſt, and to obtain the favour and affection of the chief-prieſts and elders, and therefore very officiouſly came to them, and reported as follows: behold, the men whom ye put in priſon, laſt night, are ſtanding in the temple; openly and publickly, and without fear; and teaching the people; in the name of Jeſus, which the Sanbedrim had forbid them to do.

Ver. 26. Then went the captain with the officers, &c.] That is, the captain of the temple, who had the command of it; he went thither attended with the officers and ſervants of the chief-prieſts, the ſame that had been ſent to the priſon, to fetch the Apoſtles: and brought them without violence; they did not lay hold upon them, and drag them away in a violent manner; but gave them good words, and allured them, and intreated them to go along with them, and perhaps promiſed them, that no hurt ſhould come to them, and that they ſhould have full liberty to ſpeak for themſelves; the Ethiopic verſion renders it, they brought them behaving themſelves mildly towards them; they uſed no forcible, but gentle methods; they did not ſeize them in a violent way, and bind them, and carry them away by force: for they feared the people; who had them in great eſteem, becauſe of the miracles done by them, and the benefit they received from them, both for their ſouls and bodies: leſt they ſhould have been ſtoned; by the populace, who had they uſed them in a ſevere and cruel manner, would have riſen upon them, and ſtoned them to death; the Ethiopic verſion renders it, becauſe they feared the people, they did not ſtone them; as if the captain of the temple, and the officers would have ſtoned the apoſtles, but that they were afraid of the people.

Ver. 27. And when they had brought them, &c.] From the temple, to the place where the Sanhedrim ſat, which, by this, ſeems to have been not in the room Gazith, nor in the ſhops, which were both in the temple, but in ſome part of the city of Jeruſalem: they ſet them before the council; whereby was fulfilled what Chriſt had foretold, Matt. x. 17. they will deliver you up to the councils; they placed them before the whole Sanhedrim; in the midſt of it, as in chap. iv. 7. ſee the note there; and as the Ethiopic verſion here reads: and the high-prieſt aſked them; tho' he was not preſident of the council, but Gamaliel, after mentioned; yet being in ſo high an office, and a principal member of the council, took upon him the examination of the Apoſtles.

Ver. 28. Saying, did not we ſtraitly command you, &c.] Or give you ſtrict orders, with ſevere threatenings, that you ſhould not teach in this name? the Ethiopic verſion reads, in the name of Jeſus; which is what is meant, but was not expreſſed by the Sanhedrim; ſee ch. iv. 17. and behold, ye have filled Jeruſalem with your doctrine; they diſregarded the council, and its orders, its commands and threatenings, and preached the doctrines of the Goſpel; and particularly that concerning the reſurrection of Chriſt, and thro' him the reſurrection of all the dead; and with ſuch ſucceſs, that great part of the inhabitants of Jeruſalem received it; at leaſt there were great numbers in all parts of the city which attended to it, and embraced it: and this they repreſent as a novel doctrine, deviſed by the Apoſtles, and peculiarly theirs; and which Moſes, and the prophets, were ſtrangers to: and intend to bring this man's blood upon us; by charging us with the murder of him, and repreſenting us as guilty of ſhedding innocent blood, and ſo ſtirring up the people, and the Romans againſt us, to take vengeance on us for it: this, as if they ſhould ſay, ſeems to be the intention and deſign of your miniſtry, particularly in aſſerting, that Jeſus of Nazareth, who was crucified, is now riſen from the dead, and was a holy, innocent, and righteous perſon, as his reſurrection ſhews; and therefore, as we have been guilty in ſhedding his blood, the puniſhment of it will, one day or other, be inflicted on us; as it accordingly was, and as they themſelves imprecated in Matt. xxvii. 25. It is to be obſerved, that they don't mention the name of Jeſus, only by way of contempt, call him this man, as it is uſual with the Jews to do, when they ſpeak of him. So a commentator [q] on Gen. xxvii. 39. ſays of ſome, "they believed in a man whom "they ſet up for God; and Rome believed, in "the days of Conſtantine, who renewed all that "religion, and put upon his banner the form "האיש ההוא, of that man:" and ſo another of their writers [r] uſes the phraſe ſeveral times in a few words. Judah ben Tabai fled to Alexandria, " that they might not make him preſident, and in " the way; with one diſciple; as it happened to " Joſhua ben Perachiah, with אותו האיש, that " man; and ye may receive it for a truth, that " that man was his diſciple —— and the truth is, " that that man was born in the fourth year of the " kingdom of Jannai the ſecond." So an heretick is ſaid to be one that confeſſes that man; and hereticks are the diſciples of that man, who turned to evil the words of the living God [z]. Thus blaſphemouſly and contemptuouſly do they ſpeak of Chriſt.

Ver. 29. Then Peter, and the other apoſtles, anſwered and ſaid, &c.] Peter began, as the mouth of the Apoſtles, being the eldeſt man, and very bold and zealous; and the reſt followed, or joined, with him in what he ſaid: we ought to obey God rather than men; this is ſaid in anſwer to the charge of diſobedience to the orders and commands of the council: men, civil magiſtrates, and eccleſiaſtical rulers, are to be obeyed in things which are not repugnant to the will of God, but in things that are, God is to be obeyed, and not men. God had commanded by an angel, that the Apoſtles ſhould go to the temple, and there preach the doctrines of the Goſpel, the Sanhedrim had forbid them to ſpeak and teach in the name of Chriſt; who were now to be obeyed? God, and not men: from whence it appears that the Apoſtles were to be juſtified in diſregarding the council, and neglecting its orders; and which is no ways contrary to that obedience and ſubmiſſion, that is, to be yielded to thoſe that are in authority, in things civil and lawful.

Ver. 30. The God of our fathers raiſed up Jeſus, &c.] Not from the dead, tho' this was true; but called him to the work and office of a Saviour, inveſted him with that office, and ſent him to perform that work; ſo that this refers rather to the incarnation of Chriſt, in conſequence of the ancient council and covenant of grace: and this the Apoſtles attribute to God the father, under the character of the God of our fathers, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, as in chap. iii. 13. to ſhew that they did not bring in and worſhip any ſtrange God; nor introduce any novel doctrine; or ſpeak of any other ſaviour or redeemer, than he whom the God of their fathers had appointed, and who was made known to them, whom they looked for and believed in, and were juſtified and ſaved by: whom ye ſlew and hanged on a tree; this is ſaid in defence of themſelves, being charged that they intended to bring this man's blood upon them; they therefore inſiſt upon it that they had ſlain Jeſus whom God raiſed up, inaſmuch as they had condemned him to death in their Sanhedrim, and had urged and importuned Pilate to crucify him, and had imprecated his blood upon them and on their children; and were not content to put him to any kind of death, but inſiſted on his being crucified, or hanged on a tree; that is, ſtretched out upon the croſs, which was both a painful and ſhameful death, to which they were manifeſtly acceſſory, and therefore juſtly charged with it.

Ver. 31. Him hath God exalted with his right hand, &c.] Not at his right hand, tho' he is exalted to it, and is ſet down at it, but with, or by his right hand; that is, by his power: for being by him raiſed from the dead, he was exalted to the higheſt heavens, and placed in human nature at the right hand of God, on the ſame throne with him, crowned with glory and honour; and having a name above every name, and all power and authority both in heaven and in earth given him, to be a prince and a †ſaviour; being made and declared both Lord and Chriſt, lord of lords, and prince of the kings of the earth, the prince of life and peace, the head of the church, and over all things for the ſake of it, and the ſaviour of his body the church, of all the elect of God; not with a temporal, but a ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation, of which he is become the author by his obedience, ſufferings, and death; and is an able and willing, a ſuitable and an only ſaviour: and ſome of the branches of his power and grace are for to give repentance to Iſrael; to the Iſrael whom God has choſen for himſelf, and Chriſt has redeemed by his blood, and whom the Spirit calls by his grace: theſe being ſinners, as well as others, ſtand in need of repentance; and whereas this is not in any man's power, but is the free gift of God's grace; for tho' he ſhould give men time and ſpace to repent, and afford them the means of it, yet if he does not give them grace to repent, they never will, ſuch is the hardneſs of man's heart; Chriſt is appointed to give this grace to the choſen ones, which he does by ſending his Spirit to convince of ſin, and to take away the ſtony heart, and give an heart of fleſh: and forgiveneſs of ſins; free and full forgiveneſs of all ſins; which being obtained by his blood, is applied by his Spirit to all that truly repent of them; for theſe two always go together; where he gives the one, he alſo gives the other: the manifeſtations and applications of pardoning grace are only made to repenting ſinners; and there are none that truly, and in an evangelical way, repent of ſin, but who have ſome views, or, at leaſt, hopes of pardoning grace; and none ever mourn more over ſin, than thoſe that ſee it in the glaſs of forgiving love.

† Act. 13.23

Luke. 24.47.
Act. 20.21.

Ver. 32. And we are his witneſſes of theſe things, &c.] Of the incarnation of Chriſt, of his crucifixion and death, of his reſurrection from the dead, of his exaltation by the right hand of God, and of his offices as a prince and a ſaviour, and of the influences of his grace, in giving repentance and remiſſion of ſins to his people; and even to many of the Jews, who had been his crucifiers, and who were now converted under the miniſtry of the Apoſtles: and ſo is alſo the Holy Ghoſt; in his deſcent upon the Apoſtles, thro' the miraculous gifts beſtowed upon them, and the wonderful works done by them, and the mighty power accompanying their miniſtry to the converſion of ſinners: whom God hath given to them that obey him; that hearken to his Goſpel, and believe in Chriſt, even to all private Chriſtians, as well as miniſters of the word; if not in his extraordinary gifts, yet in the ordinary meaſures of his grace.

Ver. 33. When they heard that, &c.] This defence of the Apoſtles, in which they ſtill inſiſted upon it, that they had been the crucifiers of Chriſt, and yet, that he was raiſed from the dead, and exalted in heaven, and was a ſpiritual ſaviour of men: they were cut; to the heart, as if they had been cut aſunder with a ſaw; the Ethiopic verſion renders it, they were angry, and gnaſhed with their teeth, as if a ſaw was drawn to and fro; they were filled with rage and madneſs: and took counſel to ſlay them; not in a legal and judicial way, but in a private manner, or by force; ſtirring up the zealots to riſe up againſt them, and diſpatch them at once, as blaſphemers and hereticks.

Ver. 34. Then ſtood there up one in the council, &c.] Or in the Sanhedrim, which the high-prieſt had called together; this phraſe is left out in the Syriac verſion: yet certain it is, that the great council was now aſſembled, and the diſciples were now before them, and this man, who was one of the members of it, ſtood up in it; for it ſeems to have been the cuſtom, that though they uſually ſat, yet when any one had any thing to ſay, or made a ſpeech, he roſe up from his ſeat. A Phariſee named Gamaliel; he is deſcribed by his ſect of religion, a Phariſee; of which, ſee the note on Matt. iii. 7. and by his name Gamaliel: he was the ſon of Rabban Simeon, the ſon of Hillell the great; which Simeon is, by ſome, thought to be the ſame that took Chriſt into his arms, Luke ii. 25. and this Gamaliel was alſo the maſter of the Apoſtle Paul, Acts xxii. 3. This was a very ancient name in Iſrael; the prince of the children of Manaſſeh, that offered at the dedication of the tabernacle, was of this name, Numb. vii. 54. and perhaps this man might be of the ſame tribe. He is further deſcribed by his profeſſion, a doctor of law; he was one of the Miſnic doctors, one of the fathers of tradition, that received the oral law from thoſe before him, and handed it down to others; and was the five and thirtieth of this ſort, as the Jews ſay [t], from the giving of the law at mount Sinai; or, as others [u], the thirty-firſt: had in reputation among all the people; and therefore his advice was the more likely to take place, without giving offence, or expoſing to danger, ſeeing he was highly eſteemed, not only in the Sanhedrim, but among the common people; and that not only becauſe he was a Phariſee, and a very ſtrict one, the glory of that ſect, inſomuch that it is ſaid [w], that "when he died, the glory of the law ceaſed, and purity and Phariſaiſm died;" but becauſe of his years, dignity, and place alſo; he is called commonly Gamaliel, הזקן, the elder, becauſe he lived to a great age [x]. He died eighteen years before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem [y], and was had in veneration to the laſt. It is ſaid of him [z], that "he ordered, before his death, that they ſhould carry him to his grave in linen; for before this time they uſed to carry out the dead in ſilk; and this was more grievous to his relations than his death itſelf;" becauſe they thought he was not interred honourably enough. And it is alſo reported, that Onkelos, the proſelyte, at his death, burnt as much for him in goods and ſpices, as came to ſeventy Tyrian pounds [a]. He was alſo commonly called by the name of Rabban, which was a more honourable title than that of Rabbi or Rab; and his father Simeon was the firſt that had it [b]; and he was now preſident of the Sanhedrim: and hence he uſed that authority which is expreſſed in the next words, and commanded to put the apoſtles forth a little ſpace; he ordered the apoſtles to be put out of the Sanhedrim for a little while, that they might not hear what he had to ſay, and take encouragement from it; and that he might more freely ſpeak his mind without giving them any countenance. The Alexandrian copy reads, the men, inſtead of the apoſtles; and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion.

Ver. 35. And ſaid unto them, ye men of Iſrael, &c.] This he ſaid after the Apoſtles were put out, when the council was by themſelves; and he addreſſed them as men of Iſrael; not as diſtinct from the prieſts and levites in the council, but becauſe they were all of the ſtock of Iſrael; for this council did not conſiſt of Iſraelites only, as diſtinct from prieſts and levites, as appears from ver. 21, 27. A Sanhedrim commonly conſiſted of each of theſe; tho' if only of Iſraelites it was a lawful one. Maimonides ſays [c], "they did not uſe to appoint any in the Sanhedrim, but prieſts, levites, and Iſraelites, that were genealogized and fit to be married into the prieſthood——and that it was a command, that in the great Sanhedrim there ſhould be prieſts and levites; as it is ſaid, thou ſhall go to the prieſts and levites; but if they are not found, if they are all Iſraelites, lo, this is lawful," or a proper Sanhedrim. His ſpeech to them follows, take heed to yourſelves; conſider well, don't act a raſh and precipitant part; don't give way to paſſion and wrath, and haſtily lay hands on theſe men, and deſtroy them; leſt ye bring yourſelves into diſgrace and danger, and bring upon yourſelves the ill will and reſentment of men, and the wrath of God: take time to conſider of the matter, and deliberately conſult what ye intend to do as touching theſe men; what puniſhment to inflict upon them, whether impriſonment, ſcourging, or death; do nothing raſhly.

Ver. 36. For before theſe days roſe up Theudas, &c.] There is one of this name Joſephus [d] ſpeaks of, who ſet up for a prophet, and drew a large number of people after him; pretending, that if they would follow him to the river Jordan, and take their goods along with them, he would but give the word, and the waters would divide and leave them paſſage to go over dry foot; but Cuſpius Fadus, who then had the adminiſtration of Judea, ſent out ſome troops of horſe, before they were aware, and killed many of them, and took divers others, and brought them in triumph to Jeruſalem, with the head of Theudas. This account agrees with this inſtance of Gamaliel, only differs in chronology; ſince, according to Gamaliel's account, this caſe of Theudas was ſome time ago, and muſt have been before now, or he could not have mentioned it; whereas the ſtory Joſephus relates, as being in the times of Cuſpius Fadus, was ſeveral years after this. Some think Joſephus is miſtaken in his chronology, and then all is right. Others, that another Theudas is intended; who, as Origen ſays [e], was before the birth of Chriſt, ſince he was before Judas of Galilee, who roſe up in the days of the taxing, at which time Chriſt was born: and the phraſe, before theſe days, ſeems to deſign a good while ago. This name was in uſe among the Jews, and is either the ſame with תודה, Thuda, or Thoda, ſo the Syriac verſion reads; one of the diſciples of Chriſt, was ſo called by the Jews [f], whoſe name was Thaddeus: or with תודוס, Thudus; one of this name, ſaid [g] to be a man of Rome, is frequently mentioned in the Talmud; and another alſo that was a phyſician [h]; but both different from this Theudas. The Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions read, Theodas; and ſome take it to be a contraction of Theodotus, Theodorus, or Theodoſius. Juſt as Theucharis is put for Theocharis, and Theudoſia for Theodoſia: but it ſeems rather to be an Hebrew name; and ſo Jerom [i] took it to be, who renders it praiſe: but who the man was it not certain; however, he roſe up, as Gamaliel ſays, and made an inſurrection, boaſting himſelf to be ſome body; or ſome great one, as the Alexandrian copy, and three of Beza's copies read, and two of Stephens's, and the Complutenſian edition; and as read alſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions; juſt as Simon Magus did afterwards, ch. viii. 9.

and ſo Joſephus's Theudas gave out, that he was a prophet, and promiſed great things to the people, as to divide the waters of Jordan for them, by a word ſpeaking, and lead them thro' it as on dry land: to whom a number of men, about four hundred, joined themſelves; who believing what he ſaid, put themſelves under his command, and ſet him at the head of them: who was ſlain; ſo Joſephus's Theudas had his head cut off by the troops of Cuſpius Fadus, the Roman governour: and as many as obeyed him were ſcattered and brought to nought; ſome killed, and others taken; and ſo the faction was quelled, and came to nothing. This inſtance Gamaliel produces, to ſhew that impoſtors and ſeditious perſons, ſuch as the Apoſtles were thought to be, ſeldom ſucceeded, but generally failed in their attempts, and were blaſted; and with the ſame view he mentions the following one.

Ver. 37. After this man roſe up Judas of Galilee, &c.] Of whom Joſephus thus ſays [k]: "there was a man of Galilee, by name Judas, who led his countrymen into rebellion, declaring it an evil, ſhould they ſuffer tribute to be paid to the Romans, and introduce mortal rulers after God." And not unlike this is what another Jewiſh writer ſays [l] of Judas the Galilean, and his party: "theſe were the cauſe of the Jews rebelling againſt the Romans, for they ſaid, it was not fit that any ſhould rule over men but God alone; and that no one ſhould be called Lord, but the bleſſed God." And this inſurrection was in the days of the taxing; which was made when Cyrenius was governour of Syria; and the reaſon of it was, becauſe he and his party would not pay that tax, for the reaſons ſuggeſted in the above citations: and this is what Joſephus refers to, when he ſays [m], "Cyrenius came to Syria, ſent from Cæſar as judge of the nation, and appraiſer of their eſtates; upon which Judas, the Gaulonite, (the ſame with Judas of Galilee) rebelled, and Saddochus with him; ſaying, that this appraiſment brought nothing elſe but ſervitude upon them; and therefore exhorted the nation to vindicate their liberty." And his exhortations and arguments prevailed with the people: wherefore it follows here, and drew away much people after him; perhaps a much larger number than Theudas did, ſince they are not expreſly mentioned how many they were: he alſo periſhed; being killed in the inſurrection, or taken and put to death by the Romans. So Origen ſays [n], that he was puniſhed, and his doctrine was deſtroyed, and remained only among a few contemptible perſons: and all, even as many as obeyed him, were diſperſed; were forced to fly, ſome one way, and ſome another, and could make nothing of it: and as this inſtance was after the other before mentioned; and was ſo early as under the government of Cyrenius, and at the time of the taxing under him; it ſhows that Theudas could not be the Theudas of Joſephus, unleſs the words ſhould be rendered, as ſome chuſe to do, beſides this man roſe up Judas, &c. And others obſerve, that after him, is the ſame as before him; and which, however, at firſt hearing, may ſeem very abſurd, yet is juſtified by inſtances, as being a very proper way of ſpeaking, ſeeing, when an account proceeds from the laſt as neareſt, the firſt muſt be laſt, and the laſt firſt. Some, in order to reconcile this paſſage, think, that there is a tranſpoſition in the words of Luke, and that they ſhould be read thus, for before thoſe days roſe up Judas of Galilee, &c. and then, after this man roſe up Theudas, &c. ſo making Judas of Galilee more ancient than Theudas, as he muſt be, if he is the ſame Theudas Joſephus ſpeaks of: but ſtill it is a difficulty how he could be the ſame, when that fact of his, the above hiſtorian ſpeaks of, was ſeven, or eight, or ten, and, as ſome ſay, twelve years after this ſpeech of Gamaliel's. To remove this, 'tis propoſed, that what is ſaid concerning Theudas is to be put into a parentheſis, and to be conſidered not as the words of Gamaliel ſaying them in the Sanhedrim, but as the words of Luke the hiſtorian, who wrote after this fact was done; and becauſe of the agreement of it with that of Judas, mentioned by Gamaliel, he inſerts it here, and joins it with it [o]. And yet after all, it looks as if it was another Theudas that is here ſpoken of, who was before Judas; and that he that Joſephus ſpeaks of, might be, as Dr. Lightfoot conjectures, one of his poſterity, who was of the ſame name, and trod in his ſteps, and was guilty of ſedition as his anceſtor was, and as the ſons of Judas were, mentioned by the ſame hiſtorian in the ſame place.

Ver. 38. And now I ſay unto you, &c.] This is the ſum of my advice upon the obſervation of theſe and other inſtances: refrain from theſe men, and let them alone; keep your hands off of them, don't attempt to take away their lives, but diſmiſs them quietly, nor go about to hinder them, in what they are concerned: for if this counſel, or this work be of men; if the doctrine theſe men preach is an human device; or this buſineſs they are engaged in is only an human affair, projected by men, and carried on upon ſelfiſh principles, and worldly views, ſeeking only themſelves, and their ſecular intereſts, and not the glory of God: it will come to nought; as did the deſigns of Theudas and Judas.

Ver. 39. But if it be of God, &c.] If it is according to the counſel of his will; if it is a ſcheme of his forming, and a work to which he has called theſe men, and they proceed in on good principles, and with a view to the honour and glory of God: ye cannot overthrow it; it will proceed and get ground, and ſtand, mauger all the oppoſition of hell and earth; therefore do nothing to them, or hinder them from going on. Some copies read, ye cannot overthrow them; and add, neither you, nor kings, nor tyrants; wherefore refrain from theſe men; ſo Beza's Cambridge copy. Leſt haply ye be found even to fight againſt God; which to do is downright madneſs, and which no man in his ſenſes can expect to ſucceed in. There are ſome ſayings of the Jewiſh doctors which ſeem to agree with theſe reaſonings of Gamaliel [p]. "Says R. Jochanan the ſhoemaker, every congregation, which is for the name of heaven (or God) at length ſhall be eſtabliſhed, but that which is not for the glory of God ſhall not be eſtabliſhed in the end." Which one of the commentators [q] interprets in words ſtill nearer to Gamaliel's language, thus: "it ſhall be that that counſel which is for God ſhall ſtand and proſper, but that which is not for God ſhall ceaſe." And in another place it is ſaid [r], "all contention (or diſpute) which is for God, at length ſhall be eſtabliſhed, but that which is not for God ſhall not in the end be eſtabliſhed: what is contention that is for God? the contention of Hillell and Shammai, (two famous doctors “ among the Jews) but that which is not for God “ is the contention of Korah, and his whole com- “ pany.” Some have thought from this advice of Gamaliel, that he was a Chriſtian, or greatly inclined to Chriſtianity; but when it is conſidered, what reſpect was ſhewn him at his death by the Jews, before obſerved on ver. 34. it will appear that he died a Phariſee; and eſpecially it cannot be thought he had any favourable ſentiments of the Chriſtians, ſince a little before his death he ordered a prayer to be made againſt them. Maimonides ſays[s], that “ in the days of Rabban Gamaliel, the Epicureans “ (ſo the Amſterdam edition reads, but former editions “ read, מינים, hereticks, by whom are meant Chriſti- “ ans) increaſed in Iſrael; and they diſtreſſed the Iſrae- “ lites, and ſeduced them to turn aſide from God; and “ when he ſaw that this was greater than all the ne- “ ceſſities of the children of men, he ſtood up, and “ his council or Sanhedrim, and compoſed another “ prayer, in which there was a requeſt to God to “ deſtroy the Epicureans,” or hereticks, meaning the Chriſtians: and though this prayer is ſometimes aſcribed to Samuel the little, yet it was compoſed by him at the hint and inſtigation of Gamaliel; for ſo it is ſaid[t], R. Gamaliel ſaid to the wiſe men, “ is “ there no man that knows how to compoſe a “ prayer for the Sadducees? (R. Aſher reads here- “ ticks) Samuel the little ſtood up and compoſed “ one.” And it is alſo ſaid[u], that “ Samuel the “ little compoſed, ברכת מינין, the prayer for the “ hereticks, before, or in the preſence of Gamaliel “ the elder.” He made it when he was preſent, aſſiſting, dictating, directing, and approving. The prayer was this[w], “ let there be no hope for apo- “ ſtates, and may all hereticks periſh in a moment, “ and all the enemies of thy people quickly cut “ off: root out the kingdom of pride, and break, “ deſtroy, and ſubdue them in haſte in our days.” In ſome forms 'tis added, “ bleſſed art thou, O “ Lord, that breakeſt the wicked in pieces, and “ humbleſt the proud.” Upon the whole, Gamaliel does not ſeem to have been a Chriſtian, or to have favoured the Chriſtian religion; but he was, as he is ſaid, ver. 34. to be, a Phariſee; and this council, or Sanhedrim, were, for the greater part of them, Sadducees, as ſeems from ver. 17. who, as the Jews ſay, were wicked and baſe men, men of very ill manners, whereas the Phariſees were רחמנים, merciful men[x]; and ſuch an one was Gamaliel: he was a religious man in his way; a man of humanity, a mild and moderate man, that had compaſſion and pity for his fellow-creatures; and could not give in to any ſchemes of cruelty and perſecution, which the Sadducees were forward to; and upon theſe principles he acted, and upon theſe he gave this advice.

Ver. 40. And to him they agreed, &c.] They were convinced and perſuaded by his reaſonings, approved of his advice, and agreed to follow it: and when they had called the apoſtles; into the council again, having ſent their ſervants for them, or ordered them to be brought in: and beaten them; or ſcourged and whipped them with forty ſtripes ſave one, whereby was fulfilled what Chriſt had foretold, Matt. x. 17. they commanded they ſhould not ſpeak in the name of Jeſus; as they had ſtrictly commanded them before, ch. iv. 18. Perhaps both in this, as well as in beating the Apoſtles, they did not cloſely attend to Gamaliel's counſel, who adviſed them to keep their hands off of them, and not hinder them, but let them alone in what they were about: but this might be thought by them not to their reputation, nor ſufficiently aſſerting their authority, to diſmiſs them, without ſaying or doing any thing to them: and let them go; from the council to their own company: they releaſed them, and looſed them from their bonds; they ſet them at liberty, and let them go where they would; and ſo far they followed Gamaliel's advice.

Ver. 41. And they departed from the preſence of the council, &c.] Having been threatened and beaten by them: rejoicing that they were counted worthy to ſuffer ſhame for his name; Beza's ancient copy, and others, the Vulgate Latin, and Arabic verſions read, for the name of Jeſus; in which name they were forbid to ſpeak, and for ſpeaking in it they were beaten; the Alexandrian copy, and the Syriac verſion read, for the name; that is, for God, for the glory of God, and in the cauſe of God; השם, the name is often uſed in Jewiſh writings for God: the ſhame they ſuffered for him was by being ſcourged with forty ſtripes ſave one; which was reckoned an infamous and ignominious puniſhment, and which was inflicted on perſons guilty of very ſcandalous crimes[y]: but this gave the innocent minds of the Apoſtles no uneaſineſs; they accounted it an honour conferred on them to be called to ſuffering for the ſake of God and Chriſt, and in ſo good a cauſe; they did what Chriſt exhorted them to, Matt. v. 11, 12. which ſhows they had much of the preſence of God, and large meaſures of grace communicated to them, by which they were ſupported; and thus chearfully bore all indignity and reproach, for the name of Chriſt, which was exceeding dear and precious to them.

Ver. 42. And daily in the temple, and in every houſe, &c.] Every day, with great conſtancy and aſſiduity, both publickly and privately; in the temple, the place of publick worſhip, where the Jews reſorted on that account; and in each of their private houſes, as often as they had opportunity: they ceaſed not to teach and preach Jeſus Chriſt; that he is the Son of God, truly and properly God, the only ſaviour of ſinners: they preached up the dignity of his perſon, the grace of his incarnation, the obedience of his life, the benefits of his ſufferings and death; they preached his reſurrection from the dead, and the reſurrection of the dead thro' him; they declared his aſcenſion to heaven, his ſeſſion at the right hand of God, and interceſſion for his people; they preached peace and pardon by his blood, atonement of ſin by his ſacrifice, juſtification by his righteouſneſs, and complete redemption and ſalvation by him. And this they did without ceaſing, not regarding the orders and threats of the Sanhedrim; they waxed bolder and bolder in the miniſtry of the word, and were more conſtant and aſſiduous in it; their reproaches and perſecutions increaſed their zeal for Chriſt, and his cauſe.

CHAP. VI.

Ver. 1. AND in thoſe days, when the number of the diſciples were multiplied, &c.] From an hundred and twenty to three thouſand more, from thence to five thouſand more, and after that a multitude of men and women were added, and ſtill they were increaſing; ſee ch. i. 15. and ii. 41. and iv. 4. and v. 14. This increaſe of the diſciples agrees with what Maimonides ſays [z], before obſerved, that "in the days of Gamaliel, רבו מינים, the "hereticks were multiplied in Iſrael." The word diſciples was a common name to all Chriſtians, to all that believed in Chriſt, and was the name they went by, before they were called Chriſtians, ch. xi. 26. there aroſe a murmuring of the Grecians, or Helleniſts againſt the Hebrews; by the Hebrews are meant the Jews that dwelt in Judea, and were the inhabitants of that country, and chiefly of Jeruſalem, who ſpoke the Hebrew, or rather the Syriac language; and by the Grecians, or Helleniſts, are meant, not the Greeks that were proſelyted to the Jewiſh religion, though there might be ſome few among them; but Jews who were born, and had dwelt, in ſome parts of Greece, and ſpoke the Greek language, and uſed the Septuagint verſion of the bible; between theſe two a murmuring aroſe, a complaint was made by one againſt the other: ſo that, as it appears from the inſtance of Ananias and Sapphira, that this firſt and pure Goſpel-church was not free from hypocrites; it is alſo manifeſt, that tho' they were at firſt ſo united and harmonious in their affections and judgments, yet they were not always clear of feuds, animoſities, and contentions; ſatan beſtirred himſelf, and got footing among them, as he commonly does where the Goſpel is preached, and there is an increaſe of it: the reaſon of this uneaſineſs was, becauſe their widows were neglected in the daily miniſtration; that is, they had not that diſtributed which was neceſſary for them, nor ſo much as the Hebrew widows; they complained of partiality, as if becauſe the Hebrew widows were the natives of the country, and might be nearly related to many of the community, that therefore they were more regarded and better ſupplied every day, than their widows were, whoſe huſbands had dwelt in foreign lands, and were not ſo well known, and had fewer acquaintance and relations; for it ſeems the miniſtration or diſtribution was made every day: and ſuch a practice obtained among the Jews in common, who uſed to collect every day for the poor, and give it daily to them. Maimonides [a] ſpeaks of it in this manner; "they appoint collectors, who receive "every day, from every court, a piece of bread, "or any ſort of food, or fruit, or money, from "whomſoever that offers freely for the time; and "they divide that which is collected, in the evening, among the poor, and they give to every "poor perſon of it his daily ſuſtenance; and this is "called תמחוי, Tamchui, or the alms diſh." And from hence the Apoſtles might take up this cuſtom, and follow it. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, becauſe they ſaw their widows miniſter, or employed daily; as if the complaint was, that their widows were too much made uſe of, and obliged to more frequent, and to harder ſervice in taking care of the poor, the ſick, and helpleſs, than the other widows were, who had not their ſhare of labour with them, but lived more at eaſe. Tho' others rather think the murmur was, becauſe the Grecian widows were not taken into the number, and employed in taking care of the poor, as the Hebrew widows were; but the ſenſe firſt given, of not having ſo good a ſhare in the diſtribution, ſeems to be the beſt.

Ver. 2. Then the twelve, &c.] The twelve Apoſtles, as the Syriac verſion reads; for their number was now compleat, Matthias being choſen in the room of Judas: theſe being informed of the murmur there was between the two ſorts of believers, the Hebrew and the Helleniſtic Jews, called the multitude of the diſciples unto them; either the hundred and twenty, the original members of the church, which firſt formed it, and on whom the Holy Ghoſt deſcended on the day of Pentecoſt; or rather the whole body of the church: for what the Apoſtles had to ſay concerned them all; and they all had an equal right to chuſe their officers, that ſhould miniſter unto them; and when they were convened together, they addreſſed them after this manner: and ſaid, it is not reaſon; or it is not pleaſing, neither to God, nor to us; ſo the Arabic verſion reads, this does not pleaſe us; nor could it be pleaſing to the church itſelf: that we ſhould leave the word of God; the ſtudy of the word, meditation upon it, and preaching it: not that they did relinquiſh either of theſe; but they were ſometimes obliged to omit them, or not ſo frequently attend them; the care of the poor taking up more of their time, than the work of the miniſtry, or preaching of the Goſpel would admit of; and therefore thought it not ſo right and proper, or ſo acceptable a thing to God and man, that they ſhould in the leaſt neglect a work of ſo great importance to the ſouls of men, and cauſe it to give way to that which only regarded their bodies: and ſerve tables; the tables of the poor, collect for them, inſpect into their ſeveral caſes, and circumſtances, and diſtribute accordingly to them; which required a good deal of time, care, thought, and circumſpection, eſpecially in ſuch a church, where the numbers were ſo large. From hence we learn what is the buſineſs of deacons, who were afterwards appointed to take this part of the Apoſtles work off of their hands, and attend to it; which is to ſerve tables: the table of the Lord, by providing the bread and wine for it; receiving both from the miniſter, when bleſſed, and diſtributing them to the members; and collecting from them for the poor, and the defraying the charge; and obſerving what members are miſſing at the ordinance, whom they are to admoniſh; and if their admonitions are not regarded, to report it to the church: and they are likewiſe to ſerve the miniſter's table, by taking care that he has a ſufficient competency for his ſupport; and it belongs to them to ſtir up the members of the church to their duty in communicating to him; and what they receive of them, they are to apply to his uſe: and alſo, they are to ſerve the poor's table; to whom they are to diſtribute of the church's ſtock, with all impartiality, ſimplicity, chearfulneſs, and ſympathy.

Ver. 3. Wherefore brethren look ye out among you, &c.] Or chuſe out among you, as the Syriac verſion adds, and as the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions render it; which ſhows that this ſort of officers, deacons, muſt be members of the church, and of the ſame church to whom they are ordained deacons; and that they muſt be choſen to that office by the whole community, or by the common ſuffrages and votes of the people. So the [b] Jews "did not appoint פרנס, (which may be rendered) "an overſeer of the poor, in a congregation, without conſulting the congregation;" which officer ſeems pretty much to anſwer to a deacon. Seven men, of honeſt report; why the number ſeven is fixed upon, perhaps no other ſolid reaſon is to be given, but that that number was judged ſufficient for the care of the poor in that church, and at that time; nor is it obligatory on other churches to have juſt ſo many, neither more nor fewer; for ſuch officers are to be choſen as the church requires: perhaps ſome regard might be had to שבעה טובי העיר, the ſeven good men of the [c] city among the Jews, who had great authority in their ſynagogues, and who had power to ſell them, when old and uſeleſs; and who ſeem, according to Maimonides [d], to be the elders of the people. It is neceſſary that this ſort of officers in the church ſhould be men of honeſt report; that have a good teſtimony both from within the church and without, of their honeſty and fidelity; ſince they are entruſted with the church's ſtock, and have the care of many devolved upon them: ſo the collectors of alms among the Jews were to be men ידועים ונאמנים, known and faithful [e]; men of known probity and integrity: and beſides, this good and honeſt report they were to have from others, they were alſo to be men full of the Holy Ghoſt, and of wiſdom; they were to be men, not only that had the Spirit of God in them, but who were eminent for their rich experiences of grace; and who had ſuperior gifts of the Spirit, whereby they were capable both of defending the truth againſt oppoſers, and of ſpeaking a word of exhortation to duty, or of comfort under diſtreſs, or of reproof to members, as circumſtances required; and it may be at this time when the church conſiſted of ſome of all nations, as ſeems from ch. ii. it might be neceſſary that they ſhould have the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, eſpecially that of ſpeaking with divers tongues, that they might be able to converſe with perſons of different languages: and wiſdom is highly requiſite in them, that they may be good œconomiſts of the church's ſtock, and diſpoſe of it in the moſt prudent manner; and conduct themſelves agreeably to the different tempers and ſpirits of men they have to do with, and eſpecially in compoſing differences among members. Whom we may appoint over this buſineſs; aſſign or make over that part of their office to them, which hitherto they had exerciſed, and inſtall them into it, and inveſt them with it.

Ver. 4. But we will give ourſelves continually to prayer, &c.] Both in private for themſelves, and the church; and in the houſes and families of the ſaints, with the ſick and diſtreſſed; and in publick, in the temple, or in whatſoever place they met for publick worſhip: and to the miniſtry of the word; the preaching of the Goſpel, to which prayer is abſolutely prerequiſite, and with which it is always to be joined. Theſe two, prayer and preaching, are the principal employment of a Goſpel-miniſter, and are what he ought to be concerned in, not only now and then, but what he ſhould give himſelf up unto wholly, that his profiting might appear; and what he ſhould be continually exerciſed and employed in: and if parting with that branch of the miniſterial function, the care of the ſecular affairs of the church, and of the poor of it, was neceſſary in the Apoſtles, that they might be more at leiſure to attend to the more important and uſeful duties of prayer and preaching; it therefore ſeems neceſſary that thoſe who are called to labour in the word and doctrine, if poſſible, ſhould be exempt from all worldly buſineſs and employment; that of the miniſtry being ſufficient to engroſs all a man's time and thoughts.

Ver. 5. And the ſaying pleaſed the whole multitude, &c.] The ſpeech the Apoſtles made took with them; all things they propoſed were univerſally approved of; the whole body of the church came into it at once unanimouſly; they all judged it highly reaſonable, that the Apoſtles ſhould be eaſed of the burden in taking care of the poor, and that it ſhould be transferred to ſome other perſons, and they fixed on the following: and they choſe Stephen, a man full of faith, and of the Holy Ghoſt; he was a man eminent for his faith in Chriſt, and his faithfulneſs to him, and in every thing he was concerned, and for his courage and boldneſs in the cauſe of Chriſt, and for other gifts and graces of the Spirit, with which he was filled; he was, it is very likely, the moſt eminent perſon of all the ſeven, and is therefore named firſt; he is afterwards taken notice of, and was the firſt that ſuffered martyrdom for Chriſt, with which he was crowned, anſwerable to his name, which ſignifies a crown: and Philip; who was alſo an Evangeliſt, and had four daughters that propheſied; and perhaps is the ſame that went down to Samaria, and preached Chriſt there with great ſucceſs, and after that baptized the Ethiopian eunuch: and Prochorus; of this and the reſt, no other mention is made in the ſacred writings. He is ſaid by ſome to be a nephew of Stephen's, and firſt biſhop of Nicomedia; but theſe are things not certain; and as for the life of the Apoſtle John, ſaid to be written by him, it is a ſpurious and fabulous piece. And Nicanor; of this man we have no other certain account; for that he ſuffered martyrdom with Stephen is not to be depended on. It is a Grecian name; there is one of this name who was a general in Demetrius's army, who was ſent by him againſt the Jews, 1 Maccab. vii. 26. and there was a gate of the temple, which was called the gate of Nicanor: and Timon; he is ſaid to be afterwards biſhop of Beræa; tho' others make him biſhop of Boſtra; but with what truth cannot be aſſerted: and Parmenas; of him no other account is given, than in the Roman martyrology, which is not to be depended upon, that he ſuffered martyrdom under Trajan: and Nicolas a proſelyte of Antioch; who was firſt a Greek or Gentile, and then became a Jew, a proſelyte of righteouſneſs, and then a Chriſtian, and now made a deacon. Some think, that from this man ſprung the ſect of the Nicolaitanes, ſpoken of in the Revelations; though others think, that that wicked ſett of men only covered themſelves with his name, or that they abuſed ſome words of his, and perverted the right meaning of them; though was it certain he did turn out a wicked man, it is not to be wondered at, that ſince there was a devil among the twelve Apoſtles, there ſhould be a hypocrite and a vitious man among the firſt ſeven deacons. It is obſervable, that the names of all theſe deacons are Greek names; from whence, it ſeems, that they were of the Grecian or Helleniſtic Jews; ſo that the church thought fit to chuſe men out of that part of them which made the complaint, in order to make them eaſy; which is an inſtance of prudence and condeſcenſion, and ſhews of what excellent ſpirits they were of.

Ver. 6. Whom they ſet before the apoſtles, &c.] They did not barely nominate and propoſe them to them, but they brought them into their preſence, and placed them before them, as the perſons whom they had choſen, in order to be ordained by them. And when they had prayed; for theſe ſeven men ſet before them, that they might appear to be richly qualified for this office, and might honourably and faithfully diſcharge it, to the peace of themſelves, the advantage of the church, and the glory of God: they laid their hands on them; that is, they ordained them, they inſtalled them into their office, and inveſted them with it, uſing the rite or ceremony of laying on of hands, which was uſed by the Apoſtles for the conferring of gifts, and in benedictions, and at the ordination of officers; and ſeems to be borrowed from the Jews, who uſed it at the creation of doctors among them, and at the promotion of them to that dignity; and which they call סמיכה, or ordination by impoſition of hands; though that rite was not looked upon to be eſſentially neceſſary: for ſo they ſay [f], "ordination or promotion to doctorſhip is not neceſſarily done, ביד, by the hand, as Moſes did to Joſhua, but even בדיבור, by word only; it was enough to ſay, I ordain thee, or be thou ordained or promoted."

Ver. 7. And the word of God increaſed, &c.] This ſtratagem of ſatan did not ſucceed to divide the church, but iſſued in the better decorum and diſcipline of it, and in the ſpread and ſucceſs of the Goſpel; God thus making all things to work together for good: and the number of the diſciples multiplied in Jeruſalem greatly; where Chriſt was crucified, the Apoſtles were ſcourged, and treated with the utmoſt contempt, the Sanhedrim and rulers of the Jews dwelt, who uſed all their power and craft to cruſh the Goſpel, and hinder the progreſs of it, but in vain, there the word increaſed; which it may be ſaid to do, when ſaints are edified by it, and ſinners are converted under it; and in this laſt ſenſe it is chiefly to be underſtood here: the inſtances of converſion were very numerous; how large muſt this church now be! and a great company of the prieſts were obedient to the faith; that is, to the Goſpel, which contains things to be believed, articles of faith; propoſes Chriſt the great object of faith; and is the means of producing faith, and which is of no profit, unleſs it is mixed with faith: and to obey this is cordially to embrace the doctrines of the Goſpel, and chearfully to ſubmit to the ordinances of it. And that the prieſts, and a large number of them, ſhould do this, is very marvellous; ſince they were the moſt inveterate enemies of the Goſpel, and perſecutors of the ſaints; but what is it that efficacious grace cannot do? the Syriac verſion inſtead of prieſts reads Jews, but unſupported by any copy.

Ver. 8. And Stephen full of faith and power, &c.] The hiſtorian proceeds to give a narrative of Stephen particularly, the firſt of the ſeven deacons; of his faith and miracles, of his elocution and wiſdom, of his courage and intrepidity, of his conſtancy, and of his ſuffering martyrdom. He is ſaid to be full of faith, as before, in ver. 5. the Alexandrian copy, and four of Beza's copies read, full of grace; and ſo do the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions; the Ethiopic verſion reads, full of the grace of God: he had an uncommon ſhare of it; it was exceeding abundant in him; he had a ſufficiency of it for the ſervice and ſufferings he was called to: and he was full of power to preach the Goſpel, and teach it the people, which he did with authority; to defend it, and oppoſe the adverſaries of it; to bear reproach and indignities for it, and even death itſelf; and to do miraculous works for the confirmation of it, as follows: did great wonders and miracles among the people; openly before them, ſuch as ſpeaking with divers tongues, healing diſeaſes, caſting out devils, &c.

Ver. 9. Then there aroſe certain of the ſynagogue, &c.] Being filled with indignation at the doctrine of Stephen, and with envy at his miracles, they roſe up in great wrath, and warmly oppoſed him: and they belonged to that ſynagogue which is called the ſynagogue of the Libertines; or free men: it is a Roman name, and ſignifies the ſons of free men; and theſe were either the ſons of ſuch Jews, who of ſervants, or ſlaves, had been made משוחררים, free men; or rather ſuch Jews whoſe parents were born free, or had obtained their freedom at Rome, or in ſome free city under the Roman government, as Paul at Tarſus; ſince it is not ſo eaſy to account for it, that there ſhould be a peculiar ſynagogue for the former, whereas there might be for the latter, ſeeing they could not ſpeak the language of the native Jews. The Arabic verſion reads, of the Corinthians, as if they were the Jews from Corinth: and ſome have thought the word Libertines to be the name of a nation or people, as well as the names that follow; and ſome think it deſigns the Lybians or Lybiſtines in Africa; but neither of theſe is likely: and Cyrenians; natives of the city or country of Cyrene, from whence were many Jews; ſee Acts ii. 10. and xi. 20. ſuch as Simon the Cyrenian, the father of Alexander, and Rufus, who carried the croſs of Chriſt after him, Mark xv. 21. theſe, with thoſe that follow, either belonged to the ſame ſynagogue with the Libertines, or rather they ſeverally had diſtinct ſynagogues: and this will not ſeem ſtrange, when it is ſaid [g], that there were in Jeruſalem four hundred and eighty ſynagogues; tho' it is elſewhere ſaid [h] four hundred and ſixty: and Alexandrians; for that there were a peculiar ſynagogue of theſe at Jeruſalem is certain; for there is expreſs mention made of it in Jewiſh writings [i]. "It happened to R. Eleazar bar Tzadok, that he bought בית הכנסת של אלכסנדריים, the ſynagogue of the Alexandrians, which was at Jeruſalem, and he did with it whatever he pleaſed." And that they ſhould have a ſynagogue at Jeruſalem need not be wondered at, when there was ſuch an intercourſe and correſpondence between Jeruſalem and Alexandria: 'tis ſaid [k], "the houſe of Garmu were expert in making of the ſhew-bread, and they would not teach it; the wiſe men ſent and fetched workmen from Alexandria in Egypt, and they knew how to bake as well as they.———The houſe or family of Abtines were expert in the buſineſs of the incenſe, and they would not teach it; the wiſe men ſent and fetched workmen from Alexandria in Egypt, and they knew how to mix the ſpices as well as they." Again it is ſaid [l], "there was a braſs cymbal in the ſanctuary, and it was cracked, and the wiſe men ſent and brought “ workmen from Alexandria in Egypt, and they mended it——and there was a mortar in which they beat ſpices, and it was cracked, and the wiſe men ſent and fetched workmen from Alexandria, and they mended it.” Hence many of them doubtleſs ſettled here, and had a ſynagogue of their own: and of them of Cilicia; the metropolis of which country was Tarſus, Acts xxi. 39. and xxii. 3. I make no doubt of it, that Saul of Tarſus was among them, or belonged to this ſynagogue, and was one of the fierce diſputants with Stephen; at leaſt violently oppoſed him, ſince he afterwards held the clothes of thoſe that ſtoned him: we read [m] of, בית הכנסת של טרסיים, which I ſhould be tempted to render, the ſynagogue of the Tarſians, the ſame with the Cilicians here; but that it is elſewhere ſaid [n], that “ it happened to the ſynagogue of the Turſians, which was at Jeruſalem, that they ſold it to R. Eliezer, and he did all his buſineſs in it.” Where the Gloſs explains the word Turſians, by braſs founders; and it ſeems to deſign the ſame ſynagogue with that of the Alexandrians, who may be ſo called, becauſe many of them wrought in braſs, as appears from a citation above. There was a ſynagogue of theſe Tarſians at Lud, or Lydda [o]: it is added, and of Aſia; that is, the leſs; which joined to Cilicia, and in which were great numbers of Jews; ſee Acts xxi. 27. this clauſe is left out in the Alexandrian copy: at Jeruſalem, there were ſynagogues for the Jews of different nations; as here in London, are places of worſhip for proteſtants of ſeveral countries; as French, Dutch, Germans, Danes, Swedes, &c. Now ſeveral perſons out of theſe ſynagogues, met together in a body, diſputing with Stephen; about the doctrine he preached, and the miracles he wrought, and by what authority he did theſe things.

Ver. 10. And they were not able to reſiſt the wiſdom, &c.] In Beza's moſt ancient copy, and in another manuſcript 'tis added, which was in him; that divine wiſdom, which the ſpirit of wiſdom gave him; they were not a match for him with reſpect to the knowledge of divine things; they could not anſwer the wiſe arguments he made uſe of, fetched out of the ſcriptures of truth, in which he was well verſed, and had a large knowledge of: and the ſpirit by which he ſpake; that is, the Holy Spirit, as the above exemplars of Beza, and the Ethiopic verſion read; the meaning is, they could not reſiſt the Holy Spirit, by which Stephen ſpake, ſo as to overcome him, or put Stephen to ſilence, or confute him; otherwiſe they did reſiſt him, or oppoſe themſelves to him, but in vain, and without ſucceſs; for they always reſiſted the Holy Ghoſt in Chriſt and in his apoſtles, as their fathers before them reſiſted him in the prophets, as Stephen obſerves to them, ch. vii. 51. hereby was fulfilled what our Lord promiſed to his diſciples, Matt. x. 19, 20. Luke xxi. 15.

Ver. 11. Then they ſuborned men, &c.] Hired falſe witneſſes, which ſeems to have been commonly done by the Jews; ſo they did in the caſe of Chriſt: which ſaid, we have heard him ſpeak blaſphemous words againſt Moſes, and againſt God; that is, againſt the law of Moſes, and ſo againſt God, who gave the law to Moſes, as appears from ver. 13. the blaſphemous words ſeem to be, with reſpect to the ceremonial law, and the abrogation of it, which Stephen might inſiſt upon, and they charged with blaſphemy; ſee ver. 14.

Ver. 12. And they ſtirred up the people, &c.] The common people, who were eaſily wrought upon, and ſoon incenſed and provoked, when at any time, it was ſuggeſted to them, that the rituals and ceremonies of the law of Moſes, were treated with any neglect or contempt; ſee ch. xxi. 27, 28. And the elders and the Scribes; who belonged to the Sanhedrim, to whom they reported theſe things, as perſons, under whoſe cognizance they properly came: and came upon him; at an unawares, and in an hoſtile way: and caught him; ſeized him with violence: and brought him to the council; the great Sanhedrim, then ſitting at Jeruſalem, to whom it belonged to judge of blaſphemy.

Ver. 13. And ſet up falſe witneſſes, &c.] Having hired them, they brought them and ſet them before the Sanhedrim, to bear witneſs againſt Stephen: which ſaid, this man; meaning Stephen, who was now before the council, at whom they pointed, and whoſe name, through contempt, they would not mention: ceaſeth not to ſpeak blaſphemous words againſt this holy place; either the city of Jeruſalem, which is ſometimes called the holy city, and which was foretold by the angel to Daniel, and by Chriſt, that it ſhould be deſtroyed, and which Stephen might ſpeak of; or rather the temple, ſo the Ethiopic verſion; in a part of which, or in a place contiguous to it, the Sanhedrim might now be ſitting: and the law; the ceremonial law: the ſenſe is, that Stephen was continually telling the people, that in a little time their temple would be deſtroyed, and an end be put to temple worſhip, and to all the rituals and ceremonies of the law of Moſes; the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions, leave out the word blaſphemous; and ſo do the Alexandrian copy, and Beza's moſt ancient one; but as Beza obſerves, it is certain, or at leaſt it is moſt likely, that it was not omitted by the falſe witneſſes; though ſpeaking againſt the temple and the law, was ſufficient to make good a charge of blaſphemy.

Ver. 14. For we have heard him ſay, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion adds, beſides; but rather theſe words are a reaſon, giving evidence to, and ſupporting the general charge: that this Jeſus of Nazareth; Stephen ſpoke of, and whom they ſo called by way of contempt: ſhall deſtroy this place; meaning the temple, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; and is the ſame charge, the falſe witneſſes at Chriſt's examination brought againſt him: and ſhall change the cuſtoms which Moſes delivered us; that is, the rites, ceremonies, inſtitutions, and appointments of the Moſaic diſpenſation; and yet this is no other, than what the Jews themſelves ſay will be done, in the times of the Meſſiah; for they aſſert [p], that, “ לעתיד לבוא, in time to come (i. e. in the days of the Meſſiah) all ſacrifices ſhall ceaſe, but the ſacrifice of thankſgiving.”

Ver. 15. And all that ſat in the council, &c.] The whole Sanhedrim, looking ſtedfaſtly on him; to obſerve, whether his countenance altered, his tongue ſtammered, or he trembled in any part of his body, neither of which appeared; but on the contrary, they ſaw his face, as if it had been the face of an angel. The Ethiopic verſion adds, of God; there was ſuch a calmneſs and ſerenity in it, which ſhowed his innocence and unconſciouſneſs of guilt; and ſuch a beauty and glory upon it, that he looked as lovely and amiable as the angels of God, who when they appeared to men, it was in very glorious and ſplendid forms: his face might ſhine as Moſes's

Moſes's did, when he came down from the mount; or in ſome degree as Chriſt's did at his transfiguration; and this might, as it ought to have been, taken, as an acquittance of him by God, from the charge of blaſphemy, either againſt God or Moſes: the Jews [q] ſay of Phinehas, that when the Holy Ghoſt was upon him, his face burned or ſhone like lamps, and Stephen was now full of the Holy Ghoſt, ver. 5, 8.

CHAP. VII.

Ver. 1. THEN ſaid the high prieſt, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion adds, to him; that is, to Stephen; for to him he addreſſed himſelf: or he aſked him, as the Syriac verſion renders it; he put the following queſtion to him: are theſe things ſo? is it true what they ſay, that thou haſt ſpoken blaſphemous words againſt the temple, and the law, and haſt ſaid that Jeſus of Nazareth will deſtroy the one, and change the other? what haſt thou to ſay for thyſelf, and in thine own defence? this high prieſt was either Annas, or rather Caiaphas; ſee the note on ch. iv. 6.

Ver. 2. And he ſaid, &c.] Stephen replied, in anſwer to the high prieſt's queſtion, and addreſſed himſelf to the whole Sanhedrim, ſaying: men, brethren, and fathers, hearken; to the following oration and defence; he calls them men, brethren, by an uſual Hebraiſm, that is, brethren; and that, becauſe they were of the ſame nation; for it was common with the Jews, to call thoſe of their own country and religion, brethren; and he calls them fathers, becauſe of their age and dignity, being the great council of the nation, and choſen out of the ſenior and wiſer part of the people: the God of glory appeared unto our father Abraham; he calls God the God of glory, becauſe he is glorious in himſelf, in all his perſons, perfections, and works, and is to be glorified by his people; and his glory is to be ſought by all his creatures, and to be the end of all their actions; and the rather he makes uſe of this epithet of him, to remove the calumny againſt him, that he had ſpoke blaſphemous things againſt God; and becauſe God appeared in a glorious manner to Abraham, either in a viſion, or by an angel, or in ſome glorious form, or another; and it is obſervable, that when the Jews ſpeak of Abraham's deliverance out of the fiery furnace, for ſo they interpret Ur of the Chaldees, they give to God much ſuch a title; they ſay [r], "the king of glory ſtretched "out his right-hand, and delivered him out of the "fiery furnace, according to Gen. xv. 7." Stephen uſes a like epithet; and he calls Abraham our father, he being a Jew, and according to the common uſage of the nation: and this appearance of God to Abraham, was when he was in Meſopotamia; a country that lay between the two rivers Tigris and Euphrates, from whence it had its name; and is the ſame with Aram Naharaim, the ſcriptures ſpeak of; ſee the note on ch. ii. 9. Of this appearance of God to Abraham, mentioned by Stephen, the ſcriptures are ſilent; but the Jewiſh writers ſeem to hint at it, when they ſay [s], "thus ſaid the holy bleſſed "God to Abraham, as thou haſt enlightened for "me, Meſopotamia and its companions, come and "give light before me in the land of Iſrael." And again, mentioning thoſe words in Iſa. xli. 8, 9. the ſeed of Abraham my friend, whom I have taken from the ends of the earth; add by way of explanation, from Meſopotamia and its companions [t]: and this was before he dwelt in Charan; or Haran; ſee Gen. xi. 31. where the Septuagint call it Charan, as here; and by Herodian [u] it is called Καρραι, where Antoninus was killed; and by Pliny [w], Carra; and by Ptolomy [x], Carræ; it was famous for the ſlaughter of M. Craſſus, by the Parthians [y]. R. Benjamin gives this account of it in his time [z]; "in two days I came to "ancient Haran, and in it were about twenty Jews, "and there was as it were a ſynagogue of Ezra; but "in the place where was the houſe of Abraham our "father, there was no building upon it; but the "Iſhmaelites (or Mahometans) honour that place, and "come thither to pray." Stephanus [a] ſays it was a city of Meſopotamia, ſo called from Carra, a river in Syria.

Ver. 3. And ſaid unto him, &c.] Not the words in Gen. xii. 1. for they were ſaid in Haran, theſe in Meſopotamia, before he dwelt there, and beſides, theſe are different from them; no mention is here made of getting out from his father's houſe, as there; becauſe his father's houſe went along with him, or rather he with them from Meſopotamia to Haran: get thee out of thy country; from Ur of the Chaldees, where he was born: and from thy kindred; his relations that lived in the ſame place, who did not go along with him: and come into the land which I ſhall ſhew thee; not telling him the place whither he was to go; wherefore when he had his firſt call, and firſt ſet out, he knew not whither he went; ſee Heb. xi. 8. This was an emblem of the calling of the ſaints out of the world, from their former courſe of life, and from among their old companions and friends, to follow Chriſt whitherſoever he is pleaſed to lead them; and who at laſt will bring them ſafe to the land afar off, the better and heavenly country.

Ver. 4. Then came he out of the land of the Chaldeans, &c.] The ſame with Meſopotamia; ſo Pliny ſays [b], that "becauſe of Babylon the head of "the Chaldean nation——the other part of Meſo-"potamia and Aſſyria, is called Babylonia." And he places Babylon in Meſopotamia; it was out of Ur, in the land of the Chaldeans particularly, that Abraham came, upon his firſt call: and dwelt in Charan; according to the Jewiſh writers [c], he dwelt here five years: and from thence, when his father was dead; who died in Haran, as is ſaid in Gen. xi. 32. and that it was after the death of Terah his father, that Abraham went from thence, is manifeſt from Gen. xi. 31, 32. and xii. 4, 5. and yet a Jew [d] has the impudence to charge Stephen with a miſtake, and to affirm, that Abraham went from Haran, whilſt his father was yet living; proceeding upon a falſe hypotheſis, that Terah begat Abraham when he was ſeventy years of age: but Philo the Jew is expreſsly with Stephen in this circumſtance; he ſays [e], "I "think no man verſed in the laws can be ignorant, "that Abraham when he firſt went out of the land "of Chaldea, dwelt in Charan; τελευτησαντος τε “ αυτω τȣ ϖατρος εκειθι, but his father dying there, he removed from thence;”[d] and ſo ſays Stephen: he removed him into this land, wherein ye now dwell; the land of Canaan; ſee Gen. xii. 5. or he removed himſelf, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; or rather God removed him, as the Syriac verſion reads, and ſo one copy in the Bodleian library; for it was by the order and aſſiſtance, and under the direction and protection of God, that he came into that land: after the words wherein ye now dwell, Beza's ancient copy adds, and our fathers that were before us.

Ver. 5. And he gave him none inheritance in it, &c.] To be perſonally enjoyed by him; and which was a great trial to Abraham's faith, to be brought out of his country, and into another land, and which was promiſed to him and his; and yet, as not the whole, ſo not a ſingle part of it was given him to poſſeſs: no, not ſo much as to ſet his foot on; ſo that when Sarah his wife died, he was obliged to buy a piece of ground for a burying-place to bury her in; and which could not be ſaid to be given him by the Lord, for he bought it with his money: yet he promiſed that he would give it to him for a poſſeſſion, and to his ſeed after him, when as yet he had no child; which was another exerciſe of Abraham's faith, that he ſhould have a whole country promiſed him and his ſeed, and yet had no ſeed given him; ſee Gen. xii. 7. and xiii. 15. and xv. 2, 3, 7.

Ver. 6. And God ſpake on this wiſe, &c.] The Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions read, and God ſpake to him, and ſo does one of Beza's copies; and the Ethiopic verſion reads it both ways, God ſaid thus to Abraham, as in Gen. xv. 13. That his ſeed ſhould ſojourn in a ſtrange land; or be a ſtranger in a land not theirs; firſt in the land of Canaan, and then in Egypt, which were poſſeſſed by other perſons, the natives of them: and that they ſhould bring them into bondage; that is, the inhabitants of the lands, and particularly Egypt, ſhould bring the ſeed of Abraham into bondage, as they did; and very hard bondage it was, at leaſt ſome part of it: and intreat them evil four hundred years; which muſt be reckoned not from the time of their going down into Egypt, which to their coming up out of it were but 210 years, but from the birth of Iſaac; which was as ſoon as Abraham had the promiſed ſeed, and may be reckoned after this manner; from the birth of Iſaac to the birth of Jacob, 60 years, Gen. xxv. 26. and from thence to the coming of Jacob into Egypt, 130 years, Gen. xlvii. 9. and from thence to the coming of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, 210 years; which in all make up 400 years; for the ſojourning and evil intreating of Abraham's ſeed, are not to be confined to the land of Egypt, but belong to other lands, where they were within this time, though that land is more eſpecially intended; and ſo the Septuagint verſion renders the text in Exod. xii. 40. Now the ſojourning of the children of Iſrael, which they (and ſome copies add, and their fathers) ſojourned in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, were four hundred and thirty years: and this text is differently read in the Talmuds, in one of them thus [f]; and the ſojourning of the children of Iſrael, who dwelt in Egypt, ובכל הארצות, and in all the lands, were four hundred and thirty years; and in the other of them thus [g], and the ſojourning of the children of Iſrael who dwelt in Egypt, ובשאר ארצות, and in the reſt of the lands, were four hundred years; upon which latter, the Gloſs has theſe words; “from the time that the decree of the captivity was made between the pieces to the birth of Iſaac, were thirty years; and from the birth of Iſaac, until the Iſraelites went out of Egypt, were four hundred years; take out of them the 60 of Iſaac, and the 130 that Jacob had lived when he went down into Egypt, and there remain 210; and ſo is the decree, that thy ſeed ſhall be a ſtranger in a land not theirs, Gen. xv. 13. and it is not ſaid in Egypt, but in a land not theirs; and when Iſaac was born, Abraham was a ſojourner in the land of the Philiſtines; and from thence, till they went out of Egypt, it will be found that Iſaac and his ſeed, who were the ſeed of Abraham, were ſtrangers; and the thirty years before that, are not numbered in the decree; ſee the note on Gal. iii. 17.

Ver. 7. And the nation to whom they ſhall be in bondage, &c.] At the end of the four hundred years, and which was the Egyptian nation: I will judge, ſaid God; that is, condemn and puniſh them, as he did, by inflicting the ten plagues upon them: and after that they ſhall come forth; out of the land of Egypt, and their hard bondage there; and which was brought about, by the judgments executed upon the Egyptians: and ſerve me in this place; in the land of Canaan; though theſe words are not to be found in Gen. xv. 13. what comes neareſt them is in Exod. iii. 12. Ye ſhall ſerve God upon this mountain; meaning mount Horeb, where Moſes then was, and from whence the law was afterwards given.

Ver. 8. And he gave him the covenant of circumciſion, &c.] Or the covenant, of which circumciſion was a ſign or token, Gen. xvii. 11. Stephen ſpeaks here in the language of the Jews, who are wont to ſpeak of circumciſion after this manner; hence in the Jewiſh liturgy, there is a collect, לברית מילה, for the covenant of circumciſion [h]; and ſo it is ſaid [i], “when Joſeph died, they made void the covenant of circumciſion: and ſo Abraham begat Iſaac, and circumciſed him the eighth day; according to the expreſs command in Gen. xvii. 12. ſee the note on Philip. iii. 5. and Jacob begat the twelve patriarchs; the heads of the twelve tribes of Iſrael.

Ver. 9. And the patriarchs moved with envy, &c.] See Gen. xxxvii. 11. the ſons of Jacob and brethren of Joſeph, were filled with envy, and enraged at him, becauſe of the evil report of them he brought to his father; and becauſe he had a greater ſhare in his father's love, than they had; and becauſe of his dreams, which ſignified that he ſhould have the dominion over them, and they ſhould be obliged to yield obedience to him: wherefore they ſold Joſeph into Egypt; they ſold him to the Iſhmaelites for twenty pieces of ſilver, who were going down to Egypt, and who carried him thither with them: theſe twenty pieces of ſilver the Jews ſay, the ten brethren of Joſeph divided among themſelves; every one took two ſhekels, and bought ſhoes for his feet; to which they apply the paſſage in Amos ii. 6. they ſold the righteous for ſilver, and the poor for a pair of ſhoes [k]: and they ſuggeſt, that the redemption of the firſt-born among the Iſraelites, was on account of the ſelling of Joſeph; they ſay [l], “becauſe they ſold the firſt-born of Rachel for twenty pieces of ſilver, let every one redeem his ſon, his firſt-born, with twenty pieces of ſilver; ſays R. Phinehas, in the name of R. Levi, becauſe they ſold the firſt-born of Rachel for twenty "pieces of ſilver, and there fell to each of them a piece of coined money (the value of half a ſhekel) therefore let every one pay his ſhekel coined." They alſo affirm [m], that the ſelling of Joſeph was not expiated by the tribes, until they were dead, according to Iſa. xxii. 14. and that on the account of it, there was a famine in the land of Iſrael ſeven years. There ſeems to be ſome likeneſs between the treatment of Joſeph and Jeſus Chriſt, which Stephen may have ſome reſpect unto; as Joſeph was ſold by his brethren for twenty pieces of ſilver, ſo Chriſt was ſold by one of his diſciples, that eat bread with him, for thirty pieces of ſilver; and as it was through envy the brethren of Joſeph uſed him in this manner, ſo it was through envy that the Jews delivered Jeſus Chriſt to Pontius Pilate, to be condemned to death: of this ſelling of Joſeph into Egypt, Juſtin the hiſtorian ſpeaks [n]; his words are, "Joſeph was the youngeſt of his brethren, whoſe excellent wit his brethren fearing, ſecretly took him and ſold him to ſtrange merchants, by whom he was carried into Egypt." And then follow other things concerning him, ſome true and ſome falſe: Stephen here adds, but God was with him; ſee Gen. xxxix. 2. he was with him, and proſpered him in Potiphar's houſe; he was with him, and kept him from the temptations of his miſtreſs; he was with him in priſon, and ſupported and comforted him, and at length delivered him from it, and promoted him as follows; and cauſed all the evil that befel him, to work for good to him and his father's family.

Ver. 10. And delivered him out of all his afflictions, &c.] From the evil deſigns of his miſtreſs, and from all the miſeries of a priſon: and gave him favour and wiſdom in the ſight of Pharaoh king of Egypt; ſo Juſtin in the place above-cited ſays, that Joſeph was very dear to the king; but not through his knowledge of magic arts, as he ſuggeſts, but on account of the wiſdom which God gave him; for when he is ſaid to have favour and wiſdom in the ſight of Pharaoh, the meaning is, that he was highly eſteemed of by him, becauſe of the wiſdom he ſaw in him; and both the favour he had with him, and the wiſdom he had in himſelf, were from the Lord; and in a very humble and modeſt manner does he ſpeak of himſelf, in Gen. xli. 16. which Onkelos the Targumiſt paraphraſes thus; "not from my wiſdom, but from the Lord, ſhall the peace of Pharaoh be anſwered;" the name of this Pharaoh, was Miſphragmuthoſis; by the Jews he is called, Rian ben Walid [o]: and he made him governour over Egypt; a deputy governour under him; for Pharaoh kept the throne, and in it was greater than Joſeph, and had the other enſigns of royalty, and Joſeph rode in the ſecond chariot to him: and all his houſe; ſee Gen. xli. 40, 41, 43. as he had the affairs of the kingdom committed to him, ſo likewiſe the domeſtic affairs of Pharaoh, he was ſteward of his houſhold.

Ver. 11. Now there came a dearth over all the land of Egypt, and Canaan, &c.] This dearth, or famine, is ſaid to be in all lands, Gen. xli. 54. though only Egypt and Canaan are mentioned here, becauſe the hiſtory is concerned with no other. The Jewiſh writers [p] ſpeak of three lands particularly, which were affected with it, Phenicia, Arabia, and Paleſtine; and this famine in the land of Iſrael they ſay [q], which laſted ſeven years, was on account of the ſelling of Joſeph into Egypt, as before obſerved. The heathen writers make mention of this famine, particularly Juſtin [r]; who ſpeaking of Joſeph ſays, that he foreſaw many years before the barenneſs of the fields; and all Egypt would have periſhed with famine, had not the king, through his advice, ordered by an edict, that corn ſhould be laid up for many years: this was the fifth of the ten famines, the Jews ſay have been, or ſhall be in the world [s]: and great affliction; meaning the famine, which was very ſevere, and laſted a long time, even ſeven years: want of eating, is called, עינוי, affliction by the Jews [t]; by which they mean faſting, which is a voluntary want of eating, or abſtinence from it; and if that is an affliction, then much more want of food, or abſtinence through neceſſity; compare 1 Tim. v. 10. And our fathers found not ſuſtenance; Jacob and his family could not get ſufficient proviſion for them in the land of Canaan, where they then were, but were obliged to go to Egypt for it.

Ver. 12. But when Jacob heard that there was corn in Egypt, &c.] Not then growing, or gathering in there, or that was of that year's produce; for the famine was ſtrong in the land of Egypt, as well as in Canaan; but was what had been laid up, and preſerved in the ſeven years of plenty, by the order and care of Joſeph; which by ſome means or another, Jacob had heard of; ſee Gen. xlii. 1, 2. the Jews ſuggeſt [u], that it was by divine revelation: he ſent out our fathers firſt; the firſt time, or the firſt year of the famine; or he ſent them firſt, he laid his commands on them, or they had not gone; theſe were the ten ſons of Jacob, and brethren of Joſeph, who were ſent the firſt time, for Benjamin ſtaid with his father; ſee Gen. xlii. 3, 13.

Ver. 13. And at the ſecond time Joſeph was made known to his brethren, &c.] That is, when the brethren of Joſeph went a ſecond time down to Egypt for corn, Joſeph made himſelf known unto them, Gen. xlv. 1. And Joſeph's kindred was made known unto Pharaoh; for though it was known before that he was an Hebrew, ſee Gen. xxxix. 17. and xli. 12. yet it was not known of what family he was, who was his father, or his brethren, but now it was known, Gen. xlv. 16.

Ver. 14. Then ſent Joſeph, &c.] Gifts and preſents to his father, and waggons, to fetch down him and his family into Egypt, Gen. xlv. 21, 23. and called his father Jacob to him, and all his kindred, threeſcore and fifteen ſouls; which ſeems to diſagree with the account of Moſes, who ſays, that all the ſouls of the houſe of Jacob, which came into Egypt, were threeſcore and ten, Gen. xlvi. 27. But there is no contradiction; Moſes and Stephen are ſpeaking of different things; Moſes ſpeaks of the ſeed of Jacob, which came out of his loins, who came into Egypt, and ſo excludes his ſons wives; Stephen ſpeaks of Jacob and all his kindred, among whom his ſons wives muſt be reckoned, whom Joſeph called to him: according to Moſes's account, the perſons that came with Jacob into Egypt, who came out of his loins, and ſo excluſive of his ſons wives, were threeſcore and ſix; to which if we add Jacob himſelf, and Joſeph who was before in Egypt, and who might be truly ſaid to come into it, and his two ſons that were born there, who came thither in his loins, as others in the account may be ſaid to do, who were not yet born, when Jacob went down, the total number is threeſcore and ten, Gen. xlvi. 26, 27. out of which take the ſix following perſons, Jacob, who was called by Joſeph into Egypt, beſides the threeſcore and fifteen ſouls, and Joſeph and his two ſons then in Egypt, who could not be ſaid to be called by him, and Hezron and Hamul, the ſons of Pharez not yet born, and this will reduce Moſes's number to ſixty-four; to which ſixty-four, if you add the eleven wives of Jacob's ſons, who were certainly part of the kindred called and invited into Egypt, Gen. xlv. 10, 19. and xlvi. 5. it will make up compleatly threeſcore and fifteen perſons: or the perſons called by Joſeph, may be reckoned thus; his eleven brethren and ſiſter Dinah, fifty-two brother's children, to which add his brethrens eleven wives, and the amount is threeſcore and fifteen: ſo that the Jew [w] has no reaſon to charge Stephen with an error, as he does; nor was there any need to alter and corrupt the Septuagint verſion of Gen. xlvi. 27. to make it agree with Stephen's account; or to add five names in it, in ver. 20. as Machir, Galaad, Sutalaam, Taam, and Edom, to make up the number ſeventy-five: and it may be obſerved, that the number is not altered in the verſion of Deut. x. 22. which agrees with the Hebrew for ſeventy perſons.

Ver. 15. So Jacob went down into Egypt, &c.] At the invitation of his ſon Joſeph: and died, he, and our fathers; both Jacob and his twelve ſons died in Egypt, tho' we have no account of the death of any of them, but Jacob and Joſeph, particularly; only in general, that Joſeph died, and all his brethren, and all that generation, Gen. xlix. 33. and l. 26. and Exod. i. 6. the Syriac verſion adds there, that is, in Egypt.

Ver. 16. And were carried over into Sichem, &c.] The Syriac verſion reads in the ſingular number, and he was tranſlated into Sichem, and laid, &c. as if this was ſaid of Jacob only, whereas he is not ſpoken of at all, only the fathers, the twelve patriarchs; for Jacob, though he was carried out of Egypt, he was not buried in Sichem, but in the cave of Machpelah, Gen. l. 13. But Joſeph and the reſt of the patriarchs, who died in Egypt, when the children of Iſrael came out from thence, they brought their bones along with them, and buried them in Sichem: of the burial of Joſeph there, there is no doubt, ſince it is expreſsly affirmed in Joſh. xxiv. 32. and that the reſt of the patriarchs were buried there, and not in Hebron, as Joſephus aſſerts [x], may be concluded from hence; becauſe in the cave of Machpelah at Hebron, there are never mentioned more in Jewiſh writers [y], than theſe four couple; Adam and Eve, Abraham and Sarah, Iſaac and Rebekah, Jacob and Leah; from whence they ſay, Hebron was called Kirjath Arba, the city of four; as alſo, becauſe it is the general conſent of the Jews; and if they had not agreed in it, or ſaid nothing about it, the thing is natural to ſuppoſe, that the children of Iſrael brought the bones of all the patriarchs out of Egypt, along with Joſeph's [z]; and ſince they buried the bones of Joſeph in Sichem, it is moſt reaſonable to believe, that the reſt were buried there likewiſe; though it muſt be owned, that there is an entire ſilence about them, even when the ſepulchre of Joſeph is taken notice of: ſo R. Benjamin ſpeaking of the Samaritans ſays [a], "among them "is the ſepulchre of Joſeph the righteous, the ſon "of Jacob our father, on whom be peace, as it is "ſaid, Joſh. xxiv. 32." And ſays another of their writers [b], "from Sichem about a ſabbath-day's jour"ney, in a village called Belata, there Joſeph the "juſt was buried;" but of the reſt, no mention is made: and laid in the ſepulchre that Abraham bought for a ſum of money of the ſons of Emmor, the father of Sichem; the laſt clauſe, the father of Sichem, is left out in the Syriac verſion; and the Alexandrian copy reads it, in Sichem; as if it was the name of a place, and not of a man: the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, the ſon of Sichem; whereas it is certain, that Sichem was the ſon of Emmor, or Hamor, Gen. xxxiii. 19. and xxxiv. 6. unleſs it can be thought there were two Sichems, one that was the father of Emmor, and another that was his ſon: but the great difficulty is, how the ſepulchre in which the fathers were laid at Sichem, can be ſaid to be bought by Abraham of the ſons of Emmor, when what Abraham bought, was the field and cave of Machpelah; and that not of the ſons of Emmor, but of the ſons of Heth, and of Ephron, the ſon of Zohar the Hittite, Gen. xxiii. 16, 17. Whereas the parcel of ground in Sichem, bought of the ſons of Emmor, the father of Sichem, was bought by Jacob, Gen. xxxiii. 19. Joſh. xxiv. 32. Various things are ſuggeſted, to reconcile this; ſome think the word Abraham is an interpolation, and that it ſhould be read, which he (Jacob) bought; but to ſupport this, no copy can be produced: others obſerve, that it may be read which he bought for Abraham; that is, which Jacob bought for Abraham and his ſeed, as a pledge of the inheritance of the whole land, promiſed unto him; others think that by Abraham, is meant a ſon of Abraham, that is, Jacob; as children are ſometimes called by their father's name; as the Meſſiah is called David, and the like; but what beſt ſeems to remove the difficulty is, that the words refer to both places and purchaſes; to the field of Machpelah bought by Abraham, and to the parcel of field at Sichem bought by Jacob, of the ſons of Emmor; for the words with the repetition of the phraſe, in the ſepulchre, may be read thus; and were laid in the ſepulchre, that Abraham bought for a ſum of money, and in the ſepulchre (bought by Jacob) of the ſons of Emmor, the father of Sichem; or the words may be rendered thus, they were carried over into Sichem, and laid in the ſepulchre which Abraham bought for a ſum of money, beſides that of the ſons of Emmor, the father of Sichem; namely, which Jacob bought, and in which Joſeph was laid, Gen. xxxiii. 19. Joſh. xxiv. 32. And this agrees with Stephen's account and deſign, in the preceding verſe; he obſerves, that Jacob died in Egypt, and all the twelve patriarchs; and here he tells us how they were diſpoſed of, and where they were buried, both Jacob and his ſons; they were removed from Egypt, and brought into the land of Canaan; Jacob, he was laid in the cave of Machpelah, in the ſepulchre Abraham bought of the children of Heth; and Joſeph and his brethren, they were laid in the ſepulchre at Sichem, which Jacob bought of the ſons of Emmor: upon the whole, the charge of ſeveral errors brought by the [c] Jew againſt Stephen, appears to be groundleſs; the ſum this ſepulchre was bought for, was an hundred pieces of money, Gen. xxxiii. 19.

Ver. 17. But when the time of the promiſe drew nigh, &c.] That is, the time of the four hundred years; when God promiſed to deliver the ſeed of Abraham out of their affliction and ſervitude, and bring them into the land of Canaan to inherit it: which God had ſworn to Abraham; in Gen. xv. 13, 14. for though there is no expreſs mention made of an oath, yet there is a moſt ſolemn affirmation, which is equivalent to one; the Alexandrian copy and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, which God promiſed unto Abraham: the people grew and multiplied in Egypt; ſee Exod. i. 7. inſomuch, that though their number were but threeſcore and ten when they went down to Egypt, and though various methods were taken to deſtroy them, and leſſen their numbers, yet in little more than two hundred years, their number was increaſed to ſix hundred thouſand, and three thouſand and five hundred and fifty men, beſides old men, women, and children, and beſides two and twenty thouſand Levites, Numb. i. 46. and iii. 39. And it ſeems, that they multiplied the more towards the time when the promiſe of deliverance drew nigh to be accompliſhed, and even when they were the moſt afflicted, Exod. i. 12, 20.

Ver. 18. Till another king aroſe, &c.] In, or over Egypt, as the Alexandrian copy, and others, and the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read; in Exod. i. 8. it is a new king; the Jewiſh writers are divided about him, whether he was a different king from the former; or only ſo called, becauſe he made new edicts [d]: “ Rab and Samuel, one ſays a new one abſolutely; and the other ſays, becauſe his decrees were renewed; he that ſays a new one abſolutely, (thinks ſo) becauſe it is written a new one; and he who ſays, becauſe his decrees are renewed (or he makes new decrees, he thinks ſo) from hence, becauſe it is not written, and he died, and there reigned; and (it makes) for him that ſays, becauſe his decrees are renewed, what is written, who knew not Joſeph; what is the meaning of that, who knew not Joſeph? that he was like one who knew not Joſeph at all.” The Septuagint verſion of Exod. i. 8. renders it another king, as does Stephen here; another king from the Pharaoh of Joſeph: the name of this was Rameſſes Miamun; and one of the treaſure cities built for him, ſeems to be called after his name, Raamſes, Exod. i. 11. The Jews call him Talma [e], and by Theophilus of Antioch [f], he is called Tethmoſis; and by Artapanus [g], Palmanotha: which knew not Joſeph; nor what great things he had done, to the advantage of the Egyptian nation; he was unacquainted with the hiſtory of him, and of his worthy deeds, and therefore had no regard to his people, as the other Pharaoh had. Joſephus [h] ſays, the kingdom was tranſlated to another family; which might be the reaſon, why he was not known, nor his friends taken notice of: Aben Ezra ſays, he was not of the ſeed royal; wherefore it is written, and there aroſe; he uſurped the kingdom, and had not a juſt right and title to it; ſo that being a ſtranger, it is no wonder that he ſhould not know Joſeph: Jarchi's note is, “ he made himſelf as if he did not know him;” he diſſembled, he pretended ignorance of him, becauſe he would ſhow no reſpect unto his people. Beza's ancient copy, and another in the Bodleian library read, which remembered not Joſeph.

Ver. 19. The ſame dealt ſubtilly with our kindred, &c.] See Exod. i. 10. he took crafty, and yet cruel methods, to diminiſh the children of Iſrael, and to humble them; weakening their ſtrength by labour, that they might not be able to beget children; ordering the Hebrew midwives, to kill all the males that were born; and charging all his people, to drown ſuch male children that ſhould eſcape the hands of the midwives: and evil intreated our fathers; keeping them to hard labour, in mortar and brick, and all rural ſervice; in which he made them to ſerve with rigour, and thereby made their lives bitter to them; employing them in building cities, pyramids, walls, and towers; making ditches, throwing up trenches, cutting water-courſes, and turning rivers, with other things; to which he added, ſetting taſk maſters over them, to afflict them with burdens: ſo that they caſt out their young children, or by making their children caſt outs; or as the Arabic verſion renders it, by making that their children ſhould be caſt out; that is, by ordering his people to expoſe them to ruin, and to caſt them into the rivers; and ſo the Syriac verſion, and he commanded that their children be caſt out; for this refers to Pharaoh, and his orders to his officers and people, to caſt out the male children of the Iſraelites; and not to the parents of the children, which our verſion and the Vulgate Latin incline to: for though Moſes's mother, after ſhe had hid him three months, put him into an ark of bulruſhes, and laid him among the flags by the river's ſide, yet that was in order to ſave his life; whereas the end of the caſting out of theſe young children, was as follows, to the end they might not live: for this has not reſpect unto the parents of the children, that they might not increaſe or multiply their offspring, but to the young children, that they being caſt into the waters, might periſh, and not live and become men: the Ethiopic verſion is rather a paraphraſe, and he commanded that they ſhould kill every male that was born.

Ver. 20. In which time Moſes was born, &c.] The word Moſes, is differently written in the New Teſtament; ſometimes Moſes as here, ſometimes Mo-yſes, as in ver. 35, 37. ſometimes Mo-yſeus, as in ch. xv. 1. and ſometimes Moſeus, as in Rom. v. 14. He had his name from the Hebrew word, משה, which ſignifies to draw, Pſal. xviii. 16. according to the reaſon of it given by Pharaoh's daughter, ſhe called his name Moſes, and ſhe ſaid, becauſe I drew him out of the water, Exod. ii. 10. Though Joſephus [i], Philo [k], and others [l], make it to be an Egyptian name; the former of which obſerves, that the Egyptians call water Mo and yſes, ſuch who are ſaved from water; wherefore compounding the name of both, they gave it to him: though according to Aben Ezra [m], his name in the Egyptian language was Monios; his words are theſe, “ the name of Moſes is interpreted out of the Egyptian language into the Hebrew language, for his name in the Egyptian language was Monios; and ſo it is written in a book of agriculture, tranſlated out of the Egyptian language into the Arabic, and alſo in the books of ſome Greek writers.” Moſes had many names, as a Jewiſh chronologer obſerves [n]; “ Pharaoh's daughter called his name Moſes; his father called him Chabar, or Heber; his mother called him Jekuthiel; and his ſiſter called him Jether (perhaps Jared, ſince this was one of his names;) and his brethren called him Abizanoah; and Kohath called him Abi Socos; and the Iſraelites called him Shemaiah ben Nathanael, and ſometimes Tobiah, ſometimes “ Shemaiah, “ Shemaiah, and ſometimes Sopher; but the Egyptians called him Monios.” For Mo in the Egyptian language, ſignifies water, and Ni is out; and ſo both together ſignify, out of the water, which agrees with the Hebrew etymology of his name. Now he was born at the time, that orders were given by Pharaoh to caſt all the male children of the Iſraelites into the rivers, to drown them; Moſes was born, whoſe parents were Amram and Jochebed, of the tribe of Levi; he was born, according to the Jews [o], on the ſeventh day of Adar, or February: and was exceeding fair; or fair to God; divinely fair and beautiful; and ſo Pharaoh's daughter, according to Joſephus, ſaid to her father, that ſhe had brought up a child that was μορφη θειον [p], in form divine; and ſo the Jews ſay [q], that his form was as an angel of God: or he was fair in the ſight of God, as the Ethiopic verſion; the Syriac verſion renders it, he was dear to God; and the Vulgate Latin verſion, grateful to God; was well pleaſing to him, in whom he delighted, having deſigned to do great things by him: or fair by God; he had a peculiar beauty put upon him by God; partly to engage his parents the more to ſeek the preſervation of him; and partly to engage the affections of Pharaoh's daughter to him, when ſhe ſhould ſee him. Juſtin the hiſtorian [r], makes mention of his extraordinary beauty, for which he was praiſed; but very wrongly makes him to be the ſon of Joſeph; and the account Joſephus gives of it, is very remarkable [s]; “ as to beauty, ſays he, no man could be ſo out of love with it, as to ſee the goodly form of Moſes, and not be amazed; it happened to many who met him, as he was carried along the way, that they would turn back at the ſight of the child, and neglect their buſineſs, to indulge themſelves with the ſight of him; for ſuch was the lovelineſs of the child, that it detained thoſe that ſaw him.” The Arabic verſion renders it, he was conſecrated by a vow to God; but of this we have no account: the Jews ſay [t], that “ the Spirit of God came upon Miriam, and ſhe propheſied; ſaying, behold a ſon ſhall be born to my father and to my mother at this time, who ſhall ſave Iſrael out of the hand of the Egyptians——and it is further ſaid, that at the time of his birth, the whole houſe was filled with a great light, as the light of the ſun and moon;” upon which they had raiſed expectations of him: though this phraſe fair to God, may be only an Hebraiſm, juſt as Niniveh is ſaid to be a city great to God, i. e. exceeding great, Jon. iii. 3. it being uſual with the Jews, to join the word God to an adjective, to expreſs the ſuperlative degree; and ſo it is rightly rendered here, exceeding fair: and nouriſhed up in his father's houſe three months; ſo long he was hid by his mother there, which was a great inſtance of her faith; ſee Exod. ii. 2. Heb. xi. 23. The reaſon why he was kept no longer there was, becauſe as the Jews ſay [u], the three months after Jochebed was delivered of a ſon, the thing was known in the houſe of Pharaoh, wherefore ſhe could hide him no longer.

Ver. 21. And when he was caſt out, &c.] Into the river, or by the river, as ſome copies read; the Syriac verſion adds, by his own people; by his father and mother, and ſiſter; who might be all concerned in it, and were privy to it; and which was done after this manner; his mother perceiving ſhe could keep him no longer, made an ark of bulruſhes, daubed with ſlime and pitch, into which ſhe put him; and then laid it in the flags, by the river's ſide, and ſet his ſiſter Miriam at a proper diſtance, to obſerve what would be done to him, Exod. ii. 3, 4. Pharaoh's daughter took him up; her name according to Joſephus [w], was Thermuthis; ſhe is commonly by the Jews [x], called Bithiah; and by Artapanus in Euſebius [y], ſhe is called Merrhis. This princeſs coming down to the river to waſh, as ſhe and her maidens were walking by the riverſide, ſpied the ark in which the child was laid, among the flags, and ordered one of her maids to go and fetch it; and which being done by her orders, is attributed to her; and opening the ark, ſhe was ſtruck at once with the lovelineſs of the babe, and being filled with compaſſion to it, which wept, ſhe took him, and nouriſhed him for her own ſon: not that ſhe took him to the king's palace, and brought him up there, but the caſe was this; Miriam the ſiſter of Moſes, obſerving what was done, and perceiving the inclination of Pharaoh's daughter to take care of the child, offered to call an Hebrew nurſe, to nurſe the child for her; to which ſhe agreed, and accordingly went and fetched her own and the child's mother, who took it upon wages, and nurſed it for her; and when it was grown, brought it to her, who adopted it for her ſon, Exod. ii. 5—10. According to Joſephus [z], and ſome other Jewiſh writers [a], ſo it was, that when the child was taken out of the ark, the breaſt was offered it by ſeveral Egyptian women, one after another, and it refuſed to ſuck of either of them; and Miriam being preſent, as if ſhe was only a bye-ſtander and common ſpectator, moved that an Hebrew woman might be ſent for; which the princeſs approving of, ſhe went and called her mother, whoſe breaſt the child very readily ſucked; and at the requeſt of the princeſs ſhe took it, and nouriſhed it for her: according to Philo the Jew [b], this princeſs was the king's only daughter, who had been a long time married, but had had no children, of which ſhe was very deſirous; and eſpecially of a ſon, that might ſucceed in the kingdom, that ſo the crown might not paſs into another family; and then relating how ſhe came with her maidens to the river, and found the child; and how that the ſiſter of it, by her orders, fetched an Hebrew nurſe to her, which was the mother of the child, who agreed to nurſe it for her; he ſuggeſts, that from that time ſhe gave out ſhe was with child, and feigned a big belly, that ſo the child might be thought to be, γνησιος αλλ' μη υποβολιμαιος, genuine, and not counterfeit: but according to Joſephus [c], ſhe adopted him for her ſon, having no legitimate offspring, and brought him to her father, and told him how ſhe had taken him out of the river, and had nouriſhed him; (Joſephus uſes the ſame word as here) and that ſhe counted of him to make him her ſon, and the ſucceſſor of his kingdom; upon which Pharaoh took the child into his arms, and embraced him, and put his crown upon him; which Moſes rolling off, caſt to the ground, and trampled upon it with his feet: other Jewiſh writers ſay [d], that he took the crown from off the king's head, and put it on his own; upon which the magicians that were preſent, and particularly Balaam, addreſſed the king, and put him in mind of a dream and prophecy concerning the kingdom being taken from him, and moved that the child might be put to death; upon which his daughter ſnatched it up, and ſaved it, the king not being forward to have it deſtroyed: and they alſo tell this ſtory as a means of ſaving it, that Jethro who was ſitting by, or Gabriel in the form of one of the king's princes, ſuggeſted that the action of the child was not to be regarded, ſince it had no knowledge of what it did; and as a proof of it, propoſed that there might be brought in a diſh, a coal of fire, and a piece of Gold, or a precious ſtone; and that if he put out his hand and laid hold on the piece of gold, or precious ſtone, then it would appear that he had knowledge, and deſerved death; but if he took the coal, it would be a plain caſe that he was ignorant, and ſhould be free: the thing took with the king and his nobles, and trial was made, and as the child put out his hand to lay hold on the piece of gold or precious ſtone, the angel Gabriel puſhed it away, and he took the coal, and put it to his lips, and to the end of his tongue; which was the cauſe of his being ſlow of ſpeech, and of a ſlow tongue: by comparing Philo's account with this text, one would be tempted to think that Pharoah's daughter did really give out that Moſes was her own ſon; and the author of the epiſtle to the Hebrews ſeems to confirm this, ch. xi. 24. who ſays, that Moſes denied to be called, or that he was the ſon of Pharaoh's daughter; as the words may be rendered.

Ver. 22. And Moſes was learned in all the wiſdom of the Egyptians, &c.] Which was reckoned very conſiderable; ſee 1 Kings iv. 30. Philo the Jew ſays [e], that he learned arithmetic, geometry, and every branch of muſick, the hieroglyphicks, the Aſſyrian language, and the Chaldean knowledge of the heavens, and the mathematicks; yet was not a magician, or ſkilled in unlawful arts, as Juſtin ſuggeſts [f]: and was mighty in words; he had a command of language, and a large flow of words, and could ſpeak properly and pertinently upon any ſubject; for tho' he was ſlow of ſpeech, and of tongue, and might have ſomewhat of a ſtammering in ſpeaking, yet he might have a juſt diction, a maſculine ſtile, and a powerful eloquence, and the matter he delivered might be very great and ſtriking: and in deeds; or in his deeds, as the Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read: he was a man of great abilities, and fit for buſineſs both in the cabinet and in the field. Joſephus [g] relates an expedition of his againſt the Ethiopians, whilſt he was in Pharoah's court, in which he obtained victory over them, when the Egyptians had been greatly oppreſſed by them; in which his prudence and fortitude were highly commended.

Ver. 23. And when he was full forty years old, &c.] This Stephen had from tradition, and not from ſcripture, which is ſilent about the age of Moſes at this time, and only ſays, it came to paſs in thoſe days when Moſes was grown, Exod. ii. 11. but that he was at this time at ſuch an age, is the general ſenſe of the Jews. Upon the above-mentioned paſſage they have this note [h], "twenty years old "was Moſes at that time; and there are that ſay, "that he was forty years old." And [i] elſewhere ſtill more particularly; "Moſes was forty years in "the palace of Pharoah, forty years in Midian, "(the Amſterdam edition reads, במדבר, in the "wilderneſs, wrongly) and he ſerved Iſrael forty "years." Indeed the fabulous hiſtory of his life, makes him to be but fifteen years of age at this time [k]; but Stephens's account is undoubtedly right, and which is confirmed by the above teſtimonies. It came into his heart; by the Spirit of God, under a more than ordinary impulſe of which he now was: to viſit his brethren the children of Iſrael; whom he knew to be his brethren, partly from the common report in Pharoah's court concerning him, and partly from the mark of circumciſion in his fleſh, and chiefly from divine revelation: for ſome years he had lived a courtly and military life, and had took no notice of the Iſraelites in their oppreſſions; but now the Lord laid it upon his heart to viſit them, and obſerve how things were with them; and tho' he could not uſe any public and open authority, yet Philo the Jew ſays [l], that he exhorted the officers to uſe mildneſs and moderation with them, and comforted and encouraged the Iſraelites to bear their burdens with patience and conſtancy, and not ſink under them; ſuggeſting, that things would take another turn, and would change for the better in time.

Ver. 24. And ſeeing one of them ſuffer wrong, &c.] Beza's Cambridge copy, and one of Stephens's, and one in the Bodleian library add, of his own kindred; and ſo in Exod. ii. 11. he is ſaid to be one of his brethren; which Aben Ezra explains, ממשפחתו, of his family, one of the tribe of Levi; and ſo another Jewiſh writer [m] is very particular, and ſays, "Moſes went out to the camp of the Iſraelites, and "ſaw an Egyptian ſmite one of the ſons of Kohath, "who was of his brethren of the tribe of Levi, "as it is ſaid, Exod. ii. 11." This man, according to ſome of the Jewiſh writers [n], was the huſband of Shelomith, the daughter of Dibri, Lev. xxiv. 11. but, according to others, it was Dathan [o]: the cauſe and manner of his ſuffering wrong, was this, as they report [p]; one of the taſk-maſters having ſet his eyes upon his wife, who was a beautiful woman, came early one morning, and got him out of his houſe to work, and then went into his wife, and lay with her; which when the man underſtood, he made ſome diſturbance about it, for which he cauſed him to ſerve in very hard bondage, and beat him ſeverely; who flying to Moſes for protection, he defended him, and avenged him that was oppreſſed; he took his part, and ſkreened him from the inſults and blows of the officer, and avenged his cauſe: and ſmote the Egyptian; and killed him: it is commonly ſaid by the Jews [q], that he killed him by the ſword of his mouth, by making uſe of the word Jehovah; tho' others [r] ſay, he ſmote him with his fiſt, which is more likely; or rather with his ſword; the Ethiopic verſion adds, and buried him in the ſand. Beza's ancient copy, and one of Stephens's, add, and he hid him in the ſand, as it is in Exod. ii. 12. and which the Jews underſtand not literally of any ſand-pit, into which he might caſt him, and cover him; or of the ſand of the ſea, near which he was, and which does not appear; but myſtically of the people of Iſrael, comparable to the ſand of the ſea, among whom he hid him. So in one of their Midraſhes [s] it is obſerved on theſe words, "and he hid him in the ſand; tho' there were none there but the Iſraelites——who are like to ſand: he ſaid unto them, ye are like the ſand; take this man here and put him there, and his voice is not heard; ſo this thing will be hid among you, and not heard. And ſo you find that the thing was not heard but by the means of the Hebrews, as it is ſaid, and he went out on the ſecond day, and two men of the Hebrews, &c." And another of their [t] writers ſays, that when Moſes ſaw the Egyptian ſmiting the Hebrew, "he began to curſe him, and took the ſword of his lips, and killed him, and hid him in the camp of the Iſraelites, as it is ſaid, Exod. ii. 12. not in the ſand, but among the Iſraelites: hence it is ſaid, the number of the children of Iſrael ſhall be as the ſand of the ſea, Hoſ. i. 10." To which may be added what one of their chronologers [u] affirms, that "Moſes ſlew the Egyptian with the ineffable name of God, and hid him among the children of Iſrael, who are like to ſand." This Egyptian is ſaid, by Jarchi, to be one of the taſk-maſters who was appointed over the officers of Iſrael, who from the cock-crowing kept them to their work, which is very probable.

Ver. 25. For he ſuppoſed his brethren would have underſtood him, &c.] From his being an Hebrew in ſuch high life; from his wonderful birth and miraculous preſervation in his infancy, and education in Pharaoh's court; and from the promiſe of God that he would viſit them, and ſave them: how that God by his hand would deliver them; wherefore he was the more emboldened to kill the Egyptian, believing that his brethren would make no advantage of it againſt him; but look upon it as a beginning and pledge of their deliverance by him: but they underſtood not; or him not, as the Ethiopic verſion reads; they did not underſtood that he was to be their deliverer, or that this action of his was a token of it.

Ver. 26. And the next day he ſhewed himſelf to them, as they ſtrove, &c.] To two men of the Hebrews, who were quarrelling and contending with one another: theſe are ſaid, by the Jews [w] to be Dathan and Abiram; who were diſputing and litigating the point, and were very warm, and at high words. The occaſion of their contention is [x] ſaid to be this, "the Hebrew man (that had been abuſed) went to his houſe to divorce his wife, who was defiled, but ſhe fled and told the affair to Abiram her brother: and on the morrow Moſes returned a ſecond time to the Hebrew camp, and found Dathan and Abiram contending about the divorce." Though ſome think this is prolepticallly ſaid, becauſe they afterwards contended and divided in the buſineſs of Korah [y]. Moſes came up to them, and let them know who he was; and this was the day after he had killed the Egyptian. So Stephen explains the ſecond day in Exod. ii. 13. and to this agrees what a Jewiſh writer [z] ſays, that in the morning Moſes returned a ſecond time to the camp of the Hebrews: and would have ſet them at one again; perſuaded them to peace and concord, compoſed their difference, reconciled them, and made them good friends: ſaying, ſirs, ye are brethren; as Abraham ſaid to Lot, when there was a ſtrife between their herdſmen, Gen. xiii. 8. and if theſe two were Dathan and Abiram, they were brethren in the ſtricteſt ſenſe, Numb. xvi. 1. why do ye wrong one to another? by abuſing each other, calling ill names, or ſtriking one another; or by lifting up the hand to ſtrike, as Jonathan the Targumiſt ſays, Dathan did againſt Abiram.

Ver. 27. But he that did his neighbour wrong, &c.] Who ſeems to be the ſame perſon whom Moſes had defended the day before; and, according to the Jews, muſt be Dathan [a]: the ſame thruſt him away; from them, when he went to part them, and perſuade them to be good friends: ſaying, who made thee a ruler and a judge over us? which was very ungrateful, if he was the man he had delivered the day before; and very impertinent, ſince he did not take upon him to rule and judge, but only to exhort and perſuade to peace and brotherly love: the language ſuits with the ſpirit of Dathan or Abiram; ſee Numb. xvi. 3, 12, 13. This is thought to be ſaid to him by way of contempt of him, as being a very young man: the words are thus commented on in one of the ancient commentaries of the Jews [b]; "R. Judah ſays, Moſes was twenty years of age at that time; wherefore it was ſaid to him, thou art not yet fit to be a prince and a judge over us, ſeeing one of forty years of age is a man of underſtanding. And R. Nehemiah ſays, he was forty years of age; (ſee the note on ver. 23.) and it was ſaid to him truly thou art a man, but thou art not fit to be a prince and a judge over us: and the Rabbans ſay, he ſaid to him, art not thou the ſon of Jochebed, tho' they call thee the ſon of Bithiah? and doſt thou ſeek to be a prince and a judge over us? it is known concerning thee what thou didſt to the Egyptian."

Ver. 28. Wilt thou kill me as thou didſt the Egyptian yeſterday?] That is, is it thy will? doſt thou deſign to kill me? or, as in Exod. ii. 14. intendeſt thou to kill me? In the Hebrew text it is, wilt thou kill me, doſt thou ſay? that is, as Aben Ezra rightly interprets it, doſt thou ſay ſo in thine heart? which is a much better obſervation than that of Jarchi's; "from hence we learn, ſays he, that he ſlew him by the ineffable name:" tho' this is the ſenſe of ſome of their ancient doctors [c]; "to kill me doſt thou ſay? it is not ſaid, doſt thou ſeek? but doſt thou ſay? from whence you may learn, that the ineffable name was made mention of over the Egyptian, and he ſlew him." The word yeſterday is added by Stephen, but with great truth and propriety, and is in the Septuagint verſion of Exod. ii. 14. The as here does not intend the manner of killing, whether by the fiſt or ſword, or by pronouncing the word Jehovah, as Jarchi thinks, but killing itſelf by whatſoever way; and the words were very ſpightfully ſaid, on purpoſe to publiſh the thing, and to expoſe Moſes to danger of life, as it did.

Ver. 29. Then fled Moſes at this ſaying, &c.] For hereby the thing was known to Pharoah, being preſently carried to court, who ſought to kill him for it, Exod. ii. 15. The Jews have a very fabulous ſtory, that Moſes was taken up upon it, and put in priſon, and delivered into the hands of an executioner to be put to death; but that God wrought a miracle for him; he made his neck as hard as a pillar of marble, and the ſword turned upon the neck of the executioner, and he died; and God ſent Michael, the prince, in the likeneſs of the executioner, who took Moſes by the hand, and led him out of Egypt, and left him at the borders of it, the diſtance of three days journey [c]: but the truth of the matter is, as Stephen relates, he fled directly, as ſoon as he heard the above words, for he knew his life was in the utmoſt danger: and was a ſtranger in the land of Madian; which, as Joſephus ſays [d], lay near the red ſea, and took its name from one of the ſons of Abraham by Keturah. Philo the Jew [e] ſays, it was on the borders of Arabia; and, according to Jerom [f], it was near Arnon and Areopolis, the ruins of which only were ſhown in his days; here he ſojourned many years with Jethro the prieſt of that place: where he begat two ſons; whoſe names were Gerſhom and Eliezer, having married Zipporah, the daughter of Jethro, Exod. xviii. 2, 3, 4.

Ver. 30. And when forty years were expired, &c.] Forty other years the Arabic verſion reads; for ſo long the Jews [g] ſay Moſes kept Jethro's flock, and ſo many years he lived in Midian; and ſo the Syriac verſion, when then he had filled up forty years; which agrees exactly with the account of the Jewiſh writers obſerved on ver. 23. who ſay, that he was forty years in Pharoah's court, and forty years in Midian; ſo that he was now, as they [h] elſewhere juſtly obſerve, fourſcore years of age: there appeared to him in the wilderneſs of mount Sinai; the ſame with Horeb, Exod. iii. 1. where it is ſaid, Moſes came to the mountain of God, even to Horeb; where he ſaw the ſight of the burning buſh, and out of which the angel appeared to him; and Stephen is to be juſtified in calling it mount Sinai: the account which Jerom [i] gives of it is this; "Horeb is the mount of God in the land of Midian, by mount Sinai, above Arabia, in the deſert, to which is joined the mountain and deſert of the Saracenes, called Pharan: but to me it ſeems, that the ſame mountain was called by two names, ſometimes Sinai, and ſometimes Horeb;" and in which he was right. Some think the ſame mountain had two tops, and one went by one name, and the other by another; or one ſide of the mountain was called Horeb, from its being dry and deſolate; and the other Sinai, from the buſhes and brambles which grew upon it. So סינין, Sinin, in the Miſna [k], ſignifies the thin barks of bramble buſhes; and the buſh hereafter mentioned, in the Hebrew language, is called סנה, Seneh; from whence, with the Jews, it is ſaid to have its name. "Says [l] R. Eliezer, from the day the heavens and the earth were created, the name of this mountain was called Horeb; but after the holy bleſſed God appeared to Moſes out of the midſt of the buſh, from the name of the buſh (Seneh), Horeb was called Sinai." Some ſay the ſtones of this mountain, when broken, had the reſemblance of bramble buſhes [m] in them. Add to this, that Joſephus [n] calls this mountain by the ſame name as Stephen does, when he is reciting the ſame hiſtory. Moſes, he ſays, "led the flock to the Sinæan mountain, as it is called: this is the higheſt mountain in that country, and beſt for paſture, abounding in good herbage; and becauſe it was commonly believed the divine being dwelt there, it was not before fed upon, the ſhepherds not daring to go up to it." Here Moſes was keeping the flock of his father-in-law; for to ſuch a life did he condeſcend, who for forty years had been brought up in the court of Pharaoh king of Egypt. Here appeared to him an angel of the Lord, and who was no other than the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, as appears from ver. 32. and was the ſecond perſon in the Trinity, the Son of God, the angel of the divine preſence, and of the covenant, an increated angel. And this is the ſenſe of many of the Jewiſh writers, who interpret it of the angel the redeemer, the God of Bethel [o]; tho' Jonathan the paraphraſt ſeems to underſtand it of a created angel, whoſe name he calls Zagnugael [p], and ſome ſay it was Michael, and ſome Gabriel [q]. In a flame of fire in a buſh; and which yet was not conſumed by it. This buſh was a bramble buſh, or thorn; ſo Aben Ezra [r] ſays it was a kind of thorn, and obſerves, that in the Iſhmaelitiſh or Turkiſh language, the word ſignifies a kind of dry thorn; and ſo Philo the Jew ſays [s], it was a thorny plant, and very weak; and therefore it was the more wonderful, that it ſhould be on fire, and not conſumed. Joſephus [t] affirms, that neither its verdure, nor its flowers were hurt, nor any of its fruitful branches conſumed, though the flame was exceeding fierce. The Jeruſalem Targum of Exod. iii. 2. is, "and he ſaw and beheld the buſh burned with fire, and the buſh, מרטיב, became green; or, as Buxtorf renders it, emitted a moiſture, and was not burnt." This ſight, the Arabic writers [u] ſay, Moſes ſaw at noon-day. Artapanus [w], an ancient writer, makes mention of this burning, but takes no notice of the buſh; yea, denies that there was any thing woody in the place, and repreſents it only as a ſtream of fire iſſuing out of the earth: his words are, "as he (Moſes) was praying, ſuddenly fire broke out of the earth, and burned, when there was nothing woody, nor any matter fit for burning in the place." But Philo better deſcribes it; ſpeaking of the buſh, he ſays [x], "no one bringing fire to it, ſuddenly it burned, and was all in a flame from the root to the top, as if it was from a flowing fountain, and remained whole and unhurt, as if it was no fuel for the fire, but was nouriſhed by it." The Jews allegorize this viſion different ways: ſometimes they ſay [y], "the fire deſigns the Iſraelites, who are compared to fire, as it is ſaid, Obad. i. 18. the houſe of Jacob ſhall be a fire; and the buſh denotes the nations of the world, which are compared to thorns and thiſtles; ſo ſhall the Iſraelites be among the people, their fire ſhall not conſume the people, who are like to thorns and briars; nor ſhall the nations of the world extinguiſh their flame, which is the words of the law: but in the world to come, the fire of the Iſraelites ſhall conſume all people who are compared to thorns and thiſtles, according to Iſ. xxxiii. 12." But it is much better obſerved in the ſame place; "the buſh pricks, afflicts, and gives pain, why does he (the Lord) dwell in affliction and anguiſh? becauſe he ſaw the Iſraelites in great affliction, he alſo dwelt with them in affliction, as it is ſaid, Iſ. lxiii. 9. in all their affliction he was afflicted." And very appoſitely is it remarked by Philo [z]; "the burning buſh, ſays he, is a ſymbol of the oppreſſed, the "flaming fire, of the oppreſſors; and whereas "that which was burning was not burnt, it ſhews, "that they that are oppreſſed ſhall not periſh by "thoſe who attempt it; and that their attempt "ſhall be in vain, and they ſhall eſcape ſafe." And ſo Aben Ezra has this note on Exod. iii. 2. "the "enemy is compared to fire, and Iſrael to the buſh, "wherefore it was not burnt:" this may be very well conſidered as an emblem of the ſtate of the Jewiſh people in fiery trials, and very ſevere afflictions; who were like a buſh for the number of its twigs and branches, they being many, and for its weakneſs and liableneſs to be conſumed by fire, and yet wonderfully preſerved by the power and preſence of God among them.

Ver. 31. When Moſes ſaw it, he wondered at the ſight, &c.] To ſee a buſh on fire was no extraordinary thing; but to ſee a buſh on fire, and yet not conſumed by it, which was the caſe here, was wonderful indeed; and that an angel of the Lord, or the Lord himſelf, ſhould appear in it, made it ſtill more amazing; though, as yet, this was not obſerved by Moſes, only the former; and which ſtruck him with wonder, and excited his curioſity: and as he drew near to behold it; to take a more exact view of it, and ſatisfy himſelf with the truth of it, and, if it was poſſible, to find out the reaſon why it was not burnt: the voice of the Lord came unto him; to his ears, out of the buſh, and expreſſed the following words.

Ver. 32. Saying, I am the God of thy fathers, &c.] Who made a covenant with them, promiſed the land of Canaan to them, and to their poſterity, and to bring the children of Iſrael out of their ſervitude and bondage, and into the poſſeſſion of the promiſed land: the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob; words which our Lord makes uſe of to prove the doctrine of the reſurrection of the dead, ſince God is not the God of the dead but of the living, Matt. xxii. 32. ſee the note there. Then Moſes trembled; this Stephen had by tradition; in which way alſo the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews had the account of his trembling and quaking at the ſame mount, when the law was given, Heb. xii. 21. and durſt not behold; either the ſight of the burning buſh, and curiouſly conſider and enquire into that, as the Syriac verſion reads; or him, as the Ethiopic verſion; that is, God, and which is expreſſed in Exod. iii. 6.

Ver. 33. Then ſaid the Lord to him, &c.] To Moſes, who thro' curioſity had made too near an approach: put off thy ſhoes from thy feet; in token of humility, obedience, and reverence: for the place where thou ſtandeſt is holy ground; not really, but relatively, on account of the divine preſence in it, and only ſo long as that continued.

Ver. 34. I have ſeen, I have ſeen the affliction of my people, &c.] The repetition of the phraſe denotes the certainty of it, the exquiſite and exact knowledge the Lord took of the affliction of his people, and how much his heart was affected with it: which is in Egypt; from whence Moſes had fled and had left them, he being now in the land of Midian, which was the place of his ſojourning: and I have heard their groaning; under their various oppreſſions and burdens, and by reaſon of the cruel uſage of their taſk-maſters: and am come down to deliver them; not by local motion, or change of place, God being omnipreſent, who fills all places at all times; but by the effects of his grace and power. And now come, I will ſend thee into Egypt; to Pharaoh, the king of it, Exod. iii. 10. to require of him to let the children of Iſrael go, and to deliver them out of their bondage.

Ver. 35. This Moſes, whom they refuſed, &c.] That is, the Iſraelites; the Ethiopic verſion reads, his kinſmen denied; thoſe of his own nation, and even of his family: ſaying, who made thee a ruler and a judge? as Dathan, or whoever ſaid the words in ver. 27. the ſame did God ſend to be a ruler and a deliverer; or a redeemer; ſo the Jews often call Moſes, ſaying [z], "as was the firſt redeemer, ſo "ſhall be the laſt redeemer." He was an eminent type of the Meſſiah; and the redemption of the people of Iſrael out of the Egyptian bondage, by him, was emblematical of redemption from the bondage of ſin, ſatan, and the law by Jeſus Chriſt; and as Moſes had his miſſion and commiſſion from God, ſo had Jeſus Chriſt, as mediator; and as Moſes was deſpiſed by his brethren, and yet made the ruler and deliverer of them, ſo, tho' Jeſus was ſet at nought by the Jews, yet he was made both Lord and Chriſt, and exalted to be a prince and a ſaviour. Moſes was ſent by the hands of the angel, which appeared to him in the buſh; and who was the ſecond perſon in the Godhead; the father ſent him by the ſon, not as an inſtrument, but as having the power and authority over him, to govern, direct, and aſſiſt him. The Alexandrian copy, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, with the hand of the angel; he ſent Moſes along with him to be uſed by him as an inſtrument in his hand, to deliver the people of Iſrael; nor does this at all contradict what the Jews ſay [a] at the time of the paſſover: "and the Lord "hath brought us out of Egypt, לא על ידי מלאך, "not by the hands of an angel, nor by the hands "of a ſeraph, nor by the hands of a meſſenger, "but the holy bleſſed God, by his own glory, by "himſelf;" for he did not deliver them by a created angel, but by an increated one.

Ver. 36. He brought them out, &c.] Of Egypt, and delivered them from all their oppreſſions in it: after that he had ſhewn wonders and ſigns in the land of Egypt; by turning his rod into a ſerpent, and by his rod ſwallowing up the rods of the Egyptians, and by the ten plagues, which were inflicted on Pharaoh, and his people, for not letting the children of Iſrael go: and in the red ſea; by dividing the waters of it, ſo that the people of Iſrael went thro' it as on dry ground, which Pharaoh and his army attempting to do, were drowned. This ſea is called the red ſea, not from the natural colour of the water, which is the ſame with that of other ſeas; nor from the appearance of it thro' the rays of the ſun upon it, or the ſhade of the red mountains near it; but from Erythrus, to whom it formerly belonged, and whoſe name ſignifies red; and is no other than Eſau, whoſe name was Edom, which ſignifies the ſame; it lay near his country: it is called in the Hebrew tongue the ſea of Suph, from the weeds that grew in it; and ſo it is in the Syriac verſion here: and in the wilderneſs forty years; where wonders were wrought for the people in providing food for them, and in preſerving them from their enemies, when at laſt they were brought out of it into Canaan's land, by Joſhua. This exactly agrees with what has been before obſerved on ver. 23. from the Jewiſh writings, that Moſes was forty years in Pharaoh's court, forty years in Midian, and forty years in the wilderneſs.

[a] Haggada Shel Peſach. p. 13. Ed. Rittangel.

Ver. 37. This is that Moſes which ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, &c.] What is recorded in Deut. xviii. 15. a prophet, &c. ſee the note on ch. iii. 22.

Ver. 38. This is he that was in the church in the wilderneſs, &c.] Which muſt be underſtood of the children of Iſrael, who were the then church of God, whom he had choſen and ſeparated from the reſt of the world, to be a peculiar people to himſelf, to whom were given the word and ordinances, the ſervice of God, and the promiſes; and God always had, and will have, a church, tho' that is ſometimes in the wilderneſs; which has been the caſe under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, as well as before; ſee Rev. xii. 6, 14. and it was a peculiar honour to Moſes, that he was in this church, though it was in the wilderneſs; even a greater honour than to be in Pharaoh's court. This has a particular reſpect to the time when all Iſrael were encamped at the foot of mount Sinai, when Moſes was not only in the midſt of them, and at the head of them; but was with the angel which ſpake to him in the mount Sina: this is the ſame angel as before, in ver. 30. and refers either to his ſpeaking to him then, ſaying, I am the God of thy fathers, &c. which was at mount Sinai; or rather to the time when the law was given on that mount; and it may be to both: it is true of each, though it may more eſpecially regard the latter; for it was the angel of the divine preſence, the ſecond perſon in the Trinity, the word of God, that bid Moſes come up into the mount; and who ſpake all the ten words to him; and who is deſcribed in ſo grand and auguſt a manner in Deut. xxxiii. 2. and with our fathers; the Jewiſh anceſtors, who came out of Egypt under Moſes, with whom he was as their deliverer and ruler, their guide and governour: who received the lively oracles to give unto us; he received from the angel which ſpake to him the law, to deliver to the children of Iſrael; which is called the oracles, becauſe it came from God, and contained his mind and will, and was a ſure and infallible declaration of it; and lively ones, becauſe delivered viva voce, with an articulate voice, and in audible ſounds, and becauſe it is quick and powerful, ſharper than a two-edged ſword. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions render it, the words of life; not that the law gives life, or points out the way of life and ſalvation to ſinful men; it is to them all the reverſe; it is the killing letter, and the miniſtration of condemnation and death: it is indeed a rule of life, or of walk and converſation to men, and it promiſes life in caſe of perfect obedience, Lev. xviii. 5. Deut. xxx. 19, 20. and xxxii. 47. but this is impracticable by fallen men, and therefore there is no life nor righteouſneſs by the law. Though theſe lively oracles may be conſidered in a larger extent, as including all the promiſes of God reſpecting the Meſſiah, delivered to Moſes, and all the rites and ordinances of the ceremonial law, which pointed out Chriſt, as the way of life, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation, from whence they may very well take this name.

Ver. 39. To whom our fathers would not obey, &c.] But often murmured againſt him, and were diſobedient to him, and to the oracles he delivered to them, and ſo to God, whoſe oracles they were: but thruſt him from them; as one of the two Hebrews did, when he interpoſed to make up the difference between them; and which was an emblem and preſage of what that people would afterwards do; ſee ver. 27. and in their hearts turned back again into Egypt; they wiſhed themſelves there again, they luſted after the fiſh, the cucumbers, the melons, leeks, onions, and garlick there; and went ſo far as to move for a captain, and even to appoint one to lead them back thither again.

Ver. 40. Saying unto Aaron, make us gods to go before us, &c.] This is a proof of their diſobedience to the law of Moſes, and of their rejection of him, and of the inclination of their hearts to the idolatry of the Egyptians; which ſhows the groſs ſtupidity, as well as ingratitude of this people, to think that gods could be made; and that thoſe that are made could go before them, be guides unto them, and protectors of them; when they have eyes, but ſee not, and hands, but handle not, and feet, but walk not: for as for this Moſes; whom they ſpeak of with great contempt, and in a very irreverent way: which brought us out of the land of Egypt; which they mention not with gratitude, but as reflecting upon him for doing it: we wot not what is become of him; they thought he was dead, according to the Targum of Jonathan on Exod. xxxii. 1. they concluded he was conſumed with fire on the mount which flamed with fire. [b] The following ſtory is told by the Jews; "when Moſes went up on high, he ſaid to the Iſraelites at the end of forty days, at the beginning of the ſixth hour I will come; at the end of forty days came ſatan and diſturbed the world, he ſaid to them where is Moſes your maſter? they anſwered him, he is gone up on high: he ſaid to them, the ſixth hour is come; they took no notice of him; he is dead (ſays he); they had no regard to him; he ſhewed them the likeneſs of his bier; then they ſaid to Aaron, as for this man Moſes, &c."

Ver. 41. And they made a calf in thoſe days, &c.] Whilſt Moſes was in the mount; this was done in imitation of the Egyptian idol Apis or Serapis, which was an ox or a bullock; and it was made of the golden earings of the people, which were melted down, and caſt into the form of a calf, and graved by Aaron with a graving tool, Exod. xxxii. 2, 3, 4. And ſo the Syriac verſion here reads in the ſingular number, and he made them a calf; this was a moſt ſhameful and ſcandalous piece of idolatry. The Jews themſelves are ſo ſenſible of the horribleneſs of it, and of the guilt of it, and of the reproach that lies on them for it, that it is common for them to ſay [c], "there is not a generation, or an age, in which there is not an ounce of the ſin of the calf." Or, as elſewhere [d] expreſſed, "no puniſhment befals thee, O Iſrael, in which there is not an ounce of the ſin of the calf." And offered ſacrifice unto the idol; an altar was built, and proclamation made, that the next day would be the feaſt of the Lord; and accordingly early in the morning the people roſe, and offered both burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, Exod. xxxii. 5, 6. and rejoiced in the works of their own hands; for ſo the calf was; and which rejoicing they ſhewed by eating, and drinking, and ſinging, and dancing.

Ver. 42. Then God turned, &c.] Away from them, withdrew his preſence, and his favours from them: and gave them up to worſhip the hoſt of heaven; not angels, but the ſun, moon, and ſtars; for ſince they liked not to retain the knowledge and worſhip of the true God, who made the heavens, and the earth, God in righteous judgment, in a judicial way, gave them up to a reprobate mind, to commit all the idolatry of the Gentiles, as a puniſhment of their former ſin in making and worſhipping the calf: as it is written in the book of the prophets; of the twelve leſſer prophets, which were all in one book; and which, as the Jews ſay [e], were put together, that a book of them might not be loſt through the ſmallneſs of it; among which Amos ſtands, a paſſage in whoſe prophecy is here referred to; namely, in chap. v. 25. O ye houſe of Iſrael, have ye offered to me ſlain beaſts and ſacrifices by the ſpace of forty years in the wilderneſs? no; they offered to devils, and not to God, Deut. xxxii. 17. and though there were ſome few ſacrifices offered up; yet ſince they were not frequently offered, nor freely, and with all the heart, and with faith, and without hypocriſy, they were looked upon by God as if they were not offered at all.

[d] Vid. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 102. 1.

Ver. 43. Yea, ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, &c.] Sometimes called Molech, and ſometimes Milcom; it was the God of the Ammonites, and the ſame with Baal: the one ſignifies king, and the other Lord; and was, no doubt, the ſame with the Apis or Serapis of the Egyptians, and the calf of the Iſraelites. Frequent mention is made of giving ſeed to Molech, and cauſing the children to paſs thro' fire to him. The account the Jews give of this image, and of the barbarous worſhip of it, is this [f]: "tho' all idolatrous places were in Jeruſalem, Molech was without Jeruſalem; and it was "made an hollow image, placed within ſeven chancels or chapels; and whoever offered fine flour, "they opened to him the firſt; if turtle doves or "two young pigeons, they opened the ſecond; if "a lamb, they opened the third; if a ram, they "opened the fourth; if a calf, they opened the "fifth; if an ox, they opened the ſixth; but whoever offered his ſon, they opened the ſeventh: "his face was a calf's, and his hands were ſtretched out, as a man opens his hands to receive any "thing from his friend; and they make him hot "with fire, and the prieſts take the infant and put "it into the hands of Molech, and the infant expires: and wherefore is it called Tophet and Hinnom? Tophet, becauſe they make a noiſe with "drums, that its father may not hear the voice of "the child, and have compaſſion on it, and return "to it; and Hinnom, becauſe the child roars, and "the voice of its roaring aſcends." Others give a milder account of this matter, and ſay, that the ſervice was after this manner [g]; that "the father "delivered his ſon to the prieſts, who made two "large fires, and cauſed the ſon to paſs on his feet "between the two fires," ſo that it was only a ſort of a luſtration or purification by fire; but the former account, which makes the child to be ſacrificed, and put to death, ſeems beſt to agree with the ſcriptural one. Now this idol was included in chancels or chapels, as in the account given, or in ſhrines, in tabernacles, or portable temples, which might be taken up and carried; and ſuch an one is here mentioned: by which is meant, not the tabernacle of the Lord made by Bezeleel; as if the ſenſe was, that the idolatrous Iſraelites, tho' not openly, yet ſecretly, and in their hearts worſhipped Moloch, as if he was included in the tabernacle; ſo that to take it up means no other, than in the heart to worſhip, and to conſider him as if he had been ſhut up and carried in that tabernacle: nor is it to be thought that they publickly took up, and carried a tabernacle, in which was the image of Moloch, during their forty years travels in the wilderneſs; for whatever they might do the few days they worſhipped the golden calf, which is poſſible, it cannot be received, that Moſes, who was ſo ſevere againſt idolatry, would ever have connived at ſuch a practice: this therefore muſt have reference to after-times, when they ſacrificed their children to him, and took up and carried his image in little ſhrines and tabernacles. And the ſtar of your God Remphan. The Alexandrian copy reads Raiphan; ſome copies read Raphan, and ſo the Arabic verſion; others Rephan; the Syriac verſion reads Rephon; and the Ethiopic verſion Rephom. Giants, with the Hebrews, were called Rephaim; and ſo Moloch, who is here meant, is called Rephan, and with an epentheſis Remphan, becauſe of his gigantic form; which ſome have concluded from the maſſy crown on his head, which, with the precious ſtones, weighed a talent of gold, which David took from thence, 2 Sam. xii. 30. for not the then reigning king of the Ammonites, but Molech, or Milchom, their idol, is meant: this is generally thought to be the ſame with Chiun in Amos; but it does not ſtand in a place to anſwer to that; beſides, that ſhould not be left untranſlated, it not being a proper name of an idol, but ſignifies a type or form; and the whole may be rendered thus, but ye have born the tabernacle of your king, and the type, or form of your images, the ſtar of your God; which verſion agrees with Stephens's, who, from the Septuagint, adds the name of this their king, and their god Rephan, or Remphan. Druſius conjectures, that this is a fault of the Scribes writing Rephan for Cephan, or that the Septuagint interpreters miſtook the letter כ for ר, and inſtead of Cevan read Revan; and Chiun is indeed, by Kimchi and Aben Ezra [h], ſaid to be the ſame with Chevan, which, in the Iſmaelitiſh and Perſian languages, ſignifies Saturn; and ſo does Rephan in the Egyptian language: and it is further to be obſerved, that the Egyptians had a king called Remphis, the ſame with Apis; and this may be the reaſon why the Septuagint interpreters, who interpreted for Ptolomy, king of Egypt, put Rephan, which Stephen calls Remphan, inſtead of Chiun, which they were better acquainted with, ſince they both ſignify the ſame deity, and the ſame ſtar; and which alſo was the ſtar of the Iſraelites, called by them שבתי, becauſe ſuppoſed to have the government of the ſabbath-day, and therefore fitly called the ſtar of your God. Upon the whole, Moloch, Chiun, Rephan, or Remphan, and Remphis, all are the ſame with the Serapis of the Egyptians, and the calf of the Iſraelites; and which idolatry was introduced on account of Joſeph, who interpreted the dream of Pharaoh's kine, and provided for the Egyptians in the years of plenty againſt the years of famine, and was worſhipped under the ox with a buſhel on his head: figures which ye made to worſhip them; in Amos it is ſaid, which you made for yourſelves; meaning both the image and the tabernacle in which it was, which they made for their own uſe, to worſhip their deity in and by: and I will carry you beyond Babylon; in Amos it is beyond Damaſcus, and ſo ſome copies read here, which was in Babylon; and explains the ſenſe of the prophet more fully, that they ſhould not only be carried for their idolatry beyond Damaſcus, and into the furthermoſt parts of Babylon, but beyond it, even into the cities of the Medes, Halah, and Habor, by the river Gozan; and here is no contradiction: how far beyond Damaſcus, the prophet does not ſay; and if they were carried beyond Babylon, they muſt be carried beyond Damaſcus, and ſo the words of the prophet were fulfilled; and Stephen living after the fulfilment of the prophecy, by which it appeared that they were carried into Media, could ſay how far they were carried; wherefore the Jew [i] has no reaſon to cavil at Stephen, as if he miſrepreſented the words of the prophet, and related things otherwiſe than they were: and ſo Kimchi interprets it, far beyond Damaſcus; and particularly mentions Halah and Habor, cities in Media, where the ten tribes were carried.

[h] In Amos v. 25.

Ver. 44. Our fathers had the tabernacle of witneſs in the wilderneſs, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion adds, of Sinai; there it was that the tabernacle was firſt ordered to be built, and there it was built, and ſet up; which was a ſort of a portable temple, in which Jehovah took up his reſidence, and which was carried from place to place: of it, and its ſeveral parts and furniture, there is a large account in the book of Exodus, ch. xxv. and following. It is ſometimes called Ohel Moed, or the tabernacle of the congregation, becauſe there the people of Iſrael gathered together, and God met with them; and ſometimes the tabernacle of the teſtimony, or witneſs, as here; ſee Exod. xxxviii. 21. Numb. i. 50, 53. becauſe the law, called the tables of the teſtimony, and the teſtimony, it being a teſtification or declaration of the will of God, was put into an ark; which for that reaſon is called the ark of the teſtimony; and which ark was placed in the tabernacle; and hence, that took the ſame name too. The Jewiſh writers ſay [k], it is ſo called, "because it "was a teſtimony that the Shekinah dwelt in Iſrael;" or, as another [l] expreſſes it, "it was a teſtimony "to Iſrael that God had pardoned them concern"ing the affair of the calf, for, lo, his Shekinah "dwelt among them." This tabernacle, in which was the teſtimony of the will of God, what he would have done, and how he would be worſhipped, and which was a token of his preſence, was among the Jewiſh fathers whilſt they were in the wilderneſs; and is mentioned as an aggravation of their ſin, that they ſhould now, or afterwards, take up and carry the tabernacle of Moloch. The Alexandrian copy reads, your fathers; the ſenſe is the ſame. As he had appointed; that is, as God appointed, ordered, and commanded: ſpeaking unto Moſes, Exod. xxv. 40. that he ſhould make it according to the faſhion he had ſeen; when in the mount with God; ſee Heb. viii. 5. for it was not a bare account of the tabernacle, and its veſſels, which he hearing, might form an idea of in his mind; but there was a viſible form repreſented to his eye, a pattern, exemplar, or archetype of the whole, according to which every thing was to be made; which teaches us, that every thing in matters of worſhip ought to be according to the rule which God has given, from which we ſhould never ſwerve in the leaſt.

Ver. 45. Which alſo our fathers that came after, &c.] Who came after thoſe that died in the wilderneſs, and never ſaw nor entered into the land of Canaan; the children of that generation whoſe carcaſſes fell in the wilderneſs, who ſprung from them, came up in their room, and ſucceeded them: brought in with Jeſus into the poſſeſſion of the Gentiles; that is, they having received the tabernacle from their fathers, brought it into the land of Canaan, which was poſſeſſed by the Gentiles, when they entered into it with Joſhua their leader, and captain, at the head of them; who is here called Jeſus, as he is in Heb. iv. 8. for Joſhua and Jeſus are the ſame name, and ſignify a ſaviour; for ſuch an one Joſhua was to the people of Iſrael; and was an eminent type of Jeſus Chriſt, the captain of our ſalvation, in his bringing many ſons to glory: whom God drove out before the face of our fathers; the Gentiles, who before poſſeſſed the land of Canaan, were drove out by God before the Iſraelites, to make way for their ſettlement there; for to whom can the ſucceſs of thoſe victories over the Canaanites be aſcribed, which the Iſraelites under Joſhua obtained, but to God? The language on the Tingitane, or Hercules's pillars, ſaid to be ſet up by ſome of theſe Canaanites, agrees with this, on which they inſcribed theſe words; "we are they who fled from "the face of Joſhua the robber, the ſon of Nave," or Nun: unto the days of David; this clauſe muſt not be read in connexion with the words immediately preceding, as if the ſenſe was, that the inhabitants of Canaan were drove out of their land unto the times of David, and then returned and reſettled, as in the Ethiopic verſion; but with the beginning of the verſe, and the meaning is, that the tabernacle which the Iſraelites received from their fathers, and brought into the land of Canaan with them, was there unto the times of David.

Ver. 46. Who found favour before God, &c.] That is, David, who had an intereſt in the free favour and love of God, was choſen of God, a man after his own heart, and raiſed up to do his will; and who had the grace of God implanted in him, and was acceptable and well pleaſing to God thro' Chriſt; the ſame is ſaid of Noah, Gen. vi. 8. and deſired to find a tabernacle for the God of Jacob; from whom the Iſraelites deſcended: David having a deep ſenſe of the love of God to him, and the grace of God wrought in his heart, was exceeding deſirous of finding a place for the building of an houſe, or fixed habitation for God; for there was a tabernacle already, which had been from the times of Moſes, and which the children of Iſrael brought with them into Canaan, and was moved from place to place; ſometimes it was at Gilgal, ſometimes at Shiloh, and then it was at Nob, and Gibeah, and at length it was brought by David into his own city; but he wanted to build a ſettled and ſtable houſe for the Lord, of which there was a hint given that the Lord would chooſe a place to put his name in, Deut. xvi. 2. but it ſeems, where that was to be was not known; and therefore David very anxiouſly ſought after it; the reference is had to Pſal. cxxxii. 3, 4, 5. where David determines not to go to his houſe, nor up to his bed, nor give ſleep to his eyes, nor ſlumber to his eye-lids, till he had found out a place for the habitation of the God of Jacob.

Ver. 47. But Solomon built him an houſe.] Tho' David was ſo ſet upon it, and made ſuch large proviſions for it, he was not to be the man that ſhould build it, he having been greatly concerned in wars, and in the effuſion of blood; but Solomon his ſon, who enjoyed much peace, was the perſon deſigned for this work, and who did accompliſh it; of which there is a large account in the firſt book of Kings, chap. 6. and 7.

Ver. 48. Howbeit the moſt high dwelleth not in temples made with hands, &c.] Such an one as Solomon's was; he did indeed dwell in his temple, but he was not confined to it, nor included in it, or circumſcribed by it; and ſo much Solomon himſelf ſuggeſts, when he expreſſes his wonder at his dwelling on earth, ſeeing the heaven of heavens could not contain him, and ſtill leſs the houſe which he had built, 1 Kings viii. 27, עליון, the moſt high, is one of the names of God, Gen. xiv. 18, 19, 22. the apoſtle Paul ſays the ſame of God as Stephen does here; ſee Acts xvii. 24. as ſaith the prophet; the prophet Iſaiah, chap. lxvi. 1, 2.

Ver. 49. Heaven is my throne, &c.] There is the ſeat of the divine Majeſty; there his glory is moſt conſpicuous; there he keeps his court, that is his palace; and there are his attendants, the angels; and from thence are the adminiſtrations of his regal power and government, over the whole world: and earth is my footſtool; which is under his feet, is ſubject to him, and at his diſpoſe, and which he makes uſe of at his pleaſure: theſe things are not to be literally underſtood, but are images and figures, repreſenting the majeſty, ſovereignty and immenſity of God; who is the maker of all things, the governour of the univerſe, and is above all places, and not to be contained in any: what houſe will ye build me? ſaith the Lord; or where can any be built for him, ſince he already takes up the heaven and the earth? what houſe can be built by men, or with hands, that can hold him, or is fit for him to dwell in? or what is the place of my reſt? not in any houſe made with hands, but in the church among his ſaints, who are the temples of the living God; and this is his reſt for ever, and here will he dwell, becauſe he has choſen and deſired them, and built them up for an habitation for himſelf, Pſal. cxxxii. 13, 14.

Ver. 50. Hath not my hand made all theſe things?] The heaven and the earth, and all that is in them; the Arabic verſion renders it, all theſe creatures; and therefore what can be made for God? or what houſe built for him? in Iſaiah the words are read without an interrogation, and affirm that his hand had made all theſe things, and therefore nothing could be made for him ſuitable to him, by the hands of men.

Ver. 51. Ye ſtiff-necked, &c.] Or hard-necked, the ſame with קשה עורף, which is a character frequently given of this people, Exod. xxxii. 9. and xxxiii. 3, 5. and xxxiv. 9. and elſewhere, and is expreſſive of their obſtinacy, ſtubborneſs and refractorineſs; who would not ſubmit their necks to the yoke of God's law, and be obedient to his commands: and uncircumciſed in heart and ears; for tho' they had the mark of circumciſion in their fleſh, of which they boaſted; yet they had not the true circumciſion of the heart; their hearts were not circumciſed to fear and love the Lord, nor their ears to hear the word of the Lord and the Goſpel of Chriſt; ſo that notwithſtanding their confidence in carnal privileges, they were uncircumciſed perſons: ye do always reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt; the reſiſtance made by theſe perſons was not to the Spirit of God in them, of which they were deſtitute, but to the Spirit of God in his miniſters, in his apoſtles, and particularly in Stephen; nor to any internal operation of his grace, but to the external miniſtry of the word, and to all that objective light, knowledge, evidence, and conviction that it gave of Jeſus's being the Meſſiah: and ſuch who reſiſt Chriſt's miniſters, reſiſt him, and ſuch who reſiſt him, may be ſaid to reſiſt his holy Spirit; and the word here uſed ſignifies a ruſhing againſt, and falling upon, in a rude and hoſtile way, and fitly expreſſes their ill treatment of Chriſt and his miniſters, by falling upon them and putting them to death; which is the reſiſtance here deſigned, as appears by the following verſe: ſo that this paſſage is no proof of the reſiſtance of the holy Spirit, and the operations of his grace in converſion, when he is in men, and acts with a purpoſe and will to convert them; ſince it does not appear that he was in theſe perſons, and was acting in them, with a deſign to convert them; and if he was, it will be difficult to prove, that they ſo reſiſted, and continued to reſiſt, as that they were not hereafter converted; ſince it is certain that one of them, Saul, was really and truly converted, and how many more we know not. Tho' it will be allowed, that the Holy Ghoſt in the operations of his grace upon the heart in converſion may be reſiſted, that is, oppoſed; but not ſo as to be overcome, or be hindered in, or be obliged to ceaſe from, the work of converſion, inſomuch that that may come to nothing: as your fathers did, ſo do ye; or as your fathers were, ſo are ye; as they were ſtiff-necked, ſelf-willed, obſtinate, and inflexible, ſo are ye; as they were uncircumciſed in heart and ears, ſo are ye; and as they reſiſted the Spirit of God in his prophets, ſo do ye reſiſt him in the Apoſtles and miniſters of the Goſpel.

Ver. 52. Which of the prophets have not your fathers perſecuted? &c.] Either by reviling and ſpeaking all manner of evil of them, Matt. v. 11, 12. or by killing them, Matt. xxiii. 31, 37. and they have ſlain them; as Iſaiah, Zachariah, and others: which ſhewed before of the coming of the juſt one; of Jeſus the Meſſiah, whoſe character in the prophecies of the Old Teſtament is righteous ſervant, righteous branch, juſt, and having ſalvation; and whom Stephen ſtiles ſo partly on account of the holineſs of his nature, and the innocence and harmleſſneſs of his life; and partly becauſe he is the author of righteouſneſs, and the end of the law for it to all that believe; of whoſe coming in the fleſh all the prophets more or leſs ſpoke: and this being good news, and glad tidings, made the ſin of the Jewiſh fathers the greater, in putting them to death; as the innocent character of Chriſt was an aggravation of the Jews ſin, in murdering of him, as it follows: of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers; Judas, one of their nation, betrayed him into the hands of the chief-prieſts and elders; and they betrayed, or delivered him into the hands of Pontius Pilate to be condemned to death, which they greatly importuned, and would not be ſatisfied without; and therefore are rightly called the murderers, as well as the betrayers of him.

Ver. 53. Who have received the law by the diſpoſition of angels, &c.] Who attended the angel that ſpake to Moſes on mount Sinai, ver. 38. who is the head of all principality and power, and whom he might make uſe of in giving the law to Moſes: hence the law is ſaid to be ordained by angels, in the hand of a mediator, and is called the word ſpoken by angels, Gal. iii. 19. Heb. ii. 2. and certain it is, that there were great numbers of angels on mount Sinai, when the law was given, Deut. xxxiii. 2. Pſ. lxviii. 17. And ſo the Jews ſay [m], that "when the holy bleſſed God deſcended on "mount Sinai, there came down with him many "companies of angels, Michael and his company, "and Gabriel and his company." Indeed they often ſay [n], "the law was not given to the mini"ſtring angels:" their meaning is, it was not given to them to obſerve and keep, becauſe there are ſome things in it, which do not concern angels; but then it might be given to them to deliver to Moſes, who gave it to the Iſraelites; and ſo may be ſaid to receive it by the miniſtration of angels, thro' the hands of Moſes. And now the law being given and received in ſo grand a manner, was an aggravation of the ſin of the Jews in violating it, as it follows: and have not kept it; but broke it in innumerable inſtances, and ſcarce kept it in any; for no man can keep it perfectly.

[n] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 25. 2. Yoma, fol. 30. 1. Kiddushin, fol. 54. 1.

Ver. 54. When they heard theſe things, &c.] How that Abraham, the father of them, was called before he was circumciſed, or the law was given to Moſes, or the temple was built, which they were ſo bigotted to, and charged with ſpeaking blaſphemouſly of; and how that Joſeph and Moſes were very ill treated by the Jewiſh fathers, which ſeemed to reſemble the uſage Chriſt and his Apoſtles met with from them; and how their anceſtors behaved in the wilderneſs when they had received the law, and what idolatry they fell into there, and in after-times; and how that tho' there was a temple built by Solomon, yet the Lord was not confined to it, nor would he dwell in it always; and eſpecially when they heard him calling them a ſtiff-necked people, and uncircumciſed in heart and ears; ſaying, that they perſecuted and ſlew the prophets, and were the betrayers and murderers of an innocent perſon; and notwithſtanding all their zeal for the law, and even tho' it was miniſtred to them by angels, yet they did not obſerve it themſelves: they were cut to the heart; as if they had been ſawn aſunder; they were filled with anguiſh, with great pain and uneaſineſs; they were full of wrath and madneſs, and could neither bear themſelves nor him: and they gnaſhed on him with their teeth; being enraged at him, and full of fury and indignation againſt him.

Ver. 55. But he being full of the Holy Ghoſt, &c.] That is, Stephen, as Beza's ancient copy, and ſome others expreſs it; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion; the Syriac verſion reads, full of faith, and of the Holy Ghoſt, as in ch. vi. 5. and ſo ſome copies; being under the influences of the Spirit of God, and filled with his divine comforts, and ſtrong in the faith of Jeſus Chriſt, and having a holy boldneſs, courage, and intrepidity of mind; inſtead of being diſcouraged and dejected, of being caſt down in his ſpirits, and looking down upon the ground, he looked up ſtedfaſtly to heaven; where he deſired to be, and hoped and believed he ſhould be; and from whence he knew his help came, and which he might now implore, as well as forgiveneſs for his enemies. And ſaw the glory of God; not the eſſential glory of God, but ſome extraordinary light and brightneſs, which was a token and repreſentation of him: and Jeſus ſtanding on the right hand of God; of that glory which was a ſymbol of him: Jeſus being riſen from the dead, and aſcended on high, was ſet at the right hand of God, in human nature, and ſo was viſible to the corporeal eye of Stephen; whoſe viſive faculty was ſo extraordinarily enlarged and aſſiſted, as to reach the body of Chriſt in the third heavens; where he was ſeen by him ſtanding, to denote his readineſs to aſſiſt him, and his indignation at his enemies.

Ver. 56. And ſaid, behold, I ſee the heavens opened, &c.] As they were at the baptiſm of Chriſt, Matt. iii. 16. ſee the note there: and the ſon of man ſtanding at the right hand of God; he calls Jeſus the ſon of man; a name by which he often called himſelf in his ſtate of humiliation; and that tho' he was now glorified, it being the name of the Meſſiah in Pſ. lxxx. 17. Dan. vii. 13. as was well known to the Jews; and this Stephen ſaid to ſhow, that God was on his ſide, and to let them know what honour was done him, what divine ſupports and comforts he had, and that he was an eye-witneſs of Jeſus, and of his being alive, and in glory.

Ver. 57. Then they cried out with a loud voice, &c.] Theſe were not the Sanhedrim, but the common people; the Ethiopic verſion reads, the Jews cried out; which they did, in a very clamorous way, either thro' rage and madneſs, or in a ſhew of zeal againſt blaſphemy; and cried out, either to God to avenge the blaſphemy, or rather to the Sanhedrim to paſs a ſentence on him, or, it may be, to excite one another to riſe up at once, and kill him, as they did: and ſtopped their ears; with their fingers, pretending they could not bear the blaſphemy that was uttered. This was their uſual method; hence they ſay [o], "if a man hears any thing that is indecent, (or not fit to be heard) let him put his fingers in his ears —— hence the whole ear is hard, and the tip of it ſoft, that when he hears any thing that is not becoming he may bend the tip of the ear within it." By either of theſe ways theſe men might ſtop their ears; either by putting in their fingers, or by turning the tip of the ear inward. And ran upon him with one accord; without any leave of the Sanhedrim, or waiting for their determination, in the manner the zealots did; ſee the notes on Matt. x. 4. and John xvi. 2.

Ver. 58. And caſt him out of the city, &c.] Of Jeruſalem; for the place of ſtoning was without the city. The proceſs, when regular, according to the ſentence of the court, was after this manner [p]; "judgment being finiſhed, (or the trial over) they brought him out (the perſon condemned) to ſtone him; the place of ſtoning was without the Sanhedrim, as it is ſaid, Lev. xxiv. 14. bring forth him that hath curſed without the camp —— when he was ten cubits diſtant from the place of ſtoning, they order him to confeſs —— and when four cubits from it, they take off his garments —— the place of ſtoning was twice a man's height." And elſewhere [q] it is ſaid, that the place of ſtoning was without three camps, (the camp of the Shekinah, the camp of the Levites, and the camp of the Iſraelites:) upon which the gloſs has theſe words; "the court is the camp of the Shekinah, and the mountain of the houſe the camp of the Levites, and every city the camp of the Iſraelites; and in the Sanhedrim in every city, the place of ſtoning was without the city like to Jeruſalem." And theſe men, tho' tranſported with rage and fury, yet were ſo far mindful of rule, as to have him out of the city before they ſtoned him: and they ſtoned him; which was done after this manner, when in form [r]: "the wiſe men ſay, a man was ſtoned naked, but not a woman; and there was a place four cubits from the houſe of ſtoning, where they plucked off his clothes, only they covered his nakedneſs before. The place of ſtoning was two mens heighths, and there he went up with his hands bound, and one of the witneſſes thruſt him on his loins that he might fall upon the earth; and if he died not at that puſh, the witneſſes lifted up a ſtone, which lay there, the weight of two men, and one caſt it with all his ſtrength upon him; and if he died not, he was ſtoned by all Iſrael." And the witneſſes laid down their clothes at a young man's feet, whoſe name was Saul: for the witneſſes, according to the above account, were firſt concerned in the ſtoning; and this was agreeable to the rule in Deut. xvii. 7. and which they ſeem to have obſerved amidſt all their hurry and fury: and that they might perform their work with more eaſe and expedition, they plucked off their upper garments, and committed them to the care of Saul of Tarſus; who was now at Jeruſalem, and belonged to the ſynagogue of the Cilicians, that diſputed with Stephen, and ſuborned falſe witneſſes againſt him. He is called a young man; not that he was properly a youth, for he muſt be thirty years of age, or more; ſince about thirty years after this he calls himſelf Paul the aged, Philem, ver. 9. when he muſt be at leaſt ſixty years of age, if not more; beſides, Ananias calls him a man, ch. ix. 13. nor would the high-prieſts have given letters to a mere youth, inveſting him with ſo much power and authority as they did; but he is ſo called, becauſe he was in the prime of his days, hale, ſtrong, and active. The learned Alting has taken a great deal of pains to ſhew, that this Saul, who was afterwards Paul the Apoſtle, is the ſame with Samuel the little, who is frequently mentioned in the Talmud; he living at this time, and being a diſciple of Rabban Gamaliel, and a bitter enemy of the hereticks, or chriſtians; and who, at the inſtigation of his maſter, compoſed a prayer againſt them; and his name and character agreeing with him: but it is not likely that the Jews would have retained ſo high an opinion of him to the laſt, had he been the ſame perſon: for they ſay [t], "that as the elders were ſitting in Jabneh, "Bath Kol came forth, and ſaid, there is one among "you fit to have the Holy Ghoſt, or the Shekinah, "dwell upon him; and they ſet their eyes on Samuel the little; and when he died they ſaid, ah "the holy, ah the meek diſciple of Hillel!"

Ver. 59. And they ſtoned Stephen calling upon God, &c.] As he was praying, and putting up the following petition; and ſaying, Lord Jeſus receive my ſpirit: from whence we learn, that the ſpirit or ſoul of man ſleeps not, nor dies with the body, but remains after death; that Jeſus Chriſt is a fit perſon to commit and commend the care of the ſoul unto immediately upon its ſeparation; and that he muſt be truly and properly God; not only becauſe he is equal to ſuch a charge, which none but God is, but becauſe divine worſhip and adoration is here given him. This is ſo glaring a proof of prayer being made unto him, that ſome Socinians perceiving the force of it, would read the word Jeſus in the genitive caſe, thus; Lord of Jeſus receive my ſpirit; as if the prayer was made to the Father of Chriſt, when it is Jeſus he ſaw ſtanding at the right hand of God, whom he invokes, and who is ſo frequently called Lord Jeſus; whereas the Father is never called the Lord of Jeſus; and beſides, theſe words are uſed in like manner in the vocative caſe, in Rev. xxii. 20. to which may be added, that the Syriac verſion reads, our Lord Jeſus; and the Ethiopic verſion, my Lord Jeſus.

Ver. 60. And he kneeled down, &c.] It ſeems as if he ſtood before while they were ſtoning him, and while he was commending his ſoul to Chriſt, but now he kneeled down; prayer may be performed either kneeling or ſtanding: and cried with a loud voice; not only to ſhow that he was in good ſpirits, and not afraid to die, but chiefly to expreſs his vehement and affectionate deſire to have the following petition granted: Lord, lay not this ſin to their charge; do not impute it to them, or place it to their account; let it not riſe and ſtand in judgment againſt them, or they be condemned for it; grant them forgiveneſs for it, and for every other ſin: there is a great deal of likeneſs between Chriſt and this firſt martyr of his at their deaths; Chriſt committed his ſpirit into the hands of his Father, and Stephen commits his into the hands of Chriſt; both prayed for forgiveneſs for their enemies; and both cried with a loud voice before they expired; for ſo it follows here, and when he had ſaid this, he fell aſleep; or died; for death, eſpecially the death of the ſaints, or dying in Jeſus, is expreſſed by ſleep. The way of ſpeaking is common with the Jews, who ſay [u], that Rabbi ſuch an one דמיך, ſlept, i. e. died; and this they ſay is a pure and honourable way of ſpeaking with reſpect to an holy body, whoſe death is no other than as it were a ſleep: and elſewhere [w] it is ſaid, that one ſaw ſuch an one מנמנם, ſleeping; the gloſs upon it is, ניסם, expiring; ſee the notes on John xi. 11. and 1 Theſſ. iv. 13. the Vulgate Latin verſion adds in the Lord.

CHAP. VIII.

Ver. 1. AND Saul was conſenting unto his death, &c.] This clauſe in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic and Ethiopic verſions ſtands at the cloſe of the preceding chapter, and which ſeems to be its proper place; and ſo it does in the Alexandrian copy: that Saul conſented to the death of Stephen, and approved of that barbarous action, is evident from his taking care of the clothes of the witneſſes that ſtoned him; but the word here uſed ſignifies not a bare conſent only, but a conſent with pleaſure and delight; he was well pleaſed with it, it rejoiced his very heart; he joined with others in it, with the utmoſt pleaſure and ſatisfaction: this, and what is before ſaid concerning his having the clothes of the witneſſes laid at his feet, as well as what follows, about his perſecuting the ſaints, are the rather mentioned, becauſe this violent perſecutor was afterwards converted, and became an eminent preacher of the Goſpel; and theſe accounts ſerve to ſet off and illuſtrate the grace of God, which was abundant towards him. And at that time there was a great perſecution againſt the church which was at Jeruſalem: it began on that day, as the words may be rendered, on which Stephen was ſtoned. As ſoon as they had put him to death, theſe blood-thirſty wretches were the more greedy after the blood of others; and being now in great numbers, and filled with rage and fury, fell upon the members of the church where-ever they met them, and killed them; for that more, beſides Stephen, were put to death, ſeems plain from Acts xxvi. 10. and, according to ſome accounts, tho' they cannot be depended on, two thouſand perſons ſuffered at this time: and if this was the caſe, it might well be called a great perſecution: and they were all ſcattered abroad; not all the members of the church, nor perhaps any of the private ones; for we afterwards read of devout men that carried Stephen to his grave; and of the church being made havock of by Saul; and of men and women being haled out of their houſes, and committed to priſon by him; but all the preachers of the word, except the Apoſtles; for they that were ſcattered, went about preaching the word, ver. 4. and ch. xi. 19. They ſeem to be the ſeventy diſciples, ciples, and other miniſters of the word, on whom the Holy Ghoſt fell at the day of pentecoſt, or was ſince beſtowed; among whom were Philip, who went to Samaria; and Ananias, who was at Damaſcus; and others that went as far as Phenice, Cyprus, and Antioch: and particularly they are ſaid to be diſperſed, throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria; where their miniſtry was ſo greatly bleſſed, to the converſion of ſouls, that there were quickly many churches planted and formed in theſe parts, as appears from ch. ix. 31. ſo that this perſecution was for the furtherance and ſpread of the Goſpel: that upon this diſperſion, any of them came into France and England, or any other parts of Europe, is not probable; ſince the particular places they went to are mentioned; and ſince they preached to Jews only: and this ſcattering by reaſon of the perſecution, was of all the preachers, except the apoſtles; the twelve apoſtles, who ſtaid at Jeruſalem to take care of the church; to encourage the members of it to ſuffer chearfully for the ſake of Chriſt and his Goſpel; and to animate them to abide by him: and this was not only an inſtance of courage and conſtancy in them, and of the divine protection and preſervation of them, in the midſt of their enemies; but alſo of the timidity of their adverſaries, who might be afraid to meddle with them; remembring what miraculous works were performed by them, and how they had been delivered out of priſon, and eſpecially the caſe of Ananias and Sapphira, who were ſtruck dead by Peter. Beza's ancient copy adds, who remained in Jeruſalem.

Ver. 2. And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, &c.] Theſe men were not Jewiſh proſelytes, but members of the chriſtian church; who were eminent for their religion and piety, and who had courage enough amidſt this perſecution, to ſhew a reſpect to the dead body of this holy martyr; which they took from under the ſtones, waſhed it, and wound it up in linen clothes, and put it into a coffin, or on a bier: they did every thing preparatory to the funeral, which is chiefly deſigned by the word here uſed, rather than the carrying of him out to his grave; though this alſo they did, and buried him: and to bear a corpſe and follow it to the grave, and bury it, were with the Jews [x] reckoned among acts of kindneſs, mercy, and piety, and which would not fail of a reward: they have a ſaying [y], that "he that mourns, they ſhall mourn "for him; and he that buries, they ſhall bury "him; and he that lifts up (his voice in weeping "and lamentation) they ſhall lift up for him; he "that accompanies (a dead corpſe) they ſhall ac"company him; he that carries, they ſhall carry "him;" as theſe devout men did, who would not ſuffer Stephen to be buried in the common burying-place of malefactors, but interred him elſewhere, in a more decent manner: but whether they had leave from the Sanhedrim ſo to do, or whether they did this of themſelves is not certain; if the latter, which ſeems moſt likely, it is an inſtance of great boldneſs and reſolution, and eſpecially at this time; for "they did not bury one that was ſtoned in the "ſepulchres of his fathers, but there were two bury"ing-places appointed by the Sanhedrim, one for "thoſe that are ſtoned and burnt, and another for "thoſe that are ſlain with the ſword and ſtrangled [z]." So that they acted contrary to the Jewiſh canon, as they alſo did in what follows: and made great lamentation over him; though they did not ſorrow as thoſe without hope, yet they did not put on a ſtoical apathy; but as men ſenſible of the loſs the church of Chriſt had ſuſtained, by the death of a perſon ſo eminent for his gifts and grace, they mourned over him in a becoming manner: in this they went contrary to the Jewiſh rule, which forbids lamentation for thoſe that died as malefactors, and runs thus [a]; "they don't mourn, but they "grieve; for grief is only in the heart;" their reaſon for this was, as the commentators ſay [b], becauſe they thought that "their diſgrace was an "atonement for their ſin:" but theſe devout men knew that Stephen needed no ſuch atonement, and that his ſins were atoned for another way: otherwiſe the Jews looked upon mourning for the dead, to be to the honour of him; hence they ſay [c], that mourning "is the glory of the dead——whoever "is backward to the mourning of a wiſe man, "ſhall not prolong his days; and whoever is "ſluggiſh in mourning for a good man, ought to "be buried alive; and whoever cauſes tears to de"ſcend for a good man, lo, his reward is reſerved "for him with the holy bleſſed God."

Ver. 3. As for Saul, he made havock of the church, &c.] Did evil to the ſaints, deſtroyed them that called upon the name of Chriſt, ch. ix. 13, 21. and perſecuted and waſted the church of God, as he himſelf ſays, Gal. i. 13. and now did Benjamin, of which tribe Saul was, ravine as a wolf, Gen. xlix. 27. Entering into every houſe; where the ſaints dwelt: and haling men and women; in a violent manner, without any regard to age or ſex: committed them to priſon; delivered them up into the hands of the chief prieſts and magiſtrates, in order to be committed and ſent to priſon; this he himſelf confeſſes, ch. xxii. 4. and xxvi. 10.

Ver. 4. Therefore they that were ſcattered abroad, &c.] By reaſon of the perſecution in Jeruſalem: the ſeventy diſciples and other miniſters of the word; or the hundred and twenty, excepting the apoſtles, went every where; or went through the countries of Judea and Samaria, as far as Phenice, Cyprus, and Antioch: preaching the word; the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions add, of God, and ſo ſome copies; the Goſpel, which is the word of God, and not man; which was not of men, nor received from men, but came from God, and by the revelation of Chriſt; and which was good news and glad tidings, of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs and ſalvation, by Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 5. Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, &c.] The city which was formerly called Samaria, but now Sebaſte; it had been deſtroyed by Hyrcanus, and was rebuilt by Herod; and called by him, in honour of Auguſtus, by the name of Sebaſte [d]; and ſo R. Benjamin ſays [e], that "from "Luz he came in a day to Sebaſte, היא שומרון, "this is Samaria; where yet may be diſcerned the "palace of Ahab king of Iſrael———and from "thence are two parſa's to Neapolis, this is Sichem." Which laſt place Sichem, is by Joſephus, ſaid to be the metropolis of Samaria; and is thought by Dr. Lightfoot to be the city Philip went to, and where our Lord had before been, and preached to the converſion of many perſons: this place lay lower than Jeruſalem, and therefore Philip is ſaid to go down to it; and who was not Philip the apoſtle, but Philip the deacon, for the apoſtles abode at Jeruſalem; and beſide, though this Philip preached the Goſpel, and baptized, and wrought miracles, yet did not lay on hands, in order that perſons might receive the extraordinary gifts of the Holy [e] Itinerar. p. 38.

Ghoſt; this was peculiar to the apoſtles, and therefore Peter and John came down for this purpoſe, when they heard of the ſucceſs of Philip's miniſtry; the ſubject matter of which follows: and preached Chriſt unto them; that Chriſt was come in the fleſh, that Jeſus of Nazareth was the Chriſt, and that he was the Son of God, and the alone Saviour of men; who by his obedience, ſufferings, and death, had wrought righteouſneſs, procured peace and pardon, and obtained eternal redemption for his people; and was riſen again, and aſcended into heaven, and was ſet down at the right-hand of God, where he ever lived to make interceſſion, and would come again a ſecond time to judge both quick and dead.

Ver. 6. And the people with one accord, &c.] The inhabitants of the city of Samaria, as one man, came to hear the word: and gave heed to thoſe things which Philip ſpake; they liſtened to them, took notice of them, gave their aſſent to them, believed and embraced them; being induced thereunto, not only upon the evidence by which theſe things came, but by reaſon of the miracles which he wrought, for the confirmation of them: for it follows, hearing and ſeeing the miracles which he did; and which are particularly mentioned in the next verſe.

Ver. 7. For unclean ſpirits, &c.] Devils, ſo called; becauſe they were unclean themſelves, defiled others, and delighted in impure perſons and places; ſee the note on Matt. x. 1. crying with loud voice; ſhewing their unwillingneſs to remove, and the irreſiſtibleneſs of divine power they could not withſtand: came out of many that were poſſeſſed with them; who had for a long time dwelt in them, and had greatly afflicted them: and many taken with palſies, and that were lame, were healed; by Philip, in the name of Chriſt, through a word ſpeaking, or by touching them, without making uſe of any means or medicines.

Ver. 8. And there was great joy in that city.] Both on a ſpiritual account, for the good of their ſouls, thro' the preaching of Chriſt and his Goſpel to them; and on a temporal account, for the good of their bodies, or their friends, being diſpoſſeſſed of devils, and healed of their diſeaſes.

Ver. 9. But there was a certain man called Simon, &c.] Who, as Juſtin Martyr [f] ſays, was a Samaritan, and of a village called Gitton; and ſo a Jewiſh writer [g] calls him, Simeon, השמרוני, the Samaritan, a wizard: here's a but upon this new church, the ſucceſs of the Goſpel in this place, and the joy that was there; a man of great wickedneſs and ſophiſtry, plays the hypocrite, feigns himſelf a believer, and gets in among them; ſee the note on ch. v. 1. which before time in the ſame city uſed ſorcery; who before Philip came thither, practiſed magic arts; wherefore he is commonly called Simon Magus, for he was a magician, who had learned diabolical arts, and uſed enchantments and divinations, as Balaam and the magicians of Egypt did: and bewitched the people of Samaria; or rather aſtoniſhed them, with the ſtrange feats he performed; which were ſo unheard of and unaccountable, that they were thrown into an exſtaſy and rapture; and were as it were out of themſelves, through wonder and admiration, at the amazing things that were done by him: giving out that himſelf was ſome great one; a divine perſon, or an extraordinary prophet, and it may be the Meſſiah; ſince the Samaritans expected the Meſſiah, as appears from John iv. 25. and which the Syriac verſion ſeems to incline to, which renders the words thus, and he ſaid, I am that great one; that great perſon, whom Moſes ſpake of as the ſeed of the woman, under the name of Shiloh, and the character of a prophet.

Ver. 10. To whom they all gave heed, &c.] Were not only attentive to the ſtrange things he did, and to the wonderful things he gave out concerning himſelf; but they believed what he ſaid and did as real things, and were obedient to him: and that from the leaſt to the greateſt; which does not ſo much reſpect age, though the Ethiopic verſion renders it, from the younger of them to the eldeſt of them, as ſtate and condition; perſons of every rank and quality, high and low, rich and poor, magiſtrates and ſubjects, from the meaneſt to the greateſt of them; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, both great, or noble and mean; he drew the attention, and commanded the regard, both of princes and peaſants, of the learned and unlearned, of the great men, and of the common people, who one and all wondered at him, and applauded him: ſaying, this man is the great power of God; or as the Alexandrian copy and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, this is the power of God which is called great; they took him for the ſupreme deity, or as Juſtin Martyr [h] expreſſes it, they accounted him the firſt, or chief God; or they looked upon him to be the Meſſiah, the great power of God, as the Syriac verſion renders it; and who ſhould be great, and called the ſon of the higheſt, Luke ii. 32.

Ver. 11. To him they had regard, &c.] Which is repeated from the foregoing verſe, for the ſake of what follows: becauſe that of a long time he had bewitched them with ſorceries; or becauſe he had, it may be for many years, aſtoniſhed them with his magic arts, and the pranks he played in the uſe of them.

Ver. 12. But when they believed Philip, &c.] Though they had been carried away ſo long with this deceiver, and had been ſo much attached unto him, and held in admiration of him; yet when Philip came and preached Chriſt unto them, ſuch was the power that attended his miniſtry, and ſuch the efficacy of divine grace that was exerted, that they not only gave heed unto him, but believed what he ſaid: preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God; concerning the kingdom of the Meſſiah, the Goſpel diſpenſation, the doctrines and ordinances of the Goſpel; and concerning the kingdom of grace, which is ſpiritual and internal, and which lies not in external things, as meat and drink, but in righteouſneſs, peace, and joy; and concerning the kingdom of glory, the meetneſs for it, which lies in regenerating grace, and the right unto it, which is the righteouſneſs of Chriſt: and the name of Jeſus Chriſt; concerning the perſon of Chriſt, as the Son of God, and the offices of Chriſt, as prophet, prieſt, and king; and the virtue of his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, for pardon, juſtification, and atonement: the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read this clauſe, in the name of Jeſus Chriſt; and connect it with the following words, they were baptized, both men and women: that is, when they heard Philip preach the Goſpel, and believed in Chriſt, the ſum and ſubſtance of it, and made a profeſſion of faith, they were of each ſex, both men and women, baptized by immerſion, in the name of Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 13. Then Simon himſelf believed alſo, &c.] With an hiſtorical and temporary faith, as that Jeſus was the Meſſiah, &c. or at leaſt he pretended to believe this, and profeſſed that he did believe what others did, and Philip preached: and when he was baptized; upon profeſſion of his faith, which he ſo artfully made, that Philip could not diſcover his hypocriſy; but taking him to be a ſincere believer, admitted him to baptiſm: after which, he continued with Philip; kept cloſe to him, and got into a familiar acquaintance with him; and conſtantly attended on his miniſtry, as if he had been a ſincere diſciple and follower of Chriſt: and wondered, beholding the miracles and ſigns which were done; he was as much amazed at the miraculous performances of Philip, as the inhabitants of Samaria had been at his, which he could obſerve were real things; and this increaſed his wonder, and threw him into an exſtaſy, that he was ſcarce himſelf; whereas he knew that what he did, were only ſham performances, and legerdemain tricks.

Ver. 14. Now when the apoſtles which were at Jeruſalem, &c.] Not that there were ſome at Jeruſalem, and ſome elſewhere; for they all tarried at Jeruſalem, when the reſt of the miniſters of the word were ſcattered abroad; though it is poſſible, that by this time, ſome of them might have departed from hence; but it ſeems more probable, that they were as yet all here: theſe heard that Samaria had received the word of God; that is, they heard that the Samaritans, who only received the five books of Moſes, and that not the Hebrew, but their own copy of them, now received not only the whole bible, but the Goſpel of Chriſt, as preached by Philip; which they might hear by a letter, or meſſengers ſent from Philip to them, to acquaint them with the ſucceſs of the Goſpel; or from ſome perſons, who had been in thoſe parts: upon which they ſent unto them Peter and John; who were not only fellow apoſtles, but very familiar and intimate companions; theſe they ſent to confirm the doctrine of Philip, and eſtabliſh the young converts in it, and to form them into a Goſpel church-ſtate, and ordain miniſters over them.

Ver. 15. Who when they were come down, &c.] To the city of Samaria, where Philip was, and theſe converts dwelt: prayed for them; for ſome of them, unto God: that they might receive the Holy Ghoſt; the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, as to be able to ſpeak with tongues, to propheſy and work miracles: they might pray for them all, that they might have a larger meaſure of grace, and more ſpiritual light and knowledge; and that they might be eſtabliſhed in the doctrines of the Goſpel, and hold faſt the profeſſion of their faith unto the end; but it can hardly be thought that they ſhould pray for them all, both men and women, that they might have the above extraordinary gifts, which were not neceſſary to them all: and that theſe are meant by the Holy Ghoſt, is clear from what follows, ſince he was not yet fallen on any of them, which cannot be underſtood in any other ſenſe; and ſeeing it was ſomething viſible, which Simon could diſcern, and therefore cannot mean internal grace, and an increaſe of that.

Ver. 16. (For as yet he was fallen upon none of them, &c.] They had received him as a ſpirit of illumination and ſanctification, and as a ſpirit of converſion and faith; they had been regenerated, enlightened, and ſanctified by him; and were converted by him, and brought to believe in Chriſt, and live by faith upon him; they were baptized believers, and no more; as yet, none of them had gifts qualifying them for the miniſtry; and ſtill leſs could any of them ſpeak with tongues, or propheſy, or work miracles; the Holy Ghoſt had not yet deſcended on them for ſuch purpoſes: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jeſus;) all as yet appeared in them was, that they were believers in Chriſt, and had been baptized in his name, upon a profeſſion of their faith; and more than this they had not been called to, or qualified for: the word only, does not reſpect the form of baptiſm, as if they had been baptized only in the name of Chriſt; whereas they were doubtleſs baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt; but refers to baptiſm itſelf, which was the only ordinance as yet adminiſtered to them.

Ver. 17. Then laid they their hands on them, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion adds, who had been baptized; but not upon all of them, men and women, only on ſome they were directed unto by the Spirit of God; whom he had deſigned, and now would qualify for the work of the miniſtry, that ſo this new church might be ſupplied with proper officers, paſtors, and teachers, to feed them with knowledge and with underſtanding; and who might not only have miniſterial gifts to qualify them for preaching the Goſpel, but extraordinary ones, which would ſerve for the confirmation of it; and for this purpoſe the apoſtles, both of them, as the Arabic verſion reads, laid their hands on them: for it will not ſeem probable, that they laid their hands upon the women, on ſuch an account; and it will hardly be received, that they ſhould lay their hands on Simon Magus, otherwiſe he would have received the Holy Ghoſt too; ſo that it ſeems a plain caſe, that impoſition of hands was not uſed to them all: and they received the Holy Ghoſt; that is, they received the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt; ſo that they could propheſy and ſpeak with tongues, and heal diſeaſes, and do other wonderful works: and ſince now theſe effects have ceaſed, the rite and ceremony which was peculiar to the apoſtles as ſuch, it ſhould ſeem ſhould ceaſe likewiſe.

Ver. 18. And when Simon ſaw, &c.] Whence it appears, that the Holy Ghoſt, or his gifts, which were received by impoſition of hands, were ſomething viſible and diſcernible; and ſo ſomething external, and not internal; otherwiſe they would have been out of Simon's reach, and would not have fallen under his notice: but he ſaw, that through laying on of the apoſtles hands, the Holy Ghoſt was given; he ſaw, that upon this men began to propheſy, and to ſpeak with divers tongues they had never learned, and to work miracles, cure men of their diſeaſes, and the like: and when he obſerved this, he offered them money; to purchaſe ſuch a power of conferring the like gifts, on whomſoever he ſhould lay his hands: hence buying and ſelling ſpiritual things, or what relate thereunto, are commonly called ſimony; a vice which has greatly prevailed in the church of Rome, and among its popes; and who therefore may be more properly called the ſucceſſors of Simon Magus, than of Simon Peter.

Ver. 19. Saying, give me alſo this power, &c.] He does not aſk them to lay their hands on him, that he might receive the Holy Ghoſt, and have thoſe gifts to exerciſe himſelf, but that he might have the power of conferring them on others: that on whomſoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghoſt; in which he diſcovered his ambition and avarice; his ambition, that he might be above Philip; who though he had theſe gifts, yet had not a power to lay on hands, and thereby convey them unto others; he perceived that this was purely apoſtolical; and indeed, what he requeſted, was more than what the apoſtles could do; for though upon their prayers, and through the impoſition of their hands, the gifts of the Spirit were beſtowed upon men; yet they never could, nor did give a power to others, to do as they did; and his avarice prompted him to this, that he might make gain of it; not by doing miracles himſelf, but by conveying a power to others to do them.

Ver. 20. But Peter ſaid to him, &c.] With great abhorrence and indignation, reſenting and deteſting his propoſal: thy money periſh with thee; or go into deſtruction with thee; ſignifying, that he would not touch his money, or have any thing to do with that or him either, in any ſuch way: the words do not ſo much deſign an imprecation on his perſon, as an abhorrence of his ſin; and rather ſhew what his ſin deſerved, than what he deſired might be; for the apoſtle did not ſimply wiſh his damnation, ſince he afterwards exhorts him to repentance, and to pray for forgiveneſs; but threatens, and even predicts what would be his caſe, ſhould he live and die in ſuch a ſtate, in which he appeared to be: becauſe thou haſt thought that the gift of God; the Holy Ghoſt, and his extraordinary gifts, which are freely given, when and to whom the Lord himſelf pleaſes: may be purchaſed with money; he appears to have a wrong notion of the Spirit of God and his gifts, and of the grace of God in beſtowing them; as well as a wicked deſign of purchaſing them with money, in order to ſell them again; ſo that it was a ſullying and leſſening of the grace of God, as well as ſeeking himſelf, his own ambition, and filthy lucre: and let ſuch obſerve, how near they come to his ſin, who ſeek to obtain the grace of juſtification, and the free gift of eternal life, by their own works.

Ver. 21. Thou haſt neither part nor lot in this matter, &c.] Or buſineſs of the gift of the Holy Ghoſt; ſignifying, that as he had not the grace of the Spirit of God implanted in him, ſo he ſhould not have any of the gifts of the Spirit beſtowed on him; and much leſs a power of communicating them to others, through laying on of hands: or in this word; the word of the Goſpel, preached by the apoſtles; and in any of the bleſſings publiſhed in it, as the forgiveneſs of ſins, a juſtifying righteouſneſs, and eternal life; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, in this faith; neither in the grace of faith, nor in the doctrine of faith: it ſeems to anſwer to a way of ſpeaking frequently uſed among the Jews, that ſuch and ſuch perſons, אין להם חלק, have no part or lot, in the world to come [1]. The Ethiopic verſion reads, becauſe of this thy word; becauſe for his money, he had deſired to have a power of beſtowing the Holy Ghoſt on perſons, through the impoſition of his hands; which ſhowed, he had no ſhare in the grace of God, and would have no part in eternal life, thus living and dying: for thy heart is not right in the ſight of God; he had not a clean heart, nor a right ſpirit created in him; he had not true principles of grace wrought in him; his heart was full of covetouſneſs, ambition, and hypocriſy; he had no good deſigns, ends, and aims, in what he ſaid and did; in his profeſſion of faith, in his baptiſm, in his attendance on Philip's miniſtry, and in his requeſt for the above power, of conferring the Holy Ghoſt; his view was not the ſpread and confirmation of the Goſpel, or the enlargement of the kingdom and intereſt of Chriſt, and the glory of God, but his own applauſe and worldly intereſt; and therefore, however he might be thought of by men, to be a good and diſintereſted man, he was otherwiſe in the ſight of God, who is the ſearcher of the heart, and the trier of the reins of the children of men.

Ver. 22. Repent therefore of this thy wickedneſs, &c.] For a great piece of wickedneſs it was, to offer money for the gift of the Holy Ghoſt, and to imagine, that that could be purchaſed with money; and what made the wickedneſs ſtill greater was, the evil deſign he had in this, to advance himſelf in oppoſition to Chriſt and his apoſtles, as he afterwards did; and when the apoſtle puts him upon repentance, his view is to ſhow the heinouſneſs of his crime, the need he ſtood in of repentance, and that without it, his caſe muſt be miſerable: and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee; though he was in a ſtate of nature, the apoſtle exhorts him to the duty of prayer; for prayer is a natural duty, and binding upon all men, though none but a ſpiritual man can perform it in a ſpiritual way: and though this ſin of Simon's was a very heinous one, and came very near unto, and looked very much like the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, yet it was not the unpardonable one; it might be pardoned by the grace of God, and through the blood of Chriſt; and therefore Peter, who wiſhed his ſalvation and not his damnation, put him upon prayer for it; which was poſſible, though difficult, but not certain: the apoſtle ſays not this, as doubting; if it was a caſe wholly to be deſpaired of, then he would not have directed him to the means; and yet the wickedneſs was ſo horribly great, and he in ſuch a wretched hardened ſtate, that there was no great hope or expectation of his repentance, and ſo of the application of pardon to him: however, this advice was not given ironically; Peter was too grave and ſerious, to ſpeak ſarcaſtically, or break a jeſt upon a man in ſuch circumſtances; whom no doubt he heartily pitied, though he abhorred his ſin: the Syriac verſion renders it, the deceit of thine heart; and the Ethiopic verſion, the evil thought of thine heart; and ſuch it was.

Ver. 23. For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterneſs, &c.] Alluding to Deut. xxix. 18. and xxxii. 32. with which compare Heb. xii. 15. and ſignifying, that he was in a ſtate of nature and unregeneracy; under the power and dominion of covetouſneſs, ambition, and hypocriſy; and in a way pernicious to himſelf, infectious to others, and ungrateful to God, and to good men; and that inſtead of the root of the matter, the truth of grace being in him, there was nothing in him but the bitter root of ſin; which bore gall and wormwood, and every thing that was nauſeous and diſagreeable: and in the bond of iniquity; referring to Prov. v. 22. or to Iſa. lviii. 6. and ſuggeſting, that he was held faſt bound in the bonds of ſin, and with the cords of iniquity, or was entirely under the government of his luſts: the prepoſition εις, which we render in, may retain here, as is by ſome obſerved, its proper ſenſe of for, or into; and have the ſame ſignification it has in Heb. i. 5. I will be to him for a father, or a father, and he ſhall be to me for a ſon, or a ſon; and then the ſenſe of Peter is, I plainly perceive, and clearly ſee by thy words and actions, that thou art nothing elſe but a lump of bitter gall, and a bundle of ſin and wickedneſs.

Ver. 24. Then anſwered Simon, and ſaid, &c.] Whoſe conſcience might be touched, and ſmote with what Peter had ſaid; and he might be terrified with the wrath of God, and filled with fear of his judgment coming upon him for his wickedneſs, and might now ſtand trembling before the apoſtles: and if this was not his caſe, he was a moſt hardened and audacious wretch; and his following words muſt be underſtood in a different ſenſe, from what they might ſeem to have, when they came out of his mouth: pray ye to the Lord for me; the Arabic verſion reads, pray ye two; the words are addreſſed both to Peter and John; for though Peter only ſpake to him, yet John joined with him, and aſſented to what he ſaid, and approved of it; and which he might ſignify, either by word or geſture; wherefore Simon deſires both of them, that they would pray to the Lord for him; but whether he was ſerious, and in good earneſt in this, is a queſtion; ſince there is no reaſon to believe he truly repented, from the accounts given of him by ancient writers; who always repreſent him as an oppoſer of the apoſtles and their doctrine, as the father of all hereſies, as a blaſphemous wretch; who gave out that he was the Father in Samaria, the Son in Judea, and the Holy Ghoſt in other places; and as a very lewd and wicked man, who carried about with him a whore, whoſe name was Helena; whom he called the mother of the univerſe, and gave out the angels were made by her, and the world by them; with many other errors, blaſphemies, and impieties: ſo that it ſhould rather ſeem, that though Peter was ſerious in his advice to Simon, yet he was not ſo in his requeſt to him; but in a ſarcaſtic ſneering way, deſired his prayers for him; ſuggeſting, that he was not in any pain about what he had ſaid: and if he was in earneſt, he did not take Peter's advice to pray for himſelf; nor did he declare any repentance for his ſin; and his deſire that the apoſtles would pray for him, might not be from any ſenſe he had of the evil of his ſin, but from a ſlaviſh fear of the evil, or miſchief, that was like to come upon him for his ſin, as appears by what follows: that none of theſe things which ye have ſpoken come upon me; as that his money ſhould periſh with him, and he with that; or that he ſhould go into deſtruction; that everlaſting deſtruction and ruin would be his portion; and he ſhould have no part nor lot in eternal life, unleſs he repented, and his ſin was pardoned: and this confirms what has been before obſerved, that John aſſented to what Peter ſpoke, or ſaid the ſame, or ſuch like things to Simon as he did.

[1] Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 11. §. 1.

Ver. 25. And they when they had teſtified, &c.] That is, Simeon (or Peter) and John, as the Syriac verſion expreſſes it; when they had bore their teſtimony to, and by it confirmed the Goſpel as preached by Philip, and had eſtabliſhed the young converts in it, and againſt the errors of Simon Magus: and preached the word of the Lord; or of God, as read the Alexandrian copy, and the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions; when they had preached the Goſpel in the city of Samaria, the ſame as Philip had preached before; whereby it appeared, that there was an harmony and agreement between them: returned to Jeruſalem; to the reſt of the apoſtles there, to give them an account, how they found things at Samaria; what they had done, and what they had met with: and upon their return, whilſt on their journey, they ſtopped at ſeveral places, which lay in their way; and preached the Goſpel in many villages of the Samaritans; their firſt commiſſion in Matt. x. 5. being now cancelled, and a new one given them to preach the Goſpel to every creature; and being appointed witneſſes for Chriſt in Samaria, as well as in Jeruſalem and Judea; ſee ch. i. 8.

Ver. 26. And the angel of the Lord ſpake unto Philip, &c.] To enquire who this angel was, whether Michael or Gabriel, or the tutelar angel of Ethiopia, or of the Eunuch, or of Philip, is too curious; it was one of the miniſtring ſpirits ſent forth by Chriſt, to ſerve a gracious purpoſe of his, and for the good of one of the heirs of ſalvation: ſaying, ariſe; at once, make haſte and ſpeed, and quick diſpatch; the phraſe denotes readineſs, alacrity, and expedition: and go toward the ſouth; the ſouthern point from the city of Samaria, where Philip now was; or to the ſouth of Jeruſalem: the parts of Gaza, Lydda, Jamnia, Joppa, &c. were called the ſouth; hence often mention is made of ſuch a Rabbi and ſuch a Rabbi, that he was, דרומיא, of the ſouth[k]: ſo R. Joſhua, who was of Lydda, is ſaid to be of the ſouth[l]. The Ethiopic verſion renders it at noon time, and ſo the Arabic of De Dieu; as if it reſpected not the place whither he was to go, but the time when he was to go; and that it might be about the middle of the day, the following narrative ſeems to confirm: unto the way which goes down from Jeruſalem unto Gaza, which is deſert; this place is ſometimes called Azzah, and ſometimes Gaza, which is owing to the different pronunciation of the firſt letter of it; it was firſt inhabited by the Arvm, or Hivites, who being deſtroyed by the Caphtorim, they dwelt in their ſtead, Deut. ii. 23. It fell to the lot of the tribe of Judah, but could not be held by it, becauſe of the giants which remained in it; and was, as Jerom ſays[m], a famous city of Paleſtine in his day; and was formerly the border of the Canaanites towards Egypt; and the way to Egypt lay through it, in which the eunuch was travelling: the way from Jeruſalem to this place, lay through Bethlehem, as the above ancient writer obſerves, on Jer. xxxi. 15. where he ſays, "ſome of the Jews interpret this "place thus; that Jeruſalem being taken by Veſpaſian, through this way (Bethlehem and Ephrata, "of which he is ſpeaking) to Gaza and Alexandria, a vaſt number of captives were led to "Rome." And as the ſame writer elſewhere ſays[n], Bethlehem was ſix miles from Ælia (or Jeruſalem) to the ſouth, in the way which leads to Hebron; and it is commonly believed that the way to Gaza was through Hebron, and is the way in which they go to it now; and to a hill near this place, Sampſon carried the gates of Gaza, Judg. xvi. 1, 2, 3. And this alſo was to the ſouth of Jeruſalem, and two and twenty miles from it[o]: and it is alſo ſaid by the ſame author[p], that there is a village called Bethſur, and in his time Bethſoron, in the way from Jeruſalem to Hebron, about twenty miles from the former, at which there was a fountain, where it was reported the eunuch was baptized by Philip. There was it ſeems another way from Jeruſalem to Gaza, through Dioſpolis, or Eleutheropolis, and ſo to Aſcalon, and from thence to Gaza[q]: and this was the road the eunuch went, if their conjecture is right, that he was baptized in the river Eleutherus; but which way he went is not certain, nor where he was baptized. The ſituation of Gaza was according to Arrianus[r], as follows; "Gaza "is diſtant from the ſea, at leaſt twenty furlongs "(two miles and a half) and the acceſs unto it is "ſandy and deep, and the ſea near the city is all "muddy. Gaza was a great city, and was built "on high ground, and encompaſſed with a ſtrong "wall; it was the laſt of thoſe cities inhabited, as "you go from Phenicia into Egypt, επι τη αρχη της "ερημου, at the beginning of the deſert." Which laſt words ſeem to furniſh out a reaſon, why it is here called Gaza, which is deſert; becauſe it was ſituated where the deſert began: though this clauſe is differently underſtood; ſome apply it to Gaza; as if the ſenſe was Gaza the deſert, to diſtinguiſh it, old Gaza, which was deſtroyed by Alexander the great, and as Strabo ſays [s], remained deſert, from new Gaza, built at ſome diſtance from it: Jerom has [t] this diſtinction of old and new Gaza; there is ſcarce any appearance, he ſays, of the foundations of the ancient city; and that which is now ſeen, is built in another place; and an unknown Greek writer makes expreſs mention of new Gaza, which is the city itſelf; and ſpeaks of another Gaza at ſome diſtance, which he calls Gaza, η ερημος, the deſert [u]: but the haven, which was ſeven furlongs diſtant from Gaza, was not called new Gaza till Julian's time; it was firſt called Majuma, and afterwards Conſtantia, by Conſtantine; either from his ſon Conſtantius, or his ſiſter Conſtantia, it having embraced the chriſtian religion [w]: wherefore, as Beza obſerves, no regard could be had to this diſtinction in the times of Luke; and though it was beſieged by Alexander and taken, yet it did not become a deſolate place; it had its walls, gates, and fortifications afterwards; and was after this taken by Ptolomy, and then by Alexander Jannæus; it was repaired by Gabinius, and given to Herod by Auguſtus [x]: ſo that it could not be ſaid to be deſert, in the times of Philip and the eunuch, with reſpect to its inhabitants and fortifications: it ſeems rather therefore to be ſo called, for the above reaſon, becauſe ſituated at the beginning of the deſert; and the whole ſpace between the parts of Egypt next the Nile, and Paleſtina, is called the deſert, both by Arrianus [y] and Joſephus [z]: others apply this epithet to the way, and read it as do the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, to the way of the deſert which goes from Jeruſalem; meaning the wilderneſs, which lay in the way from Jeruſalem to Gaza. This place was diſtant from Jeruſalem about ſeventy-five miles; for from Jeruſalem to Aſcalon, was as Joſephus [a] ſays, five hundred and twenty furlongs, which make ſixty-five miles; and from Aſcalon to Gaza were ten miles, as our countryman Mr. Sandes ſays [b]; though according to the Itinerary of Antoninus [c], the diſtance was ſixteen miles. The Talmudiſts make mention of this place, they repreſent it as a very pleaſant place to dwell in; they ſay [d], Gaza is, נויה יפה, a beautiful habitation; they ſpeak of three famous markets, and one of them was the market of Gaza [e]; and very near to this city, there was a beaſt-market [f]; and to which may be added, though it may not ſerve to ſtrengthen the reaſon of its name being called Gaza the deſert, there was a place on the border of the city, which was named, חורבתא סגירתא, the deſert of the leper [g]: there were alſo brooks about the parts of Gaza and Azotus [h]; in one of which, if the eunuch was near Gaza, to which he was going, he might be baptized; ſince it is uncertain whereabout Philip met him, and where the place of water was, in which the ordinance of baptiſm was adminiſtered to him. This city is now called Gazera, or Gazara, and is inhabited by Greeks, Turks, and Arabians.

Ver. 27. And he aroſe and went, &c.] As ſoon as he had his orders, he immediately obeyed them; he made no diſpute about the matter, though he was directed only part of his way, and had no account of what he went about, or was to do: and behold, a man of Ethiopia; or a man, an Ethiopian; an Hebraiſm, ſuch as a man a Jew, Zech. viii. 23. wherefore his being called a man, is no contradiction to his being an eunuch; for the word man does not regard his ſex, but with the other the country of which he was; and it is the ſame as if he had only been called an Ethiopian, which ſignifies one of a black countenance; for Ethiopia was not ſo called from Ethiops, the ſon of Vulcan, who is ſaid to reign over it, but from the colour of its inhabitants; ſee Jer. xiii. 23. Amos ix. 7. This country in the Hebrew language is called Cuſh, and the people of it Cuſhites, from Cuſh the ſon of Ham, Gen. x. 6. And ſo Joſephus ſays [i], that the Ethiopians over whom he (Cuſh) reigned, are now by themſelves, and by all in Aſia called Chuſeans; and ſo likewiſe the inhabitants of upper Ethiopia, or the Abyſſines, are to this day called Cuſſians, by the Portugueze. Geographers make mention of two Ethiopia's, one in Africa divided into upper and lower, and which is here meant; and the other in Aſia and a part of Arabia, and which is the Ethiopia ſpoken of in the Old Teſtament: a note of admiration is prefixed, to obſerve to us what was remarkable in providence; that juſt at this time, and in this way, ſuch a man ſhould be travelling; and what was ſtill a greater wonder of grace, that ſuch an one ſhould be the object of God's peculiar favour, and ſhould be choſen and called, have the Goſpel preached to him, and be admitted to an ordinance of it; whereby ſome prophecies began to have their accompliſhment in part, Pſ. lxviii. 31. Zeph. iii. 10. An eunuch of great authority; he might be one that was literally ſo, it being common for Eaſtern princes and great men, to have ſuch perſons as guards over their wives, to preſerve their chaſtity; and ſo hereby was a fulfilment in part, of Iſa. lvi. 3, 4, 5. though this word is uſed to denote a perſon in office: ſo Potiphar is called, סריס, an eunuch, though he had a wife, and which we rightly render an officer; and the Chaldee paraphraſe renders it, רבא, a prince, or great man, Gen. xxxix. 1. So Balaam is ſaid [k] to be one of the king's eunuchs, and yet Jannes and Jambres are ſaid to be his ſons; and ſo the word Dynaſtes here uſed, which we tranſlate of great authority, may be conſidered as explanative of the word eunuch; to teach us, that this word was not expreſſive of his caſe, but a title of office: it is reported of this eunuch, that after his converſion he preached the Goſpel to the inhabitants of Zeylan and Arabia Felix, and in the iſland of Taprobane in the Red ſea, and at laſt ſuffered martyrdom [l]: this great perſon is ſaid to be under Candace queen of the Ethiopians; that is, of thoſe Ethiopians who inhabited the iſland of Meroe; for Candace, or Candaoce, as Pliny [m] reads it, was a common name of the queens of that iſland, as Pharaoh was of the Egyptian kings, and Cæſar of the Roman emperors: the word Candace ſignifies a governour of children, that is, ſervants; it is derived from the Ethiopic word, קני, Kani, which ſignifies to govern; and from, דק, Dak, a child, or ſervant; and the king of the Abyſſines, is to this day called Preſtar Chan, or Kan, a prince of ſervants, who is commonly and corruptly called Preſter John; and Chan, or Kan, is a well known name for an emperor or governour, in the eaſtern countries; as with the Tartars and Perſians, witneſs the preſent famous Kouli Kan. Some ſay [n], her proper name was Judith, others Lacaſa [o], and others Hendake, or Indich; which, as Ludolphus [p] obſerves, is no other than Candace; though this laſt name Indich, according to Zaga Zabo, an embaſſador of the king of the Ethiopians, was the name of the eunuch himſelf; his words, as reported by Damianus a Goes [q], are theſe; "we almoſt before all other "chriſtians, received baptiſm from the eunuch of "Candace, queen of Ethiopia, whoſe name was "Indich:" who had the charge of all her treaſure; was her lord treaſurer; which ſhows, that he was not an eunuch to her on account of chaſtity, but an high officer in her kingdom: the word Gaza here uſed, ſignifies in the Perſian language treaſure, or treaſury [r]. The Ethiopic verſion takes it for the name of a place, and renders it, and he was governour of the city of Gaza, but very wrongly: and had come to Jeruſalem for to worſhip; hence he ſeems to have been either a Jew by birth, or rather a proſelyte to the Jewiſh religion; and had been at Jeruſalem at one of their annual feaſts, the paſſover, pentecoſt, or tabernacles, to worſhip the God of Iſrael, whom he believed to be the only true God.

Ver. 28. Was returning, &c.] From Jeruſalem, having finiſhed the parts of divine worſhip, he came to perform; and it is remarkable, that though he muſt doubtleſs have heard of Jeſus of Nazareth, and what had paſſed in Jeruſalem lately, and of his apoſtles, yet heard them not; or however, was not converted by them, nor believed in Jeſus; his converſion being ordered to be at another time, in another place, and by another inſtrument: and ſitting in his chariot; as was the manner of princes and great perſons: read Eſaias the prophet; the book of the prophecies of Iſaiah the prophet; and in Luke iv. 17. it is called the book of the prophet Eſaias; and in the note there I have obſerved, that the prophets, eſpecially the larger ones, were ſometimes in ſeparate and diſtinct books, and ſo might be the prophecy of Iſaiah; and ſuch an one was delivered to Chriſt, in the ſynagogue of Nazareth; and ſuch an one the eunuch might have, and be reading in it: hence we read [s], that Daniel ſhould ſay to the Iſraelites, who came to diſcourſe with him about the propheſies of Jeremiah, bring me, ſays he, ספר ישעיה, the book of Iſaiah; he began to read, and went on till he came to this verſe, the burden of the deſert of the ſea, &c. Iſa. xxi. 1. and both the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions here read, the book of the prophet Iſaiah. Some think, the eunuch might be reading over ſome paſſages of ſcripture in this prophet, which he had heard expounded at Jeruſalem, to refreſh his memory with what he had heard. This prophet is a very evangelical one, and very delightful and profitable to read; many things are propheſied by him concerning the Meſſiah, and particularly in the chapter in which the eunuch was reading; and this being a time when there was great expectation of the Meſſiah, ſuch paſſages might be read and expounded in their ſynagogues, which concerned him: however, the eunuch improved his time as he was travelling, in a religious way, which was very commendable; and as this was the occaſion and opportunity which the Holy Ghoſt took to bring on his converſion, it may ſerve greatly to recommend the reading of the ſcriptures.

Ver. 29. Then the Spirit ſaid unto Philip, &c.] Not the angel, a miniſtring ſpirit, as in ver. 26. but the Holy Spirit, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read, the ſame with the Spirit of the Lord, ver. 39. who ſpoke unto him, either by an articulate voice, ſuch as was the Bath Kol among the Jews; or inwardly, by a ſecret impulſe upon him, he directed him, ſaying; go near, and join thyſelf to this chariot; he bid him make up to the chariot, he ſaw driving on the road at ſuch a diſtance, and follow it, and attend it cloſely; and not leave it, till an opportunity of converſing with the perſon in it offered.

Ver. 30. And Philip ran thither to him, &c.] Being very ready to obey the divine order, and hoping he might be an inſtrument of doing ſome good, which might iſſue in the glory of God, and the welfare of men: and heard him read the prophet Eſaias; that is, the book of Iſaiah the prophet, as before; and ſo the Ethiopic and Arabic verſions read here, as there: he read it out, with a clear and diſtinct voice, ſo that Philip could hear him; and this he did, partly through reverence to the word of God, and partly to fix his attention to it the more, that he might the better underſtand and remember it, and alſo for delight and pleaſure: it is very likely, that it was the book of Iſaiah in the Hebrew tongue in which he was reading, and which language he might underſtand, though he might be at a loſs about the ſenſe of the prophet: and ſaid, underſtandeſt thou what thou readeſt? meaning not the language, but the ſenſe; for over-hearing him, he perceived it was a prophecy in Iſaiah he was reading; which was not ſo eaſy to be underſtood as laws and precepts are, which command this, and forbid that; whereas prophecies were more abſtruſe, and regarded things to come.

Ver. 31. And he ſaid, how can I, except ſome man ſhould guide me? &c.] Which ſhows, that he was of an excellent ſpirit and temper; ſince inſtead of anſwering in a haughty and diſdainful manner, as great men are too apt to do; and inſtead of charging Philip with impertinence and inſolence, in interrupting him whilſt reading, and putting ſuch a queſtion to him, he expreſſes himſelf with great and uncommon modeſty; with a ſenſe and confeſſion of his ignorance and incapacity, and of the neceſſity and uſefulneſs of the inſtructions of men, appointed of God to open and explain the ſcriptures: and though he wanted ſuch a guide, and could have been glad of one, yet he was willing to uſe all diligence himſelf in reading, that he might, if poſſible, come at ſome knowledge of the truth; which was very commendable in him; and no doubt but the ſpirit he was in, was much owing to his reading the word, and to the Spirit of God diſpoſing his mind in this manner: and he deſired Philip that he would come up and ſit with him; which is an inſtance of his great humanity and courteouſneſs, and of his meekneſs and condeſcenſion, as well as of his vehement thirſt after the knowledge of the ſcriptures; he concluding, or at leaſt hoping by Philip's queſtion, and by the air and look of the man, that he was one that might be uſeful to him this way.

Ver. 32. The place of the ſcripture which he read was this, &c.] Or the paragraph or ſection of ſcripture; that part of it in which he was reading was Iſ. liii. 7, 8. which ſhows, that by this time the ſcriptures were divided into ſections, chapters, and verſes; whereas the Jews ſay the whole law at firſt was but one verſe [t]. He was led as a ſheep to the ſlaughter, and like a lamb dumb before the ſhearer.

[n] Godignus de rebus Abyſſinis, p. 117. apud Caſtel. Lex. Polyglott. col. 4003. [o] Mariani Reatini Catalog. Reg. Æthiop. in De Dieu in loc. [p] Hiſt. Ethiop. l 3. c. 2. [q] In De Dieu in loc. [r] Mela, l. 1. p. 22. Alex. ab Alex. l. 2. c. 2. [s] Shirhaſhirim Rabba, fol. 13. 1. [t] Eliæ Levit. præfat. 3. ad Sepher Hammaſoreth.

The metaphors of ſheep and lamb expreſs the innocence, meekneſs, and patience of Chriſt in his ſufferings and death; and his being like theſe when led to the ſlaughter, and dumb before the ſhearer, ſhew his willingneſs to ſuffer and die for his people, and to become a ſacrifice for their ſins. The alluſion is to the ſheep led either by the butcher to the ſlaughter-houſe, or by the prieſt to the altar, and to the lamb of a year old being ſilent while it is ſhearing; and both denote the voluntarineſs of Chriſt in his ſufferings, the ſtripping him of his good name, credit, and reputation among men, and of all worldly ſubſtance, tho' Lord of all, and even of the common bleſſings of nature, as of meat, drink, and raiment, and the light of the ſun; and particularly the ſtripping him of his clothes, when his raiment was parted, and lots caſt on his veſture, is very aptly ſignified by the ſhearing of the lamb, all which he took very patiently; and his being led forth to be crucified, when he was offered up as a ſacrifice on the croſs, very fitly anſwers to the ſheep being led to the ſlaughter, without ſhewing any reluctance. It was a cuſtom with the Heathens to offer no creature in ſacrifice, that ſtruggled as it was led, or made an oppoſition, or ſhewed any reluctance: it is remarkable, that there was nothing of this kind to be obſerved in Chriſt, who gave himſelf an offering, and a ſacrifice; the reaſons of which were, becauſe of the great love he bore to his people; and becauſe of the good and advantage that would come to them thereby: he was content to be poor, that they might be rich; to be made ſin, that they might be made righteouſneſs; to be become a curſe, that the bleſſings of the covenant might come upon them; to be ſtripp'd of all things, that they might enjoy all: and becauſe no other ſacrifice could atone for their ſins; and becauſe it was his father's will, which always involves his own. So opened he not his mouth; in defence of himſelf, when ſuch falſe things were laid to his charge, and which he could have ſo eaſily refuted, and yet anſwered to nothing, to the aſtoniſhment of his judge: the reaſon was, becauſe he had the ſins of his people on him, for which he was willing to ſuffer; and therefore declined ſelf-vindication, leſt he ſhould hinder the judicial proceſs againſt him; nor did he open his mouth againſt his enemies by way of threatening or complaint, when they ſpat on him, blindfolded, and buffeted him, and bid him propheſy who ſmote him; and when the chief-prieſts, Scribes, the common people, and thieves mocked at him, and reviled him on the croſs, he opened not his lips unto them, nor againſt them, only for them, ſaying, father, forgive them; nor did he open his mouth againſt the juſtice of God, as bearing hard upon him; neither did he complain of the ſtrictneſs of its demands, abating him nothing; nor of the ſeverity and weight of its ſtrokes, not ſparing him at all; nor did he ſay one word againſt his people, whoſe ſins brought all his ſorrows and ſufferings on him, but made interceſſion for the tranſgreſſors, whoſe ſins he bore.

Ver. 33. In his humiliation his judgment was taken away, &c.] The humiliation, or low eſtate of Chriſt, lay in his aſſumption of human nature, with the weakneſſes and imperfections of it; in the meanneſs of his parentage and education; in the ſorrows he endured from his cradle to his croſs; in his laſt conflict with ſatan in the garden; in his being apprehended, bound, ſcourged, and condemned, both by the Sanhedrim, and the Roman governour; and in being encloſed with the aſſembly of the wicked ſoldiers, who put on him their own clothes, and a crown of thorns on his head, and a reed in his hand, and then in a mock manner bowed to him as king of the Jews; and laſt of all in his obedience to death, even the death of the croſs, and in his being laid in the grave. Now in this his low eſtate, his judgment was taken away; in the text in Iſ. liii. 8. the words are, he was taken from priſon and from judgment; which ſome underſtand of his ſufferings, and render the words thus, by an aſſembly, and by judgment he was taken away; that is, by the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, and by the judgment or ſentence of Pontius Pilate, his life was taken away: and others interpret it of his reſurrection from the dead, when he was taken or delivered from the priſon of the grave, and could not be held any longer by the cords and pains of death; and from the judgment or condemnation under which he lay, being juſtified in the Spirit, when he was raiſed from the dead. The words, as here cited, differ from the original text; which have cauſed ſome to think, that there was a different reading of theſe words, which the Septuagint followed, and Luke after them. Dr. Pocock[u] has propoſed a tranſlation of the Hebrew text, as agreeable to this citation, without ſuppoſing a various reading, thus, becauſe of affliction, even from judgment he is taken; or when he was humbled, he was taken from judgment; it being all one whether he was taken from judgment, condemnation, and puniſhment, as at his reſurrection, or whether his puniſhment was taken from him: tho' the ſenſe of the words, as they are here cited, rather ſeems to be this; when he was taken and bound by the Jews, and detained by them a priſoner, and arraigned before the high-prieſt, and at Pilate's bar, and falſe witneſſes ſuborned, which was his time of humiliation and affliction; when he was reproached, blaſphemed, buffeted, and ſpit upon, juſtice was not done him, right did not take place, but was removed from him, and he was treated in a moſt unjuſt and unrighteous manner: and who ſhall declare his generation; not his divine or human generation; nor the ſorrows of his life; or the duration of his life ſince his reſurrection; nor the numbers of his ſpiritual ſeed and offspring; ſenſes put upon the words they will by no means bear; but the generation or age in which Chriſt lived, which for its wickedneſs among themſelves, and their barbarity to him, and ill uſage of him, cannot be ſufficiently deſcribed and declared; and a great deal of it they themſelves own; ſee the notes on Matt. x. 36. and xii. 39. for his life is taken from the earth; not in a common, but in a judicial way; in the moſt cruel, barbarous, and unjuſt manner, in a violent way; though not without his Father's will, and his own conſent; and tho' his life was taken from the earth, he now lives in heaven, and that for evermore.

Ver. 34. And the eunuch anſwered Philip, and ſaid, &c.] After he had read the paſſage out, and Philip had put the queſtion to him, whether he underſtood it; and after he had taken him up into his chariot to ſit with him, and inſtruct him: I pray thee, of whom ſpeaketh the prophet this? being deſirous of knowing who was the ſubject of this famous prophecy; which to know was very uſeful and edifying, and was not a matter of mere indifference and ſpeculation, but of great moment and concern. A like way of ſpeaking, in order to know the ſenſe of a paſſage, is uſed by the Jews[w]: thus upon reading Prov. xxxi. 26. it is aſked, "of "whom does Solomon ſay this ſcripture? he does "not ſay it but of his father David." Does he ſpeak of himſelf, or of ſome other man? which is very properly and pertinently put; ſince there might be ſome appearance of its application to Iſaiah, who ſuffered under Manaſſeh; and it might be applied to different perſons, as it has been ſince by the Jews; as to Joſiah, Jeremiah in particular, and to the people of Iſrael in general, though very wrongly: Joſiah could never be intended, as one of their noted commentators[x] expounds the paragraph; ſince it was not the ſins of the people that were the cauſe of his death, but his own, and his vanity in meddling with what he had nothing to do with, and had no real call unto; nor can it be ſaid of him that he did no violence, or that he bore the ſins of others, and died for them, and made his ſoul an offering for ſin; nor were his days prolonged; nor did the pleaſure of the Lord proſper in his hand: nor is the paſſage applicable to Jeremiah, as another of their writers[y] would have it; he was not free from ſin; nor was he wounded for the ſins of his people; nor did he undergo his ſufferings with patience; nor had he a large number of diſciples; nor was he extolled and exalted, as this perſon is ſaid to be: much leſs, as others[z] ſay, is the whole body of the people of Iſrael in captivity intended; ſince one ſingle individual is ſpoken of throughout the whole; and is manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from the people of Iſrael, whoſe ſins and ſorrows he was to bear, and for whoſe tranſgreſſions he was to be ſtricken and wounded. In all which they go contrary to their Targum[a], Talmud[b], and other ancient writings[c], which interpret many things in this ſection or paragraph of the Meſſiah[d]: however, as it might be differently underſtood, or difficult to be underſtood, the eunuch very appoſitely puts this queſtion.

Ver. 35. Then Philip opened his mouth, &c.] With freedom and boldneſs, and ſpoke clearly and diſtinctly, and expounded the paſſage to him. This is a phraſe frequently uſed in Jewiſh writings, eſpecially in the book of Zohar[e], when they give an account of this, or the other Rabbi interpreting any place of ſcripture; as for inſtance, R. Eleazar, פתח, opened, and ſaid, my ſabbaths ye ſhall keep, &c. Again, R. Aba, פתח, opened, and ſaid, and Manoah ſaid unto his wife, &c. Once more, R. Simeon, opened, and ſaid, the heavens declare the glory of God, &c. and began at the ſame ſcripture; the fifty-third of Iſaiah: and preached unto him Jeſus of Nazareth; how that he was the true Meſſiah, and the perſon there deſigned, and that very rightly; for the Jews themſelves, the ancient ones, have interpreted ſeveral paſſages in that chapter of the Meſſiah, as has been before obſerved: he ſhowed him how that he was born of a virgin, made under the law, and yielded perfect obedience to it in his life; and that he ſuffered and died for the ſins of his people, and made ſatisfaction for them, and brought in an everlaſting righteouſneſs to juſtify them before God, and had obtained eternal redemption for them; that he was riſen from the dead, was aſcended into heaven, and now ſat at the right hand of God, and ever lived to make interceſſion for tranſgreſſors; and would come a ſecond time to judge both quick and dead; and in the mean while had left rules for the gathering, and forming, and governing his churches; and had appointed perſons to preach his Goſpel, and to adminiſter the ordinances of baptiſm, and the ſupper of the Lord, which were to continue till his ſecond coming.

Ver. 36. And as they went on their way, &c.] In the road from Jeruſalem to Gaza; Philip preaching, and the eunuch hearing, and converſing in a religious and ſpiritual way together; and Beza ſays in one exemplar, it is added, conferring one with another; about the perſon and office of Chriſt, the doctrines of the Goſpel, and the ordinances of it; as appears by what follows, both by the eunuch's requeſt to be admitted to baptiſm, and his confeſſion of faith: they came unto a certain water; which ſome ſay was at Bethſoron, in the tribe of Judah or Benjamin; and others think it was the river Eleutherus; the former is more likely; concerning which Jerom[f] gives this account: "Bethſur in the tribe "of Judah, or Benjamin, and now called Bethſoron, is a village as we go from Ælia (or Jeruſalem) to Hebron, twenty miles from it; near "which is a fountain, ſpringing up at the bottom "of a mountain, and is ſwallowed up in the ſame "ground in which it is produced; and the Acts "of the Apoſtles relate, that the eunuch of queen "Candace was baptized here by Philip." This place was about two miles from Hebron; ſince that, according to the ſame writer[g], was twenty-two miles from Jeruſalem. Borchardus[h] ſeems to place it further off from Hebron: "from Hebron are "three leucas, or ſix miles, northward, declining a "little to the weſt, to Nehel Eſcol, that is, the brook "of the cluſter, from whence the ſpies carried the "cluſter of grapes; to the left of this valley, for "the ſpace of a mile, or half a leuca, runs a river, "in which Philip baptized the eunuch of queen "Candace, not far from Sicelech." And, according to Jerom[i], Eſcol lay in the way from Bethſur to Hebron. This account of the hiſtorian ſets aſide that weak piece of criticiſm on ver. 38. uſed by ſome perſons; as if when Philip and the eunuch went down into the water, no more is meant, than that they went to the water-ſide, or deſcended to the bank and brink of the river; ſeeing, here it is ſaid, they came to a certain place of water; they came to the river itſelf, or the river-ſide, and after this went down into it. And the eunuch ſaid, ſee here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized? This queſtion ſhows, that he had ſome knowledge of the ordinance of baptiſm, which he had received from the miniſtry and converſation of Philip; and that he had ſome deſire after it, as regenerate perſons have, after divine things, after Chriſt, his word, and ordinances; and that he was willing to take the firſt opportunity of ſubmitting to it, but was jealous leſt he ſhould not be qualified for it; and therefore modeſtly propoſes the affair to Philip, and deſires to be examined and judged by him: and it alſo ſuggeſts, that there are ſome things which might be a juſt bar to this ordinance, as want of grace, and a diſorderly life and converſation, which were the hindrances to the Phariſees and Sadducees, who came to John's baptiſm; and theſe are ſufficient ones, even tho' perſons may be born in a chriſtian land, and of believing parents, and have had a good education; yea, though they may have much notional light and ſpeculative knowledge: but where the good work of grace is begun, and when a ſoul is ſpiritually enlightened, and has evangelical repentance for ſin, and true faith in Chriſt, and ſincere love to him, nothing ſhould hinder: not any thing on his ſide; not a ſenſe of his own unworthineſs, which will never be otherwiſe, but rather increaſe; nor the corruptions of his heart and nature, which will always remain, as long as he is in the body; nor fears of falling away, ſince there can't be more danger after baptiſm than before, and Chriſt is the ſame who is always able to keep from it; nor the reproaches of the world, which ſhould be eſteemed above riches; and more eſpecially, ſince to be aſhamed of Chriſt, his word, or ordinances, is highly reſented by him; nor the oppoſition of relations and friends, who, though they are to be regarded and liſtened to in civil matters, yet ſhould have no ſway in religious ones to move from the cauſe of Chriſt; nor any difficulty in the ordinance itſelf, ſince it is but water-baptiſm, and not a bloody one, ſuch as Chriſt was baptized with, and ſome of his followers have been called unto: nor ſhould any thing hinder on the ſide of the adminiſtrator, when the above is the caſe; as not being circumciſed, but Gentiles, as in the times of the Apoſtles, Acts x. 47. ſo not the former life and converſation of the perſon, tho' it has been ever ſo wicked, as the inſtances of the crucifiers of Chriſt, of the jailor, of Saul the perſecutor, and many of the Corinthians ſhew; nor the weakneſs of grace; the day of ſmall things is not to be deſpiſed, nor a bruiſed reed to be broken, or ſmoking flax to be quenched: agreeable to this the Ethiopic verſion renders it, who doth hinder, &c.

Ver. 37. And Philip ſaid, if thou believeſt with all thine heart thou mayeſt, &c.] Intimating, that if he did not believe, he had no right to that ordinance; though he was a proſelyte to the Jewiſh religion, a ſerious and devout man, and was employed in a religious way, when Philip came up to him, and was very deſirous of being inſtructed in the knowledge of divine things; and yet notwithſtanding all this, he had no right to the ordinance of baptiſm, unleſs he had faith in Chriſt, and made a profeſſion of it; nor would Philip adminiſter it to him without it; from whence it appears, that faith in Chriſt, and a profeſſion of it, are neceſſary prerequiſites to baptiſm: and this faith ſhould not be a mere hiſtorical and temporary faith, nor a feigned one, but a believing in Chriſt with the heart unto righteouſneſs; or ſuch a faith by which a ſoul relinquiſhes its own righteouſneſs, and looks and goes unto Chriſt for righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation, and reſts and relies upon him for them; and it ſhould be a believing in him with the whole heart, which does not deſign a ſtrong faith, or a full aſſurance of faith, but an hearty, ſincere, and unfeigned one, tho' it may be but weak, and very imperfect. And that this is neceſſary to baptiſm is manifeſt, becauſe without this it is impoſſible to pleaſe God; nor can ſubmiſſion and obedience to it be acceptable to him: nor indeed can the ordinance be grateful and pleaſing to unbelievers; for though it is a command that is not grievous, and a yoke that is eaſy, yet it is only ſo to them that believe; nor can any other ſee to the end of this ordinance, or behold the ſufferings, burial, and reſurrection of Chriſt repreſented by it, or be baptized into his death, and partake of the benefits of it; and beſides, whatſoever is not of faith is ſin. And he anſwered and ſaid, I believe that Jeſus Chriſt is the Son of God; which tho' a ſhort, is a very comprehenſive ſummary of the articles of faith reſpecting the perſon, offices, and grace of Chriſt; as that he is a divine perſon, truly and properly God, the only-begotten of the Father, of the ſame nature with him, and equal to him; that he exiſted from all eternity, as a divine perſon with him, and diſtinct from him; and that he is the Chriſt, the anointed of God, to be prophet, prieſt, and king; and is Jeſus, the only Saviour of loſt ſinners, in whom he truſted and depended alone for righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation. This whole verſe is wanting in the Alexandrian copy, and in five of Beza's copies, and in the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions; but ſtands in the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions, and in the Complutenſian edition; and, as Beza obſerves, ought by no means to be expunged, ſince it contains ſo clear a confeſſion of faith required of perſons to be baptized, which was uſed in the truly apoſtolic times.

Ver. 38. And he commanded the chariot to ſtand ſtill, &c.] That is, the eunuch ordered his chariot-driver to ſtop; for to him it better agrees to give this order than to Philip; tho' otherwiſe the words are ſo placed, that it would be difficult to ſay who gave the command. And they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch, and he baptized him: upon which Calvin has this note; "hence we ſee what was the manner of baptizing "with the ancients, for they plunged the whole "body into water." And indeed, if any other mode had been practiſed then, as ſprinkling or pouring of water, there would have been no neceſſity of their going out of the chariot, and much leſs of their going down into the water; and as for change of apparel, it cannot be reaſonably thought that ſo great a man ſhould take ſo long a journey without it. In like manner the Jewiſh ablutions and purifications, which were performed by immerſion, and therefore called baptiſms, Heb. ix. 10. are ſpoken of in the ſame ſort of language as here: ſo a profluvious perſon, and a woman that had lain in, were obliged, שירדה לטבול, to go down and dip [k]. "It is a tradition of the Rabbins [l], that he "that ſees any nocturnal pollution on the day of "atonement; יורד וטובל, goes down and dips him"ſelf.——And ſo all that are obliged to dipping, "dip according to their cuſtom on the day of "atonement; the profluvious perſon, man or wo"man, the leprous perſon, man or woman, the "huſband of a menſtruous woman, and one de"filed with the dead, dip according to their cuſtom "on the day of atonement."

Ver. 39. And when they were come up out of the water, &c.] Which is another circumſtance, ſhewing, that baptiſm was then performed by immerſion; with this compare Matt. iii. 16. and ſo it is ſaid of the high-prieſt, when he waſhed himſelf on the day of atonement, ירד וטבל עלה, he went down and dipped, and came up [m]; and ſo any other perſon that was obliged to dipping on any account, ירד וטבל ועלה, went down and dipped, and came up [n]. And again it is ſaid [o], it happened to a ſervant-maid of Rabbi, שטבלה ועלתה, that ſhe dipped herſelf and came up. The Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip; as ſoon as the ordinance was over; ſo that the eunuch had no opportunity of rewarding him for his inſtructions and labour; and this might be done on purpoſe to ſhow, that he had no mercenary end in joining himſelf to his chariot; and this ſudden rapture and diſappearance might be a confirmation to the eunuch, that this whole affair was of God. The Spirit of the Lord took up Philip, juſt as he is ſaid to lift up Ezekiel between earth and heaven, Ezek. viii. 3. and carried him above the earth as far as Azotus. The Alexandrian copy, and one of Beza's, and ſome others, read the words thus, the holy Spirit fell upon the eunuch, but the angel of the Lord caught away Philip; the ſame angel, it may be, that bid him go toward the ſouth: that the eunuch ſaw him no more; neither at that time, nor perhaps ever after; for one went one way, and another another way: and he went on his way; towards Ethiopia; and, as the Ethiopic verſion reads, into his own country; which is one reaſon why he ſaw Philip no more: however, he went thither rejoicing, as he had great reaſon to do; being bleſſed with the ſaving knowledge of Chriſt, and true faith in the Son of God, and admitted to the holy ordinance of baptiſm; having firſt received the baptiſm of the Spirit, or having the grace of the Spirit beſtowed on him, and implanted in him: and, according to ſome copies juſt now mentioned, after his baptiſm the Spirit fell on him in an extraordinary manner, and that without impoſition of hands; ſo that, upon the whole, he had great reaſon to rejoice.

Ver. 40. But Philip was found at Azotus, &c.] The ſame with the Aſhdod of the Philiſtines, famous for the temple of Dagon, 1 Sam. v. 1. where the Septuagint call it Azotus, as here: and ſo it is called in 1 Maccab. iv. 15. and x. 77, 84. and xi. 4. where mention is made of Beth Dagon, and the idols temple in it; and by Herodotus [p], Pliny [q], and Ptolomy [r]; and it is now called Palmis, according to R. Benjamin [s]; it was about fifty-four miles from Jeruſalem, and two hundred and ſeventy furlongs, or four and thirty miles [t] from Gaza: and paſſing through; or, as he paſſed along through that and other places: he preached in all the cities; that lay in his way; which ſhews his zeal and diligence: till he came to Ceſarea; not Ceſarea Philippi, Matt. xvi. 13. but that which was before called Strato's tower, and was rebuilt by Herod, and called Ceſarea, in honour of Auguſtus Cæſar [u]; and not by Cæſar himſelf, as R. Benjamin ſays [w]: it was ſix hundred furlongs, or ſeventy-five miles from Jeruſalem [x]. This place was famous for Jewiſh Rabbins, and their ſchools of learning; frequent mention is made of רבנן דקיסרין, the Rabbins of Ceſarea [y]: here Philip ſeems to have ſtopped, and ſtaid a while.

CHAP. IX.

Ver. 1. AND Saul yet breathing out threatnings and ſlaughter, &c.] The hiſtorian having given an account of the diſperſion of all the preachers of the Goſpel at Jeruſalem, excepting the Apoſtles, and of their ſucceſs in other parts, eſpecially of Philip's, returns to the hiſtory of Saul; who, not ſatisfied with the murder of Stephen, and with the havock he made of the church at Jeruſalem, haling them out of their houſes to priſon, continued not only to threaten them with confiſcation of goods and impriſonment, but with death itſelf. The phraſe here uſed, is an Hebraiſm; ſo in Pſ. xxvii. 12. יפח חמס, one that breathes out violence, or cruelty; and this ſhews the inward diſpoſition of his mind, the rage, wrath, malice, envy, and blood-thirſtineſs he was full of; and is obſerved to illuſtrate the riches of divine grace in his converſion. And wonderful it is, that that ſame mouth which breathed out deſtruction and death to the followers of Chriſt, ſhould afterwards publiſh and proclaim the Goſpel of the grace of God; that he whoſe mouth was full of curſing and bitterneſs, ſhould hereafter, and ſo very quickly, come forth in the fulneſs of the bleſſing of the Goſpel of Chriſt. And this rage of his, who now ravined as a wolf, as was foretold of Benjamin, of which tribe he was, was againſt the lambs of Chriſt, and the ſheep of his fold: againſt the diſciples of the Lord; not againſt wicked men, murderers, and thieves, and other evil doers, but againſt the harmleſs and innocent followers of Jeſus, and which was an aggravation of his cruelty: and being thus heated, and full of wrath, he went unto the high-prieſt; Annas or Caiaphas, who, notwithſtanding the Jews, were under the Roman government, had great authority to puniſh perſons with ſtripes and death itſelf, who acted contrary to their law.

Ver. 2. And deſired of him letters to Damaſcus, &c.] Damaſcus was the head or metropolis of Syria, Iſ. vii. 8. And ſo Pliny [z] calls it Damaſcus of Syria: it was a very ancient city; it was in the times of Abraham; his ſervant Eliezer is ſaid to be of it, Gen. xv. 2. and ſome ſay it was built by him the ſaid Eliezer; though Joſephus [a] makes Uz, a grandſon of Shem, to be the founder of it; whoſe ſurname is conjectured, by ſome, to be Dimſhak, ſeeing that and Uz differ not in ſenſe: and Juſtin ſays [b], it had its name from Damaſcus, the king of it, in honour of whom the Syrians made a temple of the ſepulchre of his wife Arathis, and her a goddeſs; after Damaſcus, he ſays, Azelus, then Azores, Abraham, and Iſrael were kings of it. Some think it has its name from blood, and that it ſignifies a ſack or bag, or, as Jerom explains, a cup of blood [c], or one that drinks blood; who ſays, it is a true tradition, that the field in which Abel was killed by Cain, was in Damaſcus [d]: but it ſeems rather to be ſo called from the redneſs of the earth about it; for ſome very good writers affirm, that the earth in the fields of Damaſcus is like wax tinged with red lead; ſo if it be read Dammeſek, as it commonly is, in the Arabic language, Damma ſignifies to tinge, and Meſhko is uſed for red earth; or if Dummeſek, as it is in 2 Kings xvi. 20. Daumo, in the ſame language, is permanent, what always abides, and Meſhko, as before, red earth, and ſo Dummeſek is never-failing red earth; or if it be Darmeſek, as in 1 Chron. viii. 5, 6. the ſame with Darmſuk, it may be obſerved, that the Syrians call red earth Doro ſumoko: ſo that, upon the whole, this ſeems to be the beſt etymology of the word [e], and the riſe of the name of this famous city, which Juſtin calls the moſt noble city of Syria. It is ſaid [f] to be an hundred and ſixty miles from Jeruſalem. Here might be many Chriſtians before, and others might flee hither upon this perſecution; and Saul, not content with driving them from their native place, perſecuted them, as he himſelf ſays, to ſtrange cities: and that he might do this with ſafety to himſelf, and with the greater force and cruelty to them, he got letters from the high-prieſt, and Sanhedrim, at Jeruſalem; either recommending him to the Jews at Damaſcus, and exhorting them to aſſiſt him in what he came about; or empowering him to act under his authority, or both: and theſe were directed to be delivered to the ſynagogues; to the rulers of them; for the Jews being numerous in this place, they had more ſynagogues than one. Joſephus ſays [g], that under Nero the inhabitants of Damaſcus killed ten thouſand Jews in their own city: and Benjamin Tudelenſis [h] in his time ſays, there were about three thouſand Jews, (Phariſees) beſides two hundred Karaites, (or ſcripturarians) and four hundred Samaritans, who lived in peace together. Now to theſe ſynagogues, and the chief men of them, was Saul recommended for aſſiſtance and direction, that if he found any of this way; of thinking; that were of this ſect of religion, and either profeſſed to believe, or preach, that Jeſus of Nazareth was the Meſſiah: whether they were men or women; without any fear of one, or mercy to the other: he might bring them bound to Jeruſalem; to be examined and puniſhed by the Sanhedrim there, as they ſhould think fit; and for this purpoſe he muſt take with him a conſiderable number of men; and that he had men with him is certain from ver. 7.

Ver. 3. And as he journeyed, he came near Damaſcus, &c.] Some ſay it was a mile from Damaſcus: tho' no mention is made of his obtaining letters from the high-prieſt, only of his deſiring them; yet there is no doubt but they were granted him; the deſign of the hiſtorian under a divine direction, being to give an account of the temper and diſpoſition of Saul; and he having got them, ſet out on his journey in high ſpirits, and proceeded on with the ſame wicked intentions, till he came near the city; where he deſigned to open and ſhow his commiſſion, and execute his wrathful purpoſes; but he is not ſuffered to go into the city with ſuch a ſpirit: and ſuddenly there ſhined round about him a light from heaven; which exceeded the light and brightneſs of the ſun, for it was at mid-day, Acts xxvi. 13. and ſo the Ethiopic verſion here inſerts this clauſe, and it was noon time; which circumſtance ſhows that the light was very extraordinary; and it was an emblem of that inward and ſpiritual light which was now quickly communicated to him, light being the firſt thing in the new, as in the old creation; and of that Goſpel-light he was hereafter to ſpread in the world.

Ver. 4. And he fell to the earth, &c.] Not being able to bear the light, and ſtill leſs the divine glory and majeſty which he perceived was preſent; and therefore in great confuſion, amazement, and fear, he fell with his face to the ground, and lay there proſtrate; and ſo did alſo thoſe that were with him, Acts xxvi. 14. and heard a voice, ſaying unto him, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? this voice was the real voice of Chriſt in his human nature, and who viſibly and in perſon appeared, and was ſeen by the apoſtle; ſee Acts xxvi. 16. 1 Cor. xv. 8. the language he ſpoke in was the Hebrew tongue, and he calls him by his Hebrew name Saul, and which is doubled to denote vehemency and affection; ſee the note on Luke xxii. 31. he knew him as one of his ſheep, tho' ſtraying, and calls him by name, and expoſtulates with him, wherefore he ſhould perſecute him in his members as he did; for the union between Chriſt and his people is ſo cloſe, that what is done to them is done to him. There ſeems to be a conſiderable emphaſis on the word me; me, who have been thy ſurety from everlaſting; me, who am thy ſaviour in time; me, who hath loved thee and given myſelf for thee; me, who have ſhed my blood, laid down my life, and died for thee; me, who am now at my Father's right hand, interceding for thee, that grace might be beſtowed upon thee, the ſet time being now come.

Ver. 5. And he ſaid, who art thou, Lord, &c.] For he knew not whether it was God, or an angel, or who it was that ſpake to him; he knew not Chriſt by his form or voice, as Stephen did, when he ſaw him ſtanding at the right hand of God; he was in a ſtate of ignorance, and knew neither the perſon, nor voice of Chriſt, and yet his heart was ſo far ſoftened and wrought upon, that he was deſirous of knowing who he was; and the Lord ſaid, I am Jeſus whom thou perſecuteſt. The Alexandrian copy, and the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions, read Jeſus of Nazareth; and one of Beza's copies, and another of Stephens, as in chap. xxii. 8. whoſe name thou art doing many things againſt, and whoſe people thou art deſtroying: it is hard for thee to kick againſt the pricks; or to reſiſt me, as the Arabic verſion renders it; and which is the ſenſe of the phraſe; it is a proverbial expreſſion, taken from beaſts that are goaded, who kick againſt the goads or pricks, and hurt themſelves the more thereby; and Chriſt uſes it, ſuggeſting hereby, that ſhould Saul go on to perſecute him and his people, to oppoſe his Goſpel, and the ſtrong evidence of it, in doctrine and miracles, and notwithſtanding the preſent remonſtrances made in ſuch an extraordinary manner; he would find himſelf in the iſſue greatly hurt by it, and could not rationally expect to ſucceed againſt ſo powerful a perſon. This clauſe in the Syriac verſion is placed at the end of the fourth verſe.

Ver. 6. And he trembling and aſtoniſhed, &c.] At the light and voice, and appearance of Chriſt, and eſpecially at the words laſt ſpoken; he was now pricked to the heart, and filled with a ſenſe of ſin, and loaded with guilt, and had dreadful apprehenſions of his ſtate and condition, on account of his paſt wickedneſs, and the preſent courſe of ſin he was in: ſo perſons under firſt convictions tremble at the ſight of their ſins, which riſe up like ſo many ghoſts, and ſtare them in the face, and load their conſciences with guilt; at the ſwarms of corruptions they ſee in their hearts, which appear to them an habitation of devils, a hold of every foul ſpirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird; at the curſes of a righteous law which threatens with damnation and death; at the future judgment, and the apprehenſions of divine wrath; and at the voice and word of God, which ſtrikes terror, cuts them to the heart, and like an hammer breaks the rock in pieces: and they are aſtoniſhed at their own wickedneſs and vileneſs, which they had no conception of before; at the ſparing mercy and forbearance of God, who has continued them in being, and not ſent them to hell, to be among devils and damned ſpirits; at the light around them, by which they ſee their ſins, the plague of their own hearts, the inſufficiency of their own righteouſneſs, their loſt ſtate by nature, and need of ſalvation by Chriſt; and at the doctrines of the Goſpel, ſo far as they have light into them; and at the perſon of Chriſt, and at his father's love and his in procuring ſalvation for them: ſaid, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? ſignifying he was willing to do any thing he ſhould direct him to, whereby he might make ſatisfaction for the injury he had done him, and by which he might be ſaved; for he was ſtill upon the covenant of works, as perſons under firſt convictions commonly are: and the Lord ſaid unto him; this, with all that goes before in this verſe, is wanting in the Alexandrian copy, and Syriac verſion: ariſe and go into the city; that is, of Damaſcus, as the Ethiopic verſion reads: and it ſhall be told thee what thou muſt do; what was appointed for him to do, ch. xxii. 10. and there it was told him both what he ſhould do and ſuffer for Chriſt, but not to obtain ſalvation; and this was done internally by the Spirit of God, who inſtructed him in the doctrines and ordinances of the Goſpel, and externally by Ananias: in two of Beza's copies, and in the Syriac verſion it is read, there ſhall it be told thee, &c.

Ver. 7. And the men which journeyed with him, &c.] Out of reſpect to him, to keep him company; or rather to aſſiſt him in his deſigns: ſtood ſpeechleſs; aſtoniſhed and amazed, they had not power to ſpeak one word, nor to riſe from the ground, and move one ſtep forward; they were as if they were thunderſtruck and faſtened to the earth; for this ſtanding is not oppoſed to their being fallen to the earth, but to their going forward, and only expreſſes the ſurprize and ſtupidity that had ſeized them: hearing a voice, but ſeeing no man; that is, they heard the voice of Saul, ſaying, who art thou? and what wilt thou have me to do? but ſaw nobody that he ſpoke to, which ſurprized them; for it is certain they did not hear the voice of Chriſt, that ſpake to him, chap. xxii. 9. or if they heard the voice of Chriſt, it was only the ſound of his voice, but did not underſtand what he ſaid; but the former ſeems rather to be the ſenſe, and the beſt way of reconciling the two paſſages.

Ver. 8. And Saul aroſe from the earth, &c.] As he was bid by Chriſt, ver. 6. and when his eyes were opened, he ſaw no man; neither Chriſt, who appeared to him from heaven, whom he had before ſeen, nor even any of his companions, nor indeed any object; the Syriac verſion renders it, he ſaw nothing; not any thing at all; and the Ethiopic verſion, he could not ſee; when he opened his eyelids, he perceived his ſight was gone, and this ſhewed it to be real blindneſs; and which was an emblem of the ignorance and blindneſs he had been in: but they led him by the hand; the men that were with him, perceiving that he could not guide himſelf, took him by the hand, and led him on his journey: and brought him into Damaſcus; and now was fulfilled, at leaſt in part, the prophecy in Zech. ix. 1.

Ver. 9. And he was three days without ſight, &c.] Without bodily ſight; for otherwiſe all this while his ſpiritual ſight was increaſing, and Chriſt was giving him by his Spirit a full view of himſelf, his ſtate and caſe, and where his ſalvation was; and a clear inſight into the doctrines of the Goſpel, which he is ſaid to have by the revelation of Chriſt, whereby he was fitted for the immediate preaching of it: and neither did eat nor drink; having no regard unto, or time for either; being filled with grief and ſorrow, and true repentance for ſin, and taken up in prayer to God, and employed in attending to, and receiving the doctrines of grace, he was afterwards to publiſh.

Ver. 10. And there was a certain diſciple at Damaſcus, &c.] Who perhaps came hither upon the perſecution at Jeruſalem, or rather might have lived here ſome time; ſee ver. 13. that he was more than a private or ordinary diſciple of Chriſt ſeems manifeſt, from his being ſent to Saul on ſuch an important affair; from his putting his hands upon him, upon which he was filled with the Holy Ghoſt; and from his baptizing him: ſome think he was one of the ſeventy diſciples; ſome ſay he was a deacon; but it is certain he was not one of the firſt ſeven: others affirm he was a preſbyter, and ſome report that he was afterwards biſhop of Damaſcus, and died a martyr there; but theſe are things not to be depended on: named Ananias; a Jewiſh name, the ſame with Hananiah, Dan. i. 6. there was an high-prieſt of this name, Acts xxiii. 2. and it was a name in much uſe among the Jews; frequent mention is made in the Miſnic and Talmudic writings of R. Hananiah, or Ananias: and to him ſaid the Lord in a viſion, Ananias; by the Lord, is meant the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as is evident from ver. 17. who appeared to Ananias in a viſion; the Arabic verſion adds, by night; perhaps in a dream, as the angel of the Lord appeared to Joſeph the huſband of Mary, and called him by his name Ananias, to which he anſwered: and he ſaid, behold, I am here, Lord; in like manner as Samuel did, when a child, when the Lord called to him; ſhewing his readineſs to hearken to his voice, to do his will, and obey his orders, be they what they would.

Ver. 11. And the Lord ſaid unto him ariſe, &c.] Quickly, directly, immediately, from off thy bed; the caſe required haſte and diſpatch: and go into the ſtreet which is called Straight; a ſtreet in the city of Damaſcus ſo called; the ſtreets of cities were called by different names, to diſtinguiſh them, as ours now are. So in Jeruſalem there was the ſtreet of the houſe of God, which led to the temple, Ezra x. 9. and the upper ſtreet, in which idolatrous Gentiles, and ſuch as were fullers by trade dwelt [i]; and the ſtreet of the butchers; and the ſtreet of the wool-ſtaplers [k]: and this ſtreet in Damaſcus might be called Straight; becauſe it might be a long ſtraight ſtreet without any windings and turnings, which might go thro' the city. Whether or no this was one of the ſtreets which Benhadad allowed Ahab to make in Damaſcus, 1 Kings xx. 34. cannot be ſaid: and enquire in the houſe of Judas; which was in that ſtreet: who this Judas was is not certain, that he was a Jew appears by his name, but whether a believing, or an unbelieving Jew, is not known; however, he was Saul's hoſt, and if this was the houſe he was recommended to from Jeruſalem, or deſigned to go to when he ſet out from thence, it is very probable he was an unbeliever; but if it was an houſe he pitched on after his converſion, it is likely this Judas was a believer, and whether the ſame with Judas ſirnamed Barſabas may be conſidered, who is mentioned in Acts xv. 22, 32. however, at this man's houſe Ananias was to enquire, for one called Saul of Tarſus; or Saul by name the Tarſian. So it is ſaid [l] of Bigthan and Tereſh, Eſth. vi. 2. that they were שני טרסיים, two Tarſians, perhaps citizens of Tarſus, as Saul was. Tarſus was a city in Cilicia, and which Solinus [m] calls the mother of cities, and is the ſame with the Tarſhiſh of the Old Teſtament; here Saul was born, and of it he was a citizen; ſee Acts xxi. 39. and xxii. 3. and therefore is here called Saul of Tarſus, or Saul the Tarſian: for behold he prayeth: ſo as he had never prayed before; now he prayed with the Spirit, and with the underſtanding, from a feeling ſenſe of his wants, for ſpiritual bleſſings, ſuch as he had no knowledge of, nor deſire after before. God has no ſtill-born children; as ſoon as any are quickned by his grace, they cry unto him; prayer is the breath of a regenerate man, and ſhews him to be alive. He who before was breathing out threatenings and ſlaughter againſt the diſciples of Chriſt, now breathes after communion with Chriſt and them. This is ſaid, no doubt, to encourage Ananias to go to him. The Syriac and Arabic verſions place this clauſe at the beginning of the next verſe, for behold, whilſt he prayed he ſaw, &c. the Ethiopic verſion has it not.

Ver. 12. And hath ſeen in a viſion a man named Ananias, &c.] Some read this verſe in a parentheſis, and take them to be the words of Luke the hiſtorian; but it is rather a continuation of the words of Chriſt, telling Ananias, for his greater encouragement to go to Saul, that he had ſeen him in a viſion, and had knowledge both of his perſon, and of his name, and of what he was to do to him; for in the viſion, or dream, he had been repreſented to him as coming in; to the houſe, and into the room where he was: and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his ſight; without which he had been three days, and which he did receive upon Ananias's putting his hands on him.

Ver. 13. Then Ananias anſwered, Lord, &c.] Tho' Ananias knew that it was the Lord that ſpoke, and acknowledged his power and dominion, and expreſſed his readineſs to obey his commands; yet there was a timidity in him, and which was the more inexcuſable, that it ſhould appear after the Lord had told him of the viſion which Saul had had of him; and yet ſtill he was fearful of putting himſelf into his hands, who had been ſo violent a perſecutor; and therefore obliquely excuſes himſelf, by obſerving what Saul had done at Jeruſalem, and the powers he came with to Damaſcus: I have heard by many of this man; which ſhows that Ananias had been at Damaſcus ſome time, and was not an eye-witneſs of the havock Saul made of the church, only had the account of it from others; and theſe many who fled to Damaſcus upon the perſecution, which Saul was at the head of; and being ſo, was particularly ſpoken of, and his name was well known, and was become infamous for his cruelty and barbarity: how much evil he hath done to thy ſaints at Jeruſalem; by entering into their houſes with violence, haling men and women from thence, committing them to priſon, and perſecuting them unto death. Believers in Chriſt are called his ſaints, becauſe ſeparated by his grace for his ſervice, and ſanctified by his Spirit, and to whom he is made ſanctification; and becauſe they live holy lives and converſations; all which is an aggravation of the evil done them, and which will be avenged by Chriſt in his own time.

Ver. 14. And here he hath authori[illegible]rom the chief-prieſts, &c.] His fury and madneſs againſt the ſaints did not ſtop at Jeruſalem, but he had received a commiſſion from the Sanhedrim to go to Damaſcus, where he now was: to bind all that call on thy name; to take up all ſuch perſons, and put them in bonds, and carry them bound to Jeruſalem, whom he ſhould find either praying to Chriſt, as to God, as the firſt Chriſtians uſed to do, and which is no inconſiderable proof of the deity of Chriſt; or profeſſing the name of Chriſt, or were called by it.

Ver. 15. But the Lord ſaid unto him, go thy way, &c.] The Syriac verſion reads, ariſe, go thy way; make no delay, nor any excuſe, there is no reaſon for it; nothing is to be feared from him: for he is a choſen veſſel unto me; a choice and excellent one, full of the heavenly treaſure of the Goſpel, full of the gifts and graces of the Spirit, and ſo very fit and richly qualified for the uſe and ſervice of Chriſt; and was כלי חמדתה, a veſſel of deſire, or a deſirable one, as the Jews ſpeak[n]: or he was, to render the words literally, a veſſel of election; both an inſtrument of gathering in the election, or the elect of God, thro' the preaching of the Goſpel; and was himſelf choſen of God, both to grace and glory, a veſſel of mercy, and of honour prepared for glory; and was ſeparated, predeſtinated, and appointed to the Goſpel of God, to preach it among the Gentiles; which ſenſe is confirmed by what follows: to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Iſrael; by the name of Chriſt is meant his Goſpel, which is a declaration of his perſon, perfections, glories, and excellencies, of his offices, grace, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation; and to bear it, is to preach it, to carry it about, ſpread abroad, and propagate it; in alluſion either to the prophets of old, whoſe propheſies are often called a burden, which they bore and carried to the ſeveral nations to whom they were ſent; or to the Levites bearing the tabernacle of the Lord, and its veſſels, be ye clean that bear the veſſels of the Lord, Iſ. lii. 11. Upon which Aben Ezra has this note, "they are the Iſraelites, נושאי התורה, that bear "the law;" but Saul was a choſen veſſel to bear the Goſpel; or to the ſower of ſeed, Pſ. cxxvi. 6. before the Gentiles, or nations of the world; and he was an Apoſtle, and teacher of the Gentiles in faith and verity; the Goſpel of the uncircumciſion was particularly committed to him: and before kings, as he did before Agrippa, king of the Jews, and before Nero, emperor of Rome; and his bonds for the Goſpel, and ſo the Goſpel thro' his bonds became manifeſt in all the palace, or court of Cæſar. And before the children of Iſrael; the Jews, to whom he firſt preached it; but when they put it away he turned to the Gentiles, and afterwards, before the Jews, he bore a teſtimony for it.

Ver. 16. For I will ſhew him, &c.] In viſion, and by prophecy, either now, or hereafter; or by facts, as they come upon him: how great things he muſt ſuffer for my name's ſake; ſuch as wearineſs, pain, and watchings, hunger, thirſt, faſtings, cold, and nakedneſs, perils on various accounts, and from different quarters, ſtripes, ſcourges, impriſonment, ſhipwreck, ſtoning, and death, of which he himſelf gives a detail, 2 Cor. xi. 23—28. ſo that Ananias had no reaſon to be afraid to go to him, and converſe with him, and do unto him as he was directed.

Ver. 17. And Ananias went his way, &c.] He aroſe from off his bed or ſeat, where he was, went out of his houſe, and on the way to the place where Saul was; he had nothing more to ſay, his objections were anſwered; there was no room to excuſe himſelf, nor did he now deſire it, but quietly yields, and cheerfully obeys: and entered into the houſe; or that houſe, the houſe of Judas, where Saul was, and whither Ananias was directed, ver. 11. and putting his hands on him; on Saul, in the ſame form Saul had ſeen him, in viſion, doing it: and which was done, either as a prayer-geſture; or for the healing of him, the reſtoring him to his ſight; or that he might receive the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt; and it may be on all theſe accounts: and ſaid, brother Saul; he calls him brother, not becauſe he was of the ſame nation, but becauſe he was now of the ſame faith; becauſe he was a regenerate perſon, and belonged to the family of God, and was of the ſame houſhold of faith: and this he ſaid, not upon what he had received from Saul's own mouth, for he addreſſed him in this manner as ſoon as he came to him; but upon what the Lord had ſaid concerning him; tho' it was indeed common with the Jewiſh doctors to ſalute one another with this name. "When R. "Joſe ben Kiſma was ſick, R. Chanina ben Tradion "went to viſit him; he ſaid unto him, Chanina, "אחי אחי, my brother, my brother, &c.[o]" So Shemaiah called Abtalion his brother[p]. And in like manner R. Eleazar ben Azariah ſaluted R. Iſhmael[q]. And R. Joſhua ſpeaks of R. Tarphon in the ſame language[r]: the Lord, even Jeſus that appeared unto thee in the way as thou cameſt; that is, who appeared to Saul as he was in the way to Damaſcus; not that Jeſus was in the way, for he was in heaven, and appeared from thence to Saul, who was in the way: and he mentions Jeſus by name, and this appearance of his, partly to aſſure him of his miſſion from him; for otherwiſe he could have known nothing of his appearance to him; and partly to ſhew the love of Chriſt to him, that tho' he had perſecuted him in ſo violent a manner, he had a compaſſionate regard for him; as alſo to encourage and comfort him, who had been trembling, and aſtoniſhed at what he had heard from Jeſus. This ſame glorious perſon, adds he, hath ſent me, that thou mighteſt receive thy ſight; his bodily ſight, which he had been without three days, by the impoſition of hands: and be filled with the Holy Ghoſt; with the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, ſuch as ſpeaking with divers tongues, healing diſeaſes, and the like; for as for the graces of the Spirit, and even Goſpel-light and knowledge, and gifts for preaching it, he had received theſe already.

Ver. 18. And immediately there fell from his eyes, as it had been ſcales, &c.] Which were little thin ſkins or films, like the ſcales of fiſhes, which were formed from the defluxions that fell from his brain, thro' the exceſſive light that ſhone around him, and the ſurprize he was thrown into by it: theſe, as ſoon as Ananias put his hands upon him, dropped off; which were an emblem and repreſentation of the ſcales of ignorance, of himſelf, of ſin, of righteouſneſs, of the law, of the Goſpel, and of Jeſus as the Meſſiah; and of unbelief in him, and of pride, malice, and envy, and of ſuperſtition and bigotry, and of error and falſe doctrine, which, upon his being enlightned by the Spirit of God, fell from him: and he received ſight forthwith; his corporal ſight, which was an emblem of that ſpiritual ſight he had alſo received: the word forthwith, or immediately, is not in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, but ſeems neceſſary; and indeed, if it was not expreſſed, it would be underſtood; for as ſoon as the ſcales fell from his eyes, he muſt receive his ſight: the Ethiopic verſion places it after the word baptized, in the next clauſe: and aroſe, and was baptized; that is, after Ananias had pointed it to him, as his duty, had preſſed him to it, and called upon him to ſubmit to it without delay, Acts xxii. 16. And this ſhows that baptiſm was performed by immerſion; for had it been done in any other way, either by pouring or ſprinkling a little water, Saul might have kept his ſeat, and water might have been brought to him, and ſo the ordinance might have been performed; but he aroſe and went, either to a bath that might be in Judas's houſe, fit for ſuch a purpoſe; for the Jews had their baths to bathe their whole bodies in on certain occaſions; or he went to ſome certain place of water without doors, convenient for the adminiſtration of baptiſm, where it was adminiſtred by Ananias unto him. And this alſo may ſuggeſt to us, that only enlightened perſons are the proper ſubjects of this ordinance; ſuch who have the ſcales of darkneſs, ignorance, and unbelief removed from them, and have a ſpiritual ſight and ſenſe of divine things: hence the ancients uſed to call baptiſm by the name of φωτισμος, illumination, and baptized perſons enlightened ones.

Ver. 19. And when he had received meat, &c.] Which was ſet before him when he had received his ſight, and after he was baptized, of which he had not taſted for three days: he was ſtrengthened; in body, being before very weak and feeble; not ſo much through fatigue of his journey, as through the fear and ſurprize, the appearance of Chriſt to him, and his words threw him into; as alſo thro' his faſting ſo long, and his continuance and conſtancy in prayer all this while, and the attention he gave to the divine inſtructions which were communicated to him, internally and externally: then was Saul certain days with the diſciples which were at Damaſcus; who came from Jeruſalem upon the perſecution raiſed againſt them there; with theſe Saul continued ſome few days after his converſion and baptiſm, for quickly after he went into Arabia, as appears from Gal. i. 17. Theſe diſciples, with the new converts afterwards, it is highly probable, formed a church-ſtate in Damaſcus; Ananias is ſaid to be the biſhop or paſtor of it, and which remained in ſeveral ages. In the catalogue of the council of Nice, which was held in the beginning of the fourth century, Damaſcus is mentioned as the ſeat of a church; in the fifth century a biſhop of Damaſcus was in the council at Epheſus; and in the ſame century it was reckoned a metropolitan church in Aſia; in the ſeventh century it appears there was a church in this place; and even in the eighth century, tho' the Arabians ravaged in thoſe parts, yet ſtill a church continued here for ſome time, till Ulid, the prince of the Saracenes, took away the temple from the Chriſtians of this place, and dedicated it to Mahomet; after which we hear no more of the church at Damaſcus[s].

Ver. 20. And ſtraightway he preached Chriſt in the ſynagogues, &c.] The Syriac verſion adds, of the Jews; that is, which were in Damaſcus, ſee ver. 2. from whence it appears, that he was immediately, as ſoon as converted, qualified for the work of preaching the Goſpel: nor did he confer with fleſh and blood, or ſtand diſputing and debating with himſelf and carnal reaſon, what was beſt for him to do; but as ſoon as he knew Chriſt himſelf, he preached him to others, and whom he always made the ſubject of his miniſtry: and particularly, that he is the Son of God; the only-begotten of the Father, the eternal Son of God, truly and properly God, of the ſame nature and eſſence with God his Father, and equal to him. His deſign was to aſſert and maintain the dignity of his perſon, which is the foundation of his office, as mediator, and of all the wonderful things he performed: had he meant no more than that he was the Meſſiah, the ſenſe would only be, that he preached that Chriſt was the Chriſt; but the meaning is, that he preached that Jeſus of Nazareth, the true Meſſiah, was not a mere man, but a divine perſon, even the Son of God: he ſet out in his miniſtry, with the principal and moſt fundamental article of the Chriſtian religion, that which Chriſt aſſerted, and for which he ſuffered, and which all the Apoſtles, and firſt Chriſtians believed. The Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read Jeſus, inſtead of Chriſt.

Ver. 21. But all that heard him were amazed, &c.] Not the diſciples that believed in Chriſt, but the unbelievers, as appears from their words: and ſaid, is not this he that deſtroyed them that called on this name in Jeruſalem? they don't expreſs the name of Chriſt out of malice and ill-will; which ſhows who they were that ſaid theſe words, and were aſtoniſhed to hear Saul preaching in this name, and proving him to be the Son of God, and the true Meſſiah; when it was but a little while ago he conſented to the death of Stephen, made havock of the church, waſted and deſtroyed it as much as was in his power, and perſecuted unto death ſuch as called upon the name of Chriſt, or were called by his name, he could find in Jeruſalem: nor did this ſatisfy him, for it follows, and came hither, that is, to Damaſcus, for that intent, that he might bring them bound to the chief-prieſts: whom he ſhould find profeſſing or invocating the name of Chriſt, or bearing it; now to ſee and hear him preach this ſame name, was ſurprizing to them.

Ver. 22. But Saul increaſed the more in ſtrength, &c.] Not of body, but of mind; his gifts and graces, and ſpiritual light and knowledge increaſed; his abilities were greater; his fortitude of mind, boldneſs, and freedom of ſpeech, every day increaſed: he got more, and new, and freſh arguments, by which he himſelf was confirmed, and he confirmed others in the truths of Chriſt. Some copies read, he was more ſtrengthened in the word; either in the word of God, having a clearer underſtanding of it, and being more confirmed in the truth of it; or in ſpeech, being more ready and powerful in ſpeaking it. And confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damaſcus; confuted them, and put them to ſilence, ſo that they had nothing to ſay for themſelves, or againſt the truth: proving that this is very Chriſt; by joining and knitting paſſages of ſcripture in the Old Teſtament together, by producing and citing expreſs teſtimonies from thence, and by comparing the prophecies and the characters of the Meſſiah in them, with Jeſus of Nazareth, he proved to a demonſtration that he muſt be the Meſſiah.

Ver. 23. And after that many days were fulfilled, &c.] This phraſe is uſed by the Septuagint on Exod. ii. 11, 23. and iv. 18. for a conſiderable length of time, for many years. The Jewiſh writers obſerve [t], that the phraſe, many days, ſignify at leaſt three days; for by days, in the plural number, two muſt be deſigned, and many ſignifies a third, or that one at leaſt is added to them; but here it ſignifies three years, as it alſo does, 1 Kings xviii. 1. where it is ſaid, and it came to paſs after many days, that the word of the Lord came to Elijah in the third year; and ſuch a ſpace of time is deſigned by the many days here; for when the Apoſtle had ſtaid a little while at Damaſcus, and preached Chriſt in the ſynagogues, he went into Arabia, where he continued about three years, and then returned to Damaſcus, where what is related happened to him; ſee Gal. i. 17, 18. 2 Cor. xi. 32, 33. the Jews took counſel to kill him; being filled with indignation at him, that he had changed his religion, and from a perſecutor was become a preacher of the Goſpel; this they had meditated ſome time, and now upon his return to Damaſcus attempted to put their counſel into execution.

Ver. 24. But their laying await was known of Saul, &c.] Either by divine revelation, or by ſome friends, who had got knowledge of it, and gave him information, as in Acts xxiii. 16. and they watched the gates night and day to kill him; that is, the Jews, together with the governour of the city, and the garriſon of ſoldiers in it. Theſe all watched at the ſeveral gates of the city, night and day, that Saul might not make his eſcape, and that they might take him, and put him to death.

Ver. 25. Then the diſciples took him by night, &c.] The Alexandrian copy reads, his diſciples; the diſciples of Saul, ſuch as he had been inſtrumental in making at Damaſcus: but it is not uſual for the ſaints to be called in ſcripture the diſciples of any man; therefore the common reading is beſt, and deſigns the diſciples and followers of Chriſt; who being concerned for the preſervation of ſo valuable a life, took Saul in the night-ſeaſon, and let him down by the wall in a baſket. Damaſcus was a walled city; hence we read of the wall of Damaſcus, Jer. xlix. 27. And the houſe where Saul was, and which very likely was one of the diſciples, was built upon the wall, as the houſe of Rahab was upon the town-wall of Jericho; and as ſhe let down the ſpies from thence by a cord through the window, Joſh. ii. 15. ſo the diſciples let down Saul in a baſket with cords through the window of the houſe, as appears from 2 Cor. xi. 33. ſee the note there: to this, no doubt, the diſciples were directed by the over-ruling providence of God, in order to preſerve the life of the Apoſtle, who had much work to do for Chriſt in ſeveral parts of the world, and therefore muſt not fall into the hands of his enemies and die, his time not being yet come; and this ſhows, that it is lawful to make uſe of all prudent means, and proper methods to prevent the deſigns of wicked men, and eſcape out of their hands, and preſerve life when in danger; by which means Saul eſcaped their hands.

Ver. 26. And when Saul was come to Jeruſalem, &c.] After he had eſcaped out of Damaſcus, in the manner before related, and which was three years after his converſion: he aſſayed to join himſelf to the diſciples; not to the private members of the church, or ordinary diſciples, as diſtinct from the Apoſtles, but to the whole ſociety, as conſiſting of Apoſtles and private Chriſtians; for his chief view in going to Jeruſalem was to ſee Peter; and the Ethiopic verſion reads, to the apoſtles: the ſenſe is, that he tried either to get into a free and familiar converſation with them, or to become one of their body, and a member of the church. He did not return to the high-prieſt from whom he had received letters to Damaſcus, to give him an account of the execution of his commiſſion, or what uſe he had made of the letters he gave him, but to the diſciples, againſt whom he had breathed out threatenings and ſlaughter. Grace had made a ſtrange alteration in him; thoſe whom he hated, and was exceeding mad againſt, he now loves; they are the excellent ones in the earth in whom is all his delight; and whom he perſecuted to ſtrange cities, he now courts their company, and attempts to get among them; accounting it his greateſt honour and happineſs to be one of their ſociety. It is the duty and intereſt of every gracious ſoul to join himſelf to a church of Chriſt, which conſiſts of the diſciples of Chriſt, as the church at Jeruſalem did; of ſuch who have learned Chriſt, and the way of life and ſalvation by him; who have believed in him, and have been taught to deny themſelves for his ſake, and to take up the croſs and follow him, in the way of his ordinances and appointments: and to be joined to a church, is to become an open ſubject of Chriſt's kingdom, a citizen of the heavenly Jeruſalem, one of the family of God, and a member of the body of Chriſt viſibly. The phraſe is expreſſive of that ſtrict union there is between the ſaints in church relation, and of that cloſe and intimate communion they have with each other, and ſhews that their incorporation together is by mutual conſent and agreement. And a great privilege it is to be in ſuch a relation, having the grace of God; for ſuch have the beſt of company, and the moſt refreſhing ordinances; are in the greateſt ſafety, being under the watch and care of miniſters and members, of angels, and of God himſelf; and ſhall never be disfranchiſed, or become foreigners and ſtrangers; they may expect the preſence of God, freſh ſupplies of his grace, and even life for evermore, and need fear no enemy. That which qualifies for church-memberſhip, is not natural deſcent from religious parents, nor a religious education, nor mere morality and civility, nor even a conſtant attendance on the word of God, but faith in Chriſt Jeſus, and a profeſſion of it; and according to the order of the Goſpel it is neceſſary that baptiſm in water ſhould go before it; and theſe qualifications the Apoſtle had. But they were all afraid of him; knowing him to have been ſuch an enemy to Chriſt, and ſo violent a perſecutor of his church in times paſt: and believed not that he was a diſciple; or a true follower of Chriſt, but only pretended to be one, having ſome wicked deſign upon them in attempting to get among them: the reaſon of their not knowing any thing of his converſion might be, becauſe not only of the diſtance between Damaſcus and Jeruſalem, and the continuance of the perſecution in the latter place, which might occaſion few comers to and fro of the Chriſtians; but becauſe the Apoſtle, ſoon after his converſion, went to Arabia, where he had been all this while. Hence it appears, that the primitive churches were very careful in the admiſſion of perſons into fellowſhip with them; as they could not bear them in their communion who were evil, ſo they would not admit any among them but ſuch as they looked upon to be the true diſciples of Chriſt: and this is a method worthy of imitation; and ſuch perſons who before a profeſſion of religion, have been either very ſcandalous in their lives and converſations, or notorious enemies to Chriſt and his Goſpel, ought to be thoroughly examined into, and full ſatisfaction obtained concerning them, e'er they be received into the boſom of the church.

Ver. 27. But Barnabas took him, and brought him to the apoſtles, &c.] To Peter and James, the brother of our Lord, for no other Apoſtles did he ſee at this time, Gal. i. 18, 19. It is probable that Barnabas had been at Damaſcus, and had there related to him the whole account of Saul's converſion and entrance on the miniſtry, which he gives a particular relation of, as follows: and declared unto them, how he had ſeen the Lord in the way; he told the Apoſtles, Peter and James, how that Chriſt had appeared to him in perſon, as he was on his way to Damaſcus: and that he had ſpoken to him; and expoſtulated with him about his perſecution of him in his members, and bid him go into the city, where it ſhould be told him what he ſhould do: and how he had preached boldly at Damaſcus in the name of Jeſus; that he had uſed great freedom of ſpeech, and had ſhown courage and greatneſs of mind in preaching Chriſt at Damaſcus, both as ſoon as he was converted, and now upon his return thither. Hence it is manifeſt, that previous to admiſſion into a church of Chriſt, and in order to ſatisfy the members of it, and gain their aſſent to ſuch an admiſſion, there ought to be a declaration made of the work of grace upon the ſouls of ſuch, who propoſe to be joined to it; as how the Lord has met with them, and ſhewn them the evil of their ways, and given them repentance unto life; and how they have had a ſight of him by faith, and have looked to Chriſt and believed in him for the ſalvation of their ſouls; and how they have embraced the doctrines of the Goſpel, and have found much ſweetneſs and comfort in them; and that from a principle of love to him, and faith in him, and with a view to his glory, they are willing to ſubmit to his ordinances, and to walk in holy fellowſhip with his people; and ſuch an account of Saul being given by Barnabas, who had had it from him; and this being, no doubt, declared and atteſted by Saul himſelf, he was received into fellowſhip with the diſciples: hence it follows,

Ver. 28. And he was with them, &c.] Peter and James, and the reſt of the diſciples; he lived with them, converſed with them, and joined with them in all religious exerciſes; which is ſignified by his coming in and going out at Jeruſalem; no one of the apoſtles or diſciples forbidding or hindering him.

Ver. 29. And he ſpake boldly in the name of the Lord Jeſus, &c.] He ſpake the Goſpel of Chriſt boldly, as it ought to be ſpoken; he ſpoke it openly, publickly, freely, and faithfully, not fearing the faces or revilings of any: the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions add, to the Gentiles; but this is not in any of the Greek copies: and diſputed againſt the Grecians; or Helleniſts, that is, the Helleniſtical Jews; by whom are meant, not Greeks proſelyted to the Jewiſh religion, but Jews who had been born and brought up in Greece, or at leaſt had learned the Greek language, and uſed the Greek bible; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, he diſputed with the Jews that knew Greek; perhaps the ſame perſons, of the ſynagogue of the Libertines, Alexandrians, Cyrenians, and of Cilicia and Aſia, who diſputed with Stephen, with whom he had before joined, Acts vi. 9, 10. but they went about to ſlay him; he being an over-match for them; and they not being able to reſiſt him, but being confuted, and confounded, and put to ſilence, they were filled with indignation; and ſince they could not conquer him by arguments, they were for ſlaying him with the ſword.

Ver. 30. Which when the brethren knew, &c.] When the members of the church heard of it, by ſome means or another: they brought him down to Ceſarea; not that which was before called Strato's tower, the ſame as in Acts viii. 40. but Ceſarea Philippi, mentioned in Matt. xvi. 13. the Syriac verſion adds, by night, and ſome copies: and ſent him forth to Tarſus; a city of Cilicia, his own native place, where he might be more ſafe, and alſo uſeful among his friends and acquaintance; ſee Gal. i. 21.

Ver. 31. Then had the churches reſt, &c.] Meaning not ſpiritual reſt in Chriſt; this they had before, even in tribulation, but reſt from perſecution; not ſo much becauſe of the converſion of Saul, the great perſecutor of them, for his converſion had been three years before; but rather becauſe of his removal to other parts, the ſight of whoſe perſon, and eſpecially his miniſtry, had afreſh ſtirred up the Jews to wrath and fury. The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read in the ſingular number, the church; but the ſeveral countries hereafter mentioned ſhew, that more are deſigned: for it follows, throughout all Judea, and Galilee, and Samaria; for by means of the diſperſion, on account of perſecution, the Goſpel was preached in theſe ſeveral places, and churches gathered, and which ſhared in the perſecution until this time, when they began to have reſt; ſee Gal. i. 22. 1 Theſſ. ii. 14. and were edified; or built up on the foundation Chriſt, and their moſt holy faith, thro' the miniſtry of the word and ordinances, and their mutual love and holy converſation; and had an increaſe of members, and of grace, and of ſpiritual knowledge: and walking in the fear of the Lord; which was always before their eyes, and upon their hearts, continuing in religious exerciſes, and in the diſcharge of every duty, both to God and man. Not in a ſlaviſh fear of the wrath of the Lord, and of damnation for ſin committed againſt him; for this is not conſiſtent with their characters, as Goſpel-churches, made of perſons who had received not the ſpirit of bondage to fear, but the ſpirit of adoption, nor with their edification in faith and holineſs; for he that feareth is not made perfect in love, 1 John iv. 18. which edifies; nor with the comforts of the Holy Ghoſt, they are afterwards ſaid to walk in: but in a godly fear, which has the Lord for its author, is not of a man's ſelf, but of the grace of God, and is encouraged and increaſed by the diſcoveries of his grace and goodneſs; and which has the Lord for its object, whoſe name is holy and reverend, and is to be feared by all his ſaints: it ſhews itſelf in an hatred of ſin; in a departure from it; in a carefulneſs not to offend the Lord; in with-holding nothing from him, tho' ever ſo dear and valuable, he calls for; and in attending to all the parts of divine worſhip: and walking in it denotes a continuance in it, a conſtant progreſſion in all the acts of internal and external worſhip, which are both included in the fear of the Lord; and it requires ſtrength, and ſuppoſes pleaſure and freedom. It is ſaid of Enoch, that he walked with God; which the Targum of Onkelos paraphraſes, he walked in the fear of the Lord, Gen. v. 22, 24. the ſame phraſe which is here uſed. And in the comfort of the Holy Ghoſt; which he communicated by ſhedding abroad the love of God in them, taking the things of Chriſt, and ſhewing them to them, applying covenant-bleſſings and Goſpel-promiſes to their ſouls, owning the word and ordinances, and making them uſeful to them, thereby leading them into fellowſhip with the Father, and with the Son. In all which he acts the part of a comforter, and anſwers to the character he bears, and the office he is in: the love of God, which he directs into, and ſheds abroad in the heart, refreſhes and revives the ſpirits of God's people; it influences and encourages every grace that is wrought in them; and makes them eaſy and comfortable under all providences, even the moſt afflicting ones: the things of Chriſt he takes and ſhews unto them are his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice; which being applied, and intereſt in them ſhewn, produce abundance of peace, joy, and comfort: the promiſes of the covenant, and of the Goſpel, he opens and applies, being ſuch as hold forth the bleſſings of grace unto them; and being exceeding great, and precious, and ſuitable to their caſes; and being abſolute and unconditional, immutable, and ſure, afford them much pleaſure and ſatisfaction: and the word and ordinances being attended with the Holy Ghoſt, and much aſſurance, are breaſts of conſolation to them: and walking in thoſe comforts which he adminiſters, by ſuch means, denotes a continuance of them, a long enjoyment of them, which is not very common; for, generally ſpeaking, theſe comforts laſt but for a ſmall time; and alſo it intimates much delight and pleaſure in them, ſee Pſ. xciv. 19. and ſo were multiplied; both in their gifts and graces, and in the number of converts added to them.

Ver. 32. And it came to paſs, as Peter paſſed through all quarters, &c.] The Arabic verſion reads, all the foreſaid places, as Judea, Galilee, and Samaria; thro' which he took a tour, in order to viſit the new churches here planted, fix paſtors over them, and confirm the Goſpel by miracles, which they had received: he came down alſo to the ſaints which dwelt at Lydda; a city which lay on the weſt of Jeruſalem, and is ſaid [u] to be a day's journey from it; and a day's journey were ten parſas, or forty miles [w]: it was but thirty-two miles from Jeruſalem, and was a place famous for Jewiſh doctors; for which reaſon it is frequently mentioned in the Talmudic writings, under the name of Lod or Lud. Mention is made of R. Samlai, who was of Lydda [x], and of the chambers of Beth Nitbzah, and of Arum in Lydda [y], where the doctors diſputed; there was a ſchool here, of which R. Akiba was preſident [z]: here alſo the Sanhedrim ſometimes ſat, ſince we are told that Ben Sutda was tried and ſtoned at Lud or Lydda [a]; and here likewiſe they intercalated the year [b], it being in Judea: this place was ſituated in a plain; ſo ſays Jerom [c], "they that "dwell in Sephela, that is, in the plain, Lydda and "Emmaus, which deſign Dioſpolis and Nicopolis, "ſhall poſſeſs the Philiſtines." And with this agrees the account the Talmudiſts [d] give of it, "the "country of Judea was divided into three parts, "the hill country, the plain, and the valley; from "Bethoron to Emmaus was the hill country; from "Emmaus to Lydda was the plain or champaign "country; and from Lydda to the ſea the valley." Hence alſo we read [e] of, שפלת לוד, the plain of Lydda; and now Peter coming from Jeruſalem, and the hill country of Judea, into this plain and champaign country, is properly ſaid to come down to the ſaints there. So Quadratus in Joſephus [f] is ſaid to come up from Lydda to Jeruſalem. This place was near the Mediterranean ſea; and was in Jerom's time called Dioſpolis [g], and in the time of R. Benjamin [h] Seguras; it is the ſame with Lod in Ezra ii. 33. Neh. vii. 37. The builder of it was Shamed the ſon of Elpaal, 1 Chron. viii. 12. It was in the times of Joſephus [i] a village, yet not inferior to a city for greatneſs. It is now called Roma Caſtaldo and S. Georgio. And here it ſeems ſome ſaints or chriſtians dwelt, whom Peter, among the reſt, viſited; and which is mentioned for the ſake of the miracle he there wrought, next related. And theſe ſaints at Lydda very likely were converted under Philip's miniſtry, as he paſſed from Azotus to Ceſarea, chap. viii. 40. and, it may be, were in a church-ſtate, or however were afterwards. Zenas the lawyer, the Apoſtle Paul ſpeaks of in Tit. iii. 13. is ſaid to be biſhop of Dioſpolis, or Lydda; in the beginning of the fourth century Aetius was biſhop of this place, who aſſiſted in the council of Nice; and in the ſame century, anno 381, Dionyſius, another biſhop of this place, was preſent at a council at Conſtantinople; and in the fifth century Photinus wrote himſelf biſhop of Lydda, in the Chalcedon council, anno 451 [k].

Ver. 33. And there he found a certain man, &c.] In a houſe in that city, into which he entered: named Eneas; which is a Gentile name, and ſo might the perſon be; tho' there is mention made of this name among the Jews. We read of one R. Samuel Bar, אנ״יא, Ænea, or Æneas [l]; but it was more common among the Greeks. Æneas the Trojan is well known in hiſtory, who, after the deſtruction of Troy, went into Italy, and ſettled there; and from him the Trojans are ſometimes called Æneadæ. The name comes from the Greek word, αινω, ainoo, which ſignifies to praiſe; and Æneas is one worthy of praiſe: tho' Jerom [m] takes it to be an Hebrew name, which he interprets one that anſwers, or a poor man, or miſery; as if it came from the Hebrew word, ענה, anah, which ſignifies to anſwer, or to afflict. Which had kept his bed eight years, and was ſick of the palſy; ſo that the diſtemper was grown ſtubborn, and thought incurable; nor perhaps had he, or his friends, any hope of his ever being reſtored to health again.

Ver. 34. And Peter ſaid unto him, Eneas, &c.] He called him by his name, which he might without divine revelation know, tho' he was a ſtranger to him, by the people of the houſe, where he was: Jeſus Chriſt maketh thee whole; Peter knew, by ſome ſecret impulſe upon his mind, that Chriſt would cure this man by him as an inſtrument at this time, and therefore ſaid theſe words; not as a prayer, as ſome render them, may Jeſus Chriſt heal thee, tho' was it ſo, it was a prayer of faith; but as a promiſe that he would, or rather as a declaration of the then preſent exertion of his power to heal him; which he aſcribes not to himſelf, but to Chriſt, in whoſe name, and by whoſe power the Apoſtles wrought all their miracles; ſee ch. iii. 12, 14. and iv. 9, 10. ariſe, and make thy bed; which would be a full demonſtration that he was perfectly whole: and he aroſe immediately; and alſo, no doubt, made his bed, as the man at Betheſda's pool was bid by Chriſt, to take up his bed and carry it, as a proof of his ſoundneſs.

Ver. 35. And all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron, &c.] Saron, which is here joined to Lydda, is the name of a fruitful country on the borders of the Mediterranean ſea, between Joppa and Ceſarea, beginning at Lydda. There were two countries in the land of Iſrael called Saron, as Jerom obſerves [n]; there was one between mount Tabor, and the lake of Tiberias; and there was another which reached from Ceſarea of Paleſtine, to the town of Joppa; the former was inhabited by the Gadites, and was beyond Jordan, 1 Chron. v. 16. the other was on this ſide Jordan, near Lydda. And this is what is here meant; and of which the ſame writer elſewhere ſays [o], the whole country by Joppa and Lydda is called Saron, in which are large and fruitful fields; and on Iſ. lxv. 10. which the Vulgate Latin renders, and the plains ſhall be for folds of flocks, he obſerves, that Sharon, in the Hebrew text, is put for plains or champaign country; and adds, all the country about Lydda, Joppa, and Jamnia, is fit to feed flocks: and agreeable to this, in Jewiſh writings, the calves of Sharon [p] are ſpoken of as the beſt; and the word is by the commentators of the Miſna interpreted [q], by מישר, a plain, or champaign country; for this was not the name of a ſingle town or city, but of a country, bordering on Lydda, and the above-mentioned places; in which were ſeveral towns and villages, and the inhabitants of thoſe that were neareſt Lydda, are here deſigned. It was ſuch a fruitful and delightful country, that the Targum on Cant. ii. 1. has renderd it by the garden of Eden: it had its name either from שור, Shur, which ſignifies to behold afar off, from the fine and large proſpect that might be taken on it; or from שר, Shar, which ſignifies the navel, becauſe it was a valley or plain ſurrounded on every ſide with mountains and hills: it abounded in flowers and fruits; hence mention is made of the roſe of Sharon, Cant. ii. 1. and in vines; hence we frequently read of the wine of Saron [r], and which was ſo very good, that they mixed two parts of water with one of wine [s]. It was a country, the Jews ſay [t], whoſe earth was not fit to make bricks of; and therefore houſes made of them did not ſtand long, but needed repairing often in ſeven years: hence the high-prieſt, on the day of atonement, uſed to pray for the Saronites, that their houſes might not become their graves [u]. Now when the inhabitants of this place, as well as of Lydda, ſaw him; that is, Eneas, made whole, who had been ill of a palſy, and had kept his bed eight years, they were ſo impreſſed with it, that it iſſued in their converſion: and turned to the Lord; they believed in Chriſt, embraced his Goſpel preached by Peter, profeſſed faith in him, and ſubmitted to his ordinances; being turned by powerful efficacious grace, they turned their feet to keep his teſtimonies.

Ver. 36. Now there was at Joppa, &c.] The ſame with Japho, Joſh. xix. 46. a ſea-port town in the tribe of Dan, ſaid by ſome hiſtorians [w] to be a very ancient one, even before the flood. It is now called Jaffa, and its name, in the Hebrew tongue, ſignifies beauty: ſome ſay it had its name from Jope, the daughter of Æolus, the wife of Cepheus, the founder of it; and others derive it from the name of Japhet, becauſe it looks towards Europe, which is inhabited by the ſons of Japhet. It was built upon a hill, as Pliny [x] ſays; and ſo high, as Strabo [y] reports, that Jeruſalem, the metropolis of Judea, might be ſeen from thence, which was diſtant from it forty miles; as may be concluded from what Jerom [z] ſays, who lived at Bethlehem many years: his words are; from Joppa, to our little village Bethlehem, are forty-ſix miles; now Bethlehem was ſix miles diſtant from Jeruſalem, to the ſouth of it, and Joppa was to the weſt of it. The place is well known by Jonah's taking ſhip there, and going for Tarſhiſh, when he was caſt into the ſea, and devoured by a fiſh; from whence the Ionian ſea might have its name: and this was the occaſion of the fable of Andromeda being expoſed to a fiſh of a prodigious ſize at this place; the bones of which, Pliny [a] relates, were brought to Rome from hence, being forty foot long; and the ſtones, to which ſhe was bound, Jerom [b] ſays were ſhown in his time on this ſhore: and here alſo the inhabitants report, may be ſeen ſome ſtones in the ſea, on which Peter ſtood and fiſhed, when he dwelt in this place. A certain diſciple, called Tabitha; this was a woman's name, the maſculine name was Tabi. R. Gamaliel had a man-ſervant of this name [c], and alſo a maid-ſervant, whoſe name was Tabitha [d]; yea, every maid-ſervant of his was called mother Tabitha, and every man-ſervant father Tabi [e]: which by interpretation is called Dorcas; which ſignifies a roe in the Greek language, as Tabitha does in the Syriac: this woman was full of good works; was conſtantly employed in doing good; her works were both many and good: and alms-deeds which ſhe did; ſhe was very kind and beneficent to the poor; ſhe wrought with her hands much for their ſakes, as appears by what follows.

Ver. 37. And it came to paſs in thoſe days, &c.] While Peter was in thoſe parts, and particularly at Lydda, which was near: that ſhe was ſick and died; fell ill with ſome diſorder, and died of it: whom, when they had waſhed; as was the manner of the Jews; and this they did, even though it was on a ſabbath-day: for ſo their canon runs [f], "they do "all the neceſſaries for the dead, (on the ſabbath) "they anoint him, ומדיחין, and they waſh him;" yet that of Maimonides deſerves ſome notice [g]; "it "is forbidden to anoint part of the body, as the "whole body; but if it is to remove filth, it is "lawful; and ſo it is forbidden to waſh part of "the body with hot water, but with cold water "they may waſh his face, his hands, and his feet, "but not the whole body." This cuſtom ſtill continues, and their uſual method is to waſh the body with hot water, in which they put dried roſes and camomile flowers: likewiſe, they take an egg, and beat it up in wine, and therewith anoint the head; and this waſhing and anointing are done by ſome at the houſe before the corps is carried out (as here); but in ſome places eſpecially, where there is a large number of Jews, all this is done in the burying-places; where they have a little houſe, whither they carry the corps, and put it on a table, and there waſh it; and after waſhing, put it into a coffin, and inter it [h]: and this has been the cuſtom of other nations, if not of all nations: the cuſtom with the Turks is this [i]; the body being laid upon a board, and covered with a linen cloth, one of the eccleſiaſtical elders waſhes it with hot water and ſoap, another being preſent to hand the water; but they don't ſuffer others to look on: the body is thrice waſhed; and the third time they mingle camphire with it; and being waſhed, it is put into a coffin. And Ludolphus [k] reports of the Abyſſines, that their bodies being well waſhed and perfumed, they wrap them up in garments, and then are put upon a bier, and buried. And this was the practice both of the ancient Grecians and Romans, that as ſoon as ever any one was dead, the body was immediately waſhed and anointed. Thus Creon is ſaid to fetch Jocaſte to waſh her dead ſon; and Antigone requeſts of Creon, that ſhe might waſh her brother [l]. It has been the cuſtom of ſome countries to waſh their dead bodies in rivers; and ſome people, in the northern parts, have choſe, for this reaſon, to have their burying-places near the banks of rivers, that their dead bodies might be waſhed in running water: and the Indians, which live at a diſtance from the river Ganges, will go fifteen or twenty days journey thither, to waſh their corps in it, though then putrified, and then burn them; yea, they take their ſick alive when they think they will die, and put them up to their middle in rivers that they may die in pure and clear water; and they enjoin a very ſevere pennance on thoſe who omit to bring ſuch as are near death, to a river to be waſhed [m]: they laid her in an upper chamber. The Ethiopic verſion reads quite the reverſe; they put her in the lower part of the houſe; which is not likely. Dr. Lightfoot conjectures that this upper chamber might be the common meeting-place of the ſaints; and that they put her here, that if Peter ſhould work a miracle all might be ſpectators of it; and certain it is, that the Jewiſh doctors uſed to meet in upper-rooms, and confer together; ſee the note on Mark ii. iv. Acts i. 13. and ſuch there were in Lydda; ſee ver. 32.

Ver. 38. And foraſmuch as Lydda was nigh to Joppa, &c.] Some ſay it was ſix miles diſtant, but it muſt be eight; ſince from Jeruſalem to Joppa were forty miles, and from Jeruſalem to Lydda thirty-two, and therefore it muſt be eight miles from thence to Joppa: and the diſciples had heard that Peter was there; and alſo no doubt that he had healed Æneas of his palſy, and which might induce them to do as follows: they ſent unto him two men; very likely of their own company or church; for it is certain here were diſciples or believers in Chriſt, and very likely were formed into a church-ſtate; theſe ſeem to be converts under Philip's miniſtry, who when he went from Azotus, preached in all the cities, and ſo in Joppa, till he came to Ceſarea, chap. viii. 40. tho' we read nothing in eccleſiaſtical hiſtory of this church at Joppa, until the fifth century, when it appears there was a church in that place [n]; and in the ſame century we read of Fidus biſhop of Joppa, that was preſent in the ſynod held at Epheſus, anno 431. and in the ſixth century of Elias biſhop of the ſame place, in the council at Jeruſalem, anno 536 [o]. and in the ſame century a biſhop of the church here aſſiſted in the ſynod of Rome and Conſtantinople [p]. Deſiring him, that he would not delay to come to them; they intreated he would not refuſe to come, and think it too great a burden on him, or make any difficulty about it, or ſhow any averſion to it; but that he would with all readineſs and chearfulneſs, and without delay immediately come unto them; for the caſe they wanted him for, required ſpeed and haſte.

Ver. 39. Then Peter aroſe and went with them, &c.] After the meſſengers had delivered their meſſage, and made their requeſt to Peter in the name of the brethren, he at once agreed to go with them, and accordingly did; whether he went to reſtore Dorcas to life, whoſe death the meſſengers had informed him of, and whether this was the view of the brethren with reſpect to that, is not certain. However, he might go with them on other accounts, as to comfort them under the loſs of ſo valuable and uſeful a perſon, and to ſtrengthen and eſtabliſh them in the faith, and to exhort and animate them to the diſcharge of their duty. When he was come; that is, to Joppa, and to Dorcas's houſe there: they brought him into the upper chamber; where the corps of Dorcas lay: and all the widows ſtood by him weeping; theſe were poor widows to whom Dorcas had been very liberal and beneficent, who ſtood about the Apoſtle lamenting the death of their benefactreſs, and by their tears expreſſing their deſire of her return to life, if it could be: and ſhewing the coats and garments which Dorcas made while ſhe was with them; the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, which Dorcas made for them; and the Syriac verſion renders it, which Tabitha gave unto them, while ſhe was alive; which laſt clauſe aptly explains, while ſhe was with them; for now ſhe was not, with reſpect to her better part, her immortal ſoul: the coats and garments were the inner and upper ones, wore in theſe countries; and it ſeems that ſhe did not buy theſe garments, and give them unto them, but that ſhe made them up herſelf for them, or at leaſt wrought with them in making of them; which ſhews her diligence and induſtry, as alſo her humility, as well as her beneficence: and theſe the widows produced, and are ſhown as proofs of the ſame; which was expreſſive of gratitude in them, and was done with a deſign to move Peter to be concerned for reſtoring ſo uſeful a life.

Ver. 40. But Peter put them all forth, &c.] As he had ſeen his Lord and Maſter do, when he raiſed the daughter of Jairus from the dead, Luke viii. 54. and kneeled down and prayed; it may be, as yet, he had not the mind of God in this matter, and therefore betook himſelf to prayer, in which he choſe to be private and alone: and turning him to the body; the corps of Dorcas, after he had prayed, and was well aſſured, that the power of Chriſt would be exerted in raiſing of it: ſaid, Tabitha ariſe; which words were ſpoken in the name and faith of Chriſt, and were all one as if Chriſt himſelf had ſpoken them; for to his power, and not to the Apoſtles, is the following miracle to be aſcribed: and ſhe opened her eyes; which, upon her death, had been cloſed by her friends; and perhaps the napkin was not yet bound about her face; or if it was, ſhe muſt remove it ere ſhe could open her eyes and ſee Peter: and when ſhe ſaw Peter; whom ſhe might know: ſhe ſat up; upon the bed or bier on which ſhe lay.

Ver. 41. And he gave her his hand, and lift her up, &c.] Off of the bed or bier where ſhe was: and when he had called the ſaints and widows; the diſciples, brethren and ſiſters, who were come together on this occaſion, as well as the poor widows ſhe had been kind to; the Ethiopic verſion reads without a copulative, the holy widows; and ſo might theſe widows be, even ſuch as are deſcribed in 1 Tim. v. 10. preſented her alive; as Chriſt did the widow's ſon of Naim to her, Luke vii. 15. and which no doubt was matter of great joy as well as aſtoniſhment to all the ſaints, and eſpecially to the poor widows.

Ver. 42. And it was known throughout all Joppa, &c.] The report of ſuch a miracle, and wrought upon a perſon of note, was ſoon ſpread all over the place, which was very large, for it was a city, as it is called, chap. xi. 5. and it had, as Joſephus[q] ſays, villages and little towns or cities round about it; all which might go by the name of Joppa, and throughout which the fame of this miracle might paſs: and many believed in the Lord; in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, whom Peter preached, and the ſaints in Joppa profeſſed, and in whoſe name, and by whoſe power this miracle was done.

Ver. 43. And it came to paſs, &c.] Or ſo it was; that he tarried many days in Joppa; converſing with the ſaints, confirming the diſciples, and preaching the Goſpel, to the converſion of ſinners; and his abode was with one Simon a tanner; it ſeems as if perſons of this trade uſed to dwell in towns near the ſea, as fit for their buſineſs; ſo we read of ſome at Sidon a city on the ſea-coaſt, as Joppa was; "it "happened at Sidon that a certain בורסי, tanner, "(the ſame word here uſed, adopted into the "Hebrew language) died, and he had a brother a "tanner, &c.[r]" where the Gemara[s] diſtinguiſhes between a great tanner and a little tanner; the latter the Gloſs ſays, is one that is poor and has but few ſkins, which of theſe Simon was, can't be ſaid. This buſineſs was very contemptible with the Jews; they ſay[t], "wo to him whoſe trade is a tanner;" and further obſerve[u], that they never make one a king, nor an high-prieſt: but their doctors many of them were of as mean trades, as ſhoe-makers, ſkinners, &c. ſee the note on Mark vi. 3. and Simon the Athenian philoſopher was σκυτοτομος, a leather-cutter[w]; and according to the Ethiopic verſion, this our Simon was a ſhoe-maker;. with him Peter choſe to abide, and not with Dorcas.

CHAP. X.

Ver. 1. THERE was a certain man in Ceſarea, &c.] This was the Ceſarea formerly called Strato's tower, not Ceſarea Philippi; for the former, and not the latter, lay near Joppa: called Cornelius; which was a Roman name, and he himſelf was a Roman or an Italian: a centurion of the band called the Italian band; which conſiſted of ſoldiers collected out of Italy, from whence the band took its name, in which Cornelius was a centurion, having a hundred men under him, as the name of his office ſignifies.

Ver. 2. A devout man, &c.] A truly religious perſon, who had forſaken the Roman idolatry and ſuperſtition, in which he was brought up: and one that feared God; the one only living and true God, the God of Iſrael; he had the fear of God wrought in his heart, which is a part of the covenant of grace, a bleſſing of it, and the beginning of wiſdom; he was truly a gracious man, a converted perſon, and who from an internal principle worſhipped God externally: with all his houſe; he brought up his family in a religious way, as every good man ſhould; and which was very remarkable in a Gentile, a ſoldier, and an officer: which gave much alms to the people; to the Jews that dwelt at Ceſarea, and therefore was of good report among them, and much beloved by them, ver. 22. he had regard to both tables of the law, both to the worſhip of God, and the love of the neighbour: and prayed to God always; every day, at the uſual times of prayer; prayed privately, in his cloſet, and with his family, as well as attended public ſervice of this kind.

Ver. 3. He ſaw in a viſion evidently, &c.] He was not in a dream, or in a trance, but he was thoroughly awake, and his eyes open, and was himſelf; it was not in the night, but in clear day: about the ninth hour of the day; or three o'clock in the afternoon, which was the hour of prayer, ch. iii. 1. in which exerciſe he was now engaged, ver. 30. at this time he ſaw an angel of God coming to him; into the room where he was at prayer: and ſaying unto him, Cornelius; he called him by his name, to let him know that he knew him, as angels are very knowing ſpirits; and to expreſs his affection and friendſhip to him, and that he was a meſſenger, not of bad, but of good news to him, as well as to engage his attention to him; for he might be ſo intent at his devotion, that had he not called him by name, he would not have minded him.

Ver. 4. And when he looked on him, he was afraid, &c.] What with the brightneſs of his clothing, ver. 30. and the luſtre of his countenance, and the majeſtic form in which he appeared, he perceived there was ſomething uncommon and divine in this viſion, and therefore was filled with awe and reverence, yea, with ſomething of a pannic fear; as it was uſual, even with good perſons, as the patriarchs and prophets of the Old Teſtament, Zacharias, the virgin Mary, and others; from a ſenſe of the greatneſs of the divine majeſty, which they ſuppoſed to be near, or this to be an emblem of it, and from a notion that, at the ſight of God, they ſhould die. And ſaid, what is it, Lord? what is the matter? what is to be ſaid or done? what is the reaſon of this unuſual appearance? Some of the Latin copies, and the Ethiopic verſion, read, who art thou, Lord? but by the angel's anſwer, not this, but the former was the queſtion: for it follows, and he ſaid unto him, thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God; that is, the prayers which he had put up in faith, for himſelf and family, and the charitable actions he had performed from a principle of love, were like ſacrifices upon the altar, which aſcended to God with acceptance; ſo theſe ſacrifices of prayer and beneficence came up with acceptance from off that altar which ſanctifies the gift, or were acceptable to God, thro' Jeſus Chriſt; theſe were taken notice of, approved by God, and remembred by him, and the fruits and effects he was ſhortly to enjoy: for that Cornelius was a believer, need not be queſtioned; ſince he was not only a devout and religious perſon, but one that feared God, which includes the whole of religion, internal and external; and ſo faith in Chriſt, without which he could not pray aright: there is no doubt of it, but he had read the propheſies of the Old Teſtament, attended the ſynagogues of the Jews, and believed in the Meſſiah to come, though he did not know that he was come, and that Jeſus of Nazareth was he; ſo that his faith was of the ſame kind with that of the ſaints before the coming of Chriſt; and in this faith he did all the good works he did, which became acceptable to God thro' Chriſt, and without which it is impoſſible to pleaſe him.

Ver. 5. And now ſend men to Joppa, &c.] Which lay near to Ceſarea; and call for one Simon, whoſe ſirname is Peter: the angel was not ſent to inſtruct Cornelius himſelf, but to direct him to an apoſtle of Chriſt, and miniſter of the Goſpel, who ſhould do it; for not angels, but men, are employed in the miniſtry of the word, which is the ordinary means of ſpiritual knowledge, and of increaſing it. So the eunuch was inſtructed by Philip, and Saul by Ananias; which ſhews the excellency and uſefulneſs of the Goſpel-miniſtry and miniſters, and what dignity is put upon them, what uſe ſhould be made of them, and in what eſteem they ſhould be had.

Ver. 6. He lodgeth with one Simon a tanner, &c.] Simon the tanner was his hoſt; this man very probably was a good man, and one that lodged ſtrangers; of his trade, ſee the note on chap. ix. 43. whoſe houſe is by the ſea-ſide; Joppa was a ſea-port, 2 Chron. ii. 16. Jon. i. 3. hence we read of ימא דיפו, the ſea of Joppa[x]; and alſo of למינה של יפו, the port of Joppa[y]; now Simon's houſe was in the outer part of the city, and by the ſea-ſide, as well for convenience for his buſineſs, as becauſe ſuch trades might not be exerciſed within a city; being nauſeous and diſagreeable, becauſe of their ſkins and manner of dreſſing them, and the dead carcaſſes from whence they often took them off; hence that rule of the Jews[z], "they place dead carcaſes, graves, "ואת הבורסקי, and a tanners work-ſhop; (in which "he dreſſes his ſkins) fifty cubits from the city; "nor do they make a tanners work-ſhop, but at "the eaſtern part of the city. R. Akiba ſays, it "may be made at every part excepting the weſt." The reaſon of that, as given by the [a] commentators is, becauſe prayer was made towards the weſt, where the temple ſtood, and the divine preſence was. The Ethiopic verſion very wrongly renders it, and the houſe of Cornelius is near the ſea; for not his, but Simon's is meant: he ſhall tell thee what thou oughteſt to do; he was to tell him words, or to deliver doctrines to him, by which he and his family would be better inſtructed in the way of ſalvation, and arrive to a greater degree of knowledge of Chriſt, and faith in him, and be brought to a ſubmiſſion to his commands and ordinances; ſee ver. 22, 32. and chap. xi. 14. this clauſe is left out in the Alexandrian copy, and in ſome others, and in the Syriac and Arabic verſions.

Ver. 7. And when the angel which ſpake unto Cornelius was departed, &c.] For when he had delivered his meſſage, he either diſappeared, or withdrew, and immediately Cornelius ſhewed himſelf ready to obey the heavenly viſion: for he called two of his houſhold ſervants; who were not of the band of ſoldiers under him, but were ſervants in his family, and ſuch as feared God with him; and a devout ſoldier of them that waited on him continually: beſides his houſhold ſervants, there were ſoldiers that continually attended him, and among theſe there was one at leaſt that was a devout and religious man; and him he called out from among the reſt, and to him with the two houſhold ſervants he communicated the viſion: theſe three perſons being religious, were very proper ones to be informed of this matter, and to be ſent on the errand they were; and three might be particularly pitched upon, being a ſufficient number to atteſt to Peter what they had from the mouth of their maſter, for by the mouth of two or three witneſſes is every thing eſtabliſhed; and partly for the honour of Peter, and to ſhow a proper reſpect to him, he would not ſend a ſingle perſon, who could have told the ſtory, and done the errand as well as three, but this would not have looked reſpectful enough.

Ver. 8. And when he had declared all theſe things unto them, &c.] Which he had heard and ſeen in the viſion, and of which he gave them a particular account; partly to engage them the more chearfully to go on the errand, and partly that they might be able to give a diſtinct relation of it to Peter, that ſo he might be moved the more to comply with the requeſt, and come along with them: he ſent them to Joppa; perhaps not that evening, ſince it was at the ninth hour, or three o'clock in the afternoon, when Cornelius had the viſion; and ſome time muſt be taken up in diſcourſe with the angel, and afterwards in ſending for his ſervants and relating the affair to them, and giving them their proper inſtructions. So that it may be they did not ſet out till early the next morning, as ſeems from the following verſe.

Ver. 9. On the morrow as they went on their journey, &c.] From Ceſarea to Joppa; Joppa is ſaid to be ſix and thirty miles diſtant from Ceſarea; ſo far Ceſarea was from Lydda, but it ſeems to be further from Joppa; for according to Joſephus [b], from Joppa to Antipatris were a hundred and fifty furlongs, which are almoſt nineteen miles, and from thence to Ceſarea were twenty-ſix miles; unleſs there was a nearer way by the ſea-ſhore, as there was a way by that from Ceſarea to Joppa, of which the above author makes mention [c]; wherefore they muſt either have ſet out the evening before, or early that morning, to get to Joppa by the ſixth hour, or twelve o'clock at noon; as it ſeems they did, by what follows: and drew nigh unto the city; that is, of Joppa, were but a little way diſtant from it. Peter went up upon the houſe top to pray; the roofs of houſes in Judea were flat, and perſons might walk upon them, and hither they often retired for devotion and recreation; ſee the notes on Matt. x. 27. and xxiv. 17. it was on the former account, namely for prayer, that Peter went up thither, and that he might be private and alone, and undiſturbed in the diſcharge of that duty. This being at a tanner's houſe tho' not in his ſhop, brings to mind a canon of the Jews [d], "a man may not enter into a bath, nor "into a tanner's ſhop near the Minchah," or time of prayer. Now this was, about the ſixth hour; or twelve o'clock at noon when Peter went up to pray; at which time the meſſengers from Cornelius were near the city of Joppa; this was another time of prayer uſed by the Jews, and is what they call the great Minchah, which began at the ſixth hour and an half, and ſo was as is here ſaid, about the ſixth hour; ſee the note on chap. iii. 1.

Ver. 10. And he became very hungry, &c.] It being in the middle of the day, when it was uſual to eat; and perhaps he had eat nothing that day, for thoſe were reckoned the moſt religious perſons, who eat nothing before the Minchah: and would have eaten; tho' the Jews ſay [e], a man ought not to eat near the Minchah, not even the leaſt, leſt he ſhould continue at it, and ſo neglect his prayers: but while they made ready; while Simon's family were getting dinner ready, preparing the food for it: he fell into a trance; or an exſtacy, or an exſtacy fell upon him; it was what was ſupernatural, and came from above, and did not ariſe from any natural cauſe in him; he was as it were out of the body, and entirely in the ſpirit; all the bodily organs and ſenſes were ſhut up, and all ſenſible objects removed from him; and he was wholly intent on what was propoſed to him in the viſion, which filled him with wonder and aſtoniſhment.

Ver. 11. And ſaw heaven opened, &c.] Not literally, as at the baptiſm of Chriſt, and the ſtoning of Stephen; but in a viſionary way, and which was an emblem of the opening and revealing the myſtery of the calling of the Gentiles, which in other ages was not made known, as it now and afterwards was: and a certain veſſel deſcending unto him, as it had been a great ſheet; which ſeems to repreſent the church of God, whoſe original is from heaven, and conſiſts of perſons born from above, who have their converſation in heaven, and were deſigned for it; and eſpecially as under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, which Peter had a viſion of in this emblematic way; the doctrines and ordinances of which are from heaven: and which may be compared to a linnen ſheet for its purity and holineſs, thro' the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and the grace of his Spirit, and with reſpect to its diſcipline and converſation; and ſo to a great one for its largeneſs; for tho' the number of its members, when compared with the world, are few, yet in themſelves are a number which no man can number; and tho' it was but ſmall at firſt, yet the Goſpel being carried among the Gentiles it increaſed, and in the laſt times will be large: knit at the four corners; which may denote the preaching of the Goſpel, and the ſpread of it, and the planting of churches by it in the four parts of the world; and alſo the church being knit to Chriſt, and the members of it one to another: and let down to the earth; for Peter to ſee it, and where it was to continue for a while, even to the ſecond coming of Chriſt, and when the whole church of the firſt-born will be let down to earth again; ſee Rev. xxi. 2.

Ver. 12. Wherein were all manner of four-footed beaſts of the earth, &c.] Not as if they were painted upon it, and theſe were only pictures and repreſentations of them made on the linnen ſheet; but as if they really and actually were upon it alive; ſince Peter is afterwards called upon to kill and eat: and theſe deſign four-footed beaſts of every kind, that are tame, as diſtinct from the wild ones, after mentioned as horſes, camels, oxen, ſheep, hogs, dogs, &c. and wild beaſts; lions, tygers, panthers, bears, &c. This clauſe is left out in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions: and creeping things; the above copy and verſions here add, of the earth, which they omit in the firſt clauſe; theſe intend ſerpents, ſnakes, worms, &c. and fowls of the air; birds of all ſorts: now the whole of this ſignifies, that the church of Chriſt under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, conſiſts of all ſorts of perſons, of all nations, Jews and Gentiles, the one being reckoned clean, the other unclean; of men of all ſorts of tempers and diſpoſitions, comparable to wild or tame beaſts; and of all ſorts of ſinners, who before converſion have been greater or leſſer ſinners; as well as denotes that the diſtinction of food under the ceremonial law was now ceaſed. This is not deſigned to repreſent that there are good and bad in Goſpel churches, as there certainly are; and much leſs that immoral perſons are to be received and retained there; but that thoſe who have been of the blackeſt character, if called by grace, ſhould be admitted into them; and chiefly to ſhew that Gentiles reckoned unclean, when converted, are not to be rejected.

Ver. 13. And there came a voice to him, &c.] Formed by an angel, or rather by Chriſt himſelf: riſe, Peter, kill and eat; he might be on his knees when he fell into this trance, being at prayer, and therefore is bid to riſe; and he is called by name, the more to encourage him to do as he was ordered; and he is bid to kill and eat of all the creatures without diſtinction, which were repreſented to him in the ſheet; and the deſign of this was to teach him, that both the diſtinction between clean and unclean creatures, in the law was now aboliſhed, and men might lawfully eat of whatſoever they pleaſed; and that he might and ſhould without any difference converſe with all ſorts of men, Jews and Gentiles, circumciſed and uncircumciſed, and preach the Goſpel to one as to another, and maintain a church communion and fellowſhip with all equally alike.

Ver. 14. But Peter ſaid, not ſo, Lord, &c.] God forbid I ſhould do this, ſo contrary to the law of God, and to my own practice, throughout the whole courſe of my life: for I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean; in a ceremonial ſenſe, which was in common uſe with Gentiles, but unclean by the law of Moſes: this ſhews that Peter as yet cloſely adhered to the ceremonial law, nor did he know that it was aboliſhed by Chriſt; and notwithſtanding the commiſſion given to him and the reſt of the apoſtles to preach the Goſpel to every creature, and the extraordinary gifts of ſpeaking with divers tongues for that purpoſe, beſtowed on them at the day of Pentecoſt; yet he and they remained greatly ſtrangers to the calling of the Gentiles, and the admitting of them to a civil and religious converſation with them; the knowledge of every truth was not at once communicated to them, but gradually, as it pleaſed the Lord to enlighten their minds.

Ver. 15. And the voice ſpake unto him again the ſecond time, &c.] The following words, what God hath cleanſed; that is, hath pronounced clean and lawful to be uſed, as he now had all ſorts of food, Matt. xv. 11. Rom. xiv. 14. 1 Tim. iv. 4. that call not thou common; or pronounce it to be unholy or unclean, and unlawful to be uſed: and the ſame holds good of men, as well as things; for as hereby the Lord inſtructed Peter, that there was nothing of itſelf common, or unclean, and unfit for uſe; ſo that no man, not any Gentile, Barbarian, Scythian, or be he who he would, was common or unclean, and his company to be avoided as ſuch. Diſtinctions both of men and meats were now to be laid aſide; and the Jews themſelves own, that what is now unclean, will be clean in the time to come, or the times of the Meſſiah; for they ſay[f], "every "beaſt which is unclean in this world, the holy "bleſſed God, מטהר אותה, cleanſes it, in the time "to come, (the times of the Meſſiah) as they were "at firſt clean to the ſons of Noah, Gen. ix. 3 "wherefore, as the herb was clean to all, and as the "beaſts were clean to the ſons of Noah; ſo alſo in "the time to come he will looſe what he has "bound, or forbidden." And particularly they obſerve, that a ſwine is called חזיר from חזר, to return, becauſe the Lord will return it unto Iſrael[g].

Ver. 16. This was done thrice, &c.] That is, either the voice ſpoke the ſame words three times, or the ſheet was let down three times; and it may be both; it may be, that every time the voice was ſpoke, the ſheet was let down: this was done, not with reſpect to any myſtical meaning in the number three, but for the confirmation of Peter, that he might be the more firmly aſſured of the truth of the things repreſented unto him: and the veſſel was received up again into heaven; to denote, that when the general aſſembly and church of the firſtborn, whoſe names are written in heaven, whether Jews or Gentiles, are all gathered in, by the preaching of the Goſpel to them, they will be taken up to heaven, their original and native place, and be for ever with the Lord; as well as to certify to Peter, that what was now ſhown him on earth, concerning the taking away the diſtinction of men and meats, was ratified in heaven.

Ver. 17. Now while Peter doubted in himſelf, &c.] For notwithſtanding what he had heard and ſeen, he had not at once a full knowledge of this matter. Beza's moſt ancient copy reads, as he was in himſelf, he doubted; that is, when he came to himſelf, for he was before, as it were, out of himſelf, and was in a trance, or exſtacy; and now being come to himſelf, and reflecting on what he had ſeen and heard, he had ſome doubts and heſitations in his mind: what this viſion which he had ſeen ſhould mean; what the veſſel or ſheet ſhould ſignify, what ſhould be meant by the four-footed beaſts, &c. why he ſhould be called to ariſe, and kill, and eat ſuch creatures, and what ſhould be deſigned by God's cleanſing them; and while he was revolving theſe things in his mind, and at ſome uncertainty about them, ſomething providentially happened, which was a key unto, and opened the whole viſion clearly to him: behold, the men which were ſent from Cornelius, had made enquiry for Simon's houſe; they were come to Joppa, and, according to the direction given them, had enquired and found out the houſe of Simon the tanner, where Peter was: and ſtood before the gate; of the houſe; perhaps knocking at it, in order to bring out ſomebody within to them, of whom they might enquire for Peter.

Ver. 18. And called, and aſked, &c.] That is, they called to the people of the houſe, Simon's family; and in a civil and courteous manner aſked them, whether Simon, which was ſurnamed Peter; which they ſaid to diſtinguiſh him from Simon the maſter of the houſe, and as Cornelius was directed, and they were inſtructed by him: concerning him they enquired, whether he were lodged there; the Ethiopic verſion adds, without any foundation for it, and the place where they called at was Peter's lodging room.

Ver. 19. While Peter thought on the viſion, &c.] Which greatly amuſed him, affected his mind, and employed his thoughts what ſhould be the meaning and deſign of it: the Spirit ſaid unto him; the holy Spirit of God, either by an articulate voice, or by making an impulſe on his mind: behold, three men ſeek thee; the Arabic verſion leaves out the word three: the Spirit of God is omniſcient, and knows all things; if the deep things of God, then much more man, and the things of man.

Ver. 20. Ariſe, therefore, and get thee down, &c.] From the top of the houſe where he was: and go with them; the three men to Ceſarea: doubting nothing; whether it is right or wrong, lawful or unlawful, to go with them, becauſe not Jews, but uncircumciſed Gentiles, laying aſide all ſuch Jewiſh ſcruples: for I have ſent them; the Spirit of God is ſaid to do what Cornelius did at his inſtigation and direction, ſignified by an angel he ſent to him, ver. 5, 8.

Ver. 21. Then Peter went down to the men, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion adds, from the third floor; to the place where the men were: the following clauſe, which were ſent unto him from Cornelius, is not in Beza's moſt ancient copy, nor in the Alexandrian copy, nor in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions: and ſaid, behold, I am he whom ye ſeek; without being called by any of the family he came down, and without being informed in that way who the men were enquiring for; it being ſuggeſted to him by the Spirit of God, he declared himſelf to be the perſon they were ſeeking after: and put this queſtion to them, what is the cauſe wherefore ye are come? for that was not intimated to him by the Spirit; it was only told him there were three men ſeeking him, and he was bid to go with them, without any ſcruple or heſitation; but what they came for, or he was to go with them about, was not ſuggeſted.

Ver. 22. And they ſaid, Cornelius, the centurion, &c.] A certain perſon by name, Cornelius, a Roman or Italian, as his name ſhows, and by office a centurion, that was over an hundred ſoldiers: a juſt man; before God, and in his ſight, thro' the imputation of Chriſt's righteouſneſs to him; and who was a new man, created in righteouſneſs and true holineſs; and lived ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly, and did juſtice between man and man; and ſo was juſt in the ſight of men, which was very rare in a Gentile, and in a ſoldier: and one that feareth God; the true God, the God of Iſrael, and worſhipped him, both internally and externally; for both ſorts of worſhip are included in the fear of God: and of good report among all the nation of the Jews; that knew any thing of him, eſpecially at Ceſarea, where many Jews, and even many of their moſt celebrated doctors lived: and this is the rather obſerved, to induce Peter, a Jew, to go along with them to him, ſince his character was ſo very good, and he was in ſo much credit and eſteem with the people; for he muſt be ſomething extraordinary to have their good word, who had ſuch an abhorrence of uncircumciſed Gentiles in general: this man, they add, was warned from God by an holy angel to ſend for thee into his houſe; they intimate hereby, that he did not ſend for him of himſelf, he was not led to it by any fancy of his own, or any curioſity in him; nor ſhould he have preſumed to have uſed ſuch freedom with Peter, but that he had ſome inſtructions from God himſelf, who had ſent an holy angel to him, and had ordered him to ſend men to Joppa, and fetch Peter from thence to his houſe, for the end next mentioned: and to hear words of thee; the doctrines of the Goſpel, and the ordinances of it; that being taught by the one, he and his might ſubmit to the other.

Ver. 23. Then called he them in, &c.] Into Simon's houſe; not into his own houſe, as the Ethiopic verſion adds; as yet they ſtood without, before the gate of the houſe; he took them in, no doubt, with the leave of Simon, his hoſt, and ſet proviſions before them, and lodged them that night: and in the morning Peter went away with them; the next morning he ſet out with them towards Ceſarea: and certain brethren from Joppa accompanied him; there were ſix of them, as appears from ch. xi. 12. theſe went with him, not only to bear him company, and out of reſpect to him; but to be witneſſes of what might be ſeen, heard, ſaid, or done, and for Peter, ſhould there be any occaſion for it, as there afterwards was.

Ver. 24. And the morrow after they entered into Ceſarea, &c.] So that they were one day, and part of another, on their journey: and Cornelius waited for them; he had an eager deſire to hear the word from Peter's mouth, and was longing and looking for the coming of him, with the men he ſent for him; and he and his family were in a waiting poſture, and ready to hear the word, when the apoſtle of Chriſt ſhould come: it would be well if this was always the caſe of the hearers of the word, to aſſemble before their miniſters come; and be waiting for them, and in full expectation of them, and ready to receive them, and the words of grace which drop from their lips: and had called together his kinſmen and near friends; or neceſſary ones; not only his relations according to the fleſh, which might be in the Italian band, but his moſt familiar acquaintance, with whom he was in the ſtricteſt friendſhip; who may be called neceſſary, as they are both by the Greeks and Romans, becauſe they are often neceſſary for aſſiſtance and counſel: this ſhows the true grace of God in him, which wherever it is, puts a man on ſeeking after the ſpiritual and eternal welfare of all with whom he is concerned, and eſpecially his relatives and friends.

Ver. 25. And as Peter was coming in, &c.] Not into the city of Ceſarea, for his entrance there is mentioned before, but into the houſe of Cornelius: Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet; to teſtify his great affection for him, and reverence of him: and worſhipped him; not with a religious adoration, or with worſhip due to God; for that would have been contrary to his character as a devout man, and one that feared God; but with civil worſhip and reſpect, in which he might exceed juſt bounds, and therefore is reproved by Peter; nor could he take him for an angel of God, or for one ſent immediately from heaven to him; for he had been informed who he was, and what he was, and from whence he came, and what he was to do.

Ver. 26. But Peter took him up, &c.] As he lay at his feet, and lifted him up and ſet him on his legs: ſaying, ſtand up; and continue in this poſture: I myſelf alſo am a man; a mortal man, a man of like paſſions with others, no better than others by nature: and it was by grace, and not any merit of his own, that he was a believer in Chriſt, and an apoſtle of his; and therefore he choſe not to have any diſtinguiſhing homage and reſpect paid to him, and eſpecially in any exceſſive and extravagant way; which though not deſigned, might carry in it a ſuggeſtion, as if he was more than a man.

Ver. 27. And as he talked with him, &c.] About the exceſſive reſpect he ſhowed him, and his own infirmity and frailty, and unworthineſs, as a creature: he went in; to Cornelius's houſe, at the door, and through the porch, to ſome interior room and apartment in it: and found many that were come together; beſides his family, many of his relations and intimate friends, whom he had got together on this occaſion, that they might receive ſome advantage, as well as himſelf.

Ver. 28. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] The whole company that were met together, who were chiefly, if not altogether Gentiles: ye know that it is an unlawful thing; what is forbidden by the law of Moſes, Deut. vii. 2, 3. and by the traditions of the elders, which carry the matter further than the law did, and made it very criminal: for a man that is a Jew, to keep company with, or come unto one of another nation; beſides entering into covenants and marriages with them, which were forbidden by the law, though they allowed of trade and commerce with the Gentiles, yet not any familiar converſation with them; it was prohibited to eat, and drink any ſort of liquor with them in their houſes[h], nor might they walk with them in the ſtreets, or on the road; ſays Maimonides[i], "it is forbidden a Jew to unite himſelf to Gentiles, becauſe they are ſuſpected of ſhedding blood, and he may not join himſelf with them in the way; if he meets a Gentile in the way, he cauſes him to turn to the right-hand; if they aſcend by an aſcent, or deſcend by a deſcent, the Iſraelite may not be below, and the Gentile above; but the Iſraelite muſt be above, and the Gentile below, leſt he ſhould fall upon him and kill him; and he may not go even with (or a long ſide by him) leſt he break his ſkull." It is ſaid[k] of ſome Rabbins, that they ſaw a certain man coming; "ſays R. "Chiyah, let us be gone, perhaps this man is an "idolatrous Gentile, or one of the people of the "earth, and it is forbidden to join with him in the "way." They looked upon the houſes of Gentiles unclean, and therefore would not enter into them; ſee the note on John xviii. 28. yea they ſay [l], that "the court of a ſtranger (or Gentile) is as the ha- "bitation of a beaſt." Such an averſion was there in that people, to all civil ſociety with Gentiles: and ſo Apollonius ſays of them [m], that "they not "only departed from the Romans, but from all "men, living a ſeparate life from others; nor did "they communicate at table with others, neither "in things ſacred, nor in any ceremonies;" and this was well known to Jews and Gentiles: but God hath ſhewed me; partly by the viſion he had ſeen, and partly by diſcourſe with the men that came from Cornelius to him; and by comparing the viſion and their meſſage to him together, he ſaw that he was not obliged to abide by the cuſtoms and laws of the Jews: but was ſhewed, as he ſays, that I ſhould not call any man common or unclean; that is, in a ceremonial ſenſe; for otherwiſe, all by nature are morally unclean; and none are pure, but ſuch who are waſhed in the blood of Chriſt, and are juſtified by his righteouſneſs, and ſanctified by his Spirit: he ſaw there was now no difference between Jew and Gentile; that the one was not clean becauſe of his circumciſion, nor the other unclean on account of his uncircumciſion, or to be avoided for that reaſon; that the Goſpel was to be preached to all; and that every believer of whatſoever nation, was acceptable to God, and ought to be regarded by his miniſters and people.

[i] Hilchot Rotzeach, c. 12. §. 7.

[k] Zohar in Exod fol. 21. 1.

Ver. 29. Therefore came I unto you without gainſaying, &c.] Readily and chearfully, without objecting to it, or ſaying one word againſt it, or making any excuſe to put it off: as ſoon as I was ſent for; he immediately conſented to go, as ſoon as ever the meſſengers from Cornelius acquainted him with their meſſage, being previouſly directed ſo to do by the Spirit of God; though he did not ſet out with them till the next day, it being more ſuitable and convenient: I aſk therefore for what intent ye have ſent for me? this he ſaid, not as ignorant of the true cauſe, for he had enquired of the meſſengers, who had informed him of the reaſon of it; but he was willing to have it from the mouth of Cornelius himſelf; not only for further confirmation's ſake, but for order ſake, to lead him on regularly to what he had to ſay.

Ver. 30. And Cornelius ſaid, &c.] The Syriac verſion adds, to him, to the apoſtle; the following he ſaid, in a very ſubmiſſive and humble manner: four days ago I was faſting unto this hour; in the Greek text it is, from the fourth day unto this hour I was faſting; which looks as if he had been faſting four days, and was ſtill faſting at that hour; though the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions, leave out the phraſe I was faſting: but the ſenſe which our verſion and others give, is the trueſt; that four days ago, or reckoning four days back, Cornelius was faſting on that day, until ſuch time in that day, as now it was in this preſent day; and which perhaps might be the ninth hour, or three o'clock in the afternoon: the account of days exactly agrees; as ſoon as Cornelius had had the viſion, he ſends men to Joppa, which was one day; on the morrow they came to Joppa, which makes two days; Peter lodged them all night there, and the next day ſet out on the journey with them, ſo you have three days; and the day after that, which was the fourth, he entered into Ceſarea, and came to Cornelius's houſe, where he now was: and at the ninth hour I prayed in my houſe; which was one of the ſtated times of prayer; ſee the note on ch. iii. 1. And behold a man ſtood before me in bright clothing; or in a white garment; as the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read; which was an emblem of the excellency, glory, and purity of the angel, and of the divine majeſty in him; he calls him a man, becauſe he appeared in the form of one, as angels uſed to do.

Ver. 31. And ſaid, Cornelius, thy prayer is heard, &c.] What he was now particularly making to God, as well as others he had before put up to him: and thine alms are had in remembrance in the ſight of God; ſee the note on ver. 4.

Ver. 32. Send therefore to Joppa, &c.] See the notes on ver. 5, 6. the laſt clauſe, who when he cometh ſhall ſpeak unto thee, is left out in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions, but agrees with ver. 6, 22.

Ver. 33. Immediately therefore I ſent unto thee, &c.] This he ſaid, to ſhow his obedience to the heavenly viſion, and his faith in it; and to remove from himſelf, any ſuſpicion of pride, vanity, and imperiouſneſs: he did not ſend for the apoſtle of himſelf, but by a divine order; which as ſoon as he had, he executed; for the ſelf-ſame hour, he called his ſervants and gave them their inſtructions, and ſent them away: and thou haſt well done, that thou art come; a phraſe expreſſive of benignity and goodneſs in Peter, and of thankfulneſs to him for his coming; it was not only doing that which was right in the ſight of God, but was kind in him, and acceptable to Cornelius and his houſe: now therefore are we all here preſent before God; the ſearcher of hearts, the omniſcient God, who knew the ſincerity of their intentions in meeting together, and the eagerneſs of their ſouls, and their fervent deſire to hear the word: it is a ſort of an appeal to God, for the truth of all this: in Beza's moſt ancient copy, and in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, it is read before thee; before the apoſtle: to hear all things that are commanded thee of God; or of the Lord, as the Alexandrian copy and the Vulgate Latin verſions read; that is, of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and deſigns all things, both with reſpect to doctrine and practice, which Chriſt had commanded his apoſtles to teach; and particularly, what he had ordered Peter to inſtruct Cornelius and his friends in.

Ver. 34. Then Peter opened his mouth, &c.] See the note on ch. viii. 35. And ſaid, of a truth I perceive that God is no reſpecter of perſons; which is to be underſtood, not of the ſubſtances of men, but of the outward ſtate and condition, circumſtances and qualities of men; he reſpects the proper perſons of men themſelves, but not becauſe of their outward appearances; he does not prefer or deſpiſe men, becauſe of their being of this or the other nation, as Jews or Gentiles; or becauſe they are circumciſed, or not circumciſed; or becauſe they are high or low, rich or poor, free or bound, or the like: the true ſenſe here is, that God valued no man the more, becauſe he was a Jew and circumciſed, nor any one the leſs, becauſe he was a Gentile and uncircumciſed; and this the apoſtle found to be a moſt certain truth, of which he was fully perſuaded; partly by the viſion which he himſelf ſaw, and partly by that which Cornelius had, and which the more confirmed him in this matter:

[m] Philoſtrat. vita Apollon. l. 5. c. 11.

theſe words do not at all militate againſt the doctrines of perſonal election and reprobation; and indeed, thoſe acts in God, are not according to the outward ſtate and condition of men, or any circumſtances that attend them, or any qualities they have, internal or external; but entirely proceed from the ſovereign will of God; ſee the note on Rom. ii. 11.

Ver. 35. But in every nation, &c.] In any Gentile nation in the Roman empire, and in any part, even in Scythia, or in the moſt uncultivated parts of the univerſe, as well as in Judea: he that feareth him; God, not with a ſlaviſh fear, or with the fear of puniſhment, to be inflicted by him, with a fear of hell and damnation, with which Cain, Pharaoh, Judas, and even the devils themſelves have feared him; nor with an hypocritical fear; but with a godly, filial fear; which is a new covenant bleſſing, ſprings from the love of God, is a grace implanted in the ſoul in regeneration, and includes all true religion, both external and internal; and faith among the reſt, without which it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, or do works of righteouſneſs acceptable in his ſight, as it follows: and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted with him; that is, he who from ſuch principles, as the fear of the Lord, love to him, and faith in Chriſt, does works of righteouſneſs, particularly alms, as Cornelius did, and which the Jews often call, צדקה, righteouſneſs; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 1. ſuch an one is acceptable, or well-pleaſing to God, let him be of what nation he will: it ſhould be obſerved, that though God accepts of ſuch who fear him, and work righteouſneſs from a right principle, and to a right end, without any regard to their being circumciſed, or not circumciſed, or to their being of this or the other nation, yet their fear of him and working righteouſneſs, are not the ground of their acceptance; but are to be conſidered as deſcriptive of the perſons, who are accepted by him in Chriſt; for there is no acceptance of perſons or ſervices, but in Chriſt Jeſus: the Jews themſelves ſay, that "the godly of the nations of the world, ſhall have their part and portion in the world to come [n]."

Ver. 36. The word which God ſent unto the children of Iſrael, &c.] Now the apoſtle enters on his ſermon or diſcourſe, of which the above were only a preface, or an introduction; and his ſenſe is, that the doctrine which he was now about to preach to them, was the doctrine of the Goſpel; which it pleaſed God of his infinite wiſdom and rich grace, to ſend firſt to the people of the Jews, by the miniſtry of the apoſtles: this word is ſometimes called the word of God, of which he is the author; and the word of Chriſt, of which he is the ſum and ſubſtance; and the word of ſalvation, ſalvation by Chriſt alone, being the principal part of it; and the word of righteouſneſs, becauſe therein is the righteouſneſs of Chriſt revealed, from faith to faith; and the word of faith itſelf, becauſe it is the means by which faith comes; and the word of truth, becauſe it contains nothing but truth; and ſometimes the word of reconciliation, becauſe it publiſhes peace and reconciliation by Chriſt, as is hereafter ſignified; this word God is ſaid to ſend; which ſhows that it comes from him, and is of a divine original, and therefore ought to be received, not as the word of man, but as the word of God; and it may be ſaid to be ſent, becauſe the apoſtles were ſent with it by Chriſt; who ordained them, and ſent them forth to preach it in the ſeveral cities of Judea; and which ſhows that Chriſt is God, who ſent this word by them, and ſo the text is a proof of his deity; and this was ſent to the children of Iſrael, and to them only at firſt; the apoſtles were forbidden going in the way of the Gentiles, or entering into any of the cities of the Samaritans; and though their commiſſion was now enlarged, and they might go to the Gentiles, as yet they had not done it, only publiſhed the Goſpel to the Jews: the ſubſtance of which was, preaching peace by Jeſus Chriſt; that word preached, or the apoſtles in the miniſtry of it preached; or rather God, who ſent the word by them, preached through them, the doctrine of peace and reconciliation by the blood of Chriſt; and this being ſo principal a doctrine of the Goſpel, the whole is called from it, the Goſpel of peace, and the word of reconciliation: by peace here is meant, not peace with the creatures of the earth, the beaſts of the field, which through the ſin of men, are become troubleſome to them; nor peace with men, which is deſireable, and to be ſought after, and to a good man the Lord makes his enemies to be at peace with him; nor peace with the ſaints, which ought by all means to be maintained, and which ſhould rule in the hearts of God's people, and to which the Goſpel calls them; but peace with God, which was broken by the ſin of man, which filled his mind with enmity to God; and now he is uncapable of reſtoring it, and reconciling himſelf to God; he has neither diſpoſition, nor ability to perform it; but Chriſt is the ſole author of it: a council of peace was held, in which the ſcheme of it was drawn; a covenant of peace was entered into, between the Father and the Son; Chriſt was provided, promiſed, and propheſied of, as the peace-maker; he came into the world for this purpoſe; the chaſtizement of our peace was laid on him, and he procured it by his obedience, ſufferings, and death: and this is what the Goſpel publiſhes; not peace made by men, by their repentance, humiliation, and works of righteouſneſs; but made by Chriſt, the prince of peace, by his blood and ſacrifice; and not as to be made by him, or any other, but as already made; being not only a plan drawn, but executed, a finiſhed work; and that not conditionally, if men will repent, believe, and obey, but abſolutely, as a thing done, and not dependant on any condition required of man; and a wonderful bleſſing this is, being made on honourable terms, and ſo laſting, and bringing with it a train of other bleſſings; and this being an article in the Goſpel, makes that to be good news, and glad tidings indeed: and theſe doctrines of peace with God by the blood of Chriſt, and reconciliation for ſin by his ſacrifice, were to be preached to them that were afar off, and to them that are nigh, both to the Jews and Gentiles; to ſtrengthen which obſervation, the following clauſe put into a parentheſis is added, he is Lord of all; of the whole world, and all things in it; of all the nations of the world, Gentiles as well as Jews, and particularly of God's elect among them both; and therefore he will have the Goſpel preached to one, as to another; ſee Eph. ii. 17.

Ver. 37. The word (I ſay) you know, &c.] By common fame and report, which had for ſome years paſt been publiſhed by John, Chriſt and his apoſtles, in Judea and Galilee; eſpecially ſome parts of it, or points in it, ſuch as the apoſtle hereafter mentions muſt have reached their ears: which was publiſhed throughout all Judea; by Chriſt, his twelve apoſtles, and ſeventy diſciples; who were ſent out by him into all places, where he himſelf would come: and began from Galilee, after the baptiſm which John preached; that is, after John had began to preach the ordinance of water baptiſm, and to adminiſter it; which were done, to ſet the Jews enquiring after the Meſſiah, and to make him manifeſt in Iſrael; upon which the word of the Goſpel quickly began to be preached by Chriſt and his apoſtles, and that in Galilee; for here Chriſt began to preach himſelf, and here he called his apoſtles, and ſent them forth to preach it.

Ver. 38. How God anointed Jeſus of Nazareth, &c.] And ſo declared him to be the Meſſiah, that was promiſed to the Jews, and expected by them; the anointed prophet, prieſt, and king; who becauſe his parents lived at Nazareth, and he was educated there, and there he chiefly preached and wrought his miracles, he was by way of contempt called Jeſus of Nazareth: and him God anointed, with the Holy Ghoſt and with power; with the gifts and graces of the Spirit, without meaſure; ſignified by the deſcent of the Spirit, as a dove upon him at his baptiſm, and is what in Pſal. xlv. 7. is called, the oil of gladneſs. The perſon anointed, is elſewhere repreſented as a divine perſon; as God, and the Son of God, Pſal. ii. 6, 7. and xlv. 6, 7. but here under his moſt contemptible character, by which he was known among men, becauſe it was in his human nature that he was anointed; and this anointing belongs to him, as conſidered in his office capacity; from whence he is called the Chriſt, or anointed of God. The anointer of him is God, which muſt be underſtood of God the Father, who is the God of Chriſt, and the ſame that anoints his people, 2 Cor. i. 21. and none but God can anoint with the Holy Ghoſt; and he it is, with whom Chriſt is here ſaid to be anointed; who is compared to oil, in alluſion to the anointing oil under the former diſpenſation, uſed for the anointing of perſons, prophets, prieſts, and kings, and of the tabernacle, and the veſſels of it; to the oil that was poured on Aaron's head, which ran down to the ſkirts of his garments, emblematical of the Spirit poured on Chriſt, the head, and which from him deſcends to all the members of his body; and to common oil, both for ornament and refreſhment: power is added, which is but another name for the Holy Spirit, Luke xxiv. 49. And one particular branch of the extraordinary and immeaſurable gifts of the Spirit, beſtowed on him as man, was a power of doing miracles: for it follows, who went about; the land of Judea, and all Galilee; which ſhows laboriousneſs, diligence, and delight: doing good; both to the bodies and ſouls of men; to the latter, by preaching the Goſpel to them; and to the former, by curing all their diſeaſes, of whatſoever ſort: he did what none of Adam's ſons could do, for there is none of them that does good, no not one, Rom. iii. 10. he was good himſelf, eſſentially and naturally good, and therefore he did good, and he did nothing but good; he knew no ſin, he did none, nor could any be found in him; and he always did good, that which was according to the will of God, and well pleaſing in his ſight; and without him no good is done, even by his own people; they have all the grace and ſtrength from him, by which they perform the good things they do: he is the reverſe of ſatan, who goes about doing all the miſchief he can; and he is to be imitated by his followers, who as they have opportunity, ſhould do good to all men, eſpecially to the houſhold of faith. And healing all that were oppreſſed of the devil; both in body, as lunaticks, epilepticks, and demoniacks; and in ſoul, ſuch as were led captive by him: for God was with him; as his Son, eſſentially, through union to him; and as man, from his cradle to his croſs, ſupporting and aſſiſting him, and with his gracious preſence comforting him; and by various inſtances, ſhowing that he came from heaven, and had a divine miſſion and commiſſion; which had he not, he would never have been encouraged and aſſiſted as he was, as man, and could never have done the things he did: the Ethiopic verſion very wrongly reads, for God was them; ſee John iii. 2. and viii. 29.

Ver. 39. And we are witneſſes of all things, &c.] That is, Peter and the reſt of the apoſtles, were witneſſes, even eye-witneſſes, of Chriſt's going about from place to place, and of the good he did every where, and of the miracles which he wrought; and even of every thing which he did both in the land of the Jews; which takes in not only Judea, but Galilee, and beyond Jordan; and in Jeruſalem; the metropolis of Judea: whom they ſlew and hanged on a tree; whom the Jews put to death; for ſince it was by their inſtigation, and at their requeſt, it is aſcribed to them; and who not content with any death, deſired he might be crucified, or hanged on a tree; partly becauſe of the pain and torture of it, and partly becauſe of the ſhame and ignominy that attended it; as well as to throw off the ſcandal of his death from themſelves to the Romans, crucifixion being a Roman puniſhment.

Ver. 40. Him God raiſed up the third day, &c.] According to the ſcriptures, particularly Hoſ. vi. 2. The reſurrection of Chriſt, though it is ſometimes aſcribed to himſelf, as God, whereby he was declared to be the Son of God, yet generally to God the Father, as here: and ſhewed him openly; in a glorious body, and yet numerically the ſame he before lived and ſuffered in, ſo as to be heard, ſeen, and handled; by which full proof was given of the truth of his reſurrection, in which he appeared to be the conqueror over death and the grave.

Ver. 41. Not to all the people, &c.] Of the Jews, who crucified him; nor to the whole body of the chriſtians, though at one time to a large number, even five hundred brethren at once: but unto witneſſes choſen before of God; by Chriſt himſelf, who is God: even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he roſe from the dead; namely to the apoſtles, with whom he familiarly converſed by times, for the ſpace of forty days after his reſurrection; and Beza's moſt ancient copy, and the Ethiopic verſion here add, forty days; and particularly he did ſometimes eat and drink with them; ſee Luke xxiv. 42, 43. John xxi. 12, 15. and though drinking is not mentioned, it is included in eating, as in Luke vii. 36. wherefore there is no need to connect the laſt clauſe, after he roſe from the dead, with the latter part of the preceding verſe as ſome do, on that account.

Ver. 42. And he commanded us to preach unto the people, &c.] Not only of the Jews, but of the Gentiles; to all nations, to the whole world, and every creature; for the apoſtle ſeems to refer to the commiſſion given to him, and the reſt of the apoſtles, after Chriſt's reſurrection, Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. Mark xvi. 15, 16. And to teſtify that it is he which was ordained of God, to be the judge of quick and dead: the preaching of the Goſpel is a teſtification of Chriſt, or a bearing a teſtimony for him; and among the reſt to this truth, that he was from all eternity in the council and covenant of grace, appointed by God to have all power in heaven and in earth; and not only to judge and govern his church and people on earth, but to be the judge of all men at the laſt day, of ſuch who will be found alive at his coming, and of thoſe that are dead; who will be raiſed again, and ſtand before his judgment-ſeat, to receive their proper ſentence; and though this is not expreſſed in the commiſſion given the apoſtles, yet is implied therein; ſee Matt. xxviii. 18. That there will be a general judgment at the laſt day is certain, from the reaſon of things; from the relation of creatures to God as their creator, to whom they are accountable for their conduct and actions; from the juſtice of God, which requires it, which does not take place in the preſent ſtate of things; and it has a teſtimony in the conſciences of men, which the moſt daring of infidels, at times, ſhew by the fears they are poſſeſſed of about it; and it is abundantly clear from revelation, from the writings of the Old and New Teſtament: from whence it appears that it is future, it is yet to come; that it is certain, being appointed by God, though the time to men is uncertain; that it will be univerſal, and reach to all men, righteous and wicked, quick and dead, and to all actions, good and bad, open and ſecret; and that it will be a righteous one, and be adminiſtered according to the ſtricteſt rules of juſtice and equity; and that it is an eternal one; not that it will be ever carrying on, but will iſſue in the determination of the ſtates of men to all eternity: now Chriſt he is appointed to do this work, he was ordained unto it in the purpoſes of God from everlaſting; this was ſettled in the covenant between them; and for the execution of which, he has all power and authority given him as mediator; and for it he is every way qualified: he is of great and infinite majeſty, being the mighty God; of great ſagacity and wiſdom, having as mediator, the ſpirit of wiſdom and knowledge upon him, whereby he is of quick underſtanding and diſcernment; and he is of great faithfulneſs and integrity, and will judge not after the ſight of his eyes, and the hearing of his ears, but with righteouſneſs and equity, and will do the thing that is right; and eſpecially, inaſmuch as he is omniſcient, and knows the ſecrets of all hearts, and ſo capable of bringing every work into judgment, with every ſecret thing; and alſo omnipotent, and ſo able to raiſe the dead, ſummon all nations before him, ſeparate the wicked and the righteous, and not only denounce the proper ſentences upon them, but execute them.

Ver. 43. To him give all the prophets witneſs, &c.] As David, Pſal. xxxii. 1, 2, 5. and ciii. 3. Iſaiah, chap. xliii. 25. and xliv. 22. and liii. 5. and lv. 7. Jeremiah, chap. xxxi. 34. Ezekiel, chap. xxxvi. 25. Daniel, chap. ix. 9, 24. Hoſea, chap. xiv. 2, 4. Micah, chap. vii. 18. Zachariah, chap. iii. 4, 9. and xiii. 1. Malachi, chap. iii. 17. that thro' his name, whoſoever believeth in him, ſhall receive the remiſſion of ſins; the meaning is, that whoever believes in Chriſt with a right and true faith, with the heart, he ſhall receive, not as what his faith procures or deſerves, but as a gift of God's grace, the free and full forgiveneſs of his ſins, thro' Chriſt; thro' the effuſion of his blood, and the virtue of his ſacrifice. Chriſt was ſet forth in the purpoſes of God, in the types, figures, and ſacrifices of the law, and in the promiſes and propheſies of the Old Teſtament, as he that ſhould obtain the remiſſion of ſins by his blood, without which there is no remiſſion: he came in the fulneſs of time, and ſhed his blood for this purpoſe, and accordingly it is procured by it; and this is publiſhed in the everlaſting Goſpel, that whoever believes in Chriſt, not with an hiſtorical or temporary faith, or in profeſſion only, but with the faith of God's elect, which is the gift of God, and the operation of his Spirit, which works by love, and makes Chriſt precious, ſhall receive it as a free gift; for it is not to be purchaſed by money, nor obtained by works of righteouſneſs, nor procured by repentance, or by any thing done by the creature, but is according to the riches of divine grace and mercy: through the name of Chriſt; through the blood of Chriſt, which was ſhed for it; thro' the power of Chriſt, as God, who is able to forgive it; and thro' the hands of Chriſt, as mediator, who is exalted to beſtow it; and for the ſake of Chriſt, and his mediation, whoſe blood calls aloud for it; and whoever looks by faith to him for it, ſhall have it, of whatſoever ſex, ſtate, or condition they be, of whatſoever people or nation, and how great ſinners ſoever they have been, and whether they are weak or ſtrong believers. Some copies read, through his blood.

Ver. 44. While Peter yet ſpake theſe words, &c.] As he was thus diſcourſing concerning Chriſt, his perſon, his miracles, his death and reſurrection, and the efficacy of his blood for pardon; before he had done ſpeaking, the holy Ghoſt fell on all them which heard the word. This is not to be underſtood of the operations of the Spirit of God upon the ſouls of men, under the miniſtry of the word; though true it is, that the Spirit of God attends the preaching of the Goſpel, and not only qualifies men for it, and aſſiſts them in it, but makes it effectual to many that hear it: hearers of the word lie in the way of the gracious operations of the Spirit; and the gifts and graces of the Spirit are given to perſons, or the Spirit falls upon them under ſuch means: which may denote the original of the grace of the Spirit, it falls down from above, from heaven; the freeneſs of it, it is beſtowed on whom he pleaſes, under the ſame miniſtry; the ſuddenneſs of it, it comes at once, unthought of, and undeſired, as well as undeſerved; the power and efficacy of it, it falls with weight, it melts the heart, and converts the ſinner; and the plenty of it, it falls in abundance, it is exceeding abundant with faith and love; and the permanency of it, it continues where it falls, and is a well of living water ſpringing up unto everlaſting life; and alſo the inviſibility of it unto others. But this is not here intended, at leaſt it is not only deſigned; for tho' the Spirit of God, in the operations of his grace, might fall upon them that heard the word, whereby they were regenerated, converted, and ſanctified, and ſo became proper ſubjects for baptiſm; yet alſo the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit came upon them, as they were hearing; not upon the men, the believing Jews, that came along with Peter; but upon Cornelius and his family, and upon all his relations and friends, who came together to hear the word at his invitation, and now were hearing it; and as they were, the Holy Ghoſt, in his miraculous gifts of ſpeaking with divers tongues, fell upon them in a viſible form, as upon the apoſtles on the day of Pentecoſt; for that it was in the ſame way ſeems probable from, chap. xi. 15. Theſe extraordinary gifts of the Spirit were neceſſary at the firſt preaching of the Goſpel to the Gentiles, for the confirmation of it; as well as for the further confirmation of Peter, that he was right in ſo doing; as alſo for the ſake of the believing Jews he brought along with him.

Ver. 45. And they of the circumciſion which believed, &c.] Or of the Jews that believed, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; the circumciſed Jews who believed in Jeſus Chriſt: were aſtoniſhed, as many as came with Peter; who were ſix brethren, as appears from chap. xi. 12. theſe were amazed, becauſe that on the Gentiles alſo was poured out of the gift of the Holy Ghoſt; which they before thought was peculiar to the Jews; and this was according to their former notions, and the ſentiments of the whole nation, that the Shekinah does not dwell without the land, and only in the land of Iſrael[o]; yea, they ſometimes ſay, only upon the families in Iſrael, whoſe genealogies are clear[p]: the ſame they ſay of prophecy[q], which is one of the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, and was one of thoſe which were now beſtowed. They own, that before the giving of the law, the Holy Ghoſt was among the Gentiles, but from that time ceaſed to be among them[r]: hence, even theſe believing Jews wonder at the pouring it forth upon them; which they needed not, had they known that the legal diſpenſation was now at an end, and the Goſpel-diſpenſation had taken place; in which it had been foretold the Spirit ſhould be poured forth on the dry ground of the Gentiles.

Ver. 46. For they heard them ſpeak with tongues, &c.] With divers tongues, which they had never learned, and before did not underſtand: and magnify God; they ſpoke of the wonderful works of God in theſe languages, as the Apoſtles did at pentecoſt, Acts ii. 11. they ſpoke greatly in the praiſe of God, and gave thanks for his rich grace and mercy beſtowed on them: then anſwered Peter; as follows.

Ver. 47. Can any man forbid water, &c.] The uſe of his river, or bath, or what conveniency he may have for baptizing perſons; which ſhows, that it required a place of ſome quantity of water, ſufficient for baptiſm by immerſion, otherwiſe it would not be in the power of any man to hinder them having a little water, to be ſprinkled or poured on the face: unleſs rather by water ſhould be meant baptiſm itſelf; and then the ſenſe is, who can forbid theſe perſons the ordinance of baptiſm, or deny the adminiſtration of it to them? for ſuch who have the ſpirit of Chriſt, are openly Chriſt's, and therefore have a right to his ordinances; ſuch being enlightened by him, are able to ſee to the end of the ordinance; and to ſuch only can it be of uſe, and they only can pleaſe God in it: nor ſhould it be forbidden them; this is to withſtand God, act contrary to the commiſſion of Chriſt, and reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt; no, not though Gentiles: converted Gentiles, have as good a right as any to this ordinance; deſcent from Abraham gives no right to it; there is no difference among men under the Goſpel-diſpenſation; Chriſt's commiſſion reaches both to Jews and Gentiles; and there is but one baptiſm for both. That theſe ſhould not be baptized; though they are uncircumciſed Gentiles: which have received the Holy Ghoſt as well as we; the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit; though, no doubt alſo, they had received the Spirit, as a ſpirit of illumination and conviction, as a ſpirit of regeneration, ſanctification, and converſion, and as a ſpirit of faith and adoption, and as a witneſs, earneſt, and pledge of future glory: and receiving him ſuppoſes, that they were without him before, and that he is a gift of God's free grace unto them; and which is no other than the baptiſm of the Spirit, and is a neceſſary prerequiſite to water-baptiſm; and they that have the one, are right ſubjects of the other; nor ought it to be denied them. From hence it appears that water-baptiſm is an ordinance of Chriſt, to be continued under the Goſpel-diſpenſation; it was not only what was practiſed in the times of John and of Chriſt, but what was practiſed by the apoſtles after the aſcenſion of Chriſt, in compliance with the commiſſion he gave, which could have reſpect to no other baptiſm; ſince the apoſtles were not capable of baptizing with any other, not with the baptiſm of the ſpirit: and it is certain from hence, and by other inſtances, that they did baptize in water; and from the apoſtle's queſtion it ſeems, that it muſt be by immerſion in water, as before obſerved; and from what follows it is clear, that ſuch who are partakers of the holy Spirit and his grace, are the proper ſubjects of it.

Ver. 48. And he commanded them to be baptized, &c.] By ſome of the ſix brethren that came with him from Joppa, who might all of them, at leaſt ſome of them, be miniſters of the Goſpel: and this he ordered to be done in the name of the Lord; that is, of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, tho' not to the excluſion of the Father, and of the Spirit: perhaps the phraſe, in the name of the Lord, may ſtand connected with the word commanded; and the ſenſe be, that in the name of the Lord, and by authority from him, he ordered them to be baptized: then prayed they him to tarry certain days; partly to expreſs their gratitude to him for the favour they had received thro' him as an inſtrument, and partly that they might be more inſtructed and eſtabliſhed by him. And theſe baptized perſons very likely laid the foundation of a Goſpel-church-ſtate in this place, which we find to continue in ſucceeding ages; in the ſecond century Theophilus preſided over it; and in the third century Origen and Pamphilus, were preſbyters of it; and in the ſame age ſucceeding one another, Theoctiſtus, Domnus and Theotecnus, were biſhops of it; and in the beginning of the fourth century, Euſebius the famous eccleſiaſtical hiſtorian was biſhop of this church, after him Acacius; in the fifth century Gelaſius the ſucceſſor of Eunomius bore the ſame office in it; and in the ſixth century the biſhop of this place was preſent in the fifth ſynod at Conſtantinople; and in the ſeventh century it appears there was a church in this place; in which century the Arabians, after they had beſieged this city ſeven years, took it, and killed ſeven thouſand perſons in it; and ſince it has been in the hands of the Turks; and this ſeems to have put an end to the eccleſiaſtical ſtate of this place, as chriſtian[s].

CHAP. XI.

Ver. 1. AND the apoſtles and brethren that were in Judea, &c.] The reſt of the twelve apoſtles, and the private members of the churches that were in Judea, for there were in it now more churches than that at Jeruſalem, chap. ix. 31. heard that the Gentiles had alſo received the word of God; as well as Samaria, chap. viii. 14. the news by ſome means or other were quickly brought to them, and no doubt but they alſo heard that they had received the Holy Ghoſt, his extraordinary gifts, as well as his ſpecial grace, tho' no mention is made of them.

Ver. 2. And when Peter was come up to Jeruſalem, &c.] From Ceſarea, after he had ſtayed ſome certain days in Cornelius's houſe; ſo a journey from Ceſarea to Jeruſalem, is called an aſcending from the one to the other, chap. 25. 1. becauſe Jeruſalem ſtood on higher ground, as well as was the metropolis of the country; and this was a journey of ſix hundred furlongs, or ſeventy-five miles, for ſo far according to Joſephus[t], was Ceſarea diſtant from Jeruſalem: they that were of the circumciſion; which phraſe deſigns not only the circumciſed Jews that believed in Chriſt, for ſuch were all they of the church at Jeruſalem, or at leaſt proſelytes that had been circumciſed, for as yet there were no uncircumciſed Gentiles among them; but thoſe of them, who were moſt ſtrenuous for circumciſion, and made it not only a bar of church communion, but even of civil converſation: theſe, contended with him; litigated the point, diſputed the matter with him, complained againſt him, and quarrelled with him. Epiphanius ſays[u], that Cerinthus that arch-heretick was at the head of this contention.

Ver. 3. Saying, thou wenteſt into men uncircumciſed, &c.] Into the houſes of ſuch, and lodged with them, and familiarly converſed with them: and didſt eat with them; which, according to the traditions of the Jews, were unlawful; ſee the note on chap. x. 28. they ſay nothing about his preaching to them, and baptizing them, becauſe theſe were ſo manifeſtly agreeable to the commiſſion of Chriſt, in Matt. xxviii. 19. Mark xvi. 15. and yet how theſe could be without the other, is not eaſy to ſay.

Ver. 4. But Peter rehearſed the matter from the beginning, &c.] Of the viſion at Joppa; and expounded it by order unto them; or related every particular, in a very methodical and orderly manner: he did not inſiſt upon his authority as an apoſtle, and much leſs pretended to a primacy to the reſt of the apoſtles; but ſubmitted to have his caſe heard, examined, and judged of by the body of the brethren.

Ver. 5. I was in the city of Joppa, &c.] And ſo it is called by Joſephus[w], and in 1 Maccab. x. 75. and 2 Maccab. xii. 3. here he was praying in an houſe of Simon the tanner, upon the top of it, and about the ſixth hour of the day, or twelve o'clock at noon, which was one of the times of prayer with the Jews; ſee the note on chap. x. 9. and in a trance I ſaw a viſion; with the eyes of his underſtanding; for the organs of his body were quite ſenſeleſs and uſeleſs, which was as follows: a certain veſſel deſcend, as it had been a great ſheet; a veſſel which looked like a great ſheet, let down from heaven by four corners; to the earth, which four corners were knit, and perhaps were held and let down by angels, and in this viſionary way were ſeen by Peter, tho' not expreſſed: and it came even to me; deſcended upon the houſe top where Peter was praying; and which was neceſſary, that he might ſee what was upon it, and receive inſtruction from it; and that it was very near him is evident from what is after ſaid to him, when he was bid to ariſe and kill and eat, what was upon it; and therefore it could not be hanging in the air, but muſt be let down upon the very ſpot where he was.

Ver. 6. Upon the which when I had faſtened mine eyes, &c.] Not of his body, but of his mind; for this was only in viſion preſented to him, when he was as Paul was, not knowing whether in the body or out of it: I conſidered; being intent upon this object, he conſidered in his mind what it was, and what it ſhould mean; it being ſomething ſtrange and unuſual, which came down from heaven, and out of it, and came ſo cloſe and near to him, that it engroſſed all his thoughts, and was the ſubject of deep meditation: and ſaw four-footed beaſts of the earth, and wild beaſts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air; not pourtrayed upon the ſheet, but ſtanding or walking upon it; the Syriac verſion leaves out, the wild beaſts; and the Ethiopic verſion, the creeping things; but both are in the Greek copies, and in other verſions.

Ver. 7. And I heard a voice ſaying unto me, &c.] As he apprehended in his mind; and this voice he heard in the ſame ſenſe and manner as the apoſtle Paul heard when in a trance, Acts xxii. 17, 18. 2 Cor. xii. 4. ariſe, Peter, ſlay and eat; that is, get up and ſlay ſome of theſe creatures upon the ſheet, and dreſs them and eat them.

Ver. 8. But I ſaid, not ſo, Lord, &c. For he took the voice he heard to be the voice of the Lord, and yet he was not obedient to the heavenly viſion, and even tho' he was an hungry; which ſhews what a ſtrict obſerver he was of the ceremonies of the law, and how much he was prejudiced in favour of them: for nothing common or unclean hath at any time entred into my mouth; he had not ſuffered any thing to come within his lips; he had not even taſted, and much leſs eat any thing that was forbidden by the ceremonial law, ſo ſtrictly had he obſerved it.

Ver. 9. But the voice anſwered me again from heaven, &c.] From whence the former voice came, and was the voice of the Lord, or of an angel of the Lord, and which anſwered him again, or a ſecond time; not that it ſaid to him a ſecond time kill and eat, but what follows; what God hath cleanſed, that call not thou common; that is, had declared to be clean and fit for uſe, and did not defile, and could not defile the man into whoſe mouth it entred, and therefore ought not to be pronounced unclean, and of a defiling nature; this Jeſus Chriſt did, who is God over all bleſſed for ever, and by whoſe death an end was put to the ceremonial law, and the diſtinctions of meats by it; ſee Matt. xv. 11. Rom. xiv. 14.

Ver. 10. And this was done three times, &c.] That is, the voice from heaven anſwered three times, and encouraged Peter to kill and eat; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, and he likewiſe ſaid unto me the third time; the words as before: and all were drawn up again into heaven; the ſheet with all the creatures upon it, by the ſame hands that let it down; the Syriac verſion renders it, and all betook themſelves to heaven; as if it all went up to heaven of itſelf; and the Ethiopic verſion, and the whole returned again to heaven; ſee the note on chap. x. 16.

Ver. 11. And behold, immediately, &c.] The moment the viſion was over; there were three men already come unto the houſe where I was; they ſtood before the gate, as in chap. x. 17. and as the Syriac and Ethiopic here have it, and were enquiring for Peter, whether he lodged there; and theſe men were, ſent from Ceſarea unto me; the Syriac verſion adds, by Cornelius: now this incident being juſt at the cloſe of the above viſion, ſerved greatly to explain it to the apoſtle, and encouraged him to do what he had done; and beſides which, he had alſo the expreſs order of the Spirit for his going with them to Cornelius's houſe, as follows.

Ver. 12. And the Spirit bade me go with them, nothing doubting, &c.] See the note on chap. x. 20. moreover, theſe ſix brethren accompanied me; it ſeems by this, that the ſix brethren that went along with Peter from Joppa to Cæſarea, came alſo with him from thence to Jeruſalem, and were now preſent, whom he points to; ſo that it looks as if Peter was aware, that he ſhould be called to an account for his conduct, when he ſhould come to Jeruſalem; and therefore brought theſe ſix brethren with him, to be witneſſes for him, of what they had ſeen and heard, which was a very wiſe and prudential ſtep: and we entred into the man's houſe; the houſe of Cornelius, for entring into whoſe houſe they were contending with him, and where he entred not alone, but the ſix brethren with him; the Ethiopic verſion wrongly reads three.

Ver. 13. And he ſhewed us how he had ſeen an angel in his houſe, &c.] The clauſe, in his houſe, is very appoſitely put; for ſince an angel had entered into his houſe, it could not be criminal in Peter, and the ſix brethren, to follow him. In one place he is called a man, and in another place an angel; ſee chap. x. 3, 30. becauſe, tho' he was an angel, yet he appeared in the form of a man, as it was uſual for angels to do; but whether Cornelius knew that he was an angel, is not certain, ſince he call him a man, and not he, but Luke the hiſtorian and Peter, who repeats the account of the viſion, call him an angel; however, he looked upon him as an extraordinary perſon, as ſent to him from God, and therefore obeyed the heavenly viſion. The Ethiopic verſion reads, an angel of God; which ſtood and ſaid unto him, ſend men to Joppa, and call for Simon, whoſe ſirname is Peter; ſee the note on chap. x. 5.

Ver. 14. Who ſhall tell thee words, &c.] Preach doctrines, ſuch as relate to the perſon and office of Chriſt, to peace and pardon, and righteouſneſs and ſalvation by him; ſuch as Peter did preach, as appears by his diſcourſe in the preceding chapter: whereby thou and all thy houſe ſhall be ſaved; that is, which would be a means of inſtructing him and his family in the right and true way of ſalvation; for the Goſpel only points out the way of ſalvation, and is only effectual to it, when it is accompanied with the power of God: multitudes hear it, and yet are not ſaved by it, and thoſe to whom it comes not in word only, but in power, are ſaved only by Chriſt, who is revealed in it, as God's way of ſalvation; it is not bare hearing the word and attending on Ordinances that will ſave any, only ſuch who believe in Chriſt with the heart, who is the ſum and ſubſtance of the Goſpel, are ſaved; and ſtill leſs are any ſaved by the faith of others; the houſe or family of Cornelius were not ſaved by his believing in Chriſt; but the words of faith and ſound doctrine being preached to them, as to him, and faith coming thereby to one as to another, they were ſaved in one and the ſame way, namely, thro' faith in Chriſt Jeſus.

Ver. 15. And as I began to ſpeak, &c.] That is, whilſt he was ſpeaking; the word begin with Luke both in his Goſpel and in this hiſtory, is uſed not to denote the time or order of any action, but the thing itſelf; as in Luke iv. 21. and xx. 9. Acts i. 1. for otherwiſe it was towards the cloſe, and not at the beginning of his diſcourſe, that what follows happened: the holy Ghoſt fell on them, as on us at the beginning; of our miniſtry, ſince the death, reſurrection, and aſcenſion of Chriſt; meaning on the day of Pentecoſt, and that the Holy Ghoſt fell on Cornelius and thoſe that were with him, in a like viſible form, and in the ſame kind of gifts as ſpeaking with tongues, as on them.

Ver. 16. Then remembred I the word of the Lord, how that he ſaid, &c.] Juſt before his aſcenſion, Acts i. 5. John indeed baptized with water, but ye ſhall be baptized with the holy Ghoſt; as they were on the day of Pentecoſt, and as now Cornelius and his family were; and ſince they had the greater baptiſm, the baptiſm of the Spirit, the leſſer baptiſm of water could not be denied them.

Ver. 17. Foraſmuch then as God gave them the like gift, &c.] Of the Spirit, of ſpeaking with divers tongues: as he did unto us; the apoſtles: who believed on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; which clauſe ſtands either connected with us the apoſtles, and ſo is deſcriptive of them who firſt believed in Chriſt, and became followers of him; or with them the Gentiles, as the Syriac verſion renders it, if therefore God gave that gift equally to theſe Gentiles which believed on our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as unto us; for it ſeems moſt likely, that faith in Chriſt came by hearing Peter's diſcourſe, before the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit fell upon them: what was I that I could withſtand God? or hinder the baptiſm of theſe perſons in water, whom God baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, and who believed in Chriſt Jeſus: from whence it appears that the Spirit of God is a gift, which he beſtows on whomſoever he pleaſes, without any deſert of man's, and that both in his extraordinary operations, and in the common influences of his grace; for it is equally the gift of God to believe in Chriſt, which is a grace of the Spirit, as it was to ſpeak with divers tongues; and theſe, tho' they did not always go together, yet here they did, as on the apoſtles, ſo on Cornelius and his houſe: and hence they became qualified for the ordinance of baptiſm; not by the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, but by his ſpecial grace; the extraordinary gifts were partly to confirm the Goſpel preached unto them by Peter; and partly to aſſure him that he was right in going in to the Gentiles, and preaching to them; and to encourage him to baptize theſe perſons who appeared to have alſo the grace of the Spirit, and to have believed in Chriſt; as well as to fit them, at leaſt ſome of them, for publick work and ſervice: and now faith in Chriſt being a prerequiſite to baptiſm, and it being the will of Chriſt, and what he gave in commiſſion to his diſciples to baptize ſuch as believed in him, and theſe being apparently ſuch; to have refuſed to adminiſter baptiſm to them, would have been acting contrary to the commiſſion of Chriſt, a withſtanding the will of God, and oppoſing the grace of the Spirit of God.

Ver. 18. When they heard theſe things, &c.] Peter's viſion at Joppa, and Cornelius's at Ceſarea, and the wonderful pouring forth of the Spirit upon theſe Gentiles under Peter's ſermon: they held their peace; and ceaſed contending and diſputing with Peter, or blaming him for his conduct; for otherwiſe they were not ſilent, but made uſe of their tongues: and glorified God; praiſed his name, adored his rich grace, and gave him the glory of all the wonderful things related to them: ſaying, then hath God alſo to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life. The phraſe unto life, is left out in the Ethiopic verſion, which only reads, God hath alſo given to the Gentiles that they ſhould repent; but it ought not to be omitted, being in the Greek copies in general, and of conſiderable moment rightly underſtood; the Arabic verſion directs to a wrong ſenſe of it, perhaps God hath given alſo to the Gentiles repentance, that they may live by it; the word perhaps, is very wrongly put inſtead of then, which affirms that God had given them repentance, whereas this makes a doubt of it; and upon a ſuppoſition of it, the verſion aſcribes too much to it; for it is not by repentance that men live ſpiritually, but by faith in Chriſt Jeſus; nor do they obtain eternal life by it, but by Chriſt; tho' true repentance is an evidence of ſpiritual life, and it begins with it, for as ſoon as ever God quickens a ſinner, he ſhews him the evil of ſin, and gives him repentance for it: repentance here deſigns the grace of evangelical repentance, which is attended with faith in Chriſt, as it was in theſe Gentiles, and with views of pardon in Chriſt, and which ſprings from the love of God, and this is unto life; is a repentance from dead works, and is attended with a life of faith, and iſſues in eternal life: and it is alſo a grant from God; it is not in the power of mans free-will, who tho' he may have time and means, yet if he has not grace given him to repent, he never will; his heart is hard and obdurate, and no means will do without an almighty power; not the moſt ſevere judgments, nor the greateſt mercies, nor the moſt powerful miniſtry; it is a pure gift of God's free-grace, and a bleſſing of the covenant of grace: and this being given to Gentiles, ſhews that the covenant of grace belongs to them; as well as to the Jews; and diſcovers a falſe opinion of the Jews, that the Gentiles ſhould not be ſaved; and anſwers the deſign of the Goſpel being ſent among them, whereby the doctrines both of repentance and remiſſion are preached unto them; and opens the glorious myſtery of the calling of them, and may encourage ſinners of the Gentiles to hope for this grace, and apply to Chriſt for it, who is exalted to give it.

Ver. 19. Now they which were ſcattered abroad, &c.] Theſe were not the Apoſtles, but the other miniſters of the word; ſee ch. viii. 1. who were diſperſed upon the perſecution that aroſe about Stephen; his preaching and miracles, his oration in defence of himſelf, and his death: theſe travelled as far as Phœnice; a country near to Syria and Galilee; its chief towns and cities were, Tripolis, Botrys, Biblus, Berytus, Tyre, Sidon, Ecdippa, Ptolemais, and Dora. It was famous, as Pliny ſays [x], for the invention of letters, and of the conſtellations, and of naval and warlike arts. It was a maritime country, reaching from Orthoſia, (now called Tortoſa) to Peluſium, or from Sidon to the borders of Egypt: it is the ſame with Old Canaan, and was ſo called, and had its name from Canaan; who, according to Sanchuniathon [y], alſo had the name of Phœnix, from whom this country was called Phœnice or Phœnicia. Some think the name is the ſame with פענק, Pabanak, or פאות ענק, Peoth Anak, the corners of the Anakites; it being the tract of land which the children of Anak, or the giants inhabited, when drove out of Hebron by Caleb, Joſh. xv. 13, 14. Others ſay, it had its name from the palm-trees, with which it abounded; and here, it ſeems, dwelt ſome of God's elect, who being made righteous, flouriſhed like the palm-trees: and Cyprus and Antioch; the former of theſe was an iſland, lying between the ſhores of Syria and Cilicia: it had Syria on the eaſt, Pamphilia on the weſt, and Phœnice on the ſouth, and Cilicia on the north; ſee the note on chap. iv. 36. and the latter was a city of Syria, built by Seleucus, king of Egypt, and called Antiochia, after his father's name Antiochus. The account Joſephus gives [z] of it is, that it is the metropolis of Syria, and that for its greatneſs, and other happineſs, it has, without doubt, the third place among the cities in the Roman empire; meaning, that it was the next to Rome and Alexandria: and elſewhere [a] he calls it the palace or royal ſeat of the Syrians; and the Jews, when they ſpeak of a great city, and would deſcribe one, inſtance in Antioch, a great city, ſay they [b], as Antioch; with them, it is the ſame as Hemath the Great, ſpoken of in Amos vi. 2. on which words Jerom has this note, "Hemath the "Great is what is now called Antioch; and it is "called the great, to diſtinguiſh it from the leſſer "Hemath, which is called Epiphania." And ſo the Jeruſalem-Targum on Gen. x. 18. renders the Hamathite, Antioch; and the Targum of Jonathan on Numb. xiii. 21. renders Hamath by Antioch. Here many Jews dwelt, to whom the miniſters of the word preached the Goſpel only at firſt. Joſephus [c] ſpeaks of many in this place, and gives reaſons for it: "the nation of the Jews, he ſays, was much ſpread "throughout the whole world, and great part of Syria, becauſe near, was mixed with them, eſpecially "there were many in Antioch; partly becauſe of "the greatneſs of the city, and chiefly becauſe of "the liberty of dwelling there, granted them by "the ſucceſſors of Antiochus; for Antiochus, called "Epiphanes, having waſted Jeruſalem, robbed the "temple; but thoſe that reigned after him, whatſoever among the things devoted to ſacred uſe "were of braſs, they returned to the Jews in Antioch, to be laid up in their ſynagogue; and "they granted to them equally to partake of the "city with the Greeks; and many of the Grecians "they brought over to their religion, and made "them, in ſome ſort, a part of themſelves." Here the Jews alſo had ſchools, and taught: it is ſaid [d], R. Samlai taught in Antioch; and here alſo was a Sanhedrim. It is often ſaid [e], that Nebuchadnezzar came and ſat down at Daphne of Antioch, and the great Sanhedrim went out to meet him. Now Antioch was formerly called Epidaphne, becauſe it was near a fountain of that name; and in the Targumiſts on Numb. xxxiv. 11. Daphne anſwers to Riblah, which was in the land of Hamath, 2 Kings xxiii. 33. and Riblah, Jerom [f] ſays, is what is now called Antioch of Syria: and that you may know, ſays he, that Riblah ſignifies this city, which is now the moſt noble in Cœle Syria, it follows, over-againſt the fountain; (in Numbers it is, on the eaſt-ſide of Ain) which, 'tis clear, ſignifies Daphne, out of which fountain the above-ſaid city enjoys abundance of water. And ſo Joſephus calls Antioch [g], Antiochia which is by Daphne of Syria; and in 2 Maccab. iv. 33. Daphne is ſaid to be by Antioch. Some make it to be two hundred and eighty miles from Jeruſalem. So far they went who were ſcattered abroad at Stephen's death, and carried the Goſpel to this and other places, in which there was a manifeſt appearance of divine providence, and of rich grace. Preaching the word to none but to the Jews only; which dwelt in thoſe parts; ſo little was the commiſſion of Chriſt, to preach the Goſpel to all nations, underſtood, though it was ſo plain; or ſo it was ordered in providence, that as it was to be firſt preached to them, ſo it ſhould be only for a while, till the elect of God of that generation were brought in, and until the reſt put it away from them, and ſo were left without excuſe.

[g] Antiq. l. 17. c. 2. §. 3.

Ver. 20. And ſome of them were men of Cyprus, &c.] That is, ſome of the preachers, that were ſcattered abroad, were Jews born at Cyprus: ſuch was Barnabas particularly, Acts iv. 36. tho' he was not among theſe, as appears from ver. 22. and Cyrene; ſuch were Simon that carried the croſs after Chriſt, and his ſons Alexander and Rufus, Mark xv. 21. and others that heard the Apoſtles ſpeak with tongues on the day of pentecoſt, ch. ii. 10. which when they were come to Antioch, ſpake unto the Grecians; or Helleniſt Jews, who were born and brought up in Greece, and ſpoke the Greek language; tho' the Alexandrian copy, and the Syriac verſion read, Greeks, as if they were native Greeks, and properly Gentiles, to whom theſe miniſters ſpoke the word of the Lord; but the former ſeems moſt likely. Preaching the Lord Jeſus; the dignity of his perſon, as the Son of God; what he did and ſuffered to obtain ſalvation for loſt ſinners; his reſurrection from the dead, aſcenſion to heaven, and interceſſion; the virtue of his blood for peace and pardon, of his ſacrifice for atonement of ſin, and of his righteouſneſs for juſtification.

Ver. 21. And the hand of the Lord was with them, &c.] Not only his hand of providence, which brought them thither, and protected them; and his hand of love, grace, and mercy, which was upon them, and ſupplied them with gifts and grace, and every thing neceſſary for them; and his hand of wiſdom, which guided and directed them; but his hand of power, the ſame with the arm of the Lord, which when revealed, and made bare, the report of the Goſpel is believed: but if that is not put forth, or efficacious grace is not exerted, no work is done, none are brought to believe, or are converted; miniſters labour in vain, and ſpend their ſtrength for nought: but this was not the caſe here, it was otherwiſe with theſe preachers; tho' they had travelled many miles, and were come into ſtrange places, they were not left of God, nor without ſucceſs, the power of God attended their miniſtry; ſo that the Goſpel preached by them came not in word only, but in power, and it was the power of God unto ſalvation: hence it follows, and a great number believed; not the Goſpel only, but in Chriſt preached in it, ver. 20. which was not owing to the force of moral ſuaſion in the miniſters, nor to the power of free-will in the people, but to the hand or power of the Lord; for the work of faith is not a work of man's will, but of God's almighty power and grace; and when that is diſplayed, multitudes believe in Chriſt for righteouſneſs and life: and turned to the Lord; and obeyed his commands; ſee Pſ. cxix. 59, 60. as a fruit, effect, and conſequence of believing in Chriſt; for not firſt converſion is here intended, which is not man's work, but God's, and in which God is the agent, and man is paſſive; but obedience to the ordinances of Chriſt, as the fruit of faith is meant.

Ver. 22. Then tidings of theſe things, &c.] Of the ſpread of the Goſpel in ſeveral parts, and the ſucceſs of it in the converſion of ſinners, eſpecially at Antioch: came unto the ears of the church which was in Jeruſalem; theſe tidings were brought to the Apoſtles and brethren there, by meſſengers which the miniſters of the word ſent unto them to let them know what ſucceſs they met with; notwithſtanding the perſecution raiſed againſt the church of Jeruſalem at the death of Stephen, and the havock that was made of the members of it, and the diſperſion of others, yet it ſtill continued a church, and ſo it did for ages after: there are reckoned fifteen biſhops of it unto the times of Trajan, and the deſtruction of the city by him, when the Jews were no longer ſuffered to live in it; and they are theſe, James the brother of our Lord, Simeon, Juſtus, Zacheus, Tobias, Benjamin, John, Matthias, Philip, Seneca, Juſtus, Levi, Ephres, Joſeph, and Judas; and theſe are ſaid [h] to be all originally Hebrews: but after the deſtruction of the city by Trajan, and the Jews were forbid inhabiting it, the church conſiſted of Gentiles only; and of them biſhops were conſtituted over it, and were as follow; Marcus, Caſſianus, Publius, Maximus, Julianus, Gaianus, Symmachus, Caius, another Julianus, Capito, another Maximus, Antoninus, Valens, Dolychianus, Narciſſus, Ælius, Germanio, Gordius, and another Narciſſus; all theſe governed this church in the ſecond century: and in the third century, the biſhops of this church were Alexander, Mazabanes, Labdas, and Hermon, who was the laſt before the Diocleſian perſecution: in the fourth century, Macarius, Maximus, and Cyril preſided over it; and theſe were ſucceeded in the fifth century by Joannes Nepos, Prayllius, Juvenalis, Anaſtaſius, and Martyrius; in this age alſo Lucian and Heſychius were preſbyters of this church. In the ſixth century, the names of the biſhops of this church were Saluſtius, Helias, Johannes, Petrus, Macarius, Euſtochius, Johannes, Neamus, and Iſicius: in the ſeventh century were Thomas, Johannes, Neannus, Iſaac, Zacharias, and Sophronius, who was the laſt biſhop of Jeruſalem before the utter and laſt devaſtation of it by the Saracenes [i]; ſince which time the city has underwent various fates, being ſometimes in the hands of the Chriſtians, and at other times poſſeſſed by the Turks, in whoſe power it now is. And they ſent forth Barnabas; who was himſelf an Helleniſt, and of the country of Cyprus, and ſo very fit to be ſent to the Grecians or Helleniſts at Antioch, who had received the Goſpel to confirm them in it: for his orders were, that he ſhould go as far as Antioch; which is ſaid to be about fifteen or ſixteen days journey from Jeruſalem: the phraſe, that he ſhould go, is not in the Alexandrian copy, nor in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions.

Ver. 23. Who when he came, and had ſeen the grace of God, &c.] The many inſtances of the powerful and efficacious grace of God in regeneration and converſion; the great goodneſs, love, and favour of God in enlightening, quickening, and converting ſo many ſouls; and the wonderful gifts of the Spirit beſtowed upon many of them, fitting them for public uſe and ſervice: was glad; rejoiced at heart, and gave glory to God, as every good man will, at the ſucceſs of the Goſpel in the converſion of ſinners, let it be by what inſtrument or means it will, and at the gifts and grace beſtowed on them: and exhorted them all; in whom he ſaw the grace of God implanted, who had received the doctrine of the grace of God, and had gifts of grace qualifying them for uſefulneſs, in ſome ſtation or another: that with purpoſe of heart they would cleave unto the Lord; that is, with a fixed reſolution in the grace and ſtrength of Chriſt, they would hold to his perſon, exerciſing grace upon him, abide by his truths and ordinances, keep cloſe to his people, adhere to his cauſe and intereſt, and hold on and out unto the end. The Arabic verſion takes the purpoſe of heart to be meant of Barnabas, and reads the words thus, and he exhorted them according to the uſual firmneſs of his heart, that they would continue in the faith of the Lord; in the doctrine and grace of faith in Chriſt.

Ver. 24. For he was a good man, &c.] He had the grace of God wrought in his ſoul, and did good works; he was very kind, and generous, and charitable; he ſold what land he had, and gave the money to the Apoſtles, for the uſe of the community, Acts iv. 37. and full of the Holy Ghoſt, and of faith; he was full of the ſeveral graces of the Spirit, and particularly of faith; and he was full of the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, and of the faith of miracles; he was full of the doctrine of faith, and of ſpiritual gifts for the preaching of it: the ſame character is given of Stephen, ch. vi. 5. and much people was added unto the Lord; by the means of Barnabas, thro' his miniſtry, and the exerciſe of thoſe gifts he was full of; ſo the Arabic verſion, and he drew a large multitude to the Lord.

Ver. 25. Then departed Barnabas to Tarſus, &c.] In Cilicia, for to ſeek Saul; who had been ſent thither by the brethren, that he might eſcape the rage of the Grecians, who ſought to ſlay him, chap. ix. 29, 30.

Ver. 26. And when he had found him, he brought him to Antioch, &c.] That he might be uſeful in directing, and aſſiſting in ſettling this new and numerous church; in the eſtabliſhing the members of it, and in putting them into Goſpel-order, and in a method to ſecure and maintain peace, eſpecially as they might conſiſt both of Jews and Gentiles; and none ſo proper to be concerned in ſuch a work as the Apoſtle of the Gentiles. And it came to paſs, that a whole year they aſſembled themſelves with the church; preaching the Goſpel, and adminiſtring the ordinances to them, during that time, at proper ſeaſons. For here being a number of converts, they were imbodied together in a church-ſtate, very probably by the direction and aſſiſtance of Barnabas, who was ſent to them from the church at Jeruſalem, and in which he might be aſſiſted by Saul: the firſt biſhop, or paſtor of this church, was Evodius, as Ignatius obſerves unto them[k]; Remember Evodius, your worthy and bleſſed paſtor, who was firſt ordained over you by the Apoſtles; and Ignatius himſelf was the next, of whom Origen ſpeaking, ſays[l], that he was the ſecond biſhop of Antioch after Peter, who in perſecution fought with beaſts at Rome; next to him was Heron, after him Cornelius, then Eros; to whom ſucceeded Theophilus, who wrote three books to Autolycus, in vindication of the Chriſtian religion, which are now extant, in the times of the emperor Aurelius Verus, about the year of Chriſt 171. He was ſucceeded by Maximinus[m] about the year 179, under Marcus Antoninus; and after him was Serapion, about the tenth year of the emperor Commodus, and of Chriſt 192; and about the year 214, Aſclepiades ſucceeded in his room; next to him was Philetus, in the year 220, and then Zebennus in the year 231; next ſucceeded Babylas, the famous martyr, who ſuffered under Decius, and then followed Demetrianus, or Demetrius, about the year 255; and after him was the famous heretick Samoſatenus, who was excommunicated from this church for his blaſphemy againſt the Son of God; and Domnus, the ſon of Demetrianus, was put into his room, about the year 270; after him was Timæus, in the year 274; and then Cyrillus, about the year 283: and theſe were the biſhops or paſtors of this church in the three firſt centuries[n]. And taught much people; beſides the church, and with ſucceſs, as to enlighten, convince, convert, comfort, and eſtabliſh: and the diſciples were called chriſtians firſt in Antioch; before they were called among themſelves, the diſciples, brethren, believers, the church, &c. and by others the Nazarenes, and Galileans: whether this name of Chriſtians, which comes from Chriſt, and ſignifies anointed ones, were given by their enemies, or their friends, by others, or themſelves, is not certain, tho' it is moſt likely the latter; and it may be they hit upon this general appellation, upon the union of the Jews and Gentiles, in one Goſpel church-ſtate, and ſo happily buried the diſtinction of Jews and Gentiles, or thoſe of the circumciſion that believed, and thoſe of the uncircumciſion. Luke is particular in relating the affairs of this church, he being himſelf a native of this place. John of Antioch[o] gives an account of this matter in theſe words; "at the beginning of "the reign of Claudius Cæſar, ten years after Jeſus "Chriſt our Lord and God, was aſcended up into "heaven, Evodus, the firſt after the Apoſtle Peter, "being choſen biſhop of Antioch, the great city of "Syria, became a patriarch, and under him they "were called Chriſtians; for this ſame biſhop, "Evodus, conferring with them, put this name "upon them, whereas before the Chriſtians were "called Nazarenes and Galileans." Epiphanius ſays[p], the diſciples were called Jeſſæans before they took the name of Chriſtians firſt at Antioch: they were called Jeſſæans, ſays he, I think, becauſe of Jeſſe, ſeeing David was of Jeſſe, and Mary of David: and ſo the ſcripture was fulfilled, in which the Lord ſays to David, of the fruit of thy body will I ſet upon thy throne, &c. — Or elſe they were called Jeſſæans from the name of Jeſus our Lord; and refers the reader to a book of Philo's, written by him, concerning the Jeſſæans, whom Epiphanius takes to be Chriſtians; but thoſe that Philo[q] treats of were not Jeſſæans, but Eſſæans, and ſeem to be the ſame with the Eſſenes, who were not Chriſtians, but a ſect of the Jews. Nor do we ever find that the Chriſtians were called by this name.

Ver. 27. And in theſe days came prophets from Jeruſalem to Antioch.] That is, ſome time in that year that Saul and Barnabas were at Antioch, there came from Jeruſalem thither ſome Chriſtian prophets; for ſuch there were in the Chriſtian church, who had not only a gift of expounding the more myſterious prophecies of the Old Teſtament, but alſo of foretelling things to come; ſee Acts xiii. 1. Eph. iv. 11.

Ver. 28. And there ſtood up one of them named Agabus, &c.] The ſame name with Hagaba in Neh. vii. 48. and with Hagabah, or Hagab in Ezra ii. 45, 46. and which the Septuagint there call Agaba and Agab. The name ſignifies a graſhopper, Lev. xi. 22. or a locuſt, 2 Chron. vii. 13. In a book that goes under the name of Jerom[r], it is interpreted, a meſſenger of tribulation; reſpecting, it may be, not the true ſignification of the word, as the things which Agabus predicted, as the general dearth here, and the binding of the Apoſtle Paul, ch. xxi. 10. And the ſame writer obſerves, that this interpretation is a violent, or a forced one. Some take it to be the ſame with עגב, Agab, which ſignifies to love; and ſo may be the ſame with the Greek name Agapetus, which may be interpreted beloved. This Agabus is ſaid to be one of the ſeventy diſciples that Chriſt ſent forth: he ſeems to have been an itinerant prophet, who went from place to place delivering out his prophecies; we hear of him again at Ceſarea, in ch. xxi. 10. Some ſay, he was a native of Antioch; but this does not follow from his being here, any more than that he was a native of Ceſarea from his being there alſo; it ſeems moſt likely that he was a native of Judea, and perhaps of Jeruſalem, ſince in both places he is ſaid to come from thence: it is reported that he died at Antioch; and he is placed in the Roman martyrology on the third of February. And ſignified by the ſpirit; not by the poſition of the ſtars, or by any natural cauſes, or by mere conjecture, but by the Spirit of God: that there ſhould be great dearth throughout all the world; not only throughout all the land of Judea, but at leaſt throughout the whole Roman empire; ſee Luke ii. 1. ſince other writers ſpeak of it in other parts: which came to paſs in the days of Claudius Cæſar; in the ſecond year of his reign, as Dion Caſſius [s], the Roman hiſtorian, ſays: and [t] Euſebius ſeems to ſpeak of it, as in the beginning of his reign; for he ſays, Caius, who ſcarce reigned four years, Claudius the emperor ſucceeded, in whoſe time a famine afflicted the whole world; for this ſome writers, different from our religion, have made mention of in their hiſtories: though he elſewhere affirms [u], that it was in the fourth year of his reign; both may be true, it might laſt ſo long: and indeed, according to what this writer [w] cites from Joſephus, it muſt be after this time that the famine raged in Judea; for having obſerved the defeat of Theudas by Cuſpius Fadus, the Roman governour, he obſerves, that at the ſame time a very great famine happened in Judea: now Fadus was ſent into Judea, after the death of king Agrippa, towards the end of the fourth year of Claudius; ſo that it muſt be in the fifth or ſixth year of Claudius that this famine was [x]. The Magdeburgenſian Centuriators ſay [y], it was about the ninth and tenth years of Claudius that this famine raged in Greece, Rome, and other parts of the world. Suetonius [z] makes mention of it, and aſcribes it to a conſtant ſterility or barrenneſs: and that it particularly affected Judea, appears from hence, that Helena, queen of the Adiabeni, was at this time at Jeruſalem, who ſent for, and brought corn out of Egypt, and diſtributed it to the poor [a]; of which Joſephus [b] gives this account: "her coming was very ſeaſonable to the "inhabitants of Jeruſalem, for a famine at that "time much afflicted their city, and many periſhed thro' want of food. Helena, the queen, ſent "of her own people ſome to Alexandria, who "bought great quantity of corn, and ſome to Cyprus, who brought loads of dry figs; who, as "ſoon as they came back, diſtributed the food to "the needy.—And her ſon Izates, hearing of the "famine, ſent much money to the chief men of "Jeruſalem." The Miſnic doctors [c] ſpeak of various gifts which Helena, and her ſon Monbaz, as they call him, gave to the Jews for the uſe of the temple, but make no mention of this bounty; tho' they repreſent the ſon as very liberal to the poor, and giving all his goods unto them [d].

Ver. 29. Then the diſciples, &c.] That were at Antioch, every man according to his ability; whether rich or poor, maſter or ſervant, every one according to the ſubſtance he was poſſeſſed of, whether more or leſs, which was a good rule to go by: determined to ſend relief to the brethren which dwelt in Judea; either becauſe that Agabus might have ſuggeſted, that the famine would be the ſevereſt in thoſe parts; or becauſe that the Chriſtians there had parted with their ſubſtance already, in the ſupport of one another, and for the ſpread of the Goſpel in other parts; and therefore the Chriſtians at Antioch, in gratitude to them for having received the Goſpel, and Goſpel-miniſters from them, reſolved to help them with their temporal things, when in diſtreſs.

Ver. 30. Which they alſo did, &c.] They not only determined, but they put their reſolutions into execution, and acted according to a rule which the Apoſtle recommends, 2 Cor. viii. 11. and ix. 7. and ſent it to the elders; to the Apoſtles; for tho' there were deacons there, yet they choſe to ſend it to them, that they might put it into proper hands to diſtribute to the neceſſitous: and this collection they ſent by the hands of Saul and Barnabas; of this journey to Jeruſalem, Paul makes no mention in Gal. i. 17, 18, 19, 21. and ii. 1.

C H A P. XII.

Ver. 1. NOW about that time, &c.] That the famine was in Judea, and Saul and Barnabas were ſent thither with what the church at Antioch had collected. Herod the king; not Herod the great that ſlew the infants at Bethlehem, nor Herod Antipas that beheaded John, but Herod Agrippa; and ſo the Syriac verſion adds here, who is ſurnamed Agrippa; he was a grandſon of Herod the great, and the ſon of Ariſtobulus: this prince ſtretched forth his hands to vex certain of the church; Beza's ancient copy adds, in Judea: it ſeems to be the church at Jeruſalem; perhaps ſome of the principal members of them; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, the rulers of the houſe of God. It is ſcarcely credible that he ſhould lay hands on any of them himſelf in perſon; but it is very likely he encouraged his ſoldiers, or his ſervants, to abuſe them, reproach them, ſtrike and buffet them, as they met with them in the ſtreets; or when at worſhip, might diſturb them, and break them up.

Ver. 2. And he killed James the brother of John with the ſword.] This was James, the ſon of Zebedee, whom our Lord told, that he ſhould be baptized with the baptiſm he was baptized with, Matt. xx. 22. meaning the baptiſm of martyrdom; and he was the firſt martyr among the Apoſtles: the death he was put to was one of the four capital puniſhments among the Jews, and was reckoned by them the moſt diſgraceful of them all, and was inflicted upon deceivers of the people; and ſuch an one James was thought to be [e].

Ver. 3. And becauſe he ſaw it pleaſed the Jews, &c.] That is, as Beza's ancient copy adds, his ſtretching out his hands upon the faithful; this pleaſed the Jews, a blood-thirſty generation of men, who had killed the prophets, and the Lord Jeſus, and who were now greedy after the death of the Apoſtles: it may eaſily be ſeen from what principle and ſpirit Herod acted; it was not out of regard to the Jewiſh religion, rites, and ceremonies, but to ingratiate himſelf into the affections of the people: he proceeded further to take Peter alſo; a principal Apoſtle, and who was well known, and againſt whom the Jews had doubtleſs a particular antipathy, and would have been glad to have been rid of him; this Herod was ſenſible of, and therefore to pleaſe them, ordered him to be taken up: then were the days of unleavened bread; or the feaſt of the paſſover.

Sanhedrin, c. 7. §. 1, 3. & 11. 4.

Ver. 4. When he had apprehended him, &c.] When his officers he ſent to take him had brought him: he put him in priſon; in the common priſon, very likely where he had been once before, ch. v. 18. and delivered him to four quaternions of ſoldiers to keep him; each quaternion conſiſted of four ſoldiers, ſo that they were in all ſixteen; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, and delivered him to ſixteen ſoldiers: how the Ethiopic verſion ſhould make ſeventeen of them is pretty ſtrange: theſe perhaps might take their turns to watch him by four at a time, two to whom he was chained, and two others to keep the doors; or all the ſixteen together, being poſted in one place or another for greater ſecurity: and it may be, that the reaſon of all this caution, and ſtrong guard, might be, becauſe it was remembered that he, and the reſt of the Apoſtles, when committed to the ſame priſon ſome years ago, were delivered out of it: intending after Eaſter, or the paſſover, to bring him forth to the people; to inſult and abuſe him, and to put him to what death they ſhould deſire.

Ver. 5. Peter therefore was kept in priſon, &c.] Till the feaſt of the paſſover was at an end: but prayer was made without ceaſing of the church unto God for him; this was not done by them as a body together, but either by them in ſeveral bands at different places, or by ſome of the principal of the church at ſome one certain place, and where they might frequently change companies, and keep on a continual inceſſant prayer for days together; and whereas it is very likely it might be at the beginning of the paſſover, when Peter was taken up, and it was now at the cloſe of it, when he was delivered, the church might be engaged by companies alternately, a whole week together, in prayer, on this occaſion.

Ver. 6. And when Herod would have brought him forth, &c.] The next morning; ſo he had determined not to diſmiſs him, but to expoſe him to the people, and to put him to ſuch a death they ſhould chuſe: the ſame night, Peter was ſleeping between two ſoldiers; fearleſs of death, being in a good cauſe, and having nothing to ruffle and diſturb his mind; and tho' he was in a priſon, and in ſuch company, God gave him, his beloved, ſleep: bound with two chains; one on one hand, and one on the other, each of which were faſtened to the ſoldiers; that on his right hand was faſtened to the left hand of the ſoldier, that was on that ſide; and that on his left hand to the right hand of the ſoldier, on the other ſide him; ſuch ſecurity was made, that he might not get away from them; to which is added, and the keepers before the door kept the priſon; or watched it, that nobody went in, or came out.

Ver. 7. And behold, the angel of the Lord came upon him, &c.] Suddenly and at once, and ſtood by him; this was one of the miniſtring ſpirits ſent forth by Chriſt, to miniſter to a ſervant of his: and a light ſhined in the priſon; the Syriac verſion renders it, in the whole houſe; and the word that is uſed does ſignify an habitation, or a dwelling-houſe properly, but is uſed alſo by Greek writers [f], for a priſon: this was an uncommon light produced by the angel, partly as an emblem of the preſence, majeſty, and power of God, who was preſent, to work a great deliverance; and partly for the uſe of Peter, that when being awaked he might ſee to riſe and walk by: and he ſmote Peter on the ſide, and raiſed him up; he touched him on that ſide which lay uppermoſt, or punched him on it, in order to awake him, and raiſe him out of his ſleep: ſaying, ariſe up quickly; without delay, make haſte: and his chains fell off from his hands; from both his hands, and were left with the ſoldiers, between whom he ſlept; which muſt be aſcribed to an almighty power, which cauſed them to drop off.

Ver. 8. And the angel ſaid unto him, gird thyſelf, &c.] He ſlept in his inner garment looſe about him; wherefore the angel bids him gird it up with his girdle, and prepare to walk out after him: and bind on thy ſandals; which were a ſort of ſhoes that covered only the ſoles of the feet, and were faſtened to the legs with ſtrings: and ſo he did; he did not aſk any queſtion, or the reaſon of theſe orders; he did not diſpute the matter, but at once obeyed: and he ſaith unto him, caſt thy garment about thee; meaning his upper garment, or cloke, which lay by him: and follow me; ſuggeſting hereby, that he ſhould take care of him, and ſhow him his way, and bring him ſafe out of the priſon.

Ver. 9. And he went out and followed him, &c.] He came out from between the two ſoldiers, and out of that apartment in the priſon, in which he was, and followed the angel where he led him: and wiſt not that it was true that was done by the angel; not that he thought the angel was a mere apparition, and all this that was done was a deluſion; but he did not know whether this was matter of fact, or whether it was not repreſented to him in a viſionary way, as what could be, or would be done: but thought he ſaw a viſion; imagined he was in a dream or a trance, and only ſaw theſe things in a viſion, and that they were not really done, the whole was ſo amazing and aſtoniſhing.

Ver. 10. When they were paſt the firſt and the ſecond ward, &c.] Or watch, which were ſet within the priſon, and might be ſome of the quaternions of ſoldiers to whom Peter was delivered; two of them were with him, and others might be placed at theſe two wards for further ſecurity; and theſe circumſtances make the deliverance the more wonderful and remarkable; the watch muſt either be aſleep, or their eyes were holden, or the angel and Peter paſſed by ſo ſwiftly that they were unobſerved: they came unto the iron gate that leadeth unto the city; which was not one of the gates of the city, as if the priſon was without the walls of it; but was the great and ſtrong gate of the priſon, which for the ſecurity of the priſoners was made of iron, and this gate led directly into the city of Jeruſalem: which opened to them of his own accord; as the gates of the temple are ſaid to do [g], forty years before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: this was done by a divine power; and becauſe no human creature had any hand in it, it is ſaid to be done of its own accord: and they went out. The Cambridge copy of Beza's adds, they went down ſeven ſteps; that is, from the priſon into the city: and paſſed on thro' one ſtreet; what ſtreet this was is not certain; there were ſeveral ſtreets in Jeruſalem; ſee the note on chap. ix. 11. and forthwith the angel departed from him; he being now ſafe and out of danger, he left him to himſelf, to betake himſelf to what houſe he ſhould think fit.

Ver. 11. And when Peter was come to himſelf, &c.] For upon his being awaked out of ſleep, what with the uncommon light, which ſhone around him, and with the appearance of the angel, and the chains dropping from his hands, and his ſurprizing eſcape thro' the ſeveral wards, together with the iron gate opening of itſelf, he was ſo filled with amazement, that he was not himſelf; he could ſcarce tell whether he was in the body or not, and whether he was in a dream or a trance, or whether he ſaw a viſion or not; but upon the angel's leaving him, he came to himſelf, the amazement wore off, and he found himſelf thoroughly awake, and perfectly in his ſenſes, and that the deliverance was real: and then, he ſaid, now know I of a ſurety, that the Lord hath ſent his angel; this was a thankſgiving to God, and an acknowledgment, that the deliverance, tho' it was by the miniſtry of an angel, yet was owing to the goodneſs and power of God; it was God that ſent his angel, and the ſalvation was of the Lord's doing, and it was marvellous in the eyes of Peter, and gratefully owned by him: and hath delivered me out of the hand of Herod; who intended that morning to have brought him forth, and ſacrificed him to the will of the people: and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews; not only the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, but the body of the Jewiſh nation, who were now at Jeruſalem, on account of the paſſover; and who before they departed into their ſeveral cities and towns, expected to have had Peter brought forth, and put to death before them; but now both Herod and they were diſappointed.

Ver. 12. And when he had conſidered the thing, &c.] The whole of the ſalvation wrought for him; or rather, where he ſhould go, to what houſe he ſhould betake himſelf; ere he was aware, he came to the houſe of Mary the mother of John, whoſe ſirname was Mark. This good woman ſeems to be a widow, no mention being made of her huſband, and was ſiſter to Barnabas, Col. iv. 10. She is deſcribed by a ſon ſhe had, whoſe name was John Mark, becauſe of the frequent mention made of him hereafter; her houſe being large, and her heart as large as her houſe, the ſaints met here, and were welcome, and where they were at this time, tho' ſo late: where many were gathered together, praying; the Ethiopic verſion adds, for him; and there were ſome in other places, for one place could not hold them all; ſee ver. 17. they held out to the end in prayer; this was their laſt effort in this way, and in this they were no doubt exceeding vehement and importunate, and they ſucceeded; ſo true is that obſervation in James v. 16.

Ver. 13. And as Peter knocked at the door of the gate, &c.] The leſſer door in the great gate, or the door of the porch through which they entered into the houſe. So the Jews diſtinguiſh between פתח, the door, and שער, the gate; ſee Judg. xviii. 16, 17. Ezek. xl. 11. where the Septuagint uſe the ſame words as here. Kimchi [h] ſays, "פתח, the door is what is of the gate, without the folding-doors; for all is called שער, the gate, whether within or without, with the folding-doors, and the outward threſhold, as that is joined to the ſide-poſts and lintel." The door was kept ſhut for fear of the Jews, leſt they ſhould be diſturbed: here Peter ſtood and knocked: a damſel came to hearken; hearing a knocking, ſhe came out to the door, and liſtened, to try if ſhe could know who it was, a friend or a foe, before ſhe opened; or ſhe came to anſwer, as the Syriac verſion renders it, to know who was there, and what he or ſhe wanted, and to give an anſwer. And the damſel was named Rhoda, which ſignifies a roſe in the Greek language: ſo the Jewiſh women often had their names, in the Hebrew tongue, from flowers and trees, as Suſanna from a lilly, or roſe; and which, perhaps, was the Hebrew name of this damſel; and Eſther was called Hadaſſah, from the myrtle-tree.

Ver. 14. And when ſhe knew Peter's voice, &c.] Having often heard him preach and converſe in the family: ſhe opened not the gate for gladneſs; filled with joy to hear his voice, and that he was delivered from priſon, and in haſte to carry the welcome news to the company within, ſtaid not to open the gate, and let Peter in: but ran in and told how Peter ſtood before the gate: ſhe went into the houſe in a great hurry, and related to them within, that Peter was at the door without.

Ver. 15. And they ſaid unto her, thou art mad, &c.] Or art thou not mad? as the Ethiopic verſion, and two of Beza's exemplars read, and ſome others: they thought the girl muſt be out of her ſenſes; they looked upon the thing impoſſible; for though they were praying for him, and praying in faith, yet they might have no expectation of a deliverance; but were praying that they might be ſupported under ſuch a trial, and that it might be ſanctified to them; and for Peter, that he might be ſtrengthened and made ſtedfaſt, and kept faithful to the laſt; and bear by his ſufferings and death, a glorious and honourable teſtimony for Chriſt: but ſhe conſtantly affirmed that it was even ſo; ſhe aſſerted it over and over, and was poſitive in it; nothing they could ſay could beat her off of it, ſhe was ſure of it; which when they obſerved, they could not tell what to ſay to it, but as follows: then ſaid they, it is his angel; not his tutelar or guardian angel, every one having, as ſome think, a particular angel to attend him; whereas ſometimes one angel attends many perſons, and ſometimes many angels encamp about, and are a guard to a ſingle ſaint; nor did they think it was an angel ſent to give notice of his death, as ſome perſons by one means or another, have had previous notices of the death of their friends; but rather, that it was an angel in Peter's ſhape, who had ſomething to communicate: and this agrees with the notions of the Jews, who think that angels do aſſume the ſhapes of men on certain occaſions: ſo they ſay [i], when Moſes was in danger in Pharaoh's court, God ſent Michael, the prince of the hoſt of heaven, in the ſhape of an executioner; who brought him at once out of Egypt, and ſet him at the border of it, the diſtance of three days journey: Bar Kaphr ſays [k], an angel deſcended, ברמות משה, in the likeneſs of Moſes, and cauſed him to flee, and they thought the angel had been Moſes: and ſo it is elſe-where ſaid [l], that an angel deſcended in the likene of Solomon, ſitting upon his throne: there are ſom who think, that the ſenſe of the brethren prayin for Peter, was not that it was an angel, a celeſtia ſpirit, but a meſſenger ſent by Peter from the priſon on ſome errand; who perſonating him, o mentioning his name, the damſel took him fo Peter himſelf. Beza's ancient copy reads, the ſaid they unto her, perhaps it is his angel; and ſ the Syriac verſion.

[i] Chronicon Moſis, fol. 6. 1.

[k] Debarim Rabba, §. 2. fol. 237.

Ver. 16. But Peter continued knocking, &c.] That they might come to him, and let him in; beginning to be impatient, and being very deſirous of ſeeing his friends, as well as being in danger of being taken up, and had to priſon again, ſhould any of his enemies come by, who knew him: and when they had opened the door, and ſaw him, they were aſtoniſhed; they could hardly believe their own eyes; it was amazing to them, how it ſhould be, that he ſhould be delivered out of priſon, when they knew there was ſuch a ſtrong guard about him.

Ver. 17. But he beckening unto them with the hand, &c.] This is what the Jews call, רמיזה [m], which is a beckening, or making ſigns, either with the head or hand: and this was now made, to hold their peace; to be ſilent, and not clamorous in their expreſſions of joy and wonder, leſt it ſhould alarm the neighbourhood, and the conſequence be bad both to him and them; as alſo that he might have an opportunity of relating the whole affair to them; which he did, after he had entered into the houſe; which though not expreſſed is underſtood, and is added in Beza's ancient copy, and in the Syriac verſion: and he went in; that is, into the houſe: and declared unto them how the Lord had brought him out of priſon; how he had ſent his angel to him in priſon, what a light ſhone about him, how his chains fell from his hands, and how the angel conducted him through the ſeveral wards, till they came to the iron gate, which opened of itſelf; and how when he had brought him into the public ſtreets, he left him; he aſcribes this wonderful deliverance not to the angel, but to the Lord himſelf: and he ſaid, go ſhew theſe things to James; the ſon of Alpheus, ſometimes called the brother of our Lord; for James the ſon of Zebedee, the brother of John, Herod had lately killed with the ſword, ver. 2. and this other James very likely ſucceeded him as paſtor of the church at Jeruſalem, or at leaſt had the ſuperintendency of affairs there: and to the brethren; the reſt of the apoſtles, and even all the members; whom he would have acquainted with theſe things, which he knew would be matter of joy unto them, and a means of ſtrengthening them in the ways of the Lord: and he departed and went into another place; to Rome, ſay the Papiſts, but without any foundation; if he went out of the city, and to any diſtant place for more ſafety, very likely he went to Antioch; but the words do not neceſſarily oblige us to conclude, that he went out of the city at that time, only that he went from Mary's houſe; and went, as the Ethiopic verſion reads, to another houſe; where another company of ſaints might be aſſembled, and where he might be more private and ſecure.

Ver. 18. Now as ſoon as it was day, &c.] When it was morning; as ſoon as there was any light in the priſon, by which the guards could diſcern one another and their priſoners: there was no ſmall ſtir among the ſoldiers; the two between whom Peter ſlept, and the reſt of the quaternions that were employed in the wards to keep watch; who were now all in an uproar, and in the utmoſt concern and fright: what was become of Peter; whether he was in any other part of the priſon, by what means he could eſcape, and whither he was gone.

Ver. 19. And when Herod had ſought for him and found him not, &c.] Neither in the priſon, nor in any part of the city: he examined the keepers; of the priſon, and thoſe that were upon the watch, whether they had not been acceſſary to his eſcape: and commanded that they ſhould be put to death; or brought forth, not before a judge to be tried and judged, becauſe they had been examined by Herod already; but either that they ſhould be carried and laid in bonds, or be led forth to ſuffer puniſhment; and ſo our verſion directs, and which is confirmed by the Syriac; and the Greeks ſay [n], that απαγωγη is a kind of puniſhment: and he went down from Judea to Ceſarea; not Peter, but Herod: and there abode; of this journey of Agrippa's to Ceſarea, Joſephus makes mention [o]; this place was diſtant from Jeruſalem 600 furlongs, or 75 miles [p].

Ver. 20. And Herod was highly diſpleaſed with them of Tyre and Sidon, &c.] Two cities on the ſea-coaſt, in the land of Phœnicia; with the inhabitants of which Herod was ſo enraged, that though he had not declared war againſt them, yet he had meditated it in his mind, and intended to do it at a proper time: what gave him this offence, is not certain; that it ſhould be for entertaining and concealing of Peter, when he made his eſcape, is without any foundation; and nothing but this following on that account, could ever occaſion ſuch a thought: but they came with one accord to him; the ambaſſadors from both cities united in an addreſs to him, and joined in ways and means to reconcile him to them: and having made Blaſtus the king's chamberlain their friend; not merely by arguments, intreaties, and good words, but very likely by gifts, by making preſents to him: perſons in ſuch an office, had uſually very great intereſt in the princes they ſerved [q], as Blaſtus doubtleſs had with Herod; Commodus the emperor, did every thing at the inſtances of his chamberlains, and ſo other princes; for theſe officers had acceſs when others could not, the king's bed-chamber being next to ſacred; and therefore the Tyrians and Sidonians privately applied to him firſt: deſired peace; either of Herod himſelf, to whom, by the means of Blaſtus, they were introduced; and in their addreſs to him, intreated he would forgive the offence, and be at peace with them; or elſe of Blaſtus, whom by ſome means or another they made their friend; and therefore intreated of him, that he would uſe his intereſt with the king, and procure peace for them: and this ſenſe the Arabic verſion inclines to, which renders the words thus, and they prayed him that he would take care of reconciliation and peace; though the former ſeems to be the true ſenſe: becauſe their country was nouriſhed by the king's country. Theſe cities were ſea-ports, and the inhabitants of them were much concerned in ſending ſhips to ſea, and in merchandize; and it was in Judea and Galilee, which were under Herod's juriſdiction, where they vented the goods they imported, and from whence they were ſupplied with wheat, honey, and oil, both for their own uſe, and perhaps to export abroad; ſee 1 Kings v. 1, 11. Ezek. xxvii. 3, 17, &c. And it looks as if Herod had forbid all commerce with them, which if it had been continued, would have been the ruin of them.

Ver. 21. And upon a ſet day, &c.] Either on ſome feaſt-day of divine appointment, as a feaſt-day was by the Jews called, מועד, a ſtated day; or on ſome day appointed by Herod, for the receiving of the ambaſſadors of Tyre and Sidon, and of hearing their petitions; or as Joſephus [r] ſays, it was on the ſecond day of the ſports and plays, inſtituted by him in honour of Cæſar: Herod arrayed in royal apparel; the ſame Jewiſh hiſtorian in the ſame place ſays, that this his apparel was all of ſilver, and of a wonderful contexture; and that going in this very early in the morning into the theatre, the ſilver ſhone ſo with the rays of the riſing ſun, that it ſtruck the ſpectators with terror and admiration: ſat upon his throne; and very likely with the other enſigns of royalty, as a crown on his head, and a ſceptre in his hand: and made an oration unto them; either unto the ambaſſadors from Tyre and Sidon, or rather unto the common people, the multitude that were gathered together in the theatre, where the above hiſtorian ſays he was.

Ver. 22. And the people gave a ſhout, &c.] At the end of the oration; theſe were flatterers, as Joſephus ſays in the place before referred to, who cried out one from another, ſaluting him as God; ſaying, be merciful to us, hitherto we have revered thee as a man, henceforward we confeſs thee ſomewhat more excellent than mortal nature: and ſo it follows here, ſaying it is the voice of a God, and not of a man; the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, the voices of God and not men; and the Ethiopic verſion, the city ſhouted in, or with the voice of God, with the voice of man; as if this referred to the acclamation of the people, and not the ſpeech of the king; very wrongly.

Ver. 23. And immediately the angel of the Lord ſmote him, &c.] With a diſeaſe after mentioned; this angel, according to Joſephus, appeared in the form of an owl; for he ſays, that a little after (the ſhout of the people) the king looked up, and ſaw an owl ſitting upon a rope over his head; whom he immediately underſtood to be an angel, or meſſenger of evil things to him, as it had been before of good things; for it ſeems by the ſame hiſtorian [s], that when he was bound by the order of Caligula, he ſaw an owl ſitting on that tree, on which he leaned; when a certain German predicted, that things would in a ſhort time be changed with him, and he ſhould be advanced to great honour; but remember, ſays he, whenever you ſee that bird again, you'll die in five days time. Euſebius [t] out of Joſephus, makes no mention of the owl, but relates it thus; that a little after (the oration and the ſalutation of the people) the king looked up, and ſaw an angel ſitting over his head, whom he immediately underſtood to be the cauſe of evil things to him, as he had formerly been of good: the reaſon of the angel's ſmiting him was, becauſe he gave not glory to God; or as the Jewiſh hiſtorian ſays, becauſe he reproved not the flatterers, nor rejected their impious flattery, but tacitly took that to himſelf, which belonged to God: and he was eaten of worms; Beza's moſt ancient copy adds, while he was alive; Joſephus only makes mention of pains in his belly, but theſe were occaſioned by the gnawing of the worms: this was accounted by the Jews a very accurſed death; they ſay [u], that the ſpies which brought an ill report on the good land, died this death; their account is this, that "their tongues ſwelled and fell upon their navels, "and worms came out of their tongues and went "into their navels, and out of their navels they "went into their tongues:" of this death died many tyrants, oppreſſors, and perſecutors; as Antiochus, 2 Maccab. ix. 9. and Herod the great, the grandfather of this, according to Joſephus [w]; and Maximianus Galerius, according to Euſebius [x]; and many others: and gave up the ghoſt; not directly, but five days after, as Joſephus relates, in the fifty-fourth year of his age, and when he had reigned ſeven years; but before he died, and as ſoon as he was ſmitten, he turned to his friends and ſaid, I your God am obliged to depart this life, and now fate reproves the lying words you have juſt now ſpoke of me; and I who was called immortal by you, am led away to die, with more, as related by Joſephus: by ſuch a token as this, a man was diſcovered to be a murderer with the Jews; for ſo they ſay [y], that "out of the beheaded heifer went "a vaſt number of worms, and went to the place "where the murderer was, and aſcended upon "him, and then the Sanhedrim laid hold on him "and condemned him."

Ver. 24. But the word of God grew and multiplied.] The number of thoſe who were converted by it, and embraced and profeſſed it, increaſed; otherwiſe the word is the ſame, whether the profeſſors of it be more or fewer; and this it did, notwithſtanding the perſecution raiſed againſt it by Herod whilſt he was living; and after his death, it ſtill gained more ground, met with leſs oppoſition, and was more freely profeſſed.

Ver. 25. And Barnabas and Saul returned from Jeruſalem, &c.] Two of Beza's exemplars, the Complutenſian edition, and the Syriac verſion add, unto Antioch; and certain it is, that from thence they were ſent, and thither they returned, for we find them there in the beginning of the next chapter: when they had fulfilled their miniſtry; which was the carrying the relief, or the money collected by the chriſtians at Antioch, for the brethren in Judea, on account of the famine that was there: and took with them John, whoſe ſurname was Mark; the ſon of Mary, at whoſe houſe the diſciples were met together, and praying; and where Peter firſt went, after he was delivered from priſon, ver. 12. him they brought with them from Jeruſalem to Antioch, being a kinſman of Barnabas; and a man of promiſing gifts and uſefulneſs, and judged to be a fit companion with them in their travels, for the ſpread of the Goſpel.

CHAP. XIII.

Ver. 1. NOW there were in the church that was at Antioch, &c.] This was Antioch in Syria, where was a Goſpel church, and where the diſciples were firſt called chriſtians; from whence Saul and Barnabas had been ſent to Jeruſalem, with a ſupply for the poor ſaints there, in a time of famine, and from whence they were now returned: and here were certain prophets and teachers; who were both prophets and teachers, though theſe are ſometimes diſtinguiſhed; who had both a gift of foretelling things to come, as Agabus and others, and of explaining the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, and of teaching the people evangelic truths; theſe, at leaſt ſome of them, came from Jeruſalem hither, ch. xi. 27. As Barnabas and Simeon that was called Niger; the former of theſe was a Levite, and of the country of Cyprus, who ſold his land and brought the money to the apoſtles; and who was firſt ſent hither by the church at Jeruſalem, upon hearing that many in this place believed, and turned to the Lord, ch. iv. 36, 37. and xi. 22. but of the latter, no mention is made elſewhere; by his firſt name he appears to be a Jew, who by the Romans was called Niger; very likely from the blackneſs of his complexion, for that word ſignifies black; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion interprets it: and Lucius of Cyrene; who very probably was one of the ſynagogue of the Cyrenians, and ſeems manifeſtly to be one of the men of Cyrene, that went abroad upon the perſecution raiſed at the death of Stephen, ch. vi. 9. and xi. 19, 20. he is ſaid to be biſhop of Cyrene; ſome take him to be the ſame Lucius mentioned in Rom. xvi. 21. and others think he is the ſame with Luke the Evangeliſt: and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch; or his foſter brother. The Syriac verſion calls him Manail, and one of Stephens's copies Manael, and the Ethiopic verſion Manache, and renders what is ſaid of him, the ſon of king Herod's nurſe; which accounts for their being brought up, nouriſhed, and ſuckled together: the name ſeems to be the ſame with Menachem, or Menahem, a name frequent with the Jews; there was one of this name, who was very intimate with Herod the great, and was in his ſervice, though before he was vice-preſident of the Sanhedrim: the account that is given of him is this [z]; "Hillell and Shammai "received from them (i. e. from Shemaia and Abtalion, who were preſidents before them) but at "firſt there were Hillell and Menahem, but Menahem went out, לעבודת המלך, into the ſervice of "the king, with fourſcore men clad in gold—— "Menahem was a very wiſe man, and a ſort of a "prophet, who delivered out many prophecies; "and he told Herod when he was little, that he "ſhould reign; and after he was king, he ſent for "him, and he told him again, that he ſhould "reign more than thirty years, and he reigned "thirty-ſeven years, and he gave him great riches." Of this Menahem, and of his going into the king's ſervice, mention is made elſewhere [a]: now though this Menahem can't be the ſame with Manaen here, yet this Manaen, as Dr. Lightfoot conjectures, might be the ſon of him, and called after his name; who might be brought up with the ſon of Herod the great, here called the tetrarch; and who was Herod Antipas, the ſame that beheaded John the Baptiſt: and Saul; who afterwards was called Paul.

Ver. 2. As they miniſtered to the Lord, &c.] That is, the five prophets and teachers before-mentioned; and whoſe miniſtry lay in preaching the Goſpel, teaching the people the doctrines of it, and expounding prophecies, and alſo in prayer; to which latter the Syriac verſion reſtrains their miniſtry, rendering it, as they prayed to God; but the phraſe ſeems to be more extenſive: and faſted; which the Jews were much uſed to, and the believing ones had not yet left it off; their cuſtom was to faſt on Mondays and Thurſdays; ſee the note on Luke xviii. 12. Whether it was on one of thoſe days, that theſe men were miniſtring and faſting, is not certain; but this we may be ſure of, it was not on the Jewiſh ſabbath, for on that day they never faſted; very likely that this was a faſt appointed and fixed among themſelves, on ſome particular occaſion; it may be on account of the famine, which was at this time, chap. xi. 28. The Holy Ghoſt ſaid; either with an articulate voice, or by an internal impulſe, upon the minds of three of the prophets: ſeparate me Barnabas and Saul, for the work whereunto I have called them; the work which the Holy Ghoſt had appointed, and called them to before this, was to go and preach the Goſpel among the Gentiles, diſtinct from the Jews, of which we read in the latter part of this chapter; and now he would have them be ſeparated from their brethren, as Aaron and his ſons were from theirs, and be ſent forth from hence directly, upon that work: this ſhows the Spirit to be a perſon, ſince ſpeaking and commanding in an authoritative way, and calling to a work, are aſcribed unto him; and that he is a divine perſon, and truly God, and equal with God, ſince calling to a ſacred office is attributed to him; and a ſeparation to it, is ordered for himſelf, for his ſervice, honour, and glory; he does not ſay ſeparate them to the Lord, or to God, but to me.

Ver. 3. And when they had faſted and prayed, &c.] Not when they had done faſting and praying, at the time the Holy Ghoſt made an impulſe on their minds, to ſeparate two of their brethren to a work they were appointed to; but at another time, which was fixed for that purpoſe; when they faſted and prayed, not for direction, who they were to ſet apart and ſend; for the perſons were before pointed out to them, but that they might have every needful gift and qualification for the work, and be ſucceeded in it: and laid their hands on them; not as ordaining them, for this was not an ordination; the apoſtle Paul particularly, was not ordained an apoſtle by man, but by Jeſus Chriſt; who perſonally appeared to him, and made and ordained him his miniſter and apoſtle; and much leſs by men inferior to himſelf, as Simeon, Lucius, and Manaen were; but this was a geſture and ceremony uſed among the Jews, when they wiſhed any bleſſing or happineſs to attend any perſons; and ſo theſe prophets, when they ſeparated Paul and Barnabas from their company, and were parting from them, put their hands on them, and wiſhed them all proſperity and ſucceſs: could this be thought to be an ordination, as it cannot, ſince both of them were ſtated and authorized miniſters of the word, and one of them an apoſtle long before this; there might ſeem ſome likeneſs between it and the Jewiſh ordination of elders, which was done by three [b], as here were Simeon, Lucius, and Manaen; but then this was not done without the land of Iſrael, as here, nor by impoſition of hands [c]: now when they had thus prayed for them, and wiſhed them well, they ſent them away; to do the work they were called unto; not in an authoritative way, but in a friendly manner they parted with them, and bid them farewell.

Ver. 4. So they being ſent forth of the Holy Ghoſt, &c.] This is ſaid, leſt it ſhould be thought they were ſent by men; it was the Holy Ghoſt that moved the prophets at Antioch to ſeparate them from them, and to ſend them away; and who inclined their minds to go, and directed them what courſe to ſteer: and accordingly they departed to Seleucia; which was a city of Syria, called by Pliny, Seleucia Pieria [d]; it had its name from Seleucus Nicanor, king of Egypt, who was the builder of it: it was not far from Antioch, it is ſaid to be twenty-four miles from it; it is the firſt city of Syria from Cilicia, and was ſituated at the mouth of the river Orontes; wherefore Saul and Barnabas made no ſtay here; and it ſeems that their coming hither, was only in order to take ſhipping for the iſland of Cyprus; for Seleucia was upon the ſea-coaſt, as appears from

Ver. 5. And when they were at Salamis, &c.] A chief city of Cyprus; and ſo Herodotus[f] calls it, Salamis of Cyprus; and in this iſland it is placed by Pliny[g] and Ptolomy[h]: it was built by Teucer, the ſon of Telamon, after his return from the Trojan war; and ſo called by him, from his native country Salamine, in Greece, as is generally agreed by hiſtorians[i]: it was the birth-place of the famous philoſopher Solon, who is from thence called Salaminius; he died in the iſland of Cyprus, in the eightieth year of his age; and before he died, gave orders to carry his bones to Salamis, and being reduced to aſhes, to ſcatter them throughout the province[k]: it was alſo claimed by the Cyprians, as the birth-place of Homer, and is ſaid[l] to be propheſied of that it ſhould be; it was aftewards called Conſtantia, and now Famaguſta, and is in the hands of the Turks; of it Jerom[m] thus writes: “Salamis, a “city in the iſland of Cyprus, now called Conſtan- “tia, which in the time of the emperor Trajan, “the Jews deſtroyed, having killed all the inha- “bitants of it:” which ſhows what a multitude of Jews dwelt in this iſland, and even in this place; hence in this verſe, mention is afterwards made of ſynagogues of Jews in it, where the apoſtles preached, and which was the reaſon of their coming hither. This place, with the whole iſland, was taken from the Venetians by Muſtapha, general to Selimus the ſecond, emperor of the Turks, in the year 1571, after a ſiege of eleven months; which, when he was poſſeſſed of, contrary to the agreement made, he put all the chriſtians to death; and having cut off the ears and noſe of Bragadinus, the governour of it, took off his ſkin alive[n]. Epiphanius an ancient writer of the fourth century, famous for his books againſt hereſies, was biſhop of this place[o], when it was called Conſtantia, from Conſtantius Auguſtus, the emperor; and before him, we read of Gelaſius, biſhop of this place, who was in the council of Nice; there was a church here in the fifth century; and mention is made of a preſbyter of it, in the ſixth century, preſent at the fifth council at Conſtantinople; and in the ſeventh century, a biſhop of this church was in the ſixth council of Conſtantinople; and in the Nicene ſynod, in the eighth century, John biſhop of this place aſſiſted[p]; they preached the word of God in the ſynagogues of the Jews; the Jews being in great numbers in theſe parts, to them the apoſtles firſt preached, though they were ſent unto the Gentiles; and this they continued to do, till the Jews put away the Goſpel, which made their way more clear and open to the Gentiles: and they had alſo John to their miniſter; this was John Mark, whom they brought with them from Jeruſalem, ch. xii. 12, 25. who waited upon them, and provided for them the neceſſaries of life; for this is not to be underſtood of the miniſtry of the word, which is peculiarly aſcribed to them, or of his being an aſſiſtant to them in it; nor can it be underſtood of his being the miniſter in any of the ſynagogues for them, t bring out the book of the law, and direct public ſervice, where it cannot be thought he ſhould have any ſuch office and authority; but of his miniſtring in civil and ſecular things to the apoſtles, or to the poor by their orders.

Ver. 6. And when they had gone through the iſl unto Paphos, &c.] The Alexandrian copy, and the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions read, the whole iſle; for through the midſt of the whole iſland they muſt go, to go from Salamis to Paphos; for Salamis was on the eaſt, and Paphos on the weſt of the iſland[q]: it had its name from the Phenician word, פאת פאות, peathpaoth, the corner of corners; becauſe both old and new Paphos, were ſituated in the extreme part of the iſland; and not from Paphus, the ſon of Pygmalion, by an ivory ſtatue which he had made, whom Venus, at his requeſt, according to the fables of the heathens, turned into a woman: ſome ſay[r], that Cinyras a king of the Aſſyrians, coming into Cyprus, built Paphos; but Pauſanias[s] affirms, that Agapenor, who came hither after the Trojan war, was the builder of this place, and alſo of the temple of Venus in it, for which it was famous[t]; and in certain area of which, Pliny[u] ſays it never rained; and from this place, Venus was called Paphia: according to Chryſoſtom, it was the metropolis of Cyprus; and it is indeed mentioned by Pliny[w], firſt of the fifteen cities that were in it; and ſeems at this time to have been the ſeat of the Roman deputy Paulus Sergius, afterwards ſpoken of: concerning this place Jerom ſays[x], “Paphus, a city “on the ſea-coaſt, in the iſland of Cyprus, formerly “famous for the ſacred rites of Venus, and the “verſes of the poets; which fell by frequent earth- “quakes, and now only ſhows, by its ruins, what “it formerly was:” ſo Seneca[y] ſays, quotiens in ſe Paphus corruit? how often has Paphus fell within “itſelf? that is, by earthquakes: the ruins of many goodly churches and buildings, are to be ſeen it; and the walls of a ſtrong, and almoſt impregnable tower, ſituated upon a hill in the middle of the city, ſuppoſed to be the habitation of Sergius Paulus; there is alſo ſhewn under a certain church, a priſon divided into ſeven rooms, where they ſay Paul and Barnabas were impriſoned, for preaching the Goſpel; what remains of it, is now called Bapho: here they found a certain ſorcerer, a falſe prophet, a Jew, whoſe name was Barjeſus; or the ſon of Jeſus: Jeſus was a name frequent among the Jews, and is the ſame with Joſhua, and was in uſe long before our Saviour's time; there was Jeſus the ſon of Sirach, the author of Eccleſiaſticus, and who had a grandfather of the ſame name: the Syriac verſion here calls him Bar-ſuma, which ſome render the ſon of a name; that is, a man of note, a famous perſon, of great renown; others, the ſon of a ſwelling, or the ſon of ulcers; he profeſſing to be a phyſician, and to cure them, with which they make the name of Barjeſus to agree, deriving it from a root, which ſignifies to heal: Jerom[z] pronounces this name Barieu, and obſerves, that ſome corruptly read it Barjeſu; and he makes it to ſignify an evil man, or one in evil; and Druſius ſays he found the name βαριηυ, Barjeou, in ſome paper of his; and a very learned man[a] of later years ſays it is the ſame with Bar-Jehu, the ſon of Jehu; and affirms, that the Greek word is Βαριηȣς, Barjeus, which others wrongly turn into Bar-jeſus; the Magdeburgenſian centuriators call him, Elymas Barjehu; the reaſon Beda gives, why it ſhould be ſo read, and not Bar-jeſus, is becauſe that a magician was unworthy to be called the ſon of Jeſus, the Saviour, when he was a child of the devil; but the Greek copies agree in Bar-jeſus: his name ſhews him to be a Jew, as he is here called; and he was one of thoſe falſe prophets our Lord ſaid ſhould ariſe, and deceive many; he pretended to foretel things to come, and practiſed ſorcery, and was given to magic arts.

Ver. 7. Which was with the deputy of the country, &c.] Or the Roman governour of the iſland; who very likely dwelt at Paphos, it being a principal, if not the principal city in the iſland, ſince Pliny mentions it firſt of all the cities in it, as before obſerved: and with this governour, or proconſul, as the word ſignifies, or rather prætor, Bar-jeſus was; either he lived with him, making great pretenſions to knowledge and learning, which the governour might be a favourer of, or in quality of a phyſician; the Ethiopic verſion adds, and he was a ſervant of the governour; or he might be only with him occaſionally and accidentally, juſt at that time, though the former ſeems moſt likely: and the name of this deputy, was Sergius Paulus; the name of Paulus, was common among the Romans; Pliny the younger, ſpeaks [b] of one Paſſienus Paulus, a famous Roman knight, and very learned, who wrote elegies; and Trajan [c] in an epiſtle to him, makes mention of Paulus the pro-conſul; and Pliny the elder, among his authors from whom he compiled his hiſtory, cites one of this very name, Sergius Paulus [d]. The iſland of Cyprus was at this time in the hands of the Romans, and this man was the governour of it; it was firſt inhabited by ſome of the ſons of Japhet; Joſephus [e] aſſigns it to Cittim: Cittim he ſays, "had the iſland Chetima, which "now is called Cyprus; and from it all the iſlands, "and moſt places about the ſea, are called Chethim "by the Hebrews; and as a proof of what I ſay, "adds he, one of the cities in Cyprus ſtill retains "the name; for it is called Citium by thoſe who "have made it Greek, and not much differing from "the name Chethimus." After the Trojan war, it came into the hands of the Grecians; and continued with them from the times of Teucer, until Evagoras and his ſon Nicocles; and then it fell into the hands of the Romans, and through them to the kings of Egypt; and after them became a Roman colony, in the following manner: Clodius Pulcher adjudged Cyprus to the Roman people, to poſſeſs which Cato being ſent, Ptolomy the king of the iſland, having caſt his money into the ſea, prevented the ignominy of it by a voluntary death, Anno U. C. 698 [f]. The Roman hiſtorian ſays [g], Cyprus being conquered, the glory of it was not aſſigned to any, ſeeing it was made a province by the decree of the ſenate, by the means of Cato, through the death of the king, which he brought upon himſelf; and from that time, as Strabo ſays [h], it became a prætorian province, and was now governed by a prætor, though he is called a deputy, or proconſul; the reaſon of which Dr. Hammond thinks is, becauſe that P. Lentulus, Ap. Claudius, and M. Cicero, being pro-conſuls of Cilicia, had the adminiſtration of Cyprus alſo granted to them by the ſenate; hence afterwards the governours of Cyprus were called pro-conſuls, or deputies. This ſame Greek word here uſed, is adopted by the Jewiſh Rabbins into their language; hence we read of, אנטיפוטא, ανθυπατος, the deputy, or pro-conſul of Ceſarea [i]; which is explained by a governour, and a judge [k], or a third from the king [l]; and it is retained in the Syriac verſion: this deputy is ſaid to be a prudent man. The Arabic verſion ſeems to diſtinguiſh Paul the prudent man, from Sergius the deputy, or tribune, as it calls him; reading the words thus, who was by Sergius the tribune, with Paul a prudent man; but Sergius and Paulus undoubtedly deſign one and the ſame man, who was prudent: he is ſaid to be a prudent man, in the management of his affairs, as a governour; and might be very learned, ingenious, and an underſtanding man; a man of great ſagacity and penetration, who very likely ſaw through the vain pretenſions, and impoſtures of Bar-jeſus, and was deſirous to expoſe him in a public manner; or at leaſt might conclude he would be diſcovered and expoſed by thoſe good men, who were come into the city; and what follows, ſeems to be mentioned as an inſtance of his prudence: who called for Barnabas and Saul; ſent meſſengers to them, to deſire them to come to him; Barnabas is mentioned firſt, though the inferior perſon, becauſe he was a native of the country, and might be beſt known: and deſired to hear the word of God; whether this was at firſt from mere curioſity, or from any political view, or from a true deſire of knowing the way of life and ſalvation, which might be wrought in his ſoul by the Spirit of God, is not certain; though the latter ſeems moſt likely, ſince it iſſued in his converſion.

Ver. 8. But Elymas the ſorcerer, for ſo is his name by interpretation, &c.] Not that Magus a ſorcerer, is by interpretation Elymas; as if Luke was interpreting the Perſic word Magus, which is ſometimes uſed in a good ſenſe, for a wiſe man, as in Matt. ii. 1. by an Arabic word Elim, which ſignifies knowing; but Elymas is the interpretation of his name Bar-jeſus; which as that ſignifies the ſon of ſalvation, or of healing, ſo this as De Dieu obſerves, may be derived from, חלם, Chalam, which ſignifies to heal, or to be ſound and in health. Junius thinks the name comes from the Arabic word, אלאם, which ſignifies to mutter, as wizards and ſorcerers, and ſuch ſort of men uſed to do; and though he rejects the opinion of Tremellius, taking it for an Hebrew name, and to be the ſame with, אלימעץ, Elimaatz, which ſignifies divine counſel; yet this, or what is near to it, is embraced by a late learned man [m]; who obſerves, that Elymas is in Hebrew, אלמעץ, Elmahatz; the interpretation of which is, God's counſel, or the counſel of God; the name of a man, Maaz, is read in 1 Chron. ii. 27. and that it is the ſame with Elymoteros, as Olympas is the ſame with Olympiodorus; and he further obſerves, that Barjeus as Jerom, or Origen ſay it was anciently read, and not Bar-jeſus, is the ſame with, בר יעוץ, Barjeutz, or Barjeus, the ſon of counſel, and ſo agrees with Elymas: now he withſtood them; Saul and Barnabas, juſt as Jannes and Jambres, the magicians of Egypt, withſtood Moſes; he did all he could to prevent their coming into the governour's houſe, and them from preaching to him, and him from hearing of them; and eſpecially from giving heed to, and embracing the doctrines preached by them; which he oppoſed and argued againſt, with all the cunning and ſophiſtry he was maſter of: ſeeking to turn away the deputy from the faith; the doctrine of faith, from hearing and receiving it; and when he had received it, he endeavoured to ſet him againſt it, and cauſe him to deny and reject it, with abhorrence; the Ethiopic verſion calls him the king, as in the former verſe the prince.

Ver. 9. Then Saul (who alſo is called Paul,) &c.] He was called by both theſe names; as he was a Jew by birth, his parents called him Saul, that was his Jewiſh name, and by which he went among the Jews; and as he was a citizen of a Roman city, Tarſus in Cilicia, he went among the Romans, or Gentiles, by the name of Paul, a Roman name; and it was uſual with the Jews to be called after this manner, that is, to have one name among themſelves, and another among the Gentiles: it is a rule with them [n], that "the Iſraelites out of the land, their names are as the names of the Gentiles;" yea, their names differed in Judea and Galilee; a woman went by one name in Judea, and another in Galilee [o]: and it is obſervable, that Luke calls the apoſtle by his Jewiſh name Saul, whilſt he was among the Jews, and only preached among them; but now he is got among the Gentiles, and was about to appear openly to be their apoſtle, he all along hereafter calls him by his Gentile name Paul: though ſome think his name was changed upon his converſion, as it was uſual with Jewiſh penitents to do; when a man repented of his ſin, "he changed his name, ſays Maimonides [p], as if he ſhould ſay, I am another, and not the man that did thoſe (evil) works." So when Maachah, Aſa's mother, or rather grandmother, was converted, or became right, ſhe changed her name into Michaihu, the daughter of Uriel of Gibeah; that her former name might not be remembered, leſt it ſhould be a reproach unto her [q]: though others think, that the apoſtle was ſo called, from Sergius Paulus the deputy, whoſe converſion he was the inſtrument of; and whoſe family might chuſe to call him ſo, becauſe of the nearneſs in ſound between the two names: others think he had his name Paul, or Paulus, from the ſmallneſs of his ſtature and voice, to which he ſeems to have ſome reſpect, in 2 Cor. x. 10. and there is one Samuel the little, which the Jewiſh doctors often ſpeak of, and who by ſome is taken to be the ſame with the apoſtle Paul. This name is by Jerom, or Origen [r], interpreted wonderful, as if it came from the Hebrew word, פלא, pala; and others derive it from, פעל, paal, which ſignifies to work; and a laborious worker the apoſtle was, and a workman alſo which needed not to be aſhamed; but ſince 'tis certain that Saul was his Hebrew name, it is moſt likely that this was a Gentile one, and not of Hebrew derivation: the firſt account of theſe names, and the reaſon of them, ſeems to be the beſt: now of him it is ſaid, that he was filled with the Holy Ghoſt; which does not deſign the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghoſt in general, with which he was always filled, and thereby qualified for his work as an apoſtle; but in particular, that he had by the Spirit, not only a diſcerning of the wickedneſs of this man, but of the will of God, to make him at this time a public example of divine wrath and vengeance, for his oppoſition to the Goſpel: wherefore he ſet his eyes on him; very earneſtly, thereby expreſſing an abhorrence of him, and indignation againſt him, and as it were threatening him with ſome ſore judgment to fall upon him.

Ver. 10. And ſaid, O full of all ſubtlety and all miſchief, &c.] Which may have regard both to his general character as a ſorcerer, and a falſe prophet; in acting up to which he uſed much deceit and cunning among the people, and did much miſchief to them; to which there was a promptneſs and readineſs in him, as the word uſed ſignifies; and alſo to the ſophiſtry he uſed, and the miſchief he endeavoured to do in ſeeking to turn the deputy from the faith. The minds of carnal men are vain and empty, and deſtitute of all that is good, and full of all that is evil: their character is, filled with all unrighteouſneſs, Rom. i. 29. They have many of them a great deal of wit, but it is wicked wit, and they employ it in an evil and miſchievous way, both to the hurt of themſelves and others; they are like the old ſerpent, whoſe ſeed they are, who was more ſubtle than any beaſt of the field; they are wiſer in their generation than the children of light; they are wiſe to do evil, tho' they have no knowledge of what is ſpiritually good; they are able to form very cunning and artful ſchemes, to commit ſin, and do miſchief; for all their craft and ſubtlety are uſed in ſuch a way; nor can they ſleep, or be eaſy in their minds, unleſs they are doing miſchief. Thou child of the devil; perhaps alluding to his name, that inſtead of Bar-Jeſus, the ſon of a ſaviour, he ſhould have been called Bar-Satan, the ſon of Satan, or Ben-Belial, a ſon of Belial. The phraſe, בכור שטן, the firſt-born of ſatan, is uſed by the Jews, ſometimes in a good ſenſe for one that is acute, ſharp, and ſubtle, and that abides by his doctrine, and does his work [s]: but here a child of the devil is uſed in an ill ſenſe, for being like him in wicked cunning and ſubtlety; in like ſenſe, as the other phraſe was uſed by Polycarp, whom Marcion the heretick met, and ſaid unto him, know us; to whom Polycarp replied, I know thee, the firſt-born of ſatan [t]: thou enemy of all righteouſneſs; a wicked man is an enemy to all righteouſneſs in every branch of it, in whatſoever light it may be conſidered: he is an enemy, yea, enmity itſelf againſt God the righteous being, and who is the fountain of all righteouſneſs; he is an enemy to Jeſus Chriſt the righteous, who is the Lord our righteouſneſs; he is an enemy to that righteouſneſs which he has wrought out; he is an enemy to all righteous perſons, and hates their holy and righteous converſation; he is an enemy to the law, and can't be ſubject to it, which is the rule of righteouſneſs; and he is an enemy to the Goſpel, which reveals the righteouſneſs of God from faith to faith, and teaches men to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly; in ſhort, he is an enemy to all righteouſneſs, moral and evangelical. Wilt thou not ceaſe to pervert the right ways of the Lord? the doctrines and ordinances of Chriſt, in which he has directed his people to walk; which this man, thro' his ſophiſtry and wickedneſs, in which he was induſtrious and indefatigable, endeavoured to render intricate and obſcure, when they were plain, and ſtraight, and eaſy. For the ways of the Lord are right, and the juſt ſhall walk in them, Hoſ. xiv. 9. they are right, and 'tis becoming ſuch to walk in them; they are plain to them that have a true knowledge of them, even wayfaring men, tho' fools ſhall not err in them; they are entirely conſiſtent with the righteouſneſs and holineſs of God, and lead right on to eternal glory and happineſs. Chriſt himſelf is the true way to eternal life, which is plainly pointed, and clearly directed to in the word of God, and by the miniſters of the Goſpel, who ſhew unto men the way of ſalvation; the path of truth is fully deſcribed, and ſuch things ſaid of it as are very inviting to walk in it; and good men cannot but chuſe and delight to walk in it, when led into it by the Spirit of truth: wiſdom's ways are ways of pleaſantneſs, and all her paths paths of peace; even all the paths of duty and worſhip, the ways of righteouſneſs and holineſs; but wicked men ſeek to pervert theſe ways, to give a falſe account of them, to ſet them in a wrong light, and repreſent them not only as rough and troubleſome, but as dangerous, and leading to ruin; and do all they can to hinder perſons from entering into them, and to cauſe thoſe to ſtumble who are in them: nor will they ceaſe acting this wicked part; they are continually at work to make the ways of Chriſt odious, to ſet people againſt them, to diſcourage from walking in them by their oppoſition to them, the falſe gloſſes they put upon them, and by their ſcoffs and jeers at thoſe that walk in them, and by their violent perſecutions of them, when it is in their power.

Ver. 11. And now behold the hand of the Lord is upon thee, &c.] That is, the power of God was juſt ready to be exerted on him in a way of puniſhment, by ſtriking him with blindneſs: and thou ſhalt be blind, not ſeeing the ſun for a ſeaſon; ſo blind as not to ſee the ſun, when it ſhined ever ſo brightly: this puniſhment ſeems to be but for a time; and ſome ſay that Elymas repented, and had his ſight reſtored to him; and after that he returned to his ſorcery, and again greatly oppoſed Barnabas in the iſland of Cyprus: and immediately there fell on him a miſt and a darkneſs; as ſoon as ever the Apoſtle had ſaid the above words, a dark miſt fell upon his eyes, which began the blindneſs, and iſſued in a total one: and he went about ſeeking ſome to lead him by the hand; he groped about the room, if he could find, and lay hold on ſome perſon to lead him; for he was quickly ſtone-blind, ſo that he could not guide himſelf, as the men of Sodom were, when ſmitten with blindneſs by the angel; wherefore, tho' they groped about for the door of the houſe till they were weary, they could not find it, Gen. xix. 11. of which the Jews ſay, as here, that it was מכה מאת השם, a ſtroke from God[u]. Blind men need one to hold them by the hand, and lead them, as Samſon, Judg. xvi. 26. and Saul, Acts ix. 8. The ſtriking this man with blindneſs is an inſtance of the power the Apoſtles were endued with, for the puniſhing of offenders; ſo Ananias and Sapphira were ſtruck dead for telling a lye; and the inceſtuous perſon was delivered to ſatan to undergo a corporal puniſhment for his inceſt; as Hymenæus and Alexander were for their blaſphemy, Acts v. 5, 10. 1 Cor. v. 5. 1 Tim. i. 20.

Ver. 12. Then the deputy when he ſaw what was done, &c.] That Elymas was ſtruck with blindneſs immediately, and that the hand of God was manifeſtly in it, and there was no juggle nor magic art in the caſe; it was a plain fact, which was certain and viſible: he believed; in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, whom the Apoſtle preached: being aſtoniſhed at the doctrine of the Lord; both at what was contained in it: for there are many aſtoniſhing things in the doctrine of faith; as the birth of Chriſt of a virgin; the union of the two natures, divine and human, in his perſon; ſalvation thro' his crucifixion and death, and the reſurrection of the dead, with others: and alſo at the miracles which attended this doctrine, and confirmed it; though the Alexandrian copy reads the words thus, being aſtoniſhed, he believed in the doctrine of the Lord; which affords a very eaſy and natural ſenſe, as that being filled with admiration at the ſtriking of Elymas with blindneſs, he was induced to believe the doctrine of Chriſt, preached by Paul and Barnabas; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, he wondered, and believed in our Lord; and Beza's ancient copy, and others, read, he wondered and believed in God. This deputy we hear no more of afterwards; there is no reaſon to believe that he quitted his government of this iſland; tho' ſome pretend to ſay that he did, and followed the Apoſtle Paul, and went with him into Spain; and that he was left by him at Narbonne in Languedoc in France, and became biſhop of that place; which office he held till his death. And though we read of no more converted at this time in Paphos, yet it is highly probable there were others, and that a foundation of a Goſpel church-ſtate was laid in this place, even though heatheniſm ſtill continued. The temple of Venus remained in this place in the ſecond century; and in the fourth century Venus was worſhipped here; yet in the beginning of the fourth century, in the council of Nice, Cyril, biſhop of Paphos, was preſent; and in the fifth century, a biſhop of this place was at the ſynod of Chalcedon; and in the eighth century, Michael, biſhop of Paphos, was in the Nicene ſynod[w]. Jerom[x] makes mention of Hilarion, an eminent ſervant of Chriſt, who was for ſome time at Paphos, in the fourth century, and of the many miraculous cures he wrought here; but of the church here, or of any number of believers in Chriſt, he takes no notice, only of one Heſychius, a diſciple; tho' it is certain there muſt be a church at this time, as before obſerved.

Ver. 13. Now when Paul and his company looſed from Paphos, &c.] Which was upon the ſea-coaſt: ſo Jerom[y] ſays, that Paphos was urbs maritima, a city on the ſea-coaſt of the iſland of Cyprus; it was on the weſtern part of the iſland, to the weſt of which lay the ſea of Pamphylia, over which the Apoſtle, and his company, ſailed to the place next mentioned, which was in Pamphylia; and ſo Apollonius Tyaneus[z], having got a ſhip at Seleucia, is ſaid to ſail to Paphos in Cyprus; and from hence the Apoſtle, and thoſe that were with him, ſet ſail; and as the Syriac verſion renders it, went by ſea, or thro' the ſea; that is, of Pamphylia, of which mention is made in Acts xxvii. 5. They came to Perga in Pamphylia; which country was before called Mopſopia; ſee the note on ch. ii. 10. which now, with Cilicia, is called Caramania; and among the cities and towns in it, both Pliny[a] and Ptolomy[b] make mention of Perga; where was a famous temple of Diana, whence ſhe was ſometimes called Pergea[c]; and every year a great feaſt was kept here in honour of her: it was the birth-place of Apollonius, a very famous geometrician, who wrote eight books of conic ſections, four of which are now extant[d]; and who, from his native place, is called Apollonius Pergæus[e].

It was ſituated between two great rivers Oeſtros and Catarctes[f]; and ſince פרג, Parag, in the eaſtern languages, ſignifies to delight, perhaps it might be ſo called from its delightful ſituation. Hillerus[g] obſerves, Pargi (or rather Peruge, as is the word in the Syriac verſion of Matt. xxiii. 37. Luke ii. 24.) with the Syrians ſignifies the young of birds, as of hens and doves; and ſo do Pargiin, Pargiot, and Perigin, with the Jewiſh Rabbins[h]; which writer ſeems to ſuggeſt, that this place was ſo called from the multitude of fowls that were about it. And John departing from them returned to Jeruſalem; that is, John Mark, whom Paul and Barnabas took with them, and who was a miniſter to them: but what was the reaſon of his departure, whether for the ſake of ſeeing his mother at Jeruſalem; or becauſe he did not like, but grew weary of the travels, labours, and fatigues of the Apoſtle, and his company; or did not chuſe to go among the Gentiles, is not certain: however, his departure was reſented by Paul; and it laid a foundation for a ſharp contention between him and Barnabas, who was uncle to this John Mark, Acts xv. 38, 39. from whence it appears that it was not at Paphos in Cyprus, but at Perga in Pamphilia, that he left them, by which the miſtake of ſome interpreters on this text muſt be corrected.

Ver. 14. But when they departed from Perga, &c.] Where they ſeemed not to make any long ſtay; nor is there any account of what they did there; though it is certain here was a church of Chriſt in after-times, and very likely planted by the Apoſtles; for after this Paul and Barnabas preached the word in this place, ch. xiv. 25. and no doubt with ſucceſs: In the third century there were martyrs of this church at Perga, which ſuffered under the emperor Decius; and in the fourth century, we read of a famous church in this place, over which Jovinian was biſhop or paſtor; and in the fifth century there was a church here, whoſe biſhop is mentioned in the catalogue of biſhops who aſſiſted in the firſt council at Epheſus; and, in the ſame century, the church of this place was the metropolitan church of Pamphilia; and, in the ſixth century, one Epiphanius was biſhop of Perga; and, in the ſeventh century, it is ſpoken of as the metropolitan of Pamphilia; and, in the eighth century, we read of Siſinnius as biſhop of it[i]; ſo far down can we trace chriſtianity in this city. They came to Antioch in Piſidia; ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from Antioch of Syria, from whence they were ſent, ver. 1, 2, 3. and ſo this place is called Antioch of Piſidia by Ptolomy[k]; and alſo from another Antioch in Mygdania, before called Niſibis, as Pliny[l] obſerves, and which is the Antioch in 1 Maccab. vi. 63. 2 Maccab. xiii. 23. concerning which Joſephus[m] has theſe words; Niſibis is the name of the country, and in it formerly the Macedonians built Antioch, which they called Mygdonia. Piſidia was a province of Aſia; it had Pamphilia on the north, Lycaonia on the eaſt, and Phrygia Pacatiana on the weſt; and it is mentioned together with Phrygia, Lycaonia, and Pamphilia by Pliny[n]; and this Antioch in it, is, by the ſame writer, called Ceſarea[o]: his words are, the Piſidians have their ſeat upon the top (of the valley) formerly called Solymi, whoſe colony is Ceſarea, the ſame with Antioch. This is the Antioch to which Paul and Barnabas came, when they went from Perga, where were many Jews, and who had a ſynagogue in it: we read before, in ch. ii. 9, 10. of devout Jews that came to Jeruſalem, whoſe native places were Aſia, Phrygia, and Pamphilia, to which Piſidia was near: wherefore it follows, and went into the ſynagogue on the ſabbath-day; for tho' the ceremonial law was abrogated by the death of Chriſt, it ſtill was obſerved by the Jews, who had their ſynagogues open on that day for religious ſervice; wherefore Paul and Barnabas took the opportunity of going in when they were aſſembled together, in order to preach Chriſt to them, not having a convenient time on other days: and ſat down; on one of the ſeats in the ſynagogue; either as hearers of the law and prophets, which were read every ſabbath-day in the ſynagogues; or elſe to teach the word, expound the ſcriptures, and preach the Goſpel of Chriſt, it being uſual to ſit when this was done; ſee the note on Matt. v. 1. and both were true, for they heard a part of the law and prophets read, according to the cuſtom of the Jews; ſee the following verſe, and chap. xv. 21. and they alſo gave a word of exhortation to the people.

Ver. 15. And after the reading of the law and the prophets, &c.] Which was done every ſabbath-day, ch. xv. 21. The five books of Moſes, which are meant by the law, were divided into ſections; Geneſis was divided into twelve, Exodus into eleven, Leviticus into ten, Numbers into ten, and Deuteronomy into ten, which in all make fifty-three ſections; and ſo by reading one on each ſabbath, and two on one day, they read through the whole law in the courſe of a year, and which they finiſhed at the cloſe of the feaſt of tabernacles; and that day was called שמחת תורה, the rejoicing of the law; it was a day of rejoicing, that the law was read through. Some make fifty-four ſections, and then two of them muſt be read together, on two ſabbath-days, to finiſh the whole in the year. In ſome ſynagogues the ſection was divided into three parts, and ſo they finiſhed the law in three years; but this cuſtom was leſs common[p]. The cuſtom of reading the law, the Jews ſay, was one hundred and ſeventy years before the time of Jeſus Chriſt; tho' ſome ſay the diviſion of the law, into ſections, was made by Ezra; and others refer it to Moſes himſelf: it is certain it obtained in the times of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, as did alſo the reading of the prophets, and which was introduced in this way, and upon this account. When Antiochus Epiphanes burnt the book of the law, and forbad the reading of it, the Jews in the room of it ſelected ſome paſſages out of the prophets, which they thought came neareſt in words and ſenſe to the ſections of the law, and read them in their ſtead; and when the law was reſtored again, they ſtill continued the reading of the prophetic ſections; and the ſection for the day was called הפטרה, the diſmiſſion, becauſe uſually the people were diſmiſſed upon it, unleſs any one ſtood up, and preached or expounded the word of God unto the people: hence the following meſſage and addreſs to the Apoſtles, the rulers of the ſynagogue ſent unto them; that is, thoſe who were the principal men in the ſynagogue, the ruler of it, together with the elders; for there were but one ruler in a ſynagogue; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 18. tho' there were more elders; and ſo the Syriac verſion here renders it, the elders of the ſynagogue; but it may be aſked, why ſhould they ſend to the Apoſtles? how did they know that they were teachers, being ſtrangers? this they might conclude from their outward appearance, their gravity and ſolidity; for as for habit or dreſs there was no diſtinction; or from their ſitting down when they came into the ſynagogue, which was the cuſtom of teachers; or they might have had ſome knowledge of them, and converſation with them, before they came into the ſynagogue; for it cannot be reaſonably thought that they admitted any one, whether they knew him or not, to teach in their ſynagogues: ſaying, ye men and brethren; which was the common ſtile of the Jews, they uſed in addreſſes, and eſpecially to their own countrymen, as they might perceive Paul and Barnabas were; ſee Acts ii. 29. and vii. 2. if ye have any word of exhortation for the people, ſay on; the ſenſe is, if they were prepared to preach, or had any thing upon their minds to ſay to the people; or if they had, as it is in the original text, any word of exhortation or comfort in them, as they had indeed a rich treaſure in their earthen veſſels, they had leave and liberty to ſpeak it to the people. A word of exhortation deſigns any doctrine that might be for inſtruction and comfort, and this was agreeable to the practice of the Jews. For it is ſaid [q], "on the ſabbath-day, דורשין דרשה, "they preach a ſermon, or expound to houſe-"keepers, (or maſters of families) who are em-"ployed in buſineſs all the days of the week; and "in the midſt of the ſermon they teach them the "traditions, concerning what is forbidden, and "what is lawful; and it is better for them to hear "than to read in the Hagiographa;" which books they did not read publickly, as is ſaid in the ſame place, only the law and the prophets; with the latter of which they diſmiſſed the people, unleſs a ſermon was preached; and which, when done, was chiefly for the ſake of the common people, men and women: and it is ſaid [r], that "the women, "and the people of the earth, (or the common "people) come to hear the ſermon, and the preach-"ers ought to draw out their hearts;" ſpeak out their whole mind, and deliver all they know that may be inſtructive and profitable.

Ver. 16. Then Paul ſtood up, &c.] Not ſo much that he might be heard; or merely out of reverence and reſpect to the rulers, and the people; but to ſhow that he accepted the invitation; as alſo in order to take his proper place in the ſynagogue, and ſit down and teach, as was their cuſtom: and beckning with his hand; to the people to be ſilent, and attend to what he had to ſay: ſaid, men of Iſrael; by whom are meant the proper Jews, the natural deſcendants of Jacob, whoſe name was Iſrael; this was accounted a very honourable character, and was a common form of addreſs; ſee ch. ii. 22. and ye that fear God; not as diſtinguiſhing ſome among the Iſraelites from the reſt, as if there were ſome of them that did not fear God; for by theſe are meant, not Jews by birth, but proſelytes, devout and religious men from among the Gentiles; who were proſelyted to the Jewiſh religion, and attended with them in their ſynagogues on religious worſhip; and that there were ſuch in this ſynagogue, is certain from ver. 43. and we find that ſometimes the Jews diſtinguiſh the proſelytes from the Iſraelites by this very character [s]: "it is ſaid, Pſ. "cxxviii. 1. bleſſed is every one that feareth the Lord, "that walketh in his ways; he does not ſay bleſſed "are the Iſraelites, bleſſed are the prieſts, bleſſed "are the Levites, but bleſſed is every one that fear-"eth the Lord; אלו הגרים, theſe are the proſe-"lytes, for they fear the Lord——of what proſe-"lyte is it ſaid bleſſed? of the proſelyte who is a "proſelyte of righteouſneſs, and not of the Cuthites, "of whom it is written, 2 Kings xvii. 33. but of "a proſelyte who fears the Lord, and walks in his "ways;" ſo Pſ. xxii. 23. and cxv. 11. are interpreted by many Jewiſh writers [t]. Now to both theſe ſort of perſons, both to the proper Jews, and to the proſelytes of righteouſneſs, the Apoſtle addreſſes himſelf, and deſires they would give audience to what he had to ſay; which is as follows.

Ver. 17. The God of this people of Iſrael choſe our fathers, &c.] Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and their ſeed after them, to be a peculiar people to himſelf; wherefore he is often, as here, ſtiled their God, and whom he diſtinguiſhed and bleſſed with many bleſſings, civil and religious, above all people upon the face of the earth. The Apoſtle ſeems particularly to addreſs himſelf to the Gentiles, the inhabitants of Antioch, and the proſelytes of righteouſneſs, now in the ſynagogue, ver. 42, 43. and, as it were, with his finger pointed to the native Jews preſent, the deſcendants of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, a part of the people whoſe God the Lord was: and exalted the people when they dwelt as ſtrangers in the land of Egypt; as they did for many years, and as the Lord foretold to Abraham they ſhould, Gen. xv. 13. This refers either to the great honour and dignity Joſeph was advanced unto, and to the favours and privileges beſtowed on Jacob and his family at the firſt of their ſojourning in that land; or to the great increaſe of their poſterity towards the cloſe of it, even when they were the moſt oppreſſed and afflicted. And with an high arm he brought them out of it; out of the land of Egypt, and out of their oppreſſion in it; which was owing to, and was a wonderful diſplay of his mighty power, and great ſtrength, here expreſſed by an high arm; for nothing ſhort of that could have wrought deliverance for them.

Ver. 18. And about the time of forty years, &c.] From their coming out of Egypt, to their entrance into the land of Canaan: ſuffered he their manners in the wilderneſs; which were very perverſe and provoking; as their murmuring for water, their rebellion againſt Moſes and Aaron, their idolatry and the ill report brought on the good land by their ſpies; and yet the Lord fed them, and led them, and kept them as the apple of his eye: ſome think the true reading is ἐτροφοφορησεν, he bore, or fed them, as a nurſe bears and feeds her children; and ſo the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions render it, he nouriſhed them; rained manna, and gave them quails from heaven, and furniſhed a table for them in the wilderneſs: and indeed, tho' there were inſtances of God's patience and forbearance with them, yet certain it is, that as he was tempted and proved by them, ſo he was grieved with them during the forty years in the wilderneſs; and often let fall his vengeance upon them, by cutting off great numbers of them; and even the carcaſes of all that generation that came out of Egypt fell in the wilderneſs; nor did any of them enter into the land of Canaan, but Joſhua and Caleb.

Ver. 19. And when he had deſtroyed ſeven nations in the land of Canaan, &c.] The Canaanites, Hittites, Amorites, Perizzites, Hivites, Jebuſites, and Girgaſhites; and the name of ſeven nations is what they are uſually called by in Jewiſh writings; and tho they were not utterly deſtroyed, or every one of them put to death, or driven out, for ſome remained to be thorns in the ſides of the Iſraelites; yet they were ſo waſted and conquered, that they could never recover any more: he divided their land to them; every tribe had its portion of it aſſigned, by lot; ſee Joſh. xiv. 1, 2, 3.

Ver. 20. And after that he gave unto them judges, &c.] As Othniel, Ehud, Deborah, Gideon, Abimelech, Tolah, Jair, Jepthah, Ibzan, Elon, Abdon, Sampſon, and Eli: about the ſpace of four hundred and fifty years; not that from the diviſion of the land of Canaan among the tribes, to Samuel the prophet, was ſuch a ſpace of years; for from the coming of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, to the year that Solomon began to build the temple, were but four hundred and fourſcore years, 1 Kings vi. 1. and out of theſe muſt be taken the forty years the children of Iſrael were in the wilderneſs, and ſeven years in ſubduing the land of Canaan, before the diviſion of it, which reduce this number to four hundred and thirty and three; and from hence muſt be deducted the time of Samuel's judging Iſrael, the reigns of Saul and David, and three years of Solomon's, which reduced the years of the judges to leſs than four hundred years; and according to ſome, the years of the judges were three hundred and fifty-ſeven; and according to others, three hundred and thirty-nine, and both fall ſhort of the ſpace of years here aſſigned. The Alexandrian copy, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read this clauſe in connexion with the preceding words, he divided their land unto them, about the ſpace of four hundred years, and after that he gave unto them judges; agreeable hereunto the Ethiopic verſion renders it, and after four hundred and fifty years, he ſet over them governours, &c. So that this account reſpects not the time of the judges, or how long they were, but refers to all that goes before, and meaſures out the ſpace of time from God's choice of the Jewiſh fathers, to the diviſion of the land of Canaan: and reckoning from the birth of Iſaac, when the choice took place, and in whom Abraham's ſeed was called, there was much about ſuch a number of years; for from the birth of Iſaac to the birth of Jacob, were ſixty years; from thence to his going down into Egypt, an hundred and thirty years; and from thence to the Iſraelites coming out of Egypt, two hundred and ten years; and from thence to their entrance into the land of Canaan, forty years; and from that time to the diviſion of the land, ſeven years, which in all make four hundred and forty-ſeven years: ſo that according to this account, there were only three years wanting of the ſum in the text; hence the apoſtle might with great propriety ſay, that it was about the ſpace of ſo many years. It follows, until Samuel the prophet; the meaning of which, is not that there was ſuch a ſpace of time as before mentioned, from the diſtribution of the land of Canaan until the times of Samuel the prophet, during which ſpace judges were given; but that after that term of time was expired, God gave them judges, or raiſed up one after another, until Samuel the prophet, who was the laſt of them: of his character as a prophet, ſee the note on chap. iii. 24. and which is a title frequently given him by Jewiſh writers[u].

Ver. 21. And afterward they deſired a king, &c.] 1 Sam. viii. 5. which the Jews[w] ſay, was in the tenth year of Samuel; that is, of his government over Iſrael, or of his judging them: and God gave unto them Saul; whoſe name ſignifies one that is aſked; he was, the ſon of Cis; ſo the Septuagint read and pronounce the word Kiſh, the name of Saul's father, 1 Sam. ix. 1. a man of the tribe of Benjamin; not of Judah, from whence the ſcepter was not to depart till Shiloh came; the buſineſs of their aſking a king being reſented by God, he gives them their firſt king of another tribe: by the ſpace of forty years. The Jews are very much divided about the years of Saul's reign, ſome allow him but two years[x], and others three, one year that he reigned with Samuel, and two by himſelf[y], which they conclude from 1 Sam. xiii. 1. but others[z], think this too ſhort a time for the things done by him, the wars he fought with many nations, and his perſecution of David from place to place; wherefore others[a] allow him, ſome ſeventeen, and others twenty years; but our apoſtle aſcribes forty years to him, which muſt be underſtood both of him and Samuel; with which Joſephus[b] agrees, who ſays that he reigned eighteen years, during Samuel's life, and twenty-two years after his death, which make the ſpace of forty years fixed by the apoſtle; tho' the clauſe, by the ſpace of forty years, may be read in conſtruction with the latter end of the preceding verſe, until Samuel the prophet; who, the Jews[c] own, judged ſo many years: wherefore the apoſtle is not to be charged with an error, as he is by a Jewiſh[d] objector; who obſerves, that from the beginning of Saul's kingdom, or from the time that he was anointed by Samuel the prophet, until the kingdom was renewed to him by all Iſrael, was one year, and then Saul choſe three thouſand men out of Iſrael; after that he reigned two years by the conſent of all Iſrael, until he ſinned in the buſineſs of the Amalekites, and then he was accounted as a dead man, and the years of his reign were not numbred; at which time David was anointed, who muſt be about twenty years of age, 1 Sam. xvi. 18. and yet when he came to the kingdom after the death of Saul, he was but thirty years of age, 2 Sam. v. 4. from whence he thinks it follows that Saul reigned but ten years: in all which he is guilty of ſeveral miſtakes, and advances things he cannot prove; it was not after Saul had reigned one year, but after he had reigned two years, that he choſe three thouſand men out of Iſrael, as is expreſsly ſaid, 1 Sam. xiii. 1, 2. and that he had reigned but two years when he ſinned in the caſe of the Amalekites, wants proof; nor is it evident that David was twenty years of age when he was anointed, for it was after his unction that he is ſaid to be a mighty valiant man, and a man of war, 1 Sam. xvi. 18. nor indeed can it be ſaid in what year of Saul's reign he was anointed; ſo that nothing can be concluded from the age David was at when he began to reign, concerning the years of the reign of Saul his predeceſſor; and even according to this man's own reckoning, he muſt reign thirteen years, one before the conſent of all Iſrael, two after, and before his ſin about the Amalekites, and ten from the time of David's unction: but that Saul muſt reign more years than theſe, and even as many as the apoſtle aſſigns to him, may be concluded, not only from his wars with many nations, and his long perſecution of David before obſerved; but from the number of high-prieſts which were in his time, and who were

Ver. 22. And when he had removed him, &c.] Either by death, or rejected him from being king while he was living; ſee 1 Sam. xv. 23. and xvi. 1. he raiſed up unto them David to be their king; who was of the tribe of Judah, and who was raiſed from a very mean condition, from keeping of ſheep to ſit upon the throne of Iſrael: to whom alſo he gave teſtimony, and ſaid, I have found David; a type of the Meſſiah; he choſe him to be king, ſent Samuel to anoint him, and at length ſet him on the throne: the apoſtle adds, as a further account of him, the ſon of Jeſſe; who lived at Bethlehem, where the Meſſiah was to be born, and who was a perſon of no great note and figure in Iſrael; and this is mentioned as an illuſtration of the diſtinguiſhing goodneſs of God to David. It follows, a man after mine own heart; on whom the heart of God was ſet, and who had an intereſt in his heart's love, and to whom he was exceeding grateful and acceptable; God took great delight and pleaſure in him, in the general courſe of his life, and in his principles, aims, and deſigns; he was as he would have him to be: which ſhall fulfil all my will; in governing the people, ſubduing their enemies, ſettling the order of divine worſhip and ſervice, and preparing things for the building of the temple; and who alſo had a regard to all the commandments of God, and walked in them, tho' he was not without his ſins and infirmities: now theſe words are not to be found together in any one paſſage, as they might be thought to be from the manner in which they are produced, they being cited as a teſtimony delivered by the Lord, ſaying theſe concerning David; but where? the firſt part of them, I have found David, is expreſſed in Pſal. lxxxix. 20. and yet the paſſage there ſeems to have reſpect to David's antitype; and to be underſtood not literally of David, but myſtically and typically of Chriſt, David's ſon, with whom the whole pſalm agrees; rather therefore this is implied in 1 Sam. xiii. 14. where alſo the next words, a man after mine own heart, are to be met with; where it is thus expreſſed, tho' not by the Lord, but by Samuel, the Lord hath ſought him a man after his own heart; and as he ſought one, ſo he found one, which was his ſervant David; but then what follows, is not recorded there nor any where elſe, in expreſs terms, concerning David, which ſhall fulfil all my will; what comes neareſt to them, are the words of the Lord to Cyrus, Iſ. xliv. 28. and ſhall perform all my pleaſure; and Cocceius is of opinion, that the above words are taken from hence by the apoſtle, and applied to David, becauſe of his concern in the building of the temple; his heart was ſet upon it, and he made great preparations for it according to the will of God, and did fulfil all it was the pleaſure of God he ſhould, reſpecting this affair; upon the whole, the apoſtle ſeems not to have any reference to any one particular paſſage of ſcripture, bearing a teſtimony to David's character, but to what is to be collected from them in general, as a divine teſtimony in favour of him.

Ver. 23. Of this mans ſeed hath God according to his promiſe, &c.] In 2 Sam. vii. 12. Pſal. cxxxii. 11, 17. Jer. xxiii. 5, 6. raiſed unto Iſrael a Saviour, Jeſus; even Jeſus of Nazareth, whoſe name ſignifies a Saviour, who is the ſon of David, according to the fleſh; the word Jeſus is left out in ſome copies, and ſo it is in the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions, which only read, ſalvation or redemption; the Alexandrian copy, and the Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions read, he hath brought forth unto Iſrael, &c. the ſenſe is, that as God had promiſed that the Meſſiah ſhould ſpring out of David's loins, ſo in the fulneſs of time he had ſent him, or cauſed him to come by the aſſumption of human nature, or by taking fleſh of a virgin, who was of the houſe and lineage of David; and who was ſent, and came firſt to the people of Iſrael, tho' they for the moſt part ſlighted and rejected him; however, he was raiſed up for the myſtical Iſrael of God, all the elect, whether Jews or Gentiles; and that to be the Saviour of them, from ſin, ſatan, and the law, and every enemy, with a ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation, and that both of body and ſoul; and a very able, willing, and ſuitable Saviour he is, as well as a perfect and complete one. This Saviour, Jehovah, in his infinite wiſdom found, and in his purpoſes appointed him to be his ſalvation, and in his covenant provided and ſettled him as ſuch; and in the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, ſpoke of him as the Saviour and redeemer of his people; and in the fulneſs of time ſent him, and raiſed him up of David's ſeed, according to his promiſe to him. The firſt promiſe of a Saviour was made to our firſt parents, under the character of the ſeed of the woman; he was next promiſed to Abraham, that he ſhould be of his ſeed; and then to Judah, that he ſhould be of his tribe; and after that to David, that he ſhould be of his family; and all this has been fulfilled in Jeſus of Nazareth, the true Meſſiah, who is ſometimes called David and David's ſon. Now it was for the ſake of this, that the apoſtle begins with the choice of the Jewiſh fathers, and relates ſo many favours beſtowed upon the people of Iſrael; his view was to lead on to obſerve this ſpecial mercy promiſed them, and now fulfilled, on which he intended to enlarge in his diſcourſe, as follows.

Ver. 24. When John had firſt preached before his coming, &c.] Or before the face of his entrance; that is, on his public miniſtry; for John did not preach before the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh, being born but half a year before him; but before he came forth and was manifeſt to Iſrael; before he entred upon his work and office, as a prophet and teacher of the people: and this points out the buſineſs of John the Baptiſt, who was the fore-runner of Chriſt, and went before his face to prepare his way, who gave notice of his coming, and bore teſtimony to him; and whoſe teſtimony the apoſtle here produces, as being what the Jews could not well reject and deny, he being of ſo much probity and integrity, and ſo great a prophet, as he was accounted by all the people; and whom he prepared for the reception of the Meſſiah, by firſt preaching; the baptiſm of repentance to all the people of Iſrael: he not only adminiſtred the ordinance of baptiſm, but he preached the doctrine of it, opened the nature and deſign of it, and required repentance and fruits meet for it, in thoſe who came to have it adminiſtred to them; for which reaſon it is called the baptiſm of repentance; and this he did publickly before all the people, when the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, came unto him; ſee Mark i. 4. Matt. iii. 2, 3, 5, 7, 8.

Ver. 25. And as John fulfilled his courſe, &c.] Or race, the work of the miniſtry he was called to; as he was preaching and baptizing, which were the race ſet before him to run, and in which he ran well; he made full proof of his miniſtry. The life of every chriſtian is a race, and eſpecially of a miniſter of the Goſpel, and which requires ſtrength, courage, agility, patience and perſeverance; this world is the place in which they run; and this is only the running time; in heaven they will ſit down on the throne with Chriſt; the way in which they run, is the way of their duty, the way of God's commandments; the mark they have in view, which they keep their eye on, and to which they direct their courſe, is Chriſt; and glory is the incorruptible crown they run for, and which, when they have finiſhed their courſe, will be given them by the chief ſhepherd and righteous judge; ſee 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8. and this is to be underſtood, not of the end of John's race, or miniſtry, but rather of the beginning of it; for it was then, he ſaid, whom think ye that I am? I am not he; that is, the Meſſiah. The apoſtle ſeems to refer to John i. 19, 20. when the Jews aſked him who he was, and he freely declared he was not the Chriſt; there the queſtion is put by them to him, here by him to them; doubtleſs the queſtions were put by both; however, the ſenſe is the ſame, that he was not the Meſſiah, but he bore teſtimony to him that was: but behold there cometh one after me; meaning Jeſus, who was the Meſſiah, and who when John ſpoke theſe words, was coming after him from Galilee to Jordan to be baptized by him, and who in a little while after that came forth in the publick miniſtry of the word: John was to come forth firſt, and then Jeſus after him, becauſe he was the Harbinger of the Meſſiah, whoſe coming he was to proclaim and prepare men for, and whoſe perſon he was to point out; for tho' he is ſaid to be after him, he was not in any ſenſe inferior to him: John was born into the world before Chriſt as man, was born, yet he as the eternal ſon of God was before John, was from the beginning, even from eternity; John entred on the office of his miniſtry before him, but Chriſt was not below him; as not in the dignity of his perſon, ſo neither in the nature and excellency of his office; and John takes care to ſecure the honour and glory of Chriſt, and to prevent any low opinion that might be entertained of him from what he had ſaid, by adding, whoſe ſhoes of his feet I am not worthy to looſe; ſuggeſting hereby, that he was unworthy to be his ſervant, to perform the meaneſt part of ſervice for him that could be thought of; ſo far was he from aſſuming any preference to him on account of his being before him, as his fore-runner; ſee Matt. iii. 11. John i. 27. and the notes there.

Ver. 26. Men and brethren, children of the ſtock of Abraham, &c.] This addreſs is made to them in the ſynagogue, who were Jews by birth, and in a form very grateful and pleaſing; he calls them men, perhaps not only from the common nature of mankind in them, but becauſe they took this name peculiarly to themſelves, and denied it to the nations of the world; and which they gather from Ezek. xxxiv. 31. and he ſtiles them brethren, becauſe they were his countrymen; and children of the ſtock of Abraham, with reſpect to their lineage and deſcent, and of which they gloried: and whoſoever among you feareth God; theſe were the proſelytes among them; ſee the note on ver. 16. to you is the word of this ſalvation ſent; meaning either the Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, the eſſential and eternal logos, or word of God, and whom the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions here ſtile, the word of life, as in 1 John i. 1. who is the author of ſalvation, and who was in the firſt place ſent unto the Jews; or rather the Goſpel, which gives an account of the author of ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation, of his perſon, and of his manner of obtaining it, and of the nature of ſalvation, and who the perſons are to whom it belongs. The Goſpel is not a propoſal of terms, by complying with which men may be ſaved, as faith, repentance, and good works, which are not terms of ſalvation, but either bleſſings, parts, or fruits of it; but it is a declaration of ſalvation itſelf, as being a thing done by Chriſt; it declares him to be the alone able, willing, and all-ſufficient Saviour, and the ſalvation he has wrought out to be a great one, complete, ſpiritual, and everlaſting; and that thoſe that believe in him ſhall be ſaved with it. It is the word preaching ſalvation by him, ſhewing, that he has wrought out an everlaſting righteouſneſs for the juſtification of his people, hence it is ſometimes called the word of righteouſneſs; and that he has made peace and reconciliation by the blood of his croſs, for which reaſon it is ſtiled the word of reconciliation; and that eternal life is in him, and by him, and therefore it is called the word of life: for the ſalvation it publiſhes includes all the bleſſings of grace, and everlaſting glory, and happineſs; it is the means of applying the ſalvation it declares; the Spirit of God comes by it, who whilſt it is preaching falls upon, and conveys himſelf into the hearts of men: regeneration is aſcribed to the word of truth; faith comes by hearing; and ſanctification is promoted and increaſed by it, as an inſtrument; and after men believe in it, they are ſealed with the holy Spirit of promiſe; all which ſhows what a wonderful bleſſing the Goſpel is: and this was now ſent not to the Jews only, tho' to them in the firſt place, but to the Gentiles alſo; the Alexandrian copy in the two laſt clauſes, inſtead of you, reads us.

Ver. 27. For they that dwelt at Jeruſalem, and their rulers, &c.] The inhabitants of that city, and the great Sanhedrim which ſat there: becauſe they knew him not; that is, either Jeſus the Saviour, whom God had raiſed of the ſeed of David, and to whom John bore witneſs; and which muſt be underſtood, not of all the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, and members of the Sanhedrim; for though ſome were ignorant, yet there were others that knew that Jeſus was the Meſſiah, and notwithſtanding rejected him; but the Apoſtle chuſes to take no notice of theſe, becauſe he would not irritate and provoke, but rather of others that were really ignorant of Chriſt: or elſe this may be underſtood of the Goſpel, the word of ſalvation, that the Jews knew not that; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it; and to which agrees the Ethiopic verſion, which reads thus, they knew not this word of the prophets, joining the word of ſalvation, and what follows, together: nor yet the voices of the prophets; or the writings of the prophets, as the Syriac verſion, and ſome copies read; their propheſies concerning the Meſſiah, particularly in Pſ. xxii. Iſ. liii. Dan. ix. which are read every ſabbath-day; ſee the note on ver. 15. they have fulfilled them; the words of the prophets: in condemning him; Jeſus Chriſt, for theſe prophets teſtified, in the places referred to, of the ſufferings and death of Chriſt, to which he was adjudged by them.

Ver. 28. And tho' they found no cauſe of death in him, &c.] That is, no crime that deſerved death; they ſought for ſuch, but could find none; they ſuborned falſe witneſſes, who brought charges againſt him, but could not ſupport them; wherefore Pilate, his judge, ſeveral times declared his innocence, and would have diſcharged him: yet deſired they Pilate that he ſhould be ſlain; they were urgent and importunate with him, that he would order him to be put to death; the power of life and death being then in the hands of the Romans: the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions read, that they might ſlay him; and the Arabic verſion, that he might ſlay him; and the Ethiopic verſion renders the whole quite contrary to the ſenſe, and they gave power to Pilate to hang him; whereas the power of putting him to death was in Pilate, and not in them; and therefore they were preſſing upon him, that he would order his execution, notwithſtanding his innocence.

Ver. 29. And when they had fulfilled all that was written of him, &c.] When they had vilified and reproached him in the moſt opprobrious manner; buffeted and ſcourged him, and pierced his hands and his feet, by nailing him to the croſs; when they had crucified him between two thieves, and parted his raiment and caſt lots on his veſture; when they had pierced his ſide, and it was ſufficiently evident that his life was taken from the earth; all which were written of him in the pſalms and prophets: they took him down from the tree; the croſs, on which he was crucified: it may be rendered imperſonally, he was taken down from the tree; for not the ſame perſons that deſired he might be ſlain, and fulfilled all that was written of him, took him down, but others; tho' they were ſome of the rulers, as Joſeph of Arimathea, and Nicodemus, yet ſuch as did not conſent to his death: and laid him in a ſepulchre; in a new one, in which never man lay; a ſepulchre which Joſeph had hewed out of a rock for himſelf, and which was both ſealed and guarded.

Ver. 30. But God raiſed him from the dead.] Tho' his life was taken away by man, and it was a clear caſe that he was certainly dead, and he was taken down from the croſs as ſuch, and buried; yet he could not be held with the cords of death, but God the father raiſed him from the dead by his power. The Vulgate Latin verſion adds, the third day.

Ver. 31. And he was ſeen many days, &c.] Forty days, at certain times: of them which came up with him from Galilee; which tho' true of ſeveral women who followed him from Galilee, and to whom he appeared after his reſurrection, as Mary Magdalene, Mary the mother of James and Joſes, and Salome the mother of Zebedees children, and others; yet is chiefly to be underſtood of the apoſtles of Chriſt, who were Galileans, and came with Chriſt from that country to Jeruſalem, when he came thither to ſuffer and die: who are his witneſſes unto the people; not only of his reſurrection, tho' of that chiefly, but of all that he did and ſuffered in Galilee and Judea.

Ver. 32. And we declare unto you glad tidings, &c.] The whole of the Goſpel, concerning the incarnation, obedience, ſufferings, death, and reſurrection of Chriſt, and the benefits ariſing from thence, as peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation; all which are good news and glad tidings to ſenſible ſinners; and which are declared and publiſhed by the miniſters of the Goſpel, according to the commiſſion given them, as here by Paul and Barnabas: how that the promiſe which was made unto the fathers; not barely and ſolely that which reſpects the reſurrection of Chriſt, but the miſſion of him, the exhibition of him in human nature, his incarnation, his work and buſineſs he was to do, namely to obtain ſalvation for his people; it chiefly regards the promiſe of his coming into the world to do the will of God, which promiſe was made to Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, and Judah, Gen. xxii. 18. and xxvi. 4. and xxviii. 14. and xlix. 10.

Ver. 33. God hath fulfilled the ſame unto us their children, &c.] The natural deſcendants of them, as Paul and Barnabas, and the Jews in the ſynagogue, were: in that he hath raiſed up Jeſus again; which may not be underſtood of his reſurrection from the dead, ſince the promiſe made, and now fulfilled, has not a ſingle reſpect to that; but of his being raiſed up, and ſent forth into the world, to be a ſaviour and redeemer, and to ſit upon the throne of David, as in ch. ii. 30. and iii. 26. and xiii. 23. of which raiſing of him up to regal dignity, mention is made in Pſ. ii. 6, 7. which is produced as a teſtimony of it; and the rather this ſeems to be the ſenſe, ſince the article of the reſurrection of the dead is ſpoken of in the next verſe, as diſtinct from this; and other paſſages of ſcripture are produced, as ſpeaking of it: though admitting that Chriſt's reſurrection from the dead is here intended, as the Alexandrian copy reads, what follows is very applicable to it, without any detriment to the doctrine of Chriſt's eternal generation and ſonſhip, as will be hereafter made to appear: as it is written in the ſecond pſalm; Beza's moſt ancient copy, and other very ancient copies, read, in the firſt pſalm; for the firſt and ſecond pſalms ſeem to have been reckoned by the ancient Jews but one pſalm, or one ſection; for ſo they ſay[d], "bleſſed is the "man, &c. and why do the Heathen rage, &c. "חדא פרשה היא, are one paraſha, or ſection:" and they further obſerve[e], that "every ſection that "was dear to David, he began it with bleſſed, and "ended it with bleſſed; he began with bleſſed, as it "is written, (Pſ. i. 1.) bleſſed is the man, &c. and "he ended it with bleſſed, as it is written, (Pſ. ii. "12.) bleſſed are all they that put their truſt in "him:" tho' it is elſewhere ſaid[f], "bleſſed is the "man, &c. (Pſ. i.) and why do the Heathen rage, "&c. (Pſ. ii.) are two ſections; and to the chief "muſician on Muth Labben, (Pſ. ix.) and why ſtandeſt thou afar off, &c. (Pſ. x.) are two ſections." And Kimchi calls[g] this pſalm, as the generality of copies here do, ſaying, "this pſalm is המזמור השני, "the ſecond pſalm." And that this pſalm belongs to the Meſſiah, is evident from the mention made of him in ver. 2. from the mad counſel, and vain attempts of the kings of the earth againſt him, ver. 1, 2, 3. from God's decree and reſolution to make and declare him king of Zion, notwithſtanding all their efforts upon him, ver. 4, 5, 6. from his aſking and having the Gentiles, and uttermoſt parts of the earth for his inheritance, which is true of no other, ver. 8, 9. and eſpecially from that reverence, worſhip, and adoration, which are to be given to him, and that truſt and confidence to be placed in him, ver. 10, 11, 12. which can by no means agree with David, nor with any mere creature whatever; and as for ver. 7. which is here cited, what is ſaid in that is inapplicable even to angels, Heb. i. 5. and much more to David, or any mere man. The whole pſalm was, by the ancient Jews, interpreted of the Meſſiah, as is confeſſed by ſome of their later doctors. R. David Kimchi ſays[h], "there are "that interpret it of Gog and Magog, and the "Meſſiah, he is the king Meſſiah; and ſo the Rabbins of bleſſed memory interpret it." And Jarchi confeſſes the ſame, and is ſomewhat more open in giving his reaſon for interpreting it otherwiſe. "Our Rabbins, ſays he, expound this affair con"cerning the king Meſſiah; but according to its "literal ſenſe, and for an anſwer to the hereticks

" (or chriſtians) it is right to explain it concerning " David himſelf." The clauſe, and for an anſwer to the hereticks, is left out in later editions, but was in the more ancient ones; it being ſo open and bare-faced, that the Jews did not chuſe to let it ſtand. Aben Ezra is in a doubt, whether to interpret the pſalm of David, or of the Meſſiah; tho' he thinks the former is beſt; and particularly this ſeventh verſe is, by ſeveral of their ancient writers, applied to the Meſſiah: in one of their writings, eſteemed very ancient, are theſe words[i]; " from " thence ſhall come forth, in that day, the Meſſiah " of David; and this is the myſtery of, I will declare the decree, the Lord ſaid unto me, thou art " my ſon, &c." And this is the ſenſe of R. Ame[k], a famous ancient doctor of theirs: upon mention of thoſe words in Jer. xxxi. 22. the Lord hath created a new thing, &c. " ſays, R. Hone, in the name of " R. Ame, this is the king Meſſiah, as it is ſaid, " Pſ. ii. 7. this day have I begotten thee." And in like manner in the Talmud[l], it is underſtood of the Meſſiah, where are theſe expreſſions; " the Rabbins " teach, that Meſſiah, the ſon of David, who ſhall " be revealed in haſte in our days, the holy bleſſed " God ſaid unto him, aſk any thing of me, and " I will give it thee, as it is ſaid, Pſ. ii. 7. I will " declare the decree, &c. this day have I begotten " thee." And that this was the ſenſe of the Jews in the times of the Apoſtle, need not be doubted, ſince the Apoſtle cites theſe words before a Jewiſh aſſembly, in one of their ſynagogues, and applies them to the Meſſiah, without any heſitation, or any further reaſoning upon it, as being a thing generally agreed on, and out of doubt; wherefore the Jew[m] has no reaſon to charge the Apoſtle with an error in citing a paſſage in this pſalm, and applying it to Chriſt, ſince their ancient doctors have allowed, that it belongs to him, and even the very paſſage which the Apoſtle produces; which paſſage Maimonides[n] himſelf applies to the Meſſiah. This objector would have it, that David ſpoke the whole pſalm by the holy Spirit concerning himſelf, and that he calls himſelf the Lord's anointed; and that being anointed by the will of the Lord, what was againſt his kingdom, was againſt the Lord himſelf; and that he is called the Son of God, becauſe he attended to the worſhip of God; and that the begetting of him refers to the time of his unction by Samuel; and that it can by no means agree with Jeſus of Nazareth, who never ruled in any place, but others ruled over him, when they adjudged him to death as the meaneſt of the people; and who himſelf ſays, that he came not to be miniſtred unto, Matt. xx. 28. eſpecially he thinks thoſe words, aſk of me, and I will give the Heathen, &c. greatly militate againſt the application of the pſalm to Jeſus; for if he is God, what need has he to aſk of another? But ſince the Jewiſh doctors themſelves have applied this pſalm to the Meſſiah, the Apoſtle ought not to be blamed for making ſuch an application; and there are many things which cannot be applied to David himſelf; for whatever may be ſaid of his anointing, begetting, and Sonſhip, the uttermoſt parts of the earth were never given for his poſſeſſion; and much leſs can he be the ſon the kings of the earth are called upon to kiſs and worſhip, or he be the object of truſt and confidence; and tho' Jeſus in the days of his humiliation was not miniſtered unto, but miniſtered to others, and ruled not over others, but ſubmitted to the death of the croſs; he has ſince been made and declared Lord of all, and his kingdom has taken place in the nations of the world, and e'er long all the kingdoms of it will become his; and tho' he is God, it is no ways inconſiſtent with him as man and mediator, to aſk any thing of his Father, and eſpecially what has been agreed between them ſhall be given: the words cited by the apoſtle are, thou art my ſon, this day have I begotten thee; in Beza's ancient copy, the verſe following theſe words is added, aſk of me, &c. The words are to be underſtood of the eternal filiation of Chriſt, and are produced, to ſet forth the greatneſs and dignity of his perſon; whom God had raiſed and ſent forth in human nature, to be the ſaviour and redeemer of his people: tho' ſhould they be applied to the reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead, it will no ways prejudice the doctrine of Chriſt's proper and natural ſonſhip, as being the only begotten of the Father; ſince the reſurrection of Chriſt is not the cauſe of his ſonſhip, or the reaſon why he is called the Son of God, but a manifeſtation of it; Chriſt was the Son of God, before his reſurrection from the dead; he was declared to be ſo by a voice from heaven, was believed on by his diſciples as ſuch, and confeſſed by others, both men and devils: beſides, if his reſurrection was the cauſe of his Sonſhip, he muſt beget himſelf, which is abſurd, for he was himſelf concerned in his reſurrection from the dead; moreover, his Sonſhip would not be proper, but figurative and metaphorical, whereas he is God's own, or proper Son; beſides, on this account he could not be called God's only-begotten Son, becauſe there are others that have been, and millions that will be raiſed from the dead beſides him: but the reaſon why theſe words are applied to the reſurrection of Chriſt, allowing them to be ſo, is not becauſe he was then begotten as the Son of God, but becauſe he was then manifeſted to be the eternally begotten Son of God; things are ſaid to be, when they are only manifeſted to be; ſo Chriſt is ſaid to be that day begotten, becauſe he was declared to be the Son of God with power, by the reſurrection from the dead, Rom. i. 4. Hence theſe words are applicable to any time or thing wherein Chriſt is manifeſted to be the only-begotten Son of God, and accordingly are applied to different times and things; ſee Heb. i. 3, 4, 5. and v. 5.

Ver. 34. And as concerning that he raiſed him up from the dead, &c.] This, as it is differently expreſſed from the raiſing him up, ſpoken of in the preceding verſe, ſo ſeems to be a diſtinct article from it, and is ſupported by other paſſages of ſcripture: the Apoſtle having ſhown that God had fulfilled his promiſe to the fathers, concerning the raiſing up, or ſending the Meſſiah into the world, who is no other than the eternal Son of God, proceeds to prove his reſurrection from the dead, as man, which was in ſuch ſort, as now no more to return to corruption; ſo as not to die any more, and be laid in the grave, and there corrupted; as was the caſe of thoſe who were raiſed from the dead by the prophets, under the Old Teſtament, or by Chriſt himſelf, before his death and reſurrection; for theſe were raiſed to a mortal life, and died again, and were buried, and ſaw corruption; but Chriſt was raiſed up from the dead, never to die more, but to live for ever, having in his hands the keys of hell and death, and being the triumphant conqueror over death and the grave; in proof of which ſome paſſages are produced out of the Old Teſtament, as follow: he ſaid on this wiſe; that is, God ſaid ſo, or after this manner, Iſ. lv. 3. I will give you the ſure mercies of David; that is, of the Meſſiah; by which are meant the bleſſings of the ſure and well-ordered covenant of grace, which the Meſſiah by his ſufferings and death was to ratify and ſecure for all his people: now had he only died, and not been raiſed from the dead, theſe bleſſings had not been ratified and made ſure unto them; therefore, when God promiſes his people, that he will give them the ſure mercies of David, or the Meſſiah, he promiſes that the Meſſiah ſhall not only die to procure mercies and bleſſings for them, but that he ſhall riſe again from the dead, to make them ſure unto them; ſo that theſe words are pertinently produced in proof of Chriſt's reſurrection. David is a name frequently given to the Meſſiah, as in Jer. xxx. 9. Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24. and xxxvii. 24, 25. Hoſ. iii. 5. David being an eminent type of Chriſt, and the Meſſiah being a ſon of his; and who muſt be meant here; and which is owned by ſeveral Jewiſh commentators [o] of the beſt note; and which appears from his being called a witneſs to the people, a leader and a commander of them, in the next verſe: the bleſſings of the covenant are fitly called mercies, becauſe they ſpring from the grace and mercy of God, and wonderfully diſplay it, and are in mercy to his people; and theſe are the mercies of David, or of Chriſt, becauſe the covenant being made with him, theſe bleſſings were put into his hands for them, and come thro' his blood to them; and hence they are ſaid to be ſure ones; they are in ſafe hands; Chriſt, who is intruſted with them, faithfully diſtributes them: but then, as by his death he has made way for the communication of them, conſiſtent with the juſtice of God; ſo he muſt riſe again, and live for ever, to diſtribute them, or ſee that there is an application of them made to the perſons for whom they are deſigned: beſides, it is one of the ſure mercies promiſed to David, to the Meſſiah himſelf, that though he died, and was laid in the grave, he ſhould not continue there, but riſe again, as the next teſtimony moſt clearly ſhews.

Ver. 35. Wherefore he ſaith alſo in another pſalm, &c.] Pſ. xvi. 10. or in another place, as the Syriac verſion ſupplies; or in another ſection, as the Arabic verſion; or elſewhere, as Beza's moſt ancient copy, the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read: thou ſhalt not ſuffer thine holy one to ſee corruption; which cannot be underſtood of David: the term holy one, is not ſo applicable to him, who was a man ſubject to infirmities; at leaſt not in ſuch ſenſe as to Chriſt, who was holy in his nature, and without ſin in his life and converſation; beſides, David was laid in his grave, and ſaw corruption, as the Apoſtle afterwards proves: the former part of this paſſage is not cited, thou wilt not leave my ſoul in hell; which was not abſolutely neceſſary to be mentioned, it being clearly implied in what is produced; for if he ſhould not be ſuffered to ſee corruption, then he could not be left in the grave: moreover, the Apoſtle cites that which he intended to reaſon upon, as he afterwards does, and by it makes it manifeſtly appear that the words do not belong to David, but the Meſſiah, and are a clear and pertinent proof of his reſurrection from the dead. The Jew [p] objects to the Apoſtle's verſion of theſe words, rendering שחת, by corruption, whereas he ſays it ſignifies a pit; but it ought to be obſerved, that the word in its firſt proper, and literal ſenſe, ſignifies corruption; and a pit or grave is only called by this name, becauſe dead bodies, or carcaſſes, are therein corrupted; and inſtances may be given, wherein the word cannot be underſtood in another ſenſe than in that of corruption, as in Lev. xxii. 25. Pſ. lv. 23. ſee the note on ch. ii. 27.

Ver. 36. For David after he had ſerved his own generation, &c.] Or the men of that age and generation in which he lived, the ſubjects of his kingdom; by governing them with wholeſome laws, protecting them in their rights and properties, defending them againſt their enemies, and regulating and promoting the worſhip of God among them: by the will of God; this clauſe may be read in connexion with the preceding words, as it is in the Syriac verſion thus, after he had in his own age ſerved the will of God; acted according to it, fulfilled it, and did what the Lord declared to him, or he knew to be the will of God; or with the following words, as in the Vulgate Latin verſion, by the will of God fell on ſleep, or died; and then the ſenſe is, that after he had done the work of his generation, which was appointed and cut out for him, he died by the decree and counſel of God, which has ſet bounds to man's life, and has fixed the time of his death; no man dies before, or lives longer than the time it is the will of God he ſhould. David lived according to the will of God's command, and he died by the will of his decree. Death is expreſſed by falling aſleep; a way of ſpeaking very common with the eaſtern nations, and which repreſents it in an eaſy and familiar manner: it is not an annihilation of men; the dead are only fallen aſleep, and will awake again in the reſurrection; till which time the grave is their reſting-place, and out of which the ſaints will riſe freſh and chearful; and yet as a time of ſleep is a time of inactivity, ſo no work is done in the grave; and therefore whatever we find to do, ſhould be done in life. It is a long ſleep; David has been many hundred years, even thouſands, in it; and there will be no awaking out of it till Chriſt comes again: but this is to be underſtood of the body only, which only is capable of ſleeping the ſleep of death, and not of the ſoul, which dies not with the body, nor continues with it in the grave in a ſtate of inſenſibility and inactivity, but immediately returns to God; and being happy, is employed in the viſion of God, and Chriſt, in the fellowſhip of ſaints and angels, and in the work of praiſe and thankſgiving: thus, tho' David is fallen aſleep in his body, he is preſent in Spirit with the Lord; and that ſweet pſalmiſt of Iſrael is ſinging the ſongs of God in a much better manner than when here on earth. Bleſſed are they that ſleep in Jeſus, for they not only ſleep quietly and ſafely, but ſhall ſurely riſe again, for God will bring them with him; Chriſt is the firſtfruits of them, and they ſhall awake in his likeneſs. It is further ſaid of David, and was laid unto his fathers, or was buried; his ſepulchre is ſaid to be in mount Zion [q], where the kings of the houſe of David were buried; and his ſepulchre Peter ſays in ch. ii. 29. remained till his time. And ſaw corruption; his body putrified in the grave, became the repaſt of worms, and was reduced to rottenneſs and duſt; and therefore the words could not be ſpoken of him cited from Pſ. xvi. 10.

Ver. 37. But he whom God raiſed again, &c.] The Vulgate Latin verſion adds, from the dead; meaning the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who was raiſed from the dead by God the Father: and ſaw no corruption; he did not lie ſo long in the grave as to corrupt and putrify, but was raiſed from the dead the third day; wherefore the paſſage, before cited, is very applicable to him, and is a clear proof that the Meſſiah was to riſe from the dead, as Jeſus did.

Ver. 38. Be it known unto you, therefore, men and brethren, &c.] The Apoſtle having diſcourſed concerning the incarnation of Chriſt, his death and reſurrection, proceeds to take notice of ſome particular benefits and bleſſings of grace ariſing from thence, which are publiſhed and made known to the ſons of men in the everlaſting Goſpel, as were now to the Jews by Paul and Barnabas; ſuch as forgiveneſs of ſins thro' the blood of Chriſt, and juſtification by his righteouſneſs; the former of them is mentioned in this verſe, the latter in the next: that thro' this man is preached unto you the forgiveneſs of ſins; forgiveneſs of ſins, which is ſometimes expreſſed by a non-imputation of them, a non-remembrance of them, a covering and putting them away, and a blotting them out, is an act of free grace and mercy, and yet is thro' the blood of Chriſt; thro' that believers have it; Chriſt is exalted as a prince and a ſaviour to give it, having by his blood procured it: and this is a principal doctrine of the Goſpel, which is publiſhed in his name, and which the light of nature, and law of Moſes know nothing of, and cannot aſcertain; the prophets bear teſtimony to this truth, that every one that believes in Chriſt ſhall receive the remiſſion of ſins, of all his ſins. That there is a God is known by the light of nature, and that ſin is an offence unto him; but by it is not known in what way offended deity is appeaſed; nor does it, nor can it aſſure any that God will forgive ſin on any account whatever; not on account of mercy in him, nor on account of good works, or of repentance in them; God, as the God of nature does not forgive ſin, but as the God of grace: and tho' the law of Moſes declares what is good, and gives knowledge of evil, yet admits not of repentance as a ſatisfaction for ſin committed; nor does it repreſent God as merciful, but as juſt, and ſo accuſes, condemns, and kills: the doctrine of forgiveneſs is a pure doctrine of the Goſpel; and when it is preached aright, it is preached through Chriſt, not through the works of the law, not through repentance, nor thro' faith, nor thro' the abſolute mercy of God, but thro' Chriſt, thro' the blood of Chriſt, which was ſhed to obtain it in a way conſiſtent with the juſtice of God; and thro' his hands it is given. When Chriſt is called a man, it muſt not be thought that he is a mere man; he is God as well as man; had he been a mere man, forgiveneſs of ſin could not have been by his blood, or thro' his name, or for his ſake; it is becauſe he is God, truly and properly God, that there is a virtue in his blood to take away ſin, and cleanſe from it; ſee 1 John i. 7. Beſides, the word man is not in the original text, it is only through this is preached to you; that is, thro' this glorious and divine perſon, who, though he died as man, and was buried, yet ſaw no corruption, and is now raiſed from the dead, and is at the right hand of God. Some copies read δια τȣτο, becauſe of this, or for this reaſon; ſeeing he is raiſed from the dead, therefore the doctrine of the remiſſion of ſins is preached; for if he had died, and had not riſen again, there could have been no pardon by his blood, nor juſtification by his righteouſneſs; ſee Rom. iv. 25.

Ver. 39. And by him all that believe are juſtified from all things, &c.] Chriſt, as God, is not only the juſtifier of his people, who pronounces them righteous in the ſight of God; but his righteouſneſs imputed to them is the matter of their juſtification, or that by which they are juſtified; and not the works of the law, or obedience to the Goſpel, or internal holineſs, either in whole or in part, or the grace of faith, but the object of it, Chriſt, and his righteouſneſs: and juſtification, by this is complete and perfect; it is from all ſin, original and actual, ſecret and open, greater or leſſer ſins; ſins of preſumption and ignorance, of omiſſion or commiſſion; from all things the law can charge with, as breaches of it; from all things which the juſtice of God can demand ſatisfaction for; and from all things that ſatan, or a man's own conſcience, can juſtly accuſe him of. And thoſe that believe in Chriſt with the heart unto righteouſneſs, are openly and manifeſtatively juſtified in their own conſciences, and can claim their intereſt in it, and have the comfort of it, as well as they were before ſecretly juſtified in the mind of God, and in their head and repreſentative Jeſus Chriſt. And from all ſin theſe are juſtified of God, as Beza's ancient copy reads, for it is God that juſtifies, Rom. viii. 33. againſt whom men have ſinned, and whoſe law they have violated, and whoſe juſtice they have affronted, by reaſon of which they are liable to condemnation; but God juſtifies them, by imputing the righteouſneſs of his ſon to them, in which he views them as without fault, unblameable and irreproveable: and though all men are not juſtified, yet many are; even all the ſeed of Iſrael, all the elect of God, every one that believes in Chriſt, as all do who are ordained to eternal life; Chriſt's righteouſneſs is imputed and applied to all theſe, and therefore they ſhall never enter into condemnation, but ſhall be acquitted and diſcharged from all things, from which, 'tis added, ye could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes; that is, by the works of the law, or by obedience to it, becauſe ſuch obedience is imperfect; and therefore the law can't juſtify, diſcharge, and acquit upon it, but inſtead thereof, muſt curſe and condemn; as it does every one, that does not do all things commanded in the law, and in the manner that requires: beſides, if righteouſneſs was hereby, the grace of God in juſtification would be fruſtrated, the death of Chriſt would be rendered null and void, and boaſting would not be excluded; all which are contrary to the ſcheme of the Goſpel. It may be obſerved, that pardon of ſin and juſtification are two diſtinct bleſſings, or the apoſtle muſt be guilty of a great tautology; ſince having ſpoken of forgiveneſs of ſin in the preceding verſe, he ſpeaks of juſtification in this, as an other bleſſing enjoyed by and thro' Chriſt, and publiſhed in the Goſpel, ſtiled therefore the word and miniſtration of righteouſneſs. And indeed they are diſtinct; in pardon the man is conſidered as a ſinner, in juſtification as a righteous man; pardon takes away his ſin, juſtification gives him a righteouſneſs; pardon frees from puniſhment, but juſtification beſides that gives him a title to eternal life; to pardon, the blood of Chriſt is ſufficient, but to juſtification are required the holineſs of Chriſt's nature, the perfect obedience of his life, as well as his ſuffering of death; moreover, juſtification paſſed on Chriſt as the head and repreſentative of his people, but not pardon; he may be ſaid to be juſtified, but not pardoned: theſe two bleſſings make a conſiderable figure in the miniſtry of the word.

Ver. 40. Beware therefore, &c.] Of rejecting the Goſpel, and thoſe excellent truths of it; ſince forgiveneſs of ſin, and a juſtifying righteouſneſs are ſaid to be had in no other way, but in and thro' Chriſt; take heed therefore, leſt that come upon you, which is ſpoken of in the prophets: ſome think that the apoſtle refers to two places in the prophets, which he puts together, and therefore uſes the plural number; the one in Iſ. xxviii. 14. from whence the character of the perſons is taken, ye deſpiſers, or ſcornful men, who are addreſſed; and the other in Hab. i. 5. where is to be found what is ſaid to them; but rather the latter place is what is only referred to, and is ſaid to be, in the prophets, that is, in one of the prophets; ſee the note on John vi. 45. or in the book of the prophets, the leſſer prophets, which were together in one book, among which Habakuk ſtands; the Ethiopic verſion reads in the ſingular number, leſt ſhould come upon you the word of the prophet, ſaying, as follows.

Ver. 41. Behold, ye deſpiſers, &c.] In Hab. i. 5. from whence theſe words are taken: we render it with others, behold ye among the heathen; as if the word, בגוים, was compounded of ב in, and גוים, nations or heathens; and ſo reads the Chaldee paraphraſe, look among the people; but the Septuagint verſion renders it, behold ye deſpiſers; which the apoſtle is thought to follow; wherefore ſome have imagined a different reading, and that the Septuagint, inſtead of בגוים reads בוגדים, the ſingular of which is uſed in Hab. ii. 5. and there rendered a deſpiſer in the ſame verſion: but it ſhould be obſerved, that the Septuagint is not the only verſion that ſo renders the word; for the Syriac verſion renders it, behold ye impudent; and the Arabic verſion, behold ye negligent; and Dr. Pocock [r] has ſhown that this word comes from the root בגא, which tho' not to be found in the Bible, yet in the Arabic language among other things, ſignifies to behave proudly, or inſolently, and ſo is very properly rendered deſpiſers, without ſuppoſing any different reading or corruption in the text: and as in Habakuk the proud and haughty Jews are there ſpoke to, who neglected and deſpiſed the law; this is accommodated by the apoſtle to the Jews in his time, who were very much diſpoſed to deſpiſe the Goſpel, as they generally did. It follows, and wonder, and periſh; or diſappear, or change countenance, thro' ſhame for their ſins, and amazement at the judgments of God upon them: for I work a work in your days, which you ſhall in no wiſe believe though a man declare it unto you; which in Habakuk, refers to the deſtruction of the city and temple of Jeruſalem by the Chaldeans; and here it is ſuggeſted, by the citation and application of it, that in a ſhort time a like work would be done in their days; the city and temple of Jeruſalem would be deſtroyed by the Romans, which when told to the Jews in foreign parts, as here in Piſidia, would not be believed by them, tho' it ſhould be told them by men of probity and credit.

Ver. 42. And when the Jews were gone out of the ſynagogue, &c.] The time of worſhip there being over; or being offended at the Apoſtles diſcourſe concerning Jeſus: the words will bear to be rendered, when they were gone out of the ſynagogue of the Jews; and the ſenſe be, when Paul and Barnabas were come out from thence, Paul having finiſhed his diſcourſe: the word Jews, and the phraſe, out of the ſynagogue, are left out in Beza's ancient copy, and in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Vulgate Latin, and Syriac verſions; and ſo may be interpreted either of the Jews, or of Paul and Barnabas; the Ethiopic verſion leaves out the whole clauſe: the Gentiles beſought that theſe words might be ſpoken unto them the next ſabbath; that is, the proſelytes from among the Gentiles, who attended on the ſynagogue of the Jews, and who ſtaid behind when the Jews were gone out, being exceedingly delighted with the Apoſtles doctrine, moſt earneſtly intreated that the ſame ſubject might be inſiſted upon the next ſabbath: or, as Dr. Lightfoot obſerves, the words may be rendered, they beſought the Gentiles; that is, the Apoſtles, when they ſaw the Jews go out, being offended, addreſſed the Gentiles, and intreated them to come the next ſabbath-day, and patiently hear theſe doctrines: tho' in the above copies and verſions there is no mention made of the Gentiles, any more than of the Jews; ſo that this may be underſtood either of the rulers of the ſynagogue, who firſt invited them to ſpeak a word of exhortation to the people, or of the whole body, Jews and proſelytes, who, when they were departing, intreated they might hear them again the next ſabbath; about which next ſabbath, there is ſome difficulty: the words may be rendered, between the ſabbath, and ſo may regard what we call week-days, or working-days; and which the Jews call ימים שבנתיים, the intermediate days, or the days between one ſabbath and another [s]; and on ſome one of theſe days it was deſired that the Apoſtles would give them another diſcourſe on the ſame ſubject; and it may be particularly, that either Monday or Thurſday, the ſecond or fifth day of the week, might be pitched upon; ſince on theſe days the Jews met together in the ſynagogue, and read the law, according to the order of Ezra, that they might not be three days without the law [t]; and theſe were the days on which they faſted, Luke xviii. 12. Others chuſe to render the words, on the ſabbath-day after; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, on the other ſabbath; and the Ethiopic verſion, the ſabbath following; and ſo the Vulgate Latin, with which ours, and others agree; and to this reading and ſenſe, ver. 44. greatly inclines; though they might meet together on one of the days between, when being ſo delighted with what they heard, and of which they ſo much talked, that the next ſabbath almoſt the whole city came together to hear: but what pleaſes me beſt, and which, I think, has never been obſerved by any, is, that there was one ſabbath in the year which was called, שבת בנתים; which may be rendered by το μεταξυ σαββατον, the ſabbath between, or the intermediate ſabbath; and this ſabbath was on one of the ten days before the day of atonement; and was ſo called, becauſe it was between the firſt of Tiſri, which anſwers to part of our September, and was the beginning of the year, and the tenth of the ſame month, which was the day of atonement; and was a ſabbath very much taken notice of by the Jews [u]: and now this might be the ſabbath following, and ſo all agrees; and a reaſon may be given for the different phraſes in this verſe, and ver. 44. and if ſo, this alſo points out the time of the year that Paul and Barnabas were at Antioch in Piſidia, and when that remarkable period began, that the Apoſtles turned from the Jews and preached to the Gentiles.

Ver. 43. Now when the congregation was broken up, &c.] Or the ſynagogue; not the place, but the people that met in it; when they were diſmiſſed, as the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions render it; either in a diſorderly manner, through the offence the Jews took at Paul's preaching; or if in an orderly way, this was done by, התורגמן, the interpreter; ſo it is ſaid [w], that "R. Hotzpith the interpreter diſmiſſed the people." Many of the Jews and religious proſelytes followed Paul and Barnabas; who were converted by this ſermon, and believed in Chriſt, and cordially embraced the doctrines of the Goſpel, that had been preached. Piſcator thinks that the word religious does not belong to the text, but ſome way or other crept into it, ſince it ſuppoſes ſome proſelytes not to be religious; whereas, though all religious perſons were not proſelytes, at leaſt proſelytes of righteouſneſs, yet all proſelytes were religious perſons; but it is retained in all copies and verſions: who ſpeaking to them, perſuaded them to continue in the grace of God; meaning, not that the Jews and proſelytes, ſpoke to Paul and Barnabas, and intreated and perſuaded them to perſevere in preaching the doctrine of the grace of God, notwithſtanding the offence ſome might take at it, and the ill uſage they might meet with on account of it; but that Paul and Barnabas took notice of them, and by their following them, and by the converſation they had with them, found that the word had reached their hearts, and that they had embraced the doctrine of the Goſpel; wherefore they ſpoke a word of exhortation to them, beſeeching them to continue in it, it ſpringing from the grace of God, and being a declaration of it; and particularly in thoſe ſpecial doctrines of grace, which had been inſiſted on, namely, remiſſion of ſins, and free juſtification by the blood of Chriſt; for it is more likely, and was more neceſſary, that theſe ſhould be exhorted by the apoſtles, and not the apoſtles by them.

Ver. 44. And the next ſabbath-day, &c.] The ſame which is before called the ſabbath between, which was between the firſt and tenth of Tiſri, or between the beginning of the year, and the day of atonement: came almoſt the whole city together. The Syriac and Ethiopic verſions leave out the word almoſt, and read, the whole city came together; ſome out of curioſity, having heard much ſaid of theſe men and their doctrines, others to cavil and quarrel, and others from a true affection to the Goſpel, and an earneſt deſire of knowing more of it, and of receiving more advantage from it: though the end in all was, to hear the word of God; or of the Lord, as the Alexandrian copy; that is, the doctrine of the Goſpel, which comes from God, and concerns the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, his perſon, offices, grace, and righteouſneſs.

Ver. 45. But when the Jews ſaw the multitudes, &c.] The vaſt number of people, the inhabitants of the city, the Gentiles, that were aſſembled together to hear the word. This muſt be underſtood of the unbelieving Jews, who came with no good deſign: they were filled with envy; at the Gentiles, that they ſhould have the word equally preached to them, as to themſelves, to whom the oracles of God were committed; or at the popularity of the apoſtles, that ſuch numbers ſhould follow them; and they might fear many converts might be made by them, from among them: and ſpoke againſt thoſe things which were ſpoken by Paul; concerning Jeſus of Nazareth being the Meſſiah, which they denied; and concerning free juſtification by his righteouſneſs, which they affirmed to be by the works of the law: and they went on contradicting and blaſpheming; publickly oppoſing him, and ſpeaking evil of him, and of his doctrines; and not only ſo, but belching out their blaſphemies againſt the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. The Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, leave out the word contradicting, as redundant, it having been before ſaid, that they ſpoke againſt, or contradicted what Paul delivered; though it may not be ſuperfluous, but expreſs their continuance in their contradiction, and oppoſition; and which was attended with, and iſſued in blaſphemy: ſuch a ſpirit of reproach and blaſphemy, is with the Jews a ſign of the Meſſiah's coming; "ſays R. Jannai [x], when you ſee generation after generation, reproaching and blaſpheming, look for the feet of the Meſſiah, according to Pſal. lxxxix. 51." This they have been doing one age after another, even for many ages; and therefore, according to one of their own ſigns, the Meſſiah muſt be come.

Ver. 46. Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, &c.] They were not at all daunted at the oppoſition they met with, but rather grew more courageous, and uſed great liberty of ſpeech, and ſpoke out freely, plainly, and openly: and ſaid, it was neceſſary that the word of God ſhould firſt have been ſpoken to you; as it was by Chriſt and his apoſtles, whilſt he was on earth; and though after his reſurrection, the commiſſion to his apoſtles ran, to preach the Goſpel to all nations, yet they were ordered to begin at Jeruſalem, and preach to the Jews firſt; and this they hitherto ſtrictly obſerved: but ſeeing ye put it from you; with loathing, indignation, and contempt: and judge yourſelves unworthy of everlaſting life; no man is worthy of everlaſting life, on account of any thing done by him, for it is the free gift of God; and all who are ſenſible of themſelves, and of the juſt demerit of ſin, conclude themſelves unworthy to inherit eternal life; but this was not the caſe of theſe Jews, nor is it the ſenſe here: but the meaning is, that the Jews, by this act of theirs in rejecting the Goſpel, did as it were paſs ſentence upon themſelves, and determine againſt themſelves, that they ought not to be ſaved, ſince they deſpiſed the means of ſalvation; or that they were not worthy to have the Goſpel preached to them any more, which may be called eternal life, becauſe it is brought to light by it, and revealed in it; and becauſe it points out the way unto it, as well as gives ſome account of it: lo, we turn to the Gentiles; to preach the Goſpel to them only, or chiefly; now the words of Chriſt began to be fulfilled, Matt. xxi. 43.

Ver. 47. For ſo hath the Lord commanded us, &c.] For though Chriſt in his firſt commiſſion reſtrained his diſciples from going into the Gentiles, and preaching to them, yet when he enlarged their commiſſion after his reſurrection, he bid them go into all nations, and preach the Goſpel to every creature; and told them, that they ſhould be his witneſſes to the uttermoſt part of the earth; ſee Matt. xxviii. 19. Mark xvi. 15. Acts i. 8. unleſs this ſhould rather be thought to refer to what follows: ſaying; or as it is written, as the Syriac verſion ſupplies; or becauſe ſo ſaith the ſcripture, as the Ethiopic verſion, namely in Iſa. xlix. 6. I have ſet thee to be a light of the Gentiles; to enlighten the Gentiles that ſit in darkneſs, by the preaching of the Goſpel to them, and the Spirit of God attending it: this ſuppoſes the Gentiles to have been in darkneſs; as they were about divine things, before the times of the Goſpel: they had no true knowledge of God himſelf; for though they knew there was a God, they did not know, at leaſt but few of them, that there was but one God; and none of them knew any thing of him as in Chriſt; they had not a revelation of his will, they were without the written law, and were ſtrangers to the true manner of worſhipping the divine being; they knew nothing at all of the Meſſiah, and of his righteouſneſs and ſalvation by him; nor of the Spirit of God, and the operations of his grace; nor of the reſurrection of the dead, and were very ignorant of a future ſtate: it was therefore an unſpeakable mercy to them, that Chriſt was appointed to be a light to them; not in a way of nature, as he is that light which lightens every man that comes into the world; but in a way of grace, through the miniſtration of the Goſpel, and by the ſpecial illuminations of the divine Spirit; whereby they ſee there is a righteous judge, and that there will be a righteous judgment; and that ſin is exceeding ſinful, and can't be atoned for by them, and therefore they are in themſelves miſerable and undone; and they further ſee, that pardon and righteouſneſs are only by Chriſt, and that ſalvation is alone in him. The words are ſpoken by God the Father to his Son, and expreſs the eternal decree of God, and the deſignation of Chriſt to be the light of his people; the miſſion of him in time as the light of the world, and the exhibition of him in the Goſpel, for the illumination of men by his Spirit and grace. In the Hebrew text it is, I will give thee, &c. for all this ſprings from the free grace of God; Chriſt in all reſpects is the gift of God, as he is the head of the church, and the Saviour of the body, ſo as he is the light of men; and it is neceſſary that he ſhould be light, in order to be ſalvation, as follows; for though men may go to hell in the dark, yet not to heaven; the way of the wicked is darkneſs, but the path of the juſt is ſhining light: thoſe whom God ſaves, he enlightens with the light of life: that thou ſhouldſt be for ſalvation to the ends of the earth; impetratively as the author of it, and applicatively by means of the Goſpel, which publiſhes ſalvation by Chriſt; and is the power of God unto ſalvation, to Gentiles as well as Jews, even to all that believe, in what part of the world ſoever they live: thus what was decreed and reſolved on by God the Father, and was declared by him to his Son, is applied to his miniſters and ambaſſadors, who perſonated him; ſo that what they did, he may be ſaid to do; and who by them was to go, and did go to the Gentiles, and enlighten them with the light of the Goſpel, and became ſalvation to them; ſo that this prophecy is produced by the apoſtles, to vindicate their conduct, as well as to ſhow the agreement between the command of Jeſus Chriſt to his diſciples, and the decree of God the Father; as alſo to illuſtrate and confirm the particular order, which the apoſtle Paul had, to go to the Gentiles, and to which he may have a regard here; ſee Acts xxvi. 17. In the Hebrew text it is, my ſalvation; provided, promiſed, and ſent by God, the Saviour of his people.

Ver. 48. And when the Gentiles heard this, &c.] That it was the will of God, and the command of Chriſt, that the Goſpel ſhould be preached to them; by whom are to be underſtood the Piſidians, the inhabitants of Antioch, who had never been proſelytes to the Jewiſh religion: they were glad; not that the Jews were likely to have the Goſpel taken away from them, and be utterly deprived of it, but that it was to be preached to them: and glorified the word of the Lord; not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the eſſential word of the Lord, whom they might not as yet have ſuch a diſtinct knowledge of; but rather God himſelf, for his word, particularly his word of command, ver. 47. as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read; or the ſenſe is, they ſpake well of the Goſpel, and gave glory to God, or the Lord, who had ſent it among them: Beza's moſt ancient copy reads, they received the word of the Lord, which ſeems to be a more agreeable reading; to glorify the word of the Lord, is an unuſual phraſe: and as many as were ordained unto eternal life believed; faith is not the cauſe, or condition of the decree of eternal life, but a means fixed in it, and is a fruit and effect of it, and what certainly follows upon it, as in theſe perſons: ſome would have the words rendered, as many as were diſpoſed unto eternal life believed; which is not countenanced by the ancient verſions. The Arabic renders it as we do, and the Syriac thus, as many as were put, or appointed unto eternal life; and the Vulgate Latin verſion, as many as were pre-ordained. Moreover, the phraſe of being diſpoſed unto, or for eternal life, is a very unuſual, if not a very improper, and an inaccurate one; men are ſaid to be diſpoſed to an habit, or to an act, as to vice or virtue, but not to reward or puniſhment, as to heaven or hell; nor does it appear that theſe Gentiles had any good diſpoſitions to eternal life, antecedent to their believing; for though they are ſaid ver. 42. to intreat the apoſtles to preach the ſame things to them the next ſabbath, yet the words as there obſerved, according to their natural order, may be rendered they, i. e. the apoſtles, beſought the Gentiles; and in ſome copies and verſions, the Gentiles are not mentioned at all: and as for their being glad, and glorifying the word of the Lord, it is not evident that this was before their believing; and if it was, ſuch things have been found in perſons, who have had no true, real, and inward diſpoſitions to ſpiritual things, as in many of our Lord's hearers; beſides, admitting that there are, in ſome, good diſpoſitions to eternal life, previous to faith, and that deſiring eternal life and ſeeking after it, be accounted ſuch, yet theſe may be where faith does not follow; as in the young rich ruler, that came to Chriſt with ſuch an enquiry, and went away ſorrowful: as many therefore as are ſo diſpoſed, do not always believe, faith does not always follow ſuch diſpoſitions; and after all, one would have thought that the Jews themſelves, who were externally religious, and were looking for the Meſſiah, and eſpecially the devout and honourable women, were more diſpoſed unto eternal life, than the ignorant and idolatrous Gentiles; and yet the latter believed, and the former did not: it follows then, that their faith did not ariſe from previous diſpoſitions to eternal life, but was the fruit and effect of divine ordination unto it; and the word here uſed, in various places in this book, ſignifies determination and appointment, and not diſpoſition of mind; ſee ch. xv. 2. and xxii. 10. and xxviii. 23. The phraſe is the ſame with that uſed by the Jews, דאתקנו לחיי עולם, who are ordained to eternal life [y]; and כל דכתיב לחיי עלמא, every one that is written to eternal life [z]; i. e. in the book of life; and deſigns no other than predeſtination or election, which is God's act, and is an eternal one; is ſovereign, irreſpective, and unconditional; relates to particular perſons, and is ſure and certain in its effect: it is an ordination, not to an office, nor to the means of grace, but to grace and glory itſelf; to a life of grace which is eternal, and to a life of glory which is for ever; and which is a pure gift of God, is in the hands of Chriſt, and to which his righteouſneſs gives a title: and ordination to it, ſhews it to be a bleſſing of an early date; and the great love of God to the perſons ordained to it; and the certainty of enjoying it.

Ver. 49. And the word of the Lord was publiſhed throughout all the region.] That is, of Piſidia, in which Antioch was; not by the apoſtles Paul and Barnabas, who ſeem to go directly to Iconium, after they were expelled the city and ſuburbs of Antioch; but by ſome of thoſe who were converted under their miniſtry, and had gifts beſtowed on them, qualifying them to preach the Goſpel to others, which they did with ſucceſs. There were no doubt ſeveral churches planted in this country, and particularly there was one at Antioch, of which theſe new converts were the beginning, and which continued: in the fourth century, this church was a patriarchate, for it is ſaid, under Valentinian and Theodoſius, Optimus obtained the patriarchate of Antioch in Piſidia; in the fifth century, it was the metropolitan of Piſidia; in this age, mention is made of ſeveral biſhops of this place; Candidianus biſhop of Antioch in Piſidia, was preſent at two ſynods, one at Conſtantinople againſt Eutyches, and another at Epheſus; Dionyſius biſhop of the ſame place, aſſiſted in the ſynod at Chalcedon, and Pergamius at that which was at Conſtantinople, under the emperor Theodoſius, and at another at Chalcedon, under the emperor Marcianus: there were alſo in this century, biſhops of other churches in Piſidia; as Severus, biſhop of Sozopolis in Piſidia, who was preſent in the council at Epheſus, againſt Neſtorius; and Olympius, biſhop of mount Hem in Piſidia, who was at the Chalcedon council; and Paulinus biſhop of Apamea, Eortius biſhop of Nicopolis, and Alexander biſhop of Seleucia, and Longinus biſhop of Talbondana, all in Piſidia: in the ſixth century, there were churches in Piſidia embracing the truth of Chriſt; Bacchus was biſhop of Antioch, and John of another place, who both were in the fifth ſynod at Conſtantinople: in the ſeventh century, we read of the church at Antioch, as the metropolitan of Piſidia, and of a biſhop of it in the ſixth council at Conſtantinople: in the eighth century, Gregory biſhop of this place, condemned in a ſynod the worſhip of images, but afterwards recanted; and in the ſame century, this city was taken by the Turks, and ſpoiled[a]; and after this, we read no more of its church ſtate.

Ver. 50. But the Jews ſtirred up the devout and honourable women, &c.] Theſe ſeem not to be Jewiſh women; could they be thought to be ſuch, they might eaſily be concluded to be of the ſect of the Phariſees, which was the ſtricteſt and moſt devout ſect among the Jews; for there were women Phariſees, as well as men; ſo we read of, אשה פרושה, a woman Phariſee[b]; but theſe were Gentile women, proſelyted to the Jewiſh religion, and were in their way very religious and devout, and were alſo honourable: the word uſed ſignifies, not only that they were of a comely form, of a decent habit, and of good manners, as it is by ſome interpreted; but that they were perſons of figure and diſtinction, of good families; the Syriac verſion renders it rich, whoſe huſbands were the principal men of the city; wherefore the Jews applied to theſe women, and ſtirred up them to work upon their huſbands, who ſeem to be thoſe next mentioned: and the chief men of the city; the magiſtrates and officers in it: and raiſed perſecution againſt Paul and Barnabas; raiſed the mob, and ſet them upon them: and expelled them out of their coaſts; drove them out of their city and ſuburbs.

Ver. 51. But they ſhook off the duſt of their feet againſt them, &c.] As Chriſt directed his apoſtles to do; ſee the note on Matt. x. 14. And came unto Iconium, a city in Lycaonia; here it is placed both by Ptolomy[c] and Strabo[d]; Pliny ſays[e], that "there was a tetrarchy granted out of Lycaonia, "on that part which borders on Galatia, conſiſting "of fourteen cities, the moſt celebrated city being "Iconium." It was called by the Syrians, חיק ענא, Ik-ona, which ſignifies the boſom of ſheep; the country round about it being famous for feeding great numbers of ſheep; and here afterwards was a church of Chriſt, a boſom for his ſheep; it is now in the hands of the Turks, and is called Conia, or Cogne.

Ver. 52. And the diſciples were filled with joy, &c.] Meaning either the apoſtles, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it, Paul and Barnabas; who rejoiced, both at the ſucceſs they had met with, and becauſe they were counted worthy to ſuffer reproach and perſecution for the ſake of Chriſt and his Goſpel: or rather the diſciples at Antioch, and other parts of Piſidia, the new converts; who were filled with joy at the Goſpel being preached unto them, and at the conſtancy and courage of the apoſtles in ſuffering for it: and with the Holy Ghoſt; which with the former, deſigns the ſame thing, as ſpiritual joy, or joy in the Holy Ghoſt; or elſe the gifts and graces of the Spirit, which they had both for their own comfort, and the advantage of others.

CHAP. XIV.

Ver. 1. AND it came to paſs in Iconium, &c.] When the apoſtles were got thither, and as ſoon as they were there; at leaſt the firſt opportunity they had: that they went both together into the ſynagogue of the Jews; which was in Iconium; hither Paul and Barnabas went together, in like manner as they had done at Antioch: and ſo ſpoke; ſuch words, and doctrines of grace, with ſo much power, authority, and demonſtration of the Spirit, with ſo much plainneſs, clearneſs, and evidence, as well as with ſo much boldneſs and courage: that a great multitude, both of the Jews, and alſo of the Greeks believed; the doctrines they preached, and in Chriſt the ſum and ſubſtance of them; and theſe were not a few, but a great multitude; and not of one ſort, of the Jews only, who expected the Meſſiah, but of the Greeks, or Gentiles alſo, who never heard of any; for by Greeks here are meant, not Jews born in Greece, ſpeaking the Greek tongue, and uſing the Greek bible, for theſe were called Helleniſts, and not Greeks, but heathens. Theſe converts laid the foundation of a Goſpel church-ſtate in this place; for that there was a church here, is certain from ver. 21, 22, 23. In the firſt century, Soſipater is ſaid to be biſhop, or paſtor of this church, and alſo Tertius, tius, who are both reckoned among the ſeventy diſciples of Chriſt; ſee the note on Luke x. 1. In the third century, Celſus was biſhop of this church; and in the ſame century, ſeveral ſynods were held here, about the error of Novatus; and in the ſame century, Nicomes biſhop of this place, aſſiſted at the council at Antioch, which condemned the hereſy of Samoſatenus [f]: in the fourth century there was a church in this place, and Amphilochius was biſhop of it, of whom Jerom [g] makes mention; and who read to him a book, concerning the deity and worſhip of the Holy Spirit: in the fifth century, it was the metropolitan church of Lycaonia, and Valerianus and Oneſiphorus preſided over it: in the ſixth century, a biſhop of this church was preſent at the fifth Roman council under Symmachus: in the ſeventh century, it bore the character of metropolitan, and a biſhop of it aſſiſted at the ſixth council at Conſtantinople, whoſe name was Paul: in the eighth century, Leo was biſhop of it, who was preſent at the ſynod of Nice [h]; and after this we hear no more of it, the place falling into the hands of the Turks, who are now poſſeſſed of it: here, according to the Roman martyrology, Tryphena and Tryphoſa, mentioned in Rom. xvi. 12. heard the apoſtle Paul preach; and here the famous virgin and martyr Thecla, was converted.

Ver. 2. But the unbelieving Jews ſtirred up the Gentiles, &c.] That part of the Jews, which continued in unbelief, and rejected the doctrine of the apoſtles, concerning Jeſus of Nazareth being the Meſſiah; theſe ſtirred up the Gentiles, who had no knowledge of, nor faith in this matter: and made their minds evil affected againſt the brethren; either in general, againſt all thoſe that embraced the Goſpel of Chriſt; who being of the ſame faith and family, having the ſame God to be their Father, and equally related to, and intereſted in Chriſt Jeſus, are called brethren; or in particular againſt the apoſtles Paul and Barnabas, by repreſenting them as ſeditious perſons, and of bad deſigns.

Ver. 3. Long time therefore abode they, &c.] At Iconium, undaunted and not diſcouraged, at the treatment they met with: but continued, ſpeaking boldly in the Lord; uſing great freedom of ſpeech, and ſhewing great courage and intrepidity of mind; ſpeaking out without fear, the doctrines of the Goſpel, in the name of the Lord, and depending upon ſtrength, aſſiſtance, and ſupport, from him: which gave teſtimony unto the word of his grace; the Goſpel, ſo called, becauſe it is a publication of the grace and favour of God to the ſons of men; in the choice of ſome of them to everlaſting life, in the miſſion of his Son to redeem them, in the juſtification of them by his righteouſneſs, and in the forgiveneſs of them through his blood, in the regeneration of them by his Spirit, in adopting them into his family, and making them heirs of eternal life; and becauſe it is a means of implanting his grace in their ſouls; to this he bore witneſs, by giving it ſucceſs, notwithſtanding the oppoſition made againſt it, and by miracles wrought in confirmation of it, as follows: and granted ſigns and wonders to be done by their hands; ſuch as healing the ſick, curing the lame, caſting out devils, and the like, whereby a teſtimony was given to the truth of the doctrine they preached: and it may be obſerved, that theſe miraculous works were not wrought by the power of the apoſtles, but by the power of God; they were only inſtruments by whom they were done; it was owing to a grant from the Lord, and to his power, that they were performed.

Ver. 4. But the multitude of the city was divided, &c.] In their ſentiments, about the apoſtles, their doctrines, and miracles; ſome approving them, others condemning their doctrines as falſe, and their miracles as deluſions: and part held with the Jews; that did not believe, but rejected the apoſtles, deſpiſed their doctrines, and diſparaged their miracles: and part with the apoſtles; theſe were the Jews and Greeks, that believed; which diviſions in families, towns, and cities, though the common conſequence of the preaching of the Goſpel, are not owing to any fault in that, but to the depravity and corruption of human nature; and are what our Lord declared was, and foretold would be the caſe, Luke xii. 51.

Ver. 5. And when there was an aſſault made, &c.] Or a ſtrong biaſs and inclination were in the minds, both of the Gentiles, and alſo of the Jews, with their rulers; who encouraged them in it: to uſe them deſpitefully, and to ſtone them; not only to give them reproachful language, but to ſmite, buffet, and ſcourge them, and to ſtone them for blaſphemy, which was a puniſhment among the Jews for ſuch cauſes.

Ver. 6. They were ware of it, &c.] They underſtood it, were apprized of it, and well weighed it, and conſidered it in their minds, and what was beſt to be done at this juncture: and fled unto Lyſtra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia; according to the orders and command of Chriſt, Matt. x. 23. not ſo much to ſave their lives, as to ſpread the Goſpel in other parts. Lycaonia was a province in the leſſer Aſia, near Phrygia, ſeparated from it by the mountains; on the eaſt it bordered on Galatia; and had on the weſt Pamphylia and Piſidia, and on the ſouth Cilicia, unto mount Taurus. Some ſay it had its name from Lycaon, the ſon of Pelaſgus; others, ſeeing it was not a Greek colony, chuſe to fetch the name of the country from the Syrians, who uſed to call their neighbour's country Leikonia, or in the Greek pronunciation Lycaonia; that is, the country of Iconium, which city was the metropolis of Lycaonia [i]: Lyſtra, is by Ptolomy [k] placed in Iſauria, and ſo Derbe is ſaid by Strabo [l], to be upon the coaſt of Iſauria; wherefore the words may be read thus, as they are in the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions, and they fled to the cities of Lycaonia, and to Lyſtra, and to Derbe; by which reading, they are not neceſſarily made the cities of Lycaonia: according to Jerom [m], they were both cities of Lycaonia. Lyſtra is the ſame with, לעשתרה, Lebeſtbera; which in the Hebrew and Syriac languages, ſignifies a flock of ſheep, or a city of flocks; it being a place that abounded with ſheep, as the country of Lycaonia in general did [n]. Derbe was ſometimes called Delbia, which in the language of the Lycaonians, ſignifies a juniper-tree; and Delub, and Dulbe, with the Targumiſt [o] and Talmudiſts [p], ſignify a cheſnut-tree; and with the Arabians, Dulb is a plane-tree, or poplar; it ſeems as if it had its name from one or other of thoſe trees, which might grow in large quantities near it: and unto the region that lieth round about; the ſaid cities.

Ver. 7. And there they preached the Goſpel.] They did not ſit ſtill, nor hide themſelves in theſe places; but, as in others, they preached the Goſpel, the good news and glad tidings, of the incarnation of Chriſt, of redemption, peace, and pardon, thro' his blood, juſtification by his righteouſneſs, and ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation through him: in Beza's moſt ancient copy, and in one of Stephens's, theſe words are added, and which Bede alſo ſays, were in the Greek copies in his time, and the whole multitude were moved at their doctrines, and Paul and Barnabas continued at Lyſtra; which agrees with what follows. It is very likely, that many were converted in each of theſe cities, and in the adjacent country, and that churches were raiſed in theſe places; this ſeems manifeſt, from ver. 20, 21, 22, 23. and ch. xvi. 1, 2. Artemas, of whom mention is made in Tit. iii. 12. and is ſaid to be one of the ſeventy diſciples, is reported to be biſhop of Lyſtra; ſee the note on Luke x. 1. though we meet with nothing in eccleſiaſtical hiſtory, concerning the churches in either of theſe places, until the ſixth century; when in the fifth Roman ſynod under Symmachus, there were preſent the biſhops of Lyſtra and Derbe, as alſo of Iconium and Larandas, which were likewiſe cities in Lycaonia [q].

Ver. 8. And there ſat a certain man at Lyſtra, &c.] Where the apoſtle was preaching; and perhaps he ſat there to beg, where there was a great concourſe of people, and which might be in the open ſtreet: this man was impotent in his feet; ſo weak, as not to be able to walk, and even to ſtand on them, and therefore is ſaid to ſit: being a cripple from his mother's womb; he was born lame, as was the man cured by Peter, ch. iii. 2. who never had walked; theſe circumſtances are mentioned, to ſhew that his caſe was incurable by any human art, and to illuſtrate the following miracle.

Ver. 9. The ſame heard Paul ſpeak, &c.] That is, preach the Goſpel; he was one of his hearers, and faith came to him by hearing; the Arabic verſion adds, he cried unto him; that is, to Paul, whom he heard: who ſtedfaſtly beholding him; not the lame man beholding Paul, but Paul beholding the lame man, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions both expreſs it, as alſo Beza's ancient copy and others; ſo Peter looked on the man he cured, ch. iii. 4. And perceiving that he had faith to be healed; as he might by his looks, his geſtures, his attention in hearing, and it may be by ſomewhat that he ſaid, as well as by revelation, or a ſpirit of diſcerning, which he had.

Ver. 10. Said with a loud voice, &c.] Not only that the man, but that all might hear and attend to the miracle about to be wrought: ſtand upright on thy feet; in five of Beza's manuſcripts, and in other copies, and in the Complutenſian edition, and in the Syriac verſion, this clauſe is introduced with theſe words, I ſay unto thee, in the name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; which is much ſuch a form that Peter uſed, ch. iii. 6. whereby the virtue of the miracle is aſcribed to Chriſt, and not aſſumed by the apoſtle: and he leaped and walked; he ſprung up directly from his ſeat, and leaped about for joy, and walked as well as any other man could.

Ver. 11. And when the people ſaw what Paul had done, &c.] In curing the lame man in ſo marvellous a manner, and concluding it to be a divine work, and what a mere creature could never perform: they lift up their voices; not in indignation and wrath, but as perſons aſtoniſhed: ſaying in the ſpeech of Lycaonia; by which it ſhould ſeem that Lyſtra was a city of Lycaonia, ſince the Lycaonian language was ſpoken in it; the Arabic verſion reads, in their own tongue; and the Syriac verſion, in the dialect of the country; very likely a dialect of the Greek tongue: the gods are come down to us in the likeneſs of men; they had a notion of deity, though a very wrong one; they thought there were more gods than one, and they imagined heaven to be the habitation of the gods; and that they ſometimes deſcended on earth in human ſhape, as they ſuppoſed they now did.

Ver. 12. And they called Barnabas Jupiter, &c.] The ſupreme God; it may be becauſe that Barnabas was the oldeſt man, of the talleſt ſtature, and largeſt bulk, and made the beſt figure; whereas Paul was younger, of a low ſtature, and mean appearance: and Paul Mercurius, becauſe he was the chief ſpeaker; Mercury was the god of eloquence, and the meſſenger of the gods, and the interpreter of their will [r]; Paul being chiefly concerned in preaching and ſpeaking to the people, they called him by the name of this God: the Jews had a doctor in their ſchools, whom they called, ראש המדברים, the chief of the ſpeakers [s].

Ver. 13. Then the prieſt of Jupiter, which was before their city, &c.] Not that the prieſt was before the city, but Jupiter; and the phraſe denotes either his preſidence over the city, and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, who was the chief god of their city; or the place where his image ſtood, which was out of the city, and ſo may be ſaid to be before it; accordingly the Syriac verſion renders it, who was without the city; he who officiated as prieſt to him: brought oxen and garlands unto the gates; either of the city, as the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions add, where was the ſtatue of Jupiter; or elſe, and which is moſt likely, he brought them to the gates of the houſe, were Paul and Barnabas were; and to this ſenſe the Syriac verſion renders it, to the door of the dwelling-place where they abode: what the oxen were brought for, is eaſy to conceive, had it not been expreſſed; but for what ſhould garlands or crowns be brought? Theſe were uſed in ſacrifices, for different purpoſes; ſometimes they crowned the gods [t], to whom they ſacrificed, and theſe might be brought to be put upon the heads of Paul and Barnabas; and ſometimes the prieſts wore them [u], and which ſeems to be in imitation of the mitre, wore by the high-prieſt among the Jews; and ſometimes even thoſe who came to ſacrifice, and implore the aſſiſtance of their deities, wore them [w]; likewiſe the altars on which they offered ſacrifice, were crowned with theſe garlands [x]; and the ſacrifices themſelves, and which laſt ſeems to be the caſe here: the garlands were brought to be put upon the oxen; and theſe were for the moſt part made of cypreſs; ſometimes of the pine-tree, and ſometimes of other leaves and flowers, ſuch as were peculiar to the gods [y]: and there was ſomething like this among the Jews, at the offerings of their firſt-fruits, which were done in this manner [z]; "they that were neareſt (to Jeruſalem) brought "green figs and grapes; and they that were more "remote, brought dried figs and raiſins; and an "ox went before them, whoſe horns were covered "with gold, ועטרת של זית, and a crown of olives "on his head; a pipe ſounded before them, till "they came near to Jeruſalem, and then they ſent “ ſome before them; who crowned their firſt fruits.” And would have done ſacrifice with the people; that is, the prieſt and the people with him, would have offered ſacrifice to Paul and Barnabas, as to two deities; and the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions add, to them; to both the apoſtles, with which agrees the Arabic verſion.

Ver. 14. Which when the apoſtles Barnabas and Paul heard of, &c.] As they quickly did, ſuch a multitude being about the doors of the houſe, where they were: it may be obſerved, that Barnabas is here called an apoſtle, as in ver. 4. and is placed before Paul, not as being greater than he, but becauſe of the opinion theſe heathens had of him: they rent their cloaths; as the Jews did, and were obliged to do, when they heard any blaſphemy; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 65. And ran in among the people; in great haſte, ſhowing great concern of mind, and much indignation and reſentment, at what they were about to do: crying out; aloud, and with great vehemence, that all might hear, and to expreſs the greater diſlike of the action.

Ver. 15. And ſaying, Sirs, why do ye theſe things? &c.] That is, bring theſe oxen and garlands, and attempt to offer ſacrifice; this they ſaid, not as arguing with them calmly and mildly, but with a mixture of indignation, heat, and zeal, as diſpleaſed with, and deteſting and abhorring what they were about to do: we alſo are men of like paſſions with you; men, and not Gods; of the ſame human nature, and that as corrupted, alike ſinful men, and need a ſacrifice better than theſe; frail mortal men, ſubject to frailty, imperfection, afflictions, troubles, diſeaſes, and death itſelf; and ſo, very improper objects of worſhip: and preach unto you that ye ſhould turn from theſe vanities; from theſe deities, Jupiter and Mercury, and the reſt of them; which were vain, uſeleſs, and unprofitable, and could do their votaries no manner of ſervice; and from the worſhipping of them, which were ſo many acts of vanity, folly, and weakneſs, yea, of ſin and wickedneſs: the apoſtles were ſo far from being theſe gods, that their buſineſs was to ſhow men, the ſin and folly of adhering to them; and to perſuade them to relinquiſh the worſhip of them, and turn to the living God; who has life in himſelf, and is the fountain of life to others; whereas theſe deities were dead men, and the lifeleſs images of them; who neither lived themſelves, nor could give life to others, or do them any ſervice of any kind: but the living God is he, which hath made heaven and earth, and the ſea, and all things that are therein; which comprehends all created beings, the whole univerſe, and all that is in it, angels, men, beaſts, fowls, fiſh, and whatever exiſts; and therefore is only deſerving of religious worſhip.

Ver. 16. Who in times paſt, &c.] For many hundred years paſt; even ever ſince God choſe and ſeparated the people of Iſrael from the reſt of the nations, to be a peculiar people to himſelf: from that time he ſuffered all nations to walk in their own ways; of ignorance, ſuperſtition, and idolatry; which they deviſed, and choſe, and delighted in: not that he gave them a licence to walk in theſe ways, without being chargeable with ſin, or with impunity; but he left them to themſelves, to the dim light and law of nature, and gave them no written law, nor any external revelation of his mind and will; nor did he ſend any prophets or miniſters of his unto them, to ſhow them the evil of their ways, and turn them from them; and direct them to the true God, and the right way of worſhipping him; but left them to take their own methods, and purſue the imagination of their own hearts: but the apoſtle ſuggeſts, that the caſe was now altered, and God had ſent them and other miniſters of his, among all nations of the world, to proteſt againſt their ſuperſtition and idolatry; and to reclaim them from their evil ways, and to direct them to the true and living God, and his worſhip, and to preach ſalvation by his ſon Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 17. Nevertheleſs, he left not himſelf without witneſs, &c.] Of his kindneſs and goodneſs to them, during this long interval and period of time; for though they had not the written law, yet they were not deſtitute of the law of nature; and had beſides, many inſtances of providential goodneſs, by which they might have known God; and ſhould have been thankful to him, and glorified him as God, and not have worſhipped the idols of their own hands; the goodneſs of God ſhould have led them to repentance, and not have been abuſed to ſo many wicked purpoſes as it had been: in that he did good; in a providential way, to perſons very undeſerving of it, of which ſome particular inſtances follow: and gave us rain from heaven; which none of the gods of the Gentiles could do, Jer. xiv. 22. So, מפתח גשמים, the key of rains, is by the Jews[a] ſaid to be one of the keys which God has in his own hands, and which he does not commit to any other: and a wonderful bleſſing is this to mankind, and which God gives to the juſt and to the unjuſt, and did give to the ignorant and idolatrous Gentiles. Beza's moſt ancient copy, and four other ancient copies of his, and ſome others, read you, inſtead of us; which reading ſeems moſt agreeable: and fruitful ſeaſons; ſpring, ſummer, harveſt, and autumn, at which ſeveral times, different fruits of the earth appear: filling our hearts with food and gladneſs; giving a ſufficiency of food, and even an abundance of it, and that for pleaſure and delight, as well as for ſupport and refreſhment: the Syriac verſion reads, their hearts; ſome copies read, your hearts.

Ver. 18. And with theſe ſayings, &c.] Concerning themſelves, and concerning the living God, his creation of all things, and his providential goodneſs: ſcarce reſtrained they the people, that they had not done ſacrifice unto them; ſo reſolute were they upon it, that it was with great difficulty that they perſuaded them from it: in four of Beza's manuſcripts, and in ſome other copies 'tis added, but every one went to his own houſe, &c.

Ver. 19. And there came thither certain Jews, &c.] Either juſt at the ſame time, or however whilſt the apoſtles were in this city: in four manuſcripts of Beza's, and in ſome other copies 'tis read, as they abode there, and taught, there came, &c. Theſe Jews were inveterate enemies of the apoſtles, and ſeem to have followed them from place to place, on purpoſe to oppoſe them, and to ſtir up the people againſt them, and to hinder the ſucceſs of their miniſtry all they could: for theſe came from Antioch, not Antioch in Syria, but in Piſidia; where they had contradicted and blaſphemed the word of God, and was the reaſon why the apoſtles turned to the Gentiles, ch. xiii. 45, 46. And Iconium; where alſo the unbelieving Jews ſtirred up the Gentiles againſt the apoſtles, and both of them made an aſſault upon them, to uſe them ill, ver. 2, 5. who perſuaded the people; in the above manuſcripts of Beza's, and in ſome other copies, are theſe words, "and they diſputing confidently, perſuaded the people to depart from "them, ſaying, that they ſaid nothing true, but "in all things lyed;" which though they may not be conſidered as the text, are a good gloſs upon it: they perſuaded the people not to hearken to them, told them that they were deceivers and jugglers, and inſtead of having honours conferred upon them, they ought to be ſeverely puniſhed; and to theſe Jews they hearkened, as appears by what follows: and having ſtoned Paul; even the ſame perſons that juſt before were for ſacrificing to him as a god; which ſhows the fickleneſs and unconſtancy of the populace, and how little they are to be depended on; for they were the Gentiles that ſtoned Paul, at the inſtigation of the Jews; though the latter might probably join with them in it: a like inſtance we have in the conduct of the Jews towards Chriſt, who cried hoſanna to him one day, and on another, very quickly after, with great importunity ſay, crucify him, crucify him; of this ſtoning, the apoſtle makes mention, 2 Cor. xi. 25. ſee alſo 2 Tim. iii. 11. When they had ſtoned him, they drew him out of the city, ſuppoſing he had been dead; which is an addition to their barbarity and inhumanity; for they not only ſtoned him until he was dead, as they ſuppoſed, but they dragged his body through the ſtreets of their city, in contempt of him, and indignation againſt him, and caſt him out of it, where they left him as unworthy of a burial.

[a] Targum Jeruſ. in Gen. xxx. 22. & Jon. in Deut. xxviii 12.

Ver. 20. Howbeit, as the diſciples ſtood round about him, &c.] Weeping over him, and lamenting for him, and it may be praying to God, that he would reſtore him to life; however, they got about him, in order to take care of him, and provide for his interment: theſe were the young converts at Lyſtra, who under the miniſtry of the apoſtles, were now brought to the faith of Chriſt; unleſs it can be thought, that they were ſuch who followed them from other places, and attended them in their travels; but the former ſeems moſt probable, and which ſhows their affection to their ſpiritual father, and their conſtancy in the faith of Chriſt, notwithſtanding this ill-treatment of his ſervant: he roſe up and came into the city; which was no leſs than a miracle, and was no doubt the effect of the mighty power of God, put forth upon him; for though he was not really dead, yet he was left as ſuch, and thought to be ſo both by friends and foes: and when it is conſidered, what wounds and bruiſes he muſt receive by ſtoning, and his being dragged through the ſtreets of the city, and left in ſuch a miſerable condition without it, that he ſhould at once riſe up in the midſt of the diſciples, and walk into the city as one in perfect health and ſtrength, has ſomething extraordinary and miraculous in it; and it ſhows great reſolution, courage, and ſtrength of mind, to go into the ſame city again, where he had been ſo ill uſed; though he did not chuſe to continue there, nor were the inhabitants worthy of ſuch a favour: and the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe; where they had been before, and had preached the Goſpel, and whither they fled from Iconium, when in great danger, ver. 6, 7.

Ver. 21. And when they had preached the Goſpel to that city, &c.] To the inhabitants of it, as they did in every place where they came, even the pure Goſpel of Chriſt, the good news, and glad tidings of life and ſalvation by him: and had taught many; or made them diſciples, their miniſtry being bleſſed to bring many to the faith of Chriſt: they returned again to Lyſtra; where Paul had been ſtoned: and to Iconium; where both Jews and Gentiles, and the magiſtrates of the city, had attempted to uſe them ill, and to ſtone them: and Antioch; that is, in Piſidia, as before; where a perſecution was raiſed againſt them, and from the coaſts of which place they were expelled; ſo fearleſs were they of danger, and ſo zealous to promote the intereſt of Chriſt, and the good of ſouls.

Ver. 22. Confirming the ſouls of the diſciples, &c.] Not wicked men in their wickedneſs, nor ſelf-righteous perſons in an opinion of their own righteouſneſs, as ſufficient for juſtification, both being contrary to the nature and tendency of the miniſtry of the word; the Goſpel being a doctrine according to godlineſs, and a revelation of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; but the diſciples and followers of Jeſus, whom they had already made in thoſe places, theſe they confirmed in the doctrines of the Goſpel, and fortified them againſt the contradictions and blaſphemies of the Jews, and the reproaches, afflictions, and perſecutions they met with, by which they might be ſtaggered: they did not confirm the bodies of theſe diſciples, and the health of them, which is the buſineſs of the phyſician to confirm; nor their eſtates and civil property, to ſecure and defend which belongs to the civil magiſtrate; but their ſouls, their more noble and valuable part, their hearts, which are apt to be unſtable; the frames of their hearts, which are precarious, and ſo as not to be too much depreſſed when diſagreeable, or be too much elated when agreeable, placing too much truſt and confidence in them; and alſo the graces of the Spirit in their hearts, as to act and exerciſe, as faith, hope, and love; and likewiſe their judgments and underſtandings in the truths of the Goſpel, in what relates to the love of God, the covenant of grace, the perſon of Chriſt, and their intereſt in them: and exhorting them to continue in the faith; in the exerciſe of the grace of faith, and in the doctrine of faith, and in the profeſſion of both, whatever they might meet with on the account thereof, and which they were to expect: and that we muſt thro' much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God; either into a Goſpel church-ſtate, which is ſometimes ſo called, there being much trouble often attending an entrance into it, both from within, from the corruption and unbelief of the heart, and from without, from the temptations of ſatan, and from the revilings and inſults of men, and even from friends and relations; or into the heavenly glory, the way to that lying thro' many tribulations; and which, tho' a rough, is a right way: ſo it muſt be, there is a neceſſity of it, partly on account of the decrees of God, who has appointed afflictions for his people, and them to afflictions; and partly on account of the predictions of Chriſt, who foretold his diſciples, that in the world they ſhould have tribulation; as alſo, that there might be a conformity to him, that as he the head muſt, and did ſuffer many things, and enter into his glory, ſo muſt they his members; as well as likewiſe for the trial and exerciſe of the ſeveral graces of the Spirit, and to make the ſaints meet for heaven, and to make that the ſweeter to them.

Ver. 23. And when they had ordained them elders in every church, &c.] As ſoon as ever any number of diſciples were made, or ſouls were converted to Chriſt in any place, they were at once formed, by the Apoſtles, into a church-ſtate; and as the gifts, as well as the grace of the Holy Ghoſt, attended the miniſtry of the word, ſo among thoſe that were converted, there were ſome that were honoured with miniſterial gifts, qualifying them to preach the Goſpel, and take upon them the care of the churches: theſe the Apoſtles directed the churches to look out from among themſelves, as in the caſe of deacons, an inferior office, who by joint ſuffrages declared their choice of them by the ſtretching out, or lifting up of their hands, as the word here uſed ſignifies, and not the impoſition of them; and the Apoſtles preſiding in this affair, they were inſtalled into the office of biſhops, elders, or paſtors over them; which expreſſes the great regard the Apoſtles had to the order, as well as to the doctrine of the Goſpel, and the concern they had for the welfare of ſouls converted under their miniſtry, by making a proviſion for them when they were gone. And had prayed with faſting; for the elders ordained, that they might have a larger meaſure of gifts, and might be kept faithful to the truſt committed to them, and be ſucceeded in their miniſtry; and for the members of the church, that they might abide by the truths of the Goſpel, and the ordinances of it, and walk worthy of it in their converſations, and behave aright in their church-ſtate, both to their elders, and to one another, and that they might perſevere to the end: they commended them to the Lord; both the elders and the churches, to be bleſſed by him with freſh ſupplies of grace, to be kept by his power, and to be preſerved by him ſafe to his kingdom and glory. The Lord Jeſus Chriſt ſeems to be intended by the Lord, to whom the Apoſtles commended them; and who is every way qualified, and fully able to anſwer ſuch a commendation; ſee chap. xx. 32. on whom they believed; meaning Chriſt, whom they received by faith, in whom they truſted, and on whom they believed with the heart for righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation: this was true, both of the Apoſtles, who commended the elders and churches to the Lord, and was the reaſon why they commended them to him, becauſe they believed on him themſelves; and of the churches and elders commended, who could be commended to none better than to him, on whom they had believed.

Ver. 24. And after they had paſſed throughout Piſidia, &c.] The country where Antioch, the laſt place mentioned was; ſee ch. xiii. 14. they came to Pamphilia; ſee the note on ch. xiii. 13. and ii. 10.

Ver. 25. And when they had preached the word in Perga, &c.] A city in Pamphilia, chap. xiii. 13. The Alexandrian copy, and others, and three manuſcripts of Beza's, read, the word of the Lord; as do the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions: they went down into Attalia; not Italia or Italy, as ſome Latin copies, and as the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read; but a city in Pamphilia, bordering on the ſea, as Ptolomy writes[b]; as this place did, as appears by what follows. So Jerom ſays[c], that Attalia is a city of Pamphilia, on the ſea-coaſt; it was formerly the metropolis of it: it is now in the hands of the Turks, and is called Sattalia; near it is a bay, called Golfo di Sattalia, where there is a conſiderable mart for the whole country: it is famous for tapeſtry, which is made in it: it had its name from Attalus, king of Pergamus, the firſt founder of it. Beza's ancient copy here adds, preaching the Goſpel to them; to the inhabitants of Attalia, and doubtleſs with ſucceſs, tho' no mention is made of it here, nor elſewhere, nor of any church in this place; nor do we read of any in eccleſiaſtical hiſtory until the ſixth century, when Dionyſius, biſhop of Attalia, is ſaid to be preſent in the fifth ſynod at Rome[d]; unleſs Attalia, called a city of Lycia, can be thought to be the ſame with this, of which another Dionyſius was biſhop in the fifth century; and aſſiſted at the council of Chalcedon[e].

Ver. 26. And thence ſailed to Antioch, &c.] In Syria, from whence they had been recommended to the grace of God; by the prophets: from this place they firſt ſet out on their travels; here they were ſeparated by the order of the Holy Ghoſt to the work of the miniſtry, and by them they were ſent forth, after they had in prayer commended them to God, and to his grace to aſſiſt them, and ſucceed them, as well as to fit them, for the work which they fulfilled; that is, for the work of the miniſtry, for the preaching of the Goſpel in ſeveral places; and which they had now gone through, and finiſhed with great integrity and faithfulneſs, and with much ſucceſs, though through many afflictions and perſecutions.

Ver. 27. And when they were come, &c.] To Antioch: and had gathered the church together; which was in that place, and who came together at their requeſt; for as they were ſent out by them, they judged it proper to call them together; and and give them an account of the iſſue of their work they were recommended by them to the grace of God to fulfil: and being come together at their uſual place of meeting, they rehearſed all that God had done with them; and by them, as inſtruments; what grace and ſtrength he had given them to preach the Goſpel; what numbers of ſouls were every where converted by it; what miracles were wrought by them for the confirmation of it; and what perſecutions and ſufferings they had endured for the ſake of it; and what deliverances were vouchſafed unto them: and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles; the phraſe, the door of faith, ſeems to be Jewiſh; it is to be met with in Jewiſh writings: it is ſaid[f], "there are two women found "in the world, that expreſs the praiſe of God, ſo "as all the men of the world have not; and who "are they? Deborah and Hannah: Hannah, ac"cording to 1 Sam. ii. 2. there is none holy as the "Lord, for there is none beſide thee; and all pro"claim that ſhe פתחת פתחא דמהימנותא לעלמא, "opens the door of faith to the world, as ver. 8. "he raiſeth up the poor out of the duſt, and lifteth "up the beggar from the dunghill, lo, the door of "faith; to ſet them among princes, lo, the faith that "is above." The ſenſe here ſeems to be, that God had given an opportunity to the Apoſtles to preach the doctrine of faith unto the Gentiles, and the Gentiles had had an opportunity of hearing and embracing it; God had opened the mouths of his miniſters to preach to them, and he had opened their hearts to attend unto it, and receive it; for it may be underſtood of his giving of them the grace of faith, by which they received Chriſt, and his Goſpel, into their hearts: ſo a like phraſe is uſed by the Targumiſt on Jer. xxxiii. 6. who paraphraſes the words thus; "behold, I will bring unto them "healing and redemption, and I will heal them, "and I will reveal, or open to them, תרע תיובא, "the door of repentance;" that is, I will give them repentance: ſo here, when God is ſaid to open the door of faith to the Gentiles, the ſenſe is, that he had given the grace of faith to them, which came by hearing the word of the Goſpel, which he ſent them; and gave them encouragement to believe in Chriſt; ſo the phraſe a door of hope is uſed in Hoſ. ii. 15.

Ver. 28. And there they abode long time with the diſciples.] That is, Paul and Barnabas continued a conſiderable time at Antioch with the believers there, before they ſet out on another journey; and what might detain them the longer, might be the diſputes they had with ſome judaizing chriſtians, concerning the obſervation of the law; of which, and the iſſue of them, an account is given in the next chapter.

CHAP. XV.

Ver. 1. AND certain men which came down from Judea, &c.] To Antioch; they were not ſent by the Apoſtles, they came down of themſelves; who they were, is not certain; that they were judaizing chriſtians, and teachers among them, is plain from the following account: according to Epiphanius[g] they were Cerinthus, and ſome of his followers: theſe taught the brethren; the Gentile converts at Antioch, who are ſtiled brethren, tho' they were Gentiles, becauſe they were regenerated by the grace of God, and were of the ſame faith with the believing Jews, and in the ſame church-ſtate with them at Antioch: and ſaid, except ye be circumciſed after the manner of Moſes; or cuſtom of Moſes, which had been uſed from the time of Abraham, and was revived and re-inforced by Moſes; wherefore the Syriac verſion renders it, the law of Moſes; ſee the note on John vii. 19. ye cannot be ſaved; theſe men were not only for retaining circumciſion, which was now aboliſhed, but they made it neceſſary to ſalvation; which was carrying the matter further than even the unbelieving Jews themſelves did, at leaſt ſome of them: for tho' indeed it is a notion with them, that no circumciſed perſons go to hell, but are all ſaved; and ſome of them ſay, that God rejects uncircumciſed perſons, and brings them down to hell[h]; yet others of them ſpeak of the godly among the nations of the world, and of the proſelytes of the gate, who keep the ſeven precepts of Noah, as perſons that ſhall be ſaved; ſo Ananias the Jew, preceptor to king Izates, when he ſignified his great deſire to be circumciſed, in order to put him off of it, told him, that if he was determined to follow the cuſtoms of the Jews, he might worſhip God without circumciſion, which was more peculiar to the Jews than to be circumciſed[i].

Ver. 2. When therefore Paul and Barnabas, &c.] Who were the miniſters of the uncircumciſion, and were juſt returned from preaching the Goſpel among the Gentiles, with ſucceſs, and were advocates for them, being witneſſes of the grace that was beſtowed on them, and therefore oppoſed the ſentiments of theſe men: and had no ſmall diſſenſion and diſputation with them; which was attended with much heat and ſharpneſs, and continued ſome time, and occaſioned much diſturbance and uneaſineſs; nor could the affair be decided and iſſued: wherefore they determined that Paul and Barnabas, and certain other of them; that is, the members of the church at Antioch, taking this matter into conſideration, and finding that the difference could not be compoſed, for the peace of the church, wiſely came to a reſolution, and made an order, that Paul and Barnabas, with others, as Titus, who went with Paul at this time, as appears from Gal. ii. 1. and ſome others of the brethren, and it may be alſo certain, on the other ſide of the queſtion; that theſe ſhould go up to Jeruſalem, unto the apoſtles and elders, about this queſtion; concerning circumciſion, and the neceſſity of it to ſalvation, that they might have the ſenſe of James, and Peter, and John, who particularly were at Jeruſalem at this time, as appears from ver. 7, 13. and Gal. ii. 9. and other Apoſtles that might be there; and alſo of other miniſters of the word, who are called elders. And the church of Jeruſalem being the moſt ancient church, and ſeveral of the Apoſtles reſiding here, who had ſeen Chriſt in the fleſh, and had received their miſſion and commiſſion from him, and had been extraordinarily endowed with the Holy Ghoſt; and here being many other preachers of the Goſpel, and there being in a multitude of counſellors ſafety, the church at Antioch judged it adviſeable to ſend to them for counſel and direction; and it becomes churches to aſſiſt each other in this way.

Ver. 3. And being brought on their way by the church, &c.] That is, either being accompanied by ſome of the brethren of the church ſome part of the way, out of reſpect unto them, or being provided by them with things neceſſary for their journey; ſee Tit. iii. 13. they paſſed thro' Phenice and Samaria; which both lay between Syria and Judea; in the former of which places thoſe that were ſcattered upon the death of Stephen, had preached, and a great number were converted and believed in Chriſt who were Jews, ch. xi. 19. and in the latter Philip the Evangeliſt had preached with much ſucceſs, ch. viii. 5, 12. as therefore their way to Jeruſalem lay thro' theſe places, they called upon the brethren as they paſſed: declaring the converſion of the Gentiles; in the ſeveral places where they had been, as in Syria, Piſidia, Pamphilia, and Lycaonia, how by their miniſtry they were turned from darkneſs to light, from ſatan unto God, from their ſuperſtition and idolatry to the worſhip of the true God, and to faith in Chriſt Jeſus: and they cauſed great joy unto all the brethren; the believing Jews in thoſe parts, who being truly believers in Chriſt, rejoiced at the ſpread of his Goſpel, and the increaſe of his intereſt, even among the Gentiles; for if angels rejoice, much more ſhould ſaints rejoice at the converſion of ſinners, let them be who or where they will; and where there is true grace, there will be joy when this is the caſe. There were churches in each of theſe places, of which the brethren here mentioned were members, and which continued for many ages afterwards: the foundation of the churches in Phenice was firſt laid by the converts made by them, who were ſcattered abroad thro' the perſecution at the death of Stephen, chap. xi. 19. Quartus, mentioned in Rom. xvi. 23. is ſaid to be biſhop of Berytus in this country. In the ſecond century there were churches at Tyre and Ptolemais, two cities in Phœnicia; Caſſius was biſhop of the one, and Clarus of the other[k]: in the third century ſeveral Phœnician biſhops ſuffered martyrdom, as Tyrannio, biſhop of the church of Tyre, Zenobius, preſbyter of that at Sidon, and Sylvanus, biſhop of Emiſa[l]: in the fourth century, at the beginning of it, there were preſent, at the council of Nice, the biſhops of Ptolemais, Damaſcus, Tripolis, Pa- neas, and Emiſa; as they were alſo at a ſynod held at Jeruſalem in the ſame century, on account of the Arians, and at another at Antioch on the ſame account: in the fifth century there were churches in Phœnicia reformed by Chryſoſtom, by whoſe means alſo the temples of the idols were deſtroyed, and many were converted in theſe countries; and in this age lived ſeveral perſons of note here, as Antiochus biſhop of Ptolemais, Euſtathius biſhop of Berytus, Paulus biſhop of Emiſa, Pompeianus and Uranius of the ſame place, and Damianus biſhop of Sidon, and other Phœnician biſhops, who aſſiſted at the council of Chalcedon; as Olympius biſhop of Atrapolis, Theodorus biſhop of Tripolis, Joſeph biſhop of Heliopolis, Valerius biſhop of Laodicea, Thomas biſhop of Euroma, and Theonas biſhop of Enria or Enaria, all in Phœnicia: in the ſixth century, mention is made of the biſhops of Ptolemais, Tyre, Sidon, and Berytus, in the acts of the ſynod at Rome and Conſtantinople; and though Phœnicia was ſeized upon, and waſted by the Arabians and Perſians, in the ſeventh century; yet we read, in the eighth century, of Adeodatus, a biſhop of Berytus, who baptized many converted Jews[m]. As for Samaria, our Lord himſelf preached and converted many perſons there; and after his reſurrection he gave his Apoſtles a commiſſion and directions to go there; and here Philip preached with great ſucceſs. Nicolaus, the deacon, is ſaid to be the firſt biſhop of Samaria; and tho' in after-ages heatheniſm very much prevailed in thoſe parts; yet there were Chriſtians and churches, more or leſs, for ſeveral centuries; even in the ſixth century there was a biſhop of Neapolis in Samaria, killed with the ſword, and ſome preſbyters who were taken and fried in a pan, with the remains of ſome martyrs, by the Samaritan Jews[n].

Ver. 4. And when they were come to Jeruſalem, &c.] Paul and Barnabas, and the reſt that came from Antioch with them: they were received of the church; that is, that was at Jeruſalem, in a very kind and reſpectful manner; they were received into their houſes, and accommodated with every thing convenient for them: and of the apoſtles; particularly James, and Cephas, and John, who gave to Paul and Barnabas the right hand of fellowſhip, in token of their approbation of them, affection for them, and agreement with them: and elders; the other miniſters of the Goſpel who preached in that place: and they declared all things that God had done with them; juſt as they did to the church at Antioch, when they returned from their travels, ch. xiv. 27. ſee the note there; the Arabic verſion here adds, as there, and that God had opened to the Gentiles the door of faith.

Ver. 5. But there roſe up certain of the ſect of the Phariſees, &c.] Which was the ſtricteſt ſect of religion among the Jews: which believed; that Jeſus was the Meſſiah, and profeſſed their faith in him, and were members of the church, tho' they ſtill retained many of their phariſaical tenets, and are therefore ſaid to be of that ſect: theſe roſe up in oppoſition to Paul and Barnabas, as they were relating their ſucceſs among the Gentiles, and giving an account of the difference that had happened at Antioch, and their own ſenſe of that matter: ſaying, that it was needful to circumciſe them; the Gentiles that believed: and to command them to keep the law of Moſes; both moral and ceremonial, the obſervance of which they reckoned was abſolutely neceſſary to ſalvation. Some think theſe are not the words of Luke, relating what happened at Jeruſalem, when Paul and Barnabas gave in their account of things to the apoſtles and elders; but that they are a continuation of their account, how that in the controverſy raiſed at Antioch, certain Phariſees that came thither from Judea, roſe up and aſſerted the neceſſity of the Gentiles being circumciſed, and of their keeping the law of Moſes in order to their being ſaved; which is favoured by the Syriac verſion, eſpecially by the Latin interpreter of it, who ſupplies the words thus, but ſay they (i. e. Paul and Barnabas) there aroſe men, &c.

Ver. 6. And the apoſtles and elders came together, &c.] And alſo the brethren, or private members of the church, even the whole church, as appears from ver. 22, 23. Whether all the apoſtles were here preſent, is not certain; Peter, James, and John were; but who elſe, cannot be ſaid: theſe met together for to conſider of this matter; to hear what was to be ſaid on both ſides of the queſtion, and then to judge what advice was proper to be given to the Gentiles.

Ver. 7. And when there had been much diſputing, &c.] Pro and con upon this ſubject; many had ſpoken, and much had been ſaid, and a great deal of time had been taken up about the thing in controverſy: Peter roſe up; not only out of reſpect to this venerable aſſembly, but to ſignify that he had ſomething to ſay; and he ſtood up that he might be the better heard. Beza's ancient copy reads, roſe up in Spirit: and ſaid unto them, men and brethren; an uſual form of addreſs with the Jews; ſee ch. vii. 2. ye know how that a good while ago; or from ancient days; or from the beginning, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; from the beginning of the preaching of the Goſpel, after the aſcenſion of Chriſt; quickly after the effuſion of the Spirit on the day of pentecoſt: it is thought, by ſome, to be ten or eleven, and, by others, to be twenty years ago, or thereabout: God made choice among us; the apoſtles; the Alexandrian copy reads, among you; the ſenſe is the ſame, for Peter muſt be ſuppoſed as directing his diſcourſe chiefly to the apoſtles: that the Gentiles by my mouth ſhould hear the word of the Goſpel, and believe; referring to the caſe of Cornelius, and his family: and his ſenſe is, that ſome years ago it pleaſed God, in his providence, to ſingle him out from the reſt of the apoſtles, and in a very extraordinary manner to call him to go to Ceſarea, and preach the Goſpel to Cornelius, and thoſe that were in his houſe, that hearing they might believe in Chriſt.

Ver. 8. And God which knoweth the hearts, &c.] Of all men; he being omniſcient, the ſearcher of the hearts, and the trier of the reins of the children of men, knew with what ſincerity Cornelius ſent for Peter; and with what vehement deſire, and longing expectation he and his family and friends waited for his coming; and with what earneſtneſs, diligence, and affection they attended to what he ſaid: bore them witneſs, giving them the Holy Ghoſt, even as he did unto us; God bore a teſtimony, and ſhowed his well-pleaſedneſs in the whole of this affair, by beſtowing upon them not only the regenerating and ſanctifying grace of the Spirit; but his extraordinary gifts, ſuch as ſpeaking with divers tongues, even in like manner as theſe were beſtowed on the apoſtles themſelves, on the day of pentecoſt, tho' they were uncircumciſed perſons; for the drift of Peter's oration is to ſhow, that circumciſion was not neceſſary to ſalvation.

Ver. 9. And put no difference between us and them, &c.] Neither in the extraordinary gifts, nor ſpecial grace of the Spirit; giving them the ſame graces of faith, hope, and love, admitting to the ſame privileges and immunities of the houſe of God, and giving them a right and title to the ſame inheritance of the ſaints in light, tho' the one were circumciſed, and the other were not. God puts no difference as to matters of religion under the Goſpel-diſpenſation between Jews and Gentiles, neither on account of Abraham's ſeed, or of circumciſion, or of the ceremonial law, or of national adoption; nor would he have any made with reſpect to converſation, civil or religious; all which Peter knew full well: nor has he made any difference in his eternal choice of perſons to eternal ſalvation, on any of the above accounts, having ordained Gentiles to eternal life as Jews, who in conſequence of it believe in Chriſt; nor in redemption, Chriſt having redeemed by his blood men out of every kindred, tongue, people, and nation; nor in effectual vocation, for they that were called in the firſt times of the Goſpel, were not of the Jews only, but of the Gentiles alſo, to whom the Goſpel was alike ſent, and made effectual to ſaving purpoſes: theſe ſhared in the ſame bleſſings of pardon, juſtification, and adoption; their ſins were forgiven thro' the ſame blood, their perſons were juſtified by the ſame righteouſneſs, and they were taken into the ſame family, and were no more ſtrangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens of the ſaints, and of the houſhold of God; having the ſame acceſs to God, being built on the ſame foundation, enjoying the ſame privileges, and having the ſame hope of eternal glory. Purifying their hearts by faith; which was done by implanting faith in them, and leading that faith to the blood of Chriſt, which cleanſes from all ſin, original and actual, with which men are defiled; for faith has not this efficacy in itſelf, but as it has to do with the blood of Jeſus: and this ſpiritual purification being what anſwered to circumciſion, made that unneceſſary; for this is the circumciſion of the heart, of which the other was only typical. The hearts of men are filthy, and need purifying; they are originally polluted with ſin; this is the caſe of all men; and this defilement reaches to all the members of the body, and the faculties of the ſoul; and eſpecially the heart is the ſeat of this impurity, which God only can cleanſe: he promiſes to do it, and does do it; and he only can do it, men cannot; for tho' they are exhorted to it, in order to make them ſenſible of their pollution, and their need of cleanſing, that they may apply where it is to be had, yet it is not in their power to effect it; to make a clean heart is a creation-work, which is peculiar to God: the heart cannot be purified, neither by ceremonial ablutions, nor by works of moral righteouſneſs, nor by humiliations and tears, nor by ſubmiſſion to Goſpel-ordinances, as water-baptiſm, but only by the grace of God, and the blood of Chriſt; which the Spirit of God ſprinkles upon the heart, and which faith looks to and deals with, and ſo it is freed from an evil conſcience; and this bleſſing the believing Gentiles enjoyed in common with the believing Jews.

Ver. 10. Now therefore why tempt ye God, &c.] By heſitating about this matter, by diſputing upon this point, and by ſeeking for further proof and evidence of the will of God in this affair; when it is ſo plain a caſe, that it has been his will that the Goſpel ſhould be preached to Gentiles, without obliging them to circumciſion; that he has given his Spirit both in his extraordinary gifts, and ſpecial grace, to uncircumciſed perſons; particularly he has beſtowed faith in Chriſt upon them, whereby they have been led to the blood of Chriſt, typified in circumciſion, and are thereby purged from all their filth and pollution, and ſo are the true circumciſion: wherefore it is no other than tempting God, a manifeſt oppoſition to him, and what muſt give him offence, to debate about a point ſo clear; and eſpecially to attempt to put a yoke upon the neck of the diſciples, which neither our fathers, nor we were able to bear. It is common with the Jews to call the law a yoke; frequent mention is made of ניר פקידיא, and עול מצות, the yoke of the commandments [o], and עול התורה, the yoke of the law [p]: and by it here is meant, not circumciſion only and barely, for that the Jewiſh fathers had been able to bear, and had bore it; nor the whole ceremonial law only, which conſiſted of a multitude of commands and ordinances very heavy and hard; but even the whole moral law, which circumciſion obliged thoſe who ſubmitted to it to keep it perfectly; ſee Gal. v. 3. which neither the apoſtles, nor their fathers, were ever able to do, nor any mere man whatever; and therefore this yoke was intolerable and inſupportable, and not to be put upon the necks of the Gentile believers; who here are called diſciples, being taught the doctrine of the Goſpel, and the way of ſalvation; which was not by circumciſion, nor by any works of the law, but by the grace of Chriſt, as in the following verſe.

Ver. 11. But we believe, &c.] Who are circumciſed; the Arabic verſion adds, and are ſure; for what follows is a ſure and certain article of faith: that through the grace of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; not through circumciſion, or by any works of the law, moral or ceremonial; but thro' the grace of Chriſt undertaking for them, aſſuming their nature, and dying in their room and ſtead; thro' his redeeming, juſtifying, and pardoning grace: ſalvation is by Chriſt; Jehovah the Father appointed him to be his ſalvation; he ſent him, and he came to ſave ſinners; and he has obtained ſalvation for them; and it is in him, and in no other: and this ſalvation is by the grace of Chriſt; it was grace moved him to engage in this work before the world began; it was good-will to men that cauſed him to come down from heaven, and appear on earth in the form of a ſervant; it was pure love that influenced him to lay down his life for them; thro' the grace in his heart he did all this for them; and it is the fulneſs of grace in his hands, out of which they receive abundance, whereby they are entitled to, and are made meet for eternal glory: we ſhall be ſaved, even as they; either as the diſciples, the Gentile converts, who without circumciſion, and the works of the law, were ſaved by the pure grace and love of Chriſt, in dying for them, and on which they alone depended for ſalvation; or elſe as the Jewiſh fathers were, for they were juſtified, pardoned, accepted, and ſaved in the ſame way, as the ſaints under the New Teſtament are: they could not keep the law perfectly, nor was there then, nor now, ſalvation by it, only by the grace of Chriſt; and in that way, and that only, Old and New Teſtament believers, Jews and Gentiles, whether circumciſed or uncircumciſed, are ſaved. The Gentiles were not ſaved by the light of nature, nor the Jews by the law of Moſes; the one were not loſt for want of circumciſion, nor the other ſaved by it; the only way of ſalvation to both, and under all diſpenſations, is the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; thro' whoſe ſacrifice ſin is atoned for, through whoſe blood it is pardoned, through whoſe righteouſneſs men are juſtified before God, and are accepted with him; and thro' whom ſaints have communion with God; and by whom, and whoſe grace, and not by their own works, they ſhall be ſaved with an everlaſting ſalvation, from ſin, law, death, hell, and damnation: and the ſalvation of one, and of another, even of all that are ſaved, Jews or Gentiles, is by grace; no one is deſerving of it; they have all ſinned, and come ſhort of the glory of God; have done that which is abominable, and they themſelves are abominable in the ſight of God; they have deſtroyed, and cannot help themſelves; nor have they any one good thing but what they have received from the Lord, and therefore ought to aſcribe all to his grace; it is by that they are what they are, have what they have, and do what they do. Salvation, in all its parts and branches, is owing to grace; and ſo it is with reſpect to all perſons that are ſaved; ſome are not ſaved by their works, and others by the grace of Chriſt, but they are all ſaved by grace; and none have any room to boaſt of themſelves againſt others.

[p] Echa Rabbati, fol. 56. 3. Pirke Abot, c. 3. §. 5. Tzeror Hammor, fol. 39. 3.

Ver. 12. Then all the multitude kept ſilence, &c.] Upon this oration of Peter's, there was a profound ſilence in the whole aſſembly, among all the brethren of the church, who were come together on this occaſion; they were all ſatisfied with, and by their ſilence acquieſced in, what Peter ſaid; and waited to hear what might be further ſaid about this matter, by other perſons in the aſſembly; and even thoſe who were on the other ſide of the queſtion, were confounded and nonpluſſed, and knew not what to ſay, and the more ſo, when they perceived that the reſt of the apoſtles and elders were of the ſame mind; for Beza's moſt ancient copy introduces this clauſe thus; then the elders agreeing to the things that were ſaid by Peter, the whole multitude was ſilent: and this gave Paul and Barnabas an opportunity of being heard; who, perhaps could not ſo well be heard before, for the clamour of the people againſt them, who might not have ſo good an opinion of them, and of their practices: and gave audience to Barnabas and Paul; Barnabas is mentioned firſt, he being moſt known to the Jews, and of whom they might have the better opinion; and who probably gave the account of their proceedings and ſucceſs among the Gentiles: declaring what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them; what wonders of grace were wrought in the converſion of multitudes of them, wherever they came; and what miracles in nature were wrought for the confirmation of the Goſpel, ſuch as the ſtriking blind Elymas the ſorcerer, at Paphos in Cyprus, and curing the cripple at Lyſtra; and which they aſcribe not to themſelves but to God, whoſe inſtruments they only were.

Ver. 13. And after they had held their peace, &c.] Meaning not the multitude, but Paul and Barnabas; when they had finiſhed their account, and had done ſpeaking: James anſwered; or roſe up, as the Syriac verſion reads, he ſtood up and began to ſpeak. This was James the ſon of Alpheus, one of the twelve apoſtles, ſometimes called the brother of the Lord; for the other James, the ſon of Zebedee and brother of John, was dead, being killed by Herod, ch. xii. 2. but this was the brother of Jude, and the ſame that wrote the epiſtle that bears his name: whether he was now biſhop or paſtor of the church at Jeruſalem, is not certain; nor whether he was preſident in this council; the ſpeeches made in it don't appear to be directed to him: he began his oration thus, ſaying, men and brethren, hearken to me; the titles he uſes, and the manner of deſiring audience, were what were common with the Jews; ſee chap. ii. 14, 22, 29. and vii. 2.

Ver. 14. Simeon hath declared how God at the firſt did viſit the Gentiles, &c.] James begins with taking notice of Peter's ſpeech, and agrees to it, and confirms it; for by Simeon is not meant, as ſome have thought, the Simeon that took Chriſt in his arms, Luke ii. 25. who had been dead long ago; but Simon Peter, who had ſpoken before. Simon and Simeon are one and the ſame name; the former is only a contraction of the latter in the Syriac language; Simeon was his pure Hebrew name, and James ſpeaking to an aſſembly of Hebrews, uſes it; and obſerves, that he had given a very clear and diſtinct narrative, how God at the firſt preaching of the Goſpel, quickly after the day of Pentecoſt, was pleaſed to look upon the Gentiles, and ſhew favour to them, and viſit them in a way of grace and mercy, by ſending the Goſpel to them, and his Spirit to make it effectual: this was a gracious viſit; he came and looked upon them, quickened them, and ſpoke comfortably to them, and beſtowed ſpecial favours upon them; the ſet time for ſuch a viſit being come: the Arabic verſion renders it, how God firſt promiſed; referring to the promiſes concerning the calling of the Gentiles, which James afterwards confirms by citing a paſſage out of the prophets to the ſame purpoſe; the Syriac verſion, how God began to chuſe out of the Gentiles; that is, by calling them by his grace; and the Ethiopic verſion, how God firſt had mercy on the Gentiles; who before had not obtained mercy: to take out of them a people for his name; for himſelf, for his own glory, to call upon his name, and to be called by his name, to bear his name, and ſupport his Goſpel, cauſe and intereſt: the diſtinguiſhing grace of God may be ſeen herein; it was grace to viſit them, to look upon them, when for many hundreds of years he had over-looked them, he had taken no notice of them; and it was diſtinguiſhing grace to take ſome out of them, to be a ſpecial and peculiar people to himſelf; to ſeparate them from the reſt by his powerful and efficacious grace, and form them into a church ſtate, that they might ſhew forth his praiſe and glorify him.

Ver. 15. And to this agree the words of the prophets, &c.] In ſeveral of the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, which plainly ſpeak of the calling of the Gentiles; tho' James thought it ſufficient to produce only one inſtead of many: as it is written; in Amos ix. 11, 12. and this is agreeable to the Jewiſh way of citing ſcriptures, as Surenhuſius obſerves; ſo it is ſaid [q], in twenty-four places the prieſts are called Levites, and this is one of them, Ezek. xliv. 15. where only one place is mentioned, inſtead of the twenty-four.

Ver. 16. After this I will return, &c.] That is, after the Lord had deſtroyed the ſinful kingdom from off the face of the earth, and had ſifted the houſe of Iſrael among all nations, and the ſinners of his people were ſlain with the ſword; after all this he promiſes to return and ſhew favour to them: this is the ſenſe of the prophet which James gives; for theſe words are not at length in Amos; there it is only ſaid, in that day; upon which Jarchi's note is, " after all theſe things ſhall have come upon " them, that day ſhall come which is appointed [q] T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 86. 2. & Beracot, fol. 4. 1, 2.

“ for redemption;” which well agrees with James here, and the manner in which he introduces this paſſage: and will build again the tabernacle of David, that is fallen down; that is, as the Jewiſh [r] writers themſelves interpret it, the kingdom of the houſe of David, tho' in a temporal ſenſe, which was now in a moſt ruinous condition; the ſceptre was departed from Judah; all power and authority were falling off apace from the Jews, into the hands of the Romans; David's family were quite ſunk, and almoſt gone, and had no ſhare at all in the civil government; Jeſus who was deſcended from him, and was of the blood royal, and right heir to his throne, was born of a poor virgin; and his ſuppoſed father was a carpenter; and he himſelf the king of the Jews, was crucified by them; yet notwithſtanding all this, David's tabernacle was to be rebuilt, and his kingdom to be reſtored by the Meſſiah, but in a ſpiritual way; for the tabernacle of David deſigns the ſpiritual kingdom or church of Chriſt, who is here called David, as in Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24. and xxxvii. 24, 25. Hoſ. iii. 5. and of whom David was an eminent type: and the church may be called a tabernacle, being in the preſent ſtate of things, as to its place, uncertain and moveable, tho' ere long it will be a tabernacle that will not be taken down, Iſ. xxxiii. 20. and Chriſt's tabernacle, being of his building, and where he dwells and keeps his court, as king of ſaints; ſee Iſ. xvi. 5. and which was in a fallen ruinous condition when he came on earth, thro' the corrupt principles of the Phariſees and Sadducees, the bigotry and ſuperſtition of the one, and the deiſm of the other; and thro' the great decay of ſpiritual worſhip and powerful godlineſs, and the bad lives of profeſſors, and the ſmall number of truly godly perſons: the Jews [s] themſelves refer this prophecy to the times of the Meſſiah, yea, one of the names by which they call the Meſſiah is taken from hence [t]: it is aſked, “ who is Bar Naphli? it is replied, the Meſſiah; the Meſſiah is called Bar Naphli (the ſon fallen, or of the fallen) is it not written, in that day I will raiſe up the tabernacle of David that is fallen down?” one of their own commentators [u] on this text, has this note, “ if we interpret this of the Meſſiah, the matter is clear:” but then this muſt be underſtood in a ſpiritual ſenſe, for Chriſt's kingdom is not a worldly one; the raiſing up and rebuilding of this tabernacle, muſt deſign the reviving of true religion, the doctrine and practice of it, the enlargement of the church of God, by the converſion both of Jews and Gentiles: and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will ſet it up; which has been done by breaking down the middle wall of partition between Jews and Gentiles, and letting in the latter into the Goſpel-church with the former, whereby it grows up to be an holy temple in the Lord; ſee Iſ. liv. 2, 3. and lxi. 4, 5. and ii. 2. and to this ſenſe the Jews themſelves [w] interpret it; “ the holy bleſſed God will raiſe up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, as it is ſaid, Amos ix. 11. in that day I will raiſe up the tabernacle of David; for all the world ſhall be אגודה אחת, one bundle; as it is ſaid, Zeph. iii. 9.”

Ver. 17. That the reſidue of men might ſeek after the Lord, &c.] The rebuilder and proprietor of this tabernacle, and who dwells in it; that is, attend his worſhip, pray unto him, and ſeek unto him for life and ſalvation: in Amos theſe are called, the remnant of Edom; and deſign the remnant according to the election of grace among the Gentiles; the Jews generally call all other nations, and eſpecially the Roman empire, Edom: and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called; for God is the God of the whole earth, of the Gentiles as well as of the Jews; and his Goſpel was now ſpread among them, and many of them were converted and called chriſtians, and the children and people of God: the Jews [x] underſtand this of the people of Iſrael, who are called by the name of the Lord, or on whom his name is called; and ſome think the words are to be tranſpoſed [y] thus, “ that Iſrael on whom my name is called might poſſeſs the remnant of Edom, and all the people;” and is true of their poſſeſſing or enjoying them in a Goſpel-church-ſtate: ſaith the Lord, who doth all theſe things; raiſes up the tabernacle of David, revives the intereſt of religion, re-ſettles the church, and increaſes it, calls and converts the Gentiles, cauſes them to ſeek after the Lord, and unites them in one church-ſtate with the Jews; the word all is left out in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions, and is not in Amos.

Ver. 18. Known unto God are all his works, &c.] Theſe are the words of James, and not of Amos; all the things which God does in the church and in the world, they were all foreknown and pre-determined by him: from the beginning of the world; or from eternity; even all his works of creation, providence and grace: the Alexandrian copy, and Beza's moſt ancient copy, and the Vulgate Latin verſion, read in the ſingular number, his work; the work of the converſion of the Gentiles; this was fixed and reſolved on by God in eternity; he knew it would be, becauſe he had determined it ſhould be; and accordingly he foretold it, and ſpoke of it in various periods of time before it came to paſs; and therefore it ſhould not be looked upon as ſome new and ſtrange thing, that was never known, ſpoken or heard of: and this holds true of every other work of God, and agrees with what the Jews ſometimes ſay [z], that “ every work which is renewed in the world, the holy bleſſed God has commanded (or ordered) it from the day the world was created.”

Ver. 19. Wherefore my ſentence is, &c.] Opinion or judgment in this caſe, or what he reckoned moſt adviſeable to be done; for he did not impoſe his ſenſe upon the whole body, but propoſed it to them: that we trouble not them; by obliging them to be circumciſed, which would have been very afflicting and diſturbing to them; not only becauſe of the corporal pain produced by circumciſion, but becauſe of the bondage their minds would be brought into, and they become ſubject to the whole law, and all its burdenſom rites and ceremonies: which from among the Gentiles are turned to God; the one true and living God, Father, Son and Spirit, and from idols, and the worſhipping of them.

Ver. 20. But that we write unto them, &c.] Or ſend an epiſtle to them, to this effect, concerning the following things: that they abſtain from pollutions of idols; that is, from eating things offered to idols; ſee ver. 29. for not idolatry, or the worſhipping of idols itſelf, is here ſpoken of; for that was no indifferent thing; and beſides, theſe converted Gentiles were turned from that, and there was no danger of their returning to it; but eating things ſacrificed to idols was an indifferent thing; but yet inaſmuch as it had a tendency to lead to idolatry, and gave offence to the Jewiſh believers in the churches, and was a ſtumbling block to weak minds, who by the example of ſtronger chriſtians, were led to eat them as ſacrificed to an idol, and ſo their weak conſciences were defiled, therefore it was very proper to abſtain from them: and from fornication; not ſpiritual fornication or idolatry, but fornication taken in a literal ſenſe, for the carnal copulation of one ſingle perſon with another, and which is commonly called ſimple fornication; the reaſon why this is put among things indifferent is, not that it was ſo in itſelf, but becauſe it was not thought to be criminal by the Gentiles, and was commonly uſed by them, and which muſt be offenſive to the believing Jews, who were better acquainted with the will of God; this is omitted in the Ethiopic verſion: and from things ſtrangled; that is, from eating them, and deſign ſuch as die of themſelves, or are torn with beaſts, or are not killed in a proper way, by letting out their blood; but their blood is ſtagnated or congealed in the veins: the Jews might not kill with a reaper's ſickle, nor with a ſaw, nor with the teeth, or nails; becauſe theſe חונקין, ſtrangled [a]: and what was not ſlain as it ſhould be, was reckoned all one as what dies of itſelf; and whoever eat of either of theſe was to be beaten [b]: the law reſpecting theſe things was of the ceremonial kind, and peculiar to the Jews, and was not binding upon the Gentiles; for that which died of itſelf might be given to a ſtranger, and he might eat it, or it might be ſold to an alien, Deut. xiv. 21. this has been wanting in many copies, and it was not read by ſeveral of the ancient fathers: and from blood; which is not to be underſtood of the blood of men and ſhedding of that, which is of a moral nature; but of the blood of beaſts, and of eating of that. There were ſeveral laws about eating of blood, and which are different, and ought to be carefully diſtinguiſhed. The firſt is in Gen. ix. 4. but fleſh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, ſhall you not eat; which forbids the eating of fleſh with the blood; but not the eating of fleſh ſeparately, nor the eating of blood ſeparately, provided they were properly prepared and dreſſed, but the eating of them together without any preparation. As this was the firſt hint to man that we know of, that he might eat fleſh, it was proper that the manner in which he ſhould eat it, ſhould be ſuggeſted to him; that he ſhould not take the creature alive and eat it, or tear off any of its members and eat it whilſt alive, or eat raw fleſh; but ſhould prepare it by roaſting or boiling, or ſome way, in which it mght become proper food: and it is the conſtant ſenſe of the Jewiſh ſynagogue [c], that this law is to be underſtood of the member of a living creature, torn from it, and eaten whilſt alive; ſix commands the Jews ſay, were given to the firſt man Adam, the firſt five forbid idolatry, blaſphemy, ſhedding of blood, uncleanneſs, and theft, or robbery, and the ſixth required judgment againſt offenders; to theſe were added, for the ſons of Noah, a ſeventh, which forbid the eating of the member of a living creature, as it is ſaid, Gen. ix. 4. [d] So that this law has nothing to do with eating of blood, ſimply conſidered, and no more forbids eating of it ſeparately, than it does eating of fleſh ſeparately; in like manner is the law in Deut. xii. 23. to be underſtood, and is ſo interpreted by the Jewiſh writers [e]: another law is in Lev. xix. 26. ye ſhall not eat any thing with the blood; which according to our verſion, ſeems to be the ſame law with the former, but is not; for it is not ſaid here, as before ב in or with, but על upon, over, or by the blood. This is differently underſtood: ſome think the ſenſe is, that no one ſhould eat of the ſacrifices, before the ſprinkling of the blood upon the altar [f]; or until it ſtands or is congealed in the baſons [g]: others, that it is a caution to judges, that they don't eat until they have finiſhed judgment; for whoever judges or paſſes ſentence after he has eat and drank, is as if he was guilty of blood [h]: another obſerves [i], that next to this clauſe, 'tis ſaid, neither ſhall ye uſe enchantment; meaning that they ſhould not uſe enchantment by eating, in the way that murderers do, who eat bread over the ſlain, that the avengers of the ſlain may not take vengeance on them: this author ſmells ſomething ſuperſtitious or diabolical in this matter; and indeed this is the caſe, the truth of the matter is, it refers to a practice among the heathens, who fancied that blood was the food of the dæmons, to whom they ſacrificed; and therefore when they ſacrificed to them, they took the blood of the beaſt and put it into a veſſel, and ſat down by it, and round about it, and eat the fleſh; imagining that whilſt they eat the fleſh, the dæmons eat the blood, and by this means friendſhip and familiarity were contracted between them; ſo that they hoped to receive ſome advantage from them, and be informed of things to come [k]. Hence, this law is placed with others againſt enchantments and obſerving times, to which may be added, Ezek. xxxiii. 25. ye eat with the blood; or over it, or by it; and lift up your eyes to your idols; which is to be underſtood in the ſame light, and with theſe compare 1 Sam. xiv. 32. and Lev. xvii. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. But beſides theſe, there was a third law, which is frequently repeated, Lev. iii. 17. and vii. 26, 27. and xvii. 10, 11, 12. which abſolutely forbids the eating of blood, as well as fat; the Jews except the blood of fiſhes, and locuſts, and of creeping things, and the blood of men, and the blood that is in eggs, and that which is ſqueezed out of fleſh, or drops from it, which a man may eat and not be guilty of the breach of this law [l]: the reaſon of this law was, becauſe the blood, which is the life, was given in ſacrifice for the life of men, to be an atonement for them; wherefore, to keep up a juſt reverence of the ſacrifice, and to direct to the blood of the great ſacrifice of the Meſſiah, blood was forbidden to be eaten, till that ſacrifice was offered up; and then that blood itſelf was to be ſpiritually eaten by faith: and now if eating of blood in general was morally evil in itſelf, it would be a monſtrous ſhocking thing in the chriſtian religion, that the blood of Chriſt is to be drank; tho' it be to be underſtood in a ſpiritual ſenſe: the law againſt eating blood was very ſtrictly enjoined the Jews, and ſeverely puniſhed; whoever eat of blood, but the quantity of an olive, if he eat it wilfully, was guilty of cutting off; if ignorantly, he was to bring a ſin-offering [m]: James knew that the breach of this law would give great offence to the Jews, and therefore, for the peace of the church, he moves that the Gentiles might be wrote to, to abſtain from blood; and which was agreed to and done: and this was attended to with much ſtrictneſs by the primitive chriſtians, who ſeemed to have obſerved this advice in the form of a law, and thought it criminal to eat blood; but in proceſs of time it was neglected; and in Auſtin's time abſtinence from blood was derided, as a ridiculous notion; and it is at leaſt now high time that this, and every thing elſe of a ceremonial kind, was dropped by chriſtians; tho' where the peace of the brethren is in danger, this, and every thing of an indifferent nature ſhould be abſtained from: Beza's ancient copy adds, and whatſoever they would not have done to themſelves, do not unto others; and ſo two of Stephen's: the Ethiopic verſion is, whatſoever they hate ſhould be done to themſelves, let them not do to their brethren.

Ver. 21. For Moſes of old time hath in every city them that preach him, &c.] That is, for many years paſt, even from the times of Ezra, the law of Moſes has been publickly expounded by them, whom the Jews call Deraſhim, preachers, or expounders, in every city where there was a ſynagogue; and every city belonging to the Jews, were obliged to build a ſynagogue, yea, they were obliged to do it where there were but ten Iſraelites[n]: this is given by James as a reaſon, why the Gentiles ſhould be wrote unto concerning the above things; becauſe that they hearing the law read and expounded every week, would be ready to conclude that they were obliged to ſubmit unto it, as to circumciſion, and other things; unleſs they were told that they were free from it; only in order to maintain peace with their brethren the Jews, it would be neceſſary for them to abſtain from the above things: and it may alſo carry in it a reaſon, why the Jews need not be wrote unto, and why they had no reaſon to complain for thus writing to the Gentiles; ſince they had the law read and explained to them every week, and there would be no attempt to make any alteration in that form of ſervice: being read in the ſynagogues every ſabbath-day; ſee the note on chap. xiii. 15.

Ver. 22. Then pleaſed it the apoſtles and elders, with the whole church, &c.] The opinion, judgment, and advice of James, being approved of by the whole body of the apoſtles, miniſters, and brethren of the church aſſembled together on this occaſion; they unanimouſly agreed, to ſend choſen men of their own company to Antioch, with Paul and Barnabas; that is, they thought fit to chuſe ſome perſons from among themſelves, out of that aſſembly, or who were members of the church at Jeruſalem; and ſend them to Antioch, where the difference began, along with Paul and Barnabas, to give an account of the ſenſe of the apoſtles, elders, and brethren, about the affair in controverſy, and what was their advice upon the whole: and the rather they took this ſtep, to prevent all ſuſpicion of Paul and Barnabas giving a partial account, or putting a wrong turn upon the ſentiments of this aſſembly, they being parties concerned on one ſide; wherefore they thought fit to ſend ſome indifferent perſons along with them, to confirm their narrative, and to compoſe differences among them, and to bring back an account of the ſtate of the church: namely, Judas ſirnamed Barſabas; ſee the note on chap. i. 23. and Silas, the ſame with Sylvanus: chief men among the brethren; leading men among them, who went before them, were guides to them, in doctrine and diſcipline; for theſe were prophets or preachers, as appears from ver. 32. and theſe they pitched upon, partly out of reſpect to Paul and Barnabas, as being ſuitable companions for them, and partly out of reſpect to the church at Antioch, and chiefly becauſe of their ability, and capacity, for ſuch ſervice they were ſent upon.

Ver. 23. And wrote letters by them after this manner, &c.] Not that they made uſe of them as their amanuenſes, to write their letters for them; but being written, they put them into their hands, and ſent them by them, and they were written in the following form: the apoſtles, and elders, and brethren; which belonged to, or were members of the church at Jeruſalem; they are ſeverally ſet in their proper place and order; the apoſtles, Peter, and James, and John, and it may be ſome others firſt; for theſe God had ſet in the firſt place in the church; then the elders, or preachers of the Goſpel, ſuch as were Judas and Silas; and then the brethren, or private members of the church; who are called ſo, becauſe they are of one family, and have one father, and are partakers of the ſame grace and priviledges: theſe, ſend greeting; or their chriſtian ſalutation, wiſhing all peace and proſperity, both for ſoul and body, temporal, ſpiritual and eternal: unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch, and Syria and Cilicia; the brethren or members of the ſeveral churches in theſe parts, who were Gentiles, are particularly ſent to; and not the brethren who were Jews, becauſe they were eſpecially concerned, and to them is the advice directed: Antioch is firſt mentioned, that being the place where the controverſy began; but there being other churches in Syria, beſides Antioch, in which were many Gentiles, and alſo in Cilicia, and particularly at Tarſus, Paul's native place, and where he had preached, ch. ix. 30. and Gal. i. 21. they are therefore mentioned, and being countries near to one another, it is very likely that the controverſy had ſpread itſelf among them.

Ver. 24. Foraſmuch as we have heard, &c.] By the report of Paul and Barnabas, who were ſent by the church at Antioch to Jeruſalem, to acquaint them with the ſtate of their caſe: that certain which went out from us; ſee ver. 1. have troubled you with words, or doctrines: ſubverting your ſouls; removing them from the doctrine of grace to another Goſpel, and which deſerved not the name of a Goſpel; and was very deſtructive to their ſouls, at leaſt to the peace and comfort of them: this ſhows what an opinion the apoſtles, and elders, and members of the church at Jeruſalem had of theſe judaizing preachers, and their tenets; they looked upon them as troublers of God's Iſrael, and upon their doctrines as ſubverſive of ſpiritual joy and comfort. Saying, ye muſt be circumciſed and keep the law; the ceremonial law; the Alexandrian copy, and the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions leave out this clauſe; ſee the notes on ver. 1, 5. to whom we gave no ſuch commandment: it looks as if theſe judaizing preachers not only pretended to be ſent out by the apoſtles, to preach; but that they had particularly this in their inſtructions from them, that they ſhould inſiſt upon it, that the Gentiles that were received into the churches, ſhould be circumciſed, and be obliged to keep the other parts of the ceremonial law, when they had no ſuch orders from them.

Ver. 25. It ſeemed good unto us, being aſſembled with one accord, &c.] Or together; in one place, as the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions render it; ſee ch. ii. 1. tho' certain it is, that as they were in one place, ſo they were in one mind; and their unanimity was proper to be mentioned, in order to engage a regard to their advice: to ſend men choſen unto you; men choſen for this purpoſe; namely, Judas and Silas: with our beloved Barnabas and Paul; who are commended thus, partly to expreſs their affection to them; and partly to obſerve the wiſdom of the church at Antioch, in ſending two ſuch agreeable perſons; and chiefly to teſtify their approbation of the doctrine and conduct of theſe two men.

Ver. 26. Men that have hazarded their lives, &c.] As at Antioch in Piſidia, where a perſecution was raiſed againſt them, and they were expelled out of the coaſts of that place; and at Lyſtra, where Paul was ſtoned, and left for dead, ch. xiii. 59. and xiv. 19. and this they did, not for any ſiniſter and ſelfiſh ends, for any worldly gain, or vain glory, and popular applauſe, but for the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; for the ſake of his Goſpel, and the enlargement of his intereſt, and kingdom in the world; and therefore were worthy of eſteem, and ought to be regarded and attended to, and greatly to be preferred to falſe teachers; who only ſought themſelves, their worldly honour, and eaſe, and would ſacrifice nothing, nor hazard any thing, for the ſake of Chriſt.

Ver. 27. We have ſent therefore Judas and Silas, &c.] The choſen men before mentioned, who ſhall alſo tell you the ſame things by mouth; as are written in theſe letters; which would both confirm and explain things unto them.

Ver. 28. For it ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt, and to us, &c.] By various things they had reaſon doubtleſs to conclude, that they were under the influence and direction of the Holy Ghoſt in this affair; as by the Spirit of prayer that was among them; by that power and energy with which many of them ſpoke on this occaſion, and that ſo agreeable to the word of God; and by that unanimity with which they came into the advice given. With reſpect to the form here uſed, compare 1 Chron. xiii. 2. and the Targum on it, which renders the words thus; "if it be beautiful before you, and acceptable before the Lord, let us ſend, &c." It follows here, to lay upon you no greater burden than theſe neceſſary things; not that they were neceſſary to ſalvation, but neceſſary to ſecure the peace of the churches, and at leaſt were neceſſary, at that preſent time; and therefore ſince it appeared to be neceſſary to enjoin them for the preſent, they hoped they would not refuſe to bear them; and eſpecially, ſince, tho' they muſt own they were burdens, and a part of the yoke of bondage, yet they were not many, nor very heavy, and for the future they ſhould lay no other, nor more upon them; and what they did, was to prevent any other or greater burden to be laid; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, leſt any more, or greater burden ſhould be laid upon you.

Ver. 29. That ye abſtain from meats offered to idols, &c.] Which explains what is meant by pollutions of idols, ver. 20. and from blood, and from things ſtrangled, and from fornication; ſee the note on ver. 20. In Beza's moſt ancient copy, and in three other manuſcripts, and in the Complutenſian edition, it follows, and whatſoever ye would not have done to yourſelves, that do ye not to another; in like manner the Ethiopic verſion alſo reads. as in ver. 20. from which if ye keep yourſelves ye ſhall do well; it will be doing a good thing, and make for the peace of the churches; in Beza's moſt ancient copy it is added, born, or moved by the Holy Ghoſt; being influenced and aſſiſted by him in this, and every good work: fare ye well; the Syriac verſion adds, in our Lord.

Ver. 30. So when they were diſmiſſed, &c.] That is, Paul and Barnabas, with Judas and Silas, by the apoſtles, elders, and church at Jeruſalem: they came to Antioch; or came down to Antioch, as the Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions read, agreeable to ver. 1. and when they had gathered the multitude together; the whole church, which conſiſted of many members; the company, or congregation of the faithful, as the Arabic verſion renders it: and as Paul and Barnabas were ſent by the church at Antioch; and as the letter, which they, with Judas and Silas, brought from Jeruſalem, was directed and ſent to the brethren at Antioch, it was highly reaſonable, and neceſſary, that they ſhould be called together, and an account of the buſineſs they were ſent upon, be given them, and the letter be delivered to them, as it accordingly was: they delivered the epiſtle; ſent by the apoſtles, elders, and brethren at Jeruſalem to them; this they put into the hands of ſome one or other of the brethren of the church, in order to be read.

Ver. 31. Which when they had read, &c.] That is, when the brethren of the church at Antioch had read the letter delivered to them; for not Paul and Barnabas, or Judas and Silas, who were ſent with it, read it, but the brethren to whom it was ſent, as was proper. They rejoiced for the conſolation; or exhortation, as the word may be rendered, which was given them in the letter, to abſtain from the above things, without being burdened with any other; and they rejoiced that there was ſuch an agreement among the apoſtles, elders, and brethren at Jeruſalem; and that their ſentiments, and thoſe of Paul and Barnabas, and other faithful miniſters and ſaints at Antioch were alike, and were oppoſed to the judaizing preachers and profeſſors; and above all, they rejoiced that they were freed from the burthenſome yoke of the law, and that the controverſy which had been raiſed among them, was likely to be ended, and to iſſue ſo well.

Ver. 32. And Judas and Silas being alſo prophets themſelves, &c.] As well as Paul and Barnabas, and others, that were at Antioch; ſee chap. xiii. 1. and by prophets are meant, not only ſuch who had the gift of foretelling things to come; though ſuch there were, and theſe might have that gift; but ſuch who were able to explain the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, give the true ſenſe of the ſcriptures, and open them to the edification of others; wherefore having ſuch gifts, they made uſe of them; Beza's ancient copy adds, full of the Holy Ghoſt: and exhorted the brethren with many words; which does not ſo much deſign the prolixity of their diſcourſes, and the frequency of their miniſtrations, tho' they might preach both long and often; as the richneſs of the matter of them, as the Syriac verſion ſuggeſts, rendering it, with a rich word; with copiouſneſs, fulneſs, and abundance of Goſpel-truths, with which they comforted the brethren, giving them many uſeful inſtructions and exhortations: and confirmed them; in the doctrines of the Goſpel, and particularly in their Chriſtian liberty, and freedom from the law of Moſes, in which the falſe teachers had endeavoured to ſtagger them.

Ver. 33. And after they had tarried there a ſpace, &c.] How long is not certain; the Arabic verſion renders it a year; and it is probable enough, they might ſtay there ſo long, till things were thoroughly ſettled, which were thrown into great diſorder and confuſion, by the pleaders for circumciſion: they were let go in peace; that is, they were diſmiſſed, and went away with the leave and conſent of the church; who returned them thanks for the ſervice and good offices they had done them, and wiſhed them all peace, proſperity, and happineſs, both in ſoul and body, and great ſucceſs in their miniſtrations where-ever they went: and as they were diſmiſſed in peace, they left the church in perfect peace; an end being put to the controverſy about circumciſion, which was raiſed among them; and the members of the church being agreed in their ſentiments, and heartily united in their affections to one another: and thus Judas and Silas were honourably diſmiſſed from the brethren, at Antioch, to the Apoſtles, at Jeruſalem; the Alexandrian copy, and Beza's ancient copy, the Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions, read, to them that ſent them; and ſo include, with the Apoſtles, the elders, and brethren at Jeruſalem, who wrote the letter to the church at Antioch, and ſent it by them; and it was proper that they ſhould return to them, and give them an account of the ſucceſs of it, how it was received, and what good it had done.

Ver. 34. Notwithſtanding it pleaſed Silas to abide there ſtill.] Tho' he had leave to go, and was actually diſmiſſed with Judas; and doubtleſs intended to have gone with him, but for ſome reaſon or another he changed his mind, and thought fit to continue at Antioch ſome time longer: and the deſign of providence in it ſeems to have been this, that he might be a companion of the Apoſtle Paul in his travels among the Gentiles, as he afterwards was, and was very uſeful to him. This verſe is wanting in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Syriac and Arabic verſions; the Ethiopic verſion reads, and Paul propoſed, or determined to abide, as he did ſome little time longer, as appears from the following verſe: the Vulgate Latin verſion here adds, and Judas went alone to Jeruſalem; and ſo it is read in one of Beza's copies, and in one of Stephens's.

Ver. 35. Paul alſo and Barnabas continued in Antioch, &c.] As well as Silas: teaching and preaching the word of the Lord; the Goſpel of Chriſt; not the word of men, but the word of the Lord, of which he is both the author and ſubject: this they preached in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon, with power, purity, plainneſs, and faithfulneſs. And many others alſo; who either came along with them from Jeruſalem, when they brought the letter from thence, or were here before; who came hither upon the perſecution raiſed at the death of Stephen, ch. xi. 19, 20. or they were the prophets which afterwards came from Jeruſalem thither, ver. 27. ſuch as Simeon called Niger, Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, ch. xiii. 1.

Ver. 36. And ſome days after, &c.] That Judas was gone to Jeruſalem, and which they had ſpent in teaching and preaching the word of the Lord at Antioch: Paul ſaid to Barnabas, let us go again and viſit our brethren in every city, where we have preached the word of the Lord, and ſee how they do; by the brethren in every city, the Apoſtle means the believers in Syria, Pamphilia, Piſidia, and Lycaonia; where he and Barnabas had preached the Goſpel with ſucceſs; where churches were planted and elders were ordained; of which an account is given in the two preceding chapters: and it may be obſerved, what an affection the Apoſtle had for the young converts, and members of theſe churches; he calls them brethren, they being partakers of the ſame grace, and of the ſame faith and family with himſelf, tho' they were not in the ſame office, nor had the ſame gifts; as alſo what care he took of them, and of thoſe new-planted churches: and which ſhows, that ſuch are to be viſited and looked after, and their caſes inſpected into; and enquiries ſhould be made of them, how they do, how they go on; whether they continue in the faith, and grow in grace and in the knowledge of Chriſt; and whether they are lively in the exerciſe of the graces of faith, hope, love, humility, &c. and diligent and fervent in the diſcharge of duty; and this is a work becoming the miniſters of the Goſpel; and the example of the Apoſtle is worthy of imitation.

Ver. 37. And Barnabas determined, &c.] Or conſulted, and contrived in his own mind, and purpoſed within himſelf; the Alexandrian copy, and two of Beza's, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, he would, or was willing; he had a mind, a very great deſire, to take with them John, whoſe ſurname was Mark; of whom ſee ch. xii. 12. he being his ſiſter's ſon, Col. iv. 10. him they brought with them to Antioch, when they returned from Jeruſalem thither, where they had been ſent by the church at Antioch, with money for the relief of the poor ſaints; ſee ch. xi. 29, 30. and xii. 25. and who ſeems to have come with them from Jeruſalem again; for thither he went, when he parted from them at Pamphilia, ch. xiii. 13.

Ver. 38. But Paul thought not good to take him with them, &c.] He did not think him worthy, or a fit and proper perſon to go with them, as the word uſed ſeems to ſignify, and therefore he refuſed to take him: the Syriac verſion renders it, but Paul would not take him with them; and the Ethiopic verſion is very expreſs, tho' it renders it in ſofter language, Paul prayed, or entreated Barnabas that he would leave Mark; that is, behind them at Antioch: his reaſons were, as follow, who departed from them from Pamphilia, ch. xiii. 13. ſee the note there; either thro' the fatigue of the journey, or fear of danger, or wearineſs in his work, or affection to his mother; or be it what it will, it ſeems in the Apoſtle's opinion of the matter, he was very blameworthy, and on account of it very undeſerving, at leaſt at preſent, of being a companion of theirs in their travels: and went not with them to the work; the Arabic verſion adds, of preaching; that is, the Goſpel, in the ſeveral places whither they went, and to which the Holy Ghoſt had called them, and for which the church at Antioch had ſeparated, and ſent them forth; but in the midſt of this John deſerted them; and which the Apoſtle reſented, he having, as yet, not given any evidence of his ſenſe of his evil, and of his repentance for it, to his ſatisfaction; tho' it ſeems as if he afterwards did, ſince in Col. iv. 10, 11. he ſpeaks of him with great reſpect, as one of his fellow-workers, and who had been a comfort to him.

Ver. 39. And the contention was ſo ſharp between them, &c.] About this matter; Barnabas inſiſting on it, that John Mark ſhould go with them, he being a relation of his; and in whoſe favour it might be urged, that his mother Mary was an excellent good woman, who had received the ſaints into her houſe, in a time of perſecution; and that it ſhould be conſidered, that this her ſon was but a young man, and could not be thought to have that courage, reſolution, conſtancy, and ſolidity as older profeſſors and miniſters; and that his crime was not very heinous, and ſhould be over-looked. Paul, on the other hand, oppoſing his going with them, as a very unworthy perſon, becauſe he had behaved ſo cowardly, and had ſhown ſuch a coldneſs and indifference to the work of the miniſtry, and had ſo ſhamefully left them; and thus they diſputed the point till there was a paroxyſm between them, as is the word uſed: they were irritated and provoked by one another, and were ſo warmed and heated on both ſides, that they departed aſunder one from another; thus as ſoon almoſt as peace was made in the church, a difference ariſes among the miniſters of the word, who are men of like paſſions with others; and tho' it is not eaſy to ſay which was to blame moſt in this contention; perhaps there were faults on both ſides, for the beſt men are not without their failings; yet this affair was over-ruled by the providence of God, for the ſpread of his Goſpel, and the enlargement of his intereſt; for when theſe two great and good men parted from one another, they went to different places, preaching the word of God: and ſo Barnabas took Mark and ſailed unto Cyprus; ſee the note on ch. xiii. 4.

Ver. 40. And Paul choſe Silas, &c.] To be his companion and aſſiſtant; this being the deſign of the Holy Ghoſt in influencing his mind to ſtay longer at Antioch, after he, with Judas, was diſmiſſed by the church to go to Jeruſalem, ver. 33, 34. and departed; that is, from Antioch: being recommended by the brethren unto the grace of God; ſee the note on chap. xiii. 26. The Apoſtle having ſuch a recommendation by the brethren of the church at Antioch, when he departed from them, and nothing of this kind being ſaid with reſpect to Barnabas, have induced ſome to think, that the church took the part of the Apoſtle againſt Barnabas, in the diſpute between them; ſince the one went away ſaluted by them, and the other not.

Ver. 41. And he went through Syria and Cilicia, &c.] Antioch was the metropolis of the former, and Tarſus, the Apoſtle's native place, was in the latter; and in both theſe countries he had been before, and had been the inſtrument of converting many ſouls, and of planting churches, which he now viſited, as he propoſed to Barnabas to do: for it follows, confirming the churches; in the Goſpel, and the truths and ordinances of it, he had before inſtructed them in: of the church at Antioch, ſee the note on ch. xi. 26. And that there were alſo churches in Cilicia, is very manifeſt; and particularly there was one at Tarſus, the chief city in it. Herodion, of whom we read in Rom. xvi. 11. and Jaſon, in Acts xvii. 5. who are reckoned among the ſeventy diſciples, are ſaid to be biſhops or paſtors of this church; ſee the note on Luke x. 1. In the ſecond century there was a church in that city, to which Ignatius wrote an epiſtle, ſtill extant [o], in which he makes mention of Philo their deacon: in the third century Helenus preſided over this church, and was preſent at a ſynod at Antioch, when Paulus Samoſatenus was condemned for hereſy [p]: in the fourth century mention is made of ſeveral churches in Cilicia, and the biſhops of them; there was a church at Apſis in Cilicia, Amphion was biſhop of Epiphania, Theodorus of Mopſueſtia, Cyriacus of Adanan, and Sylvanus of Tarſus, the metropolis; in which laſt place, in the beginning of this century, ſeveral martyrs ſuffered under Diocleſian, particularly Tharatus, Probus, and Andronicus: here the orthodox, in the times of Valens, would have convened a ſynod againſt the Arians, but were hindered by him; and in this century Diodorus, biſhop of Tarſus, had the care of all the churches in Cilicia committed to him; in this age alſo we read of Antonius, a preſbyer of this church, afterwards made biſhop of it: in the fifth century mention is made of the biſhops of ſeveral churches in Cilicia, as of Mopſueſtia, Irenopolis, Epiphania, Tarſus, Anazarbus, Sebaſte, and others who were preſent at ſeveral councils held at different places in this century: in the ſixth century, out of the cities of Cilicia, Jotapa, Piſidia, Pompeiopolis, Tarſus, Coricus, Anemurius, biſhops are ſaid to come to the ſynod at Rome and Conſtantinople: in the ſeventh century, Tarſus was the metropolitan church of Cilicia; and mention is made of the biſhops of that, and of other cities, in this country, who aſſiſted at the ſixth council at Conſtantinople: in the eighth century, notice is taken of a church at Sida in Cilicia [q]; ſo long the chriſtian name was in thoſe parts. Beza's ancient copy adds, delivering the commandments of the elders; and the Vulgate Latin verſion, bidding them to keep the commandments of the apoſtles and elders; ſee ch. xvi. 4. namely, the decrees of the aſſembly at Jeruſalem; which ſeems very agreeable, ſince the letters were directed and ſent to the brethren of the Gentiles in Syria and Cilicia, as well as in Antioch; ſee ver. 23.

CHAP. XVI.

Ver. 1. THEN came he to Derbe and Lyſtra, &c.] Which were cities of Lycaonia, chap. xiv. 6. after Paul had gone through Syria and Cilicia; in the laſt of theſe places, he had been ſtoned, and yet goes thither again; none of theſe things moved him from the preaching of the Goſpel, and from the care of the churches, ſuch zeal, courage and intrepidity was he poſſeſſed of: and behold a certain diſciple was there; a converted perſon, a believer in Chriſt, one that had learned to know and deny himſelf, and underſtood the way of ſalvation by Chriſt, and was a follower of him; whether the apoſtle was an inſtrument of his converſion, when he was before in theſe parts, is not certain, tho' probable, ſince he often calls him his ſon; nor is it ſo evident whether he was at Derbe or at Lyſtra, tho' the latter ſeems moſt likely, ſince a report was given of him by the brethren there, and at Iconium, when no mention is made of Derbe, in the following verſe: named Timotheus; or Timothy, the ſame perſon to whom afterwards the apoſtle wrote two epiſtles: it is a name much uſed among the Greeks, and his father was a Greek; one of this name, who was an hiſtorian among the Greeks, is frequently mentioned by Laertius [r]; and there was another of this name, the ſon of Conon, an Athenian general [s]; and another that was a captain or general of Antiochus, 1 Maccab. v. vi. 2 Maccab. x. 24. the name ſignifies one that honoured God, or was honoured by God; both were true in this diſciple of Chriſt: the ſon of a certain woman which was a Jeweſs, and believed; his mother was a Jewiſh woman, but a believer in Chriſt, her name was Eunice, 2 Tim. i. 5. but his father was a Greek; a Gentile, an uncircumciſed one, and ſo he ſeems to have remained, by his ſons not being circumciſed.

Ver. 2. Which was well reported of, &c.] Not the father of Timothy, but Timothy himſelf; to whoſe piety, virtue, and good converſation witneſs was born, by the brethren that were at Lyſtra and Iconium; the members of the churches which were in theſe places, and which were not far from one another; and as it is neceſſary that miniſters of the Goſpel ſhould have a good report of them that are without, ſo likewiſe of them that are within; and the teſtimony of the latter is preferable to that of the former.

Ver. 3. Him would Paul have to go forth with him, &c.] Perceiving that he was a young man, that not only had the grace of God, but very conſiderable gifts, and abilities for miniſterial ſervice; and having a good teſtimony of his agreeable life and converſation, the apoſtle was very deſirous he ſhould go along with him, and be his companion in his travels, and be an aſſiſtant to him in the work of the miniſtry; and accordingly he was, and is often ſpoken of in his epiſtles, as his fellow labourer, and one that ſerved with him in the Goſpel of Chriſt, and who was very dear unto him: and took and circumciſed him; which may ſeem ſtrange, when there had been ſo lately a controverſy in the church at Antioch about circumciſion, from whence the apoſtle was juſt come; and when this matter had been debated and determined by the Apoſtles and elders at Jeruſalem, where he was preſent, and he was now carrying about their decrees: but it is to be obſerved, that the Apoſtle uſed circumciſion not as a duty of the law, as what that required, and in obedience to it, which he knew was abrogated; much leſs as neceſſary to ſalvation, which the judaizing preachers urged; but as an indifferent thing, and in order to gain a point, and ſecure ſome valuable end, as follows: becauſe of the Jews which were in thoſe quarters; not the believing ones, for he brought along with him the decrees of the Apoſtles and elders, to ſatisfy them, that circumciſion was not neceſſary; but the unbelieving ones, who he knew would not ſuffer an uncircumciſed perſon to teach in their ſynagogues, nor would they hear him out of them; wherefore having a mind to take Timothy with him to be aſſiſting to him in the preaching of the Goſpel, in point of prudence he thought it proper to circumciſe him, that he might be received by them, and be the more acceptable to them; who would otherwiſe have taken ſuch an offence at him, as not to have heard him: thus the Apoſtle to the Jews became a Jew, that he might gain and ſave ſome, 1 Cor. ix. 20. for they knew all that his father was a Greek; and that therefore he was not circumciſed; for a woman might not circumciſe, becauſe ſhe was not a fit ſubject of circumciſion herſelf[t]; though in caſe of neceſſity circumciſion by women was allowed of[u].

Ver. 4. And as they went thro' the cities, &c.] Of Derbe, Lyſtra and Iconium, and others in Lycaonia, and in Phrygia and Galatia; the Arabic verſion reads, they both; that is, Paul and Barnabas: they delivered them the decrees for to keep; they gave the churches, in theſe cities, the ſentiments, and determinations to be obſerved and followed by them: that were ordained of the apoſtles which were at Jeruſalem; concerning the abſtinence of the Gentiles from things offered to idols, and from blood, and from things ſtrangled, and from fornication, chap. xv. 20, 29.

Ver. 5. And ſo were the churches eſtabliſhed in the faith, &c.] Of Chriſt, both in the grace and doctrine of faith; and that both by the preaching of the Goſpel by the Apoſtle and his companions, and by the decrees of the elders delivered by him: and increaſed in number daily; as well as in gifts and grace.

Ver. 6. Now when they had gone throughout Phrygia, &c.] See the note on chap. ii. 10. To which may be added, that this country had its name either from the river Phryx, as Pliny[w] obſerves, or from the word Phrygios, which ſignifies dry; this being a very dry and ſandy country: it was famous for marble ſtone; hence we read[x] of Phrygian ſtone or marble, of which pillars and ſtatues were made: according to Joſephus[y], the original of the Phrygians was Togarmah the ſon of Gomer, and grandſon of Japheth, Gen. x. 3. whom he calls Thygrammes, and his people from him, Thygrammeans, and who, adds he, as it ſeems by the Greeks, are called Phrygians. Herodotus[z] reports, that the Phrygians (as the Macedonians ſay) were called Briges or Brygians, ſo long as they were Europeans and dwelt with the Macedonians: but when they went into Aſia, together with the country, they changed their names into Phrygians: of one Philip a Phrygian, whom Antiochus left governour at Jeruſalem, mention is made in 2 Maccab. v. 22. here dwelt Jews, as appears from chap. ii. 10. and here the Apoſtle preached and made converts. And the region of Galatia; in Aſia Minor: it had Cappadocia on the eaſt, Bithynia on the weſt, Pamphilia on the ſouth, and the Euxine ſea on the north. The inhabitants of this country were originally Gauls, who under Brennus their captain, came out of ſome parts of France and invaded Italy, and came to Rome, and took it all but the capitol; from whence being ſallied out upon by the Romans at an unawares, they were obliged to retire; and from thence they ſailed into Greece, and went into Aſia, into this part of it where they ſettled; which was firſt called after them Gallo Græcia, and in proceſs of time Galatia; tho' ſome ſay the Græcians called them Galatians from Gala, which ſignifies milk, becauſe of their milky colour: of the Galatians, mention is made in 2 Maccab. iii. 20. here the Goſpel was preached, and many believed; for we afterwards read of diſciples both in this country and in Phrygia, chap. xviii. 23. and here were churches formed, and to whom the Apoſtles preached, and delivered the decrees of the Apoſtles and elders. And were forbidden of the Holy Ghoſt; not by an articulate voice, but by a ſecret and powerful impulſe upon their minds: to preach the word in Aſia; that is, in that country which was properly called Aſia, or proconſular Aſia, otherwiſe Phrygia, and Galatia, were provinces in Aſia Minor. Beza's moſt ancient copy, and the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions, read, the word of God: the reaſons why it was prohibited to be preached here, at this time, cannot be ſaid, and muſt be referred to the ſovereign will of God; it ſeems, that at this inſtant, there were no choſen ones to be called by grace, and there was work for the Apoſtle, and his companions to do elſewhere, namely, in Macedonia.

Ver. 7. After they were come to Myſia, &c.] Another country in Aſia Minor. It is divided by Ptolomy[a] into two parts; ſuperior Myſia is bounded by Dalmatia on the weſt, by Macedonia on the ſouth, by part of Thrace on the eaſt, and by part of the river Danube on the north; inferior Myſia is bounded on the weſt, with part of the river Ciaber and the Danube, on the ſouth with part of Thrace, on the north with the turn of the river Tyra, and on the eaſt with the Euxine Pontus; but this was the European Myſia: the Myſia which ſeems here intended, was divided into the leſſer Myſia by the Helleſpont, and had Troas on the ſouth; and into the greater Myſia by Olympus, which was bounded on the weſt with the leſſer Myſia, and Troas on on the eaſt with Bithynia, and on the ſouth with Aſia, properly ſo called. By Pliny[b] it is called Æolis, and ſo Jerom ſays[c], it was in his times; ſometimes it is called Abretta and Abrettina, and of later years Burſia: ſome ſuggeſt it has its name of Myſia from Myſus, the brother of Car[d], the father of the Carians; but according to the Talmudiſts, it had its name from Meſhech, the ſon of Japhet, Gen. x. 2. for they ſay[e] Meſhech, זו מוסיא, this is Myſia; Pliny obſerves[f], that there are ſome authors who aſſert that the Myſians, Brygians, and Thynnians came out of Europe, from whom they are called Myſians, Phrygians and Bithynians, in Aſia. The inhabitants of Myſia were very deſpicable; hence the proverb, ultimus Myſorum, the laſt of the Myſians[g], is uſed for a very mean and contemptible perſon. The Apoſtle was willing to preach to the wiſe and unwiſe, and diſdained not to carry the Goſpel to the meaneſt part of mankind. They aſſayed to go into Bithynia; another country in Aſia Minor; it makes one province with Pontus, and has the ſame boundaries; Pontus being at the eaſt, and Bithynia at the weſt: it was bounded on the north with the Euxine ſea, on the eaſt with Galatia, on the ſouth with Aſia properly ſo called, and on the weſt with the Propontis; according to Pliny[h], it was called Cronia, afterwards Theſſalis, then Maliande, (perhaps Mariandyne) and Strymonis; and Herodotus[i] reports, that the Thracians going into Aſia were called Bithynians, who were firſt called (as they ſay) Strymonians, inhabiting Strymon; according to Jerom[k], it was formerly called Bebrycia, then Mygdonia, and Phrygia major, and by the river Iera, or, as Pliny calls it Hieras, is divided from Galatia; to which agrees Solinus[l], who ſays it was before called Bebrycia, afterwards Mygdonia, and now Bithynia from Bithynus the king; tho' others ſay, it was ſo called from Bithyne a daughter of Jupiter: but the Spirit ſuffered them not; the Alexandrian copy, and Beza's moſt ancient copy, and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, the Spirit of Jeſus; ſo that it was not an evil ſpirit, or ſatan, that hindered them, who ſometimes did; but they were under the direction and guidance of the divine Spirit, called, in the preceding verſe, the Holy Ghoſt: however, the Goſpel was preached here afterwards, and churches formed; of which ſee the note on 1 Pet. i. 1.

Ver. 8. And they paſſed by Myſia, &c.] Without ſtopping or ſtaying there, tho' they came to it: came down to Troas; either the country of Troas, as the Syriac verſion renders it; which, according to Solinus[m], is bordered on the north part of Galatia, and was near to Lycaonia, Piſidia, and Mygdonia on the ſouth, and to Lydia on the eaſt, and to Myſia and Caria on the north: or rather the city of Troas, which Pliny ſays[n], was formerly called Antigonia, now Alexandria, a colony of the Romans. Antigonus king of Aſia called it Troas at firſt, becauſe it was in the country, and near where Troy ſtood, but afterwards he called it, according to his own name, Antigonia; but Lyſimachus king of Thrace having got this city into his hands, repaired it, and called it after the name of Alexander, Alexandria; and to diſtinguiſh it from Alexandria in Egypt, and other cities of the ſame name in other places, it was called Alexandria Troas.

Ver. 9. And a viſion appeared to Paul in the night, &c.] Either in a dream, or, it may be, when he was awake: there ſtood a man of Macedonia; an angel in the form of a man; the Syriac verſion reads, as a man of Macedonia, and who might appear in a Macedonian habit, or ſpeak in the Macedonian language; or the Apoſtle might conclude him to be ſo, from his making mention of Macedonia, as the place where he requeſted him to come, and aſſiſt: and prayed him, ſaying, come over into Macedonia; Macedonia was a very large country in Europe; which formerly conſiſted, as Pliny[o] ſays, of a hundred and fifty people, or nations, and was called Emathia; it took its name of Macedonia from Macedo, a ſon of Jupiter, and of Thyd, a daughter of Deucalion: according to Ptolomy[p] it had on the north Dalmatia, ſuperior Myſia and Thracia; on the weſt, the Ionian ſea; on the ſouth Epirus; and on the eaſt, part of Thracia, and the gulfs of the Ægean ſea. It had formerly other names beſides Emathia and Macedonia, as Mygdonia and Edoma, and is now called Albania or Ronnelli. Troas, where the Apoſtle now was, when he had this viſion, was juſt by the Helleſpont, over which he muſt go to Macedonia; and therefore the Macedonian prays him to come over, adding, and help us; by praying and preaching, to pull down the kingdom of ſatan, to deſtroy ſuperſtition and idolatry, to enlighten the eyes of men, and turn them from darkneſs to light, from the power of ſatan to God, and ſave them from utter ruin and deſtruction. This ſhows what a miſerable condition this country was in; and that God had ſome choſen people among them to gather in, whoſe time was now come; and of what uſe and ſervice the angels, Chriſt's miniſtring ſpirits, are, who are helpful in weakening the kingdom of ſatan, and advancing the intereſt of Chriſt, and in ſpreading his Goſpel, and particularly in directing the miniſters of it where to preach it; tho' it follows not from hence, that this angel preſided over the whole country, and was their tutelar angel, as ſome think.

Ver. 10. And after he had ſeen the viſion, &c.] And conſidered it, and related it to his companions: and when they had well weighed it, and the circumſtances of it: immediately we endeavoured to go into Macedonia; they determined upon it, and took all the proper methods, and made the neceſſary proviſions for it. Here Luke, the writer of this hiſtory, firſt appears, ſaying, we endeavoured; whether he came with the Apoſtle from Antioch, ſince he is commonly ſaid to have been a phyſician of Antioch; or whether he met the Apoſtle at Troas, ſince here is the firſt hint of him, is not certain: aſſuredly gathering, that the Lord had called us for to preach the Goſpel unto them; they concluded from the viſion with great certainty, that they had a manifeſt call from God to go into Macedonia, and preach the Goſpel to the inhabitants of it, not doubting but that they ſhould meet with ſucceſs. The Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read, God, inſtead of Lord.

Ver. 11. Therefore looſing from Troas, &c.] Or ſetting ſail from thence, which, as before obſerved, was juſt by the Helleſpont; which was a narrow ſea that divided Aſia from Europe, now called Stretto di Gallipoli, or Bracci di St. Georgio: and ſo Pliny[q] ſpeaking of Troas ſays, it lies near the Helleſpont;

Helleſpont; and Jerom[r] calls it a maritime city of Aſia; and it further appears to be on the ſea-coaſt, by what is ſaid in chap. xx. for from Philippi hither, the Apoſtle and his company ſailed in five days, and from hence they ſailed to Aſſos, ver. 6, 13. we came with a ſtraight courſe to Samothracia; which was an iſland in the Ægean ſea, or Archipelago: it was formerly called Dardania[s], from Dardanus the ſon of Jupiter by Electra, who fled hither from Italy, upon killing his brother Jaſius; it had its name of Samothracia, from Thracia, near to which it was, and from the Samians who inhabited it; and it was called Samothracia to diſtinguiſh it from the iſland Samos in the Ionian ſea; it is now called Samandrachi: Jerom[t] calls it an iſland in the gulf of Pagaſa; of this iſland of Samothracia, Pliny ſays[u], that it was free before Hebrus, was thirty-two miles from Imbrus, twenty-two and a half from Lemnus, thirty-eight from the ſhore of Thracia, and in circumference thirty-two—and that it is fulleſt of good havens of any in thoſe parts; and adds, that Callimachus calls it by its ancient name Dardania; it ſeems it was alſo called Leucoſia, or Leucadia, becauſe to ſpectators at a diſtance it looked white: according to [w] Herodotus the Pelaſgi firſt inhabited Samothracia, who with the Athenians dwelt there, and from them the Samothracians received their ſacred rites and myſteries; for this iſland was famous for the worſhip of the Cabiri, or chief deities of the Gentiles, particularly Ceres, Proſerpina, Pluto, Mercury, and the two brothers Caſtor and Pollux, Neptune, and all the ſea-gods; inſomuch that it was called the holy iſland[x], and perſons of other nations, and even of the greateſt figure, were initiated into the myſteries of the Samothracians, which Pliny[y] calls the moſt holy; for ſpeaking of Venus, Potho, and Phaeton, adds, who are worſhipped with the moſt holy ceremonies of Samothracia. The Apoſtle did not ſtay to preach the Goſpel in this place, nor do we read of its being preached here by him at any other time, or by any other, nor of any church in this place in after ages in eccleſiaſtical hiſtory. The Apoſtle and his companions are ſaid to come hither, with a ſtraight courſe; not only becauſe they might have a fair gale, which brought them at once hither; but becauſe when they were over the Helleſpont, this iſland lay directly in their way, in a ſtraight line to Macedonia: and the next day to Neapolis; the Alexandrian copy reads, the new city, as the word ſignifies; hence the Ethiopic verſion by way of interpretation renders it, the next day we came to the new city, the name of which is Neapolis: according to Ptolomy, it was a ſea-port of Edonis, a part of Macedonia, and was upon the borders of Thrace; it is now called Chriſtopoli; and was not Neapolis in Campania, nor Sychem in Samaria, which is ſo called, but was at a great diſtance from either of theſe. Pliny places it in Thracia, as he alſo does Edonis, and even Philippi[z]. Jerom calls[a] it a city of Caria, but wrongly: and tho' we have no account of the Apoſtles preaching in this place, and of making converts, neither now nor at any other time; yet it appears even in after-ages that here was a church in this place: in the ſixth century the biſhop of it was ſent to the fifth Roman ſynod; and in the ſeventh century one Andreas was biſhop of this place, who was in the ſixth ſynod at Conſtantinople[b].

Ver. 12. And from thence to Philippi, &c.] This place is by Appianus called Datos, which was its original name; and by Diodorus Siculus, Crenidæ[c], from the fountains of water, which were many and wholeſom that were about it; and it had its name Philippi, from Philip king of Macedon, father of Alexander the great, who rebuilt it[d]: it is now vulgarly called Chrixopolis, that is Chryſopolis, from the veins and mines of gold found about it; it was famous for a battle here fought between Auguſtus Cæſar and Anthony on the one ſide, and Brutus and Caſſius on the other, in which the latter were vanquiſhed: which is the chief city of that part of Macedonia; which is called Edonis, in which Ptolomy places it; and a colony: that is, of the Romans; ſee ver. 37, 38. and which Pliny[e] alſo calls a colony: and we were in that city abiding many days; without doing any thing, having no opportunity, or door opened to them to preach the Goſpel; which muſt be a great trial of their faith, after Paul had ſeen ſuch a viſion, by which they were ſo ſtrongly aſſured it was the will of God, they ſhould come and preach the Goſpel here, and after they had travelled ſo far by ſea and land; tho' ſome obſerve, that the word uſed ſignifies not only to abide, but to exerciſe themſelves, by teaching and preaching the word, which tis ſuppoſed they did with ſucceſs; and that the women they after met with by the river ſide, were ſuch, at leaſt ſome of them, who had been converted under their miniſtry; but the former ſeems to be the trueſt ſenſe.

Ver. 13. And on the ſabbath, &c.] That is, as the Syriac verſion renders it, on the ſabbath-day; the Jewiſh ſabbath, the ſeventh day of the week; tho' the words may be rendered, on a certain day of the week; agreeable to chap. xx. 7. where the firſt of the ſabbath means the firſt day of the week; but be this as it will, on this day, we went out of the city by a river-ſide; perhaps the river Strymon, which was near; the Alexandrian copy and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, without the gate; and the Syriac verſion, without the gates of the city; all to the ſame ſenſe: it looks as if there was no ſynagogue of the Jews in this place, or otherwiſe the Apoſtle and his companions would have gone into that, according to their cuſtom; and this the rather ſeems to be the caſe, ſince it is ſo particularly remarked, that at Theſſalonica, the next place they ſtayed at there was one, chap. xvii. 1. and the reaſon might be, becauſe that Philippi being a Roman colony, the Jews were not ſuffered to have one in it; wherefore Paul and his company, whether on the Jewiſh ſabbath, or on any other day of the week, took a walk out of the city; either for the ſake of a walk, or rather to converſe together, and conſider what was to be done, or to look out for an opportunity to preach the Goſpel; and they came to a place, where prayer was wont to be made; or as the words may be rendered, where was thought to be a place of prayer; a proſeucha, an oratory, or a place built and made uſe of for prayer; that is, as they walked along, they ſaw a place, which in their opinion looked like a religious houſe, or a place for prayer, and ſo made up to it, where they found ſome perſons aſſembled together on that account: this ſenſe is confirmed by ſeveral verſions; the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, where there ſeemed to be prayer, and ſo reads Beza's moſt ancient copy; and the Syriac verſion is very expreſs, for there was ſeen בית צלותא, an houſe of prayer; to which agrees the Arabic verſion, we went out—to a certain place, place, which was thought to be a place of prayer; to which may be added the Ethiopic verſion, and we thought there was prayer there: and that the Jews had their oratories, or prayer-houſes, is certain; ſee the note on Luke vi. 12. and that theſe were without the cities, and in the fields, appears from a paſſage of Epiphanius[f], who ſays, “there were anciently places of prayer, both among the Jews, without the city, and among the Samaritans,——there was a place of prayer at Sichem, which is now called Neapolis, without the city, in the field, about two ſtones diſtance in form of a theatre, open to the air, and without covering, built by the Samaritans, who in all things imitated the Jews:” and if theſe were commonly built by fountains and rivers, and as ſome think, in imitation of Iſaac, who went out into the field, to meditate; which the Chaldee paraphraſe renders, to pray; and is alſo in the ſame place ſaid to come, as the Jeruſalem paraphraſe renders it, לבארא, to a well, or fountain, Gen. xxiv. 62, 63. then this clauſe may be rendered, where it was uſual for a prayer-houſe to be: and then the ſenſe is, there being no ſynagogue in the city, the Apoſtle and thoſe with him went out of it, to the river-ſide, to look out for a prayer-houſe; where ſuch places were wont to be built, and they accordingly found one: and we ſat down, and ſpake unto the women which reſorted thither; who ſeem to have been Jewiſh women, who met here to attend public prayer, there being no religious worſhip of the true God in the city; and among theſe worſhippers of God, was Lydia, hereafter mentioned; and worſhip not being begun, the Apoſtle and his companions, ſat down among them, and entred into ſome religious converſation with them, and took the opportunity of preaching the Goſpel, which was what they wanted, and were ſeeking after.

Ver. 14. And a certain woman, named Lydia, &c.] Whether this woman was a Jeweſs or a Gentile, is not certain, her name will not determine; ſhe might be called ſo from the country of Lydia, which was in Aſia Minor, and where was Thyatira her native place; Horace makes frequent mention of one of this name[g]: and it might be a Jewiſh name; we read of R. Simeon ben Lydia[h]; and as theſe ſeem to be Jewiſh women that met at this oratory, ſhe might be one: a ſeller of purple; either of purple ſilks, much wore in the eaſtern countries; or of the purple dye, which in 1 Maccab. iv. 23. is called purple of the ſea, or ſea purple; it being the blood or juice of a turbinated ſhell-fiſh, which the Jews call, חלזון, Chalſon: this they ſpeak of as a ſhell-fiſh; hence thoſe words[i], “go and learn of the Chalſon, for all the while it grows, its ſhell grows with it:” and that purple was dyed with the blood of it, appears from the following inſtances, the beſt fruits in the land, Gen. xliii. 11. are interpreted[k], the things that are the moſt famous in the world, as the Chalſon, &c. with whoſe blood, as the Gloſs on the paſſage ſays, they dye purple: and the purple dyed with this was very valuable, and fetched a good price; the tribe of Zebulon is repreſented[l], as complaining to God, that he had given to their brethren fields and vineyards, to them mountains and hills, to their brethren lands, and to them ſeas and rivers; to which it is replied, all will ſtand in need of thee, becauſe of Chalſon; as it is ſaid, Deut. xxxiii. 19. They ſhall ſuck of the abundance of the ſeas; the Gloſs upon it, interpreting the word Chalſon is, it comes out of the ſea to the mountains, and with its blood they dye purple, which is ſold at a very dear price. The text in Deut. xxxiii. 19. is thus paraphraſed by Jonathan the Targumiſt; “at the ſhore of the ſea they dwell (i. e. they of the tribe of Zebulon) and they delight themſelves with (the fiſh) Tuny, and take Chalſon, and with its blood dye purple the threads of their garments.” And ſo Maimonides ſays[m], that they uſe this in dying the fringes on the borders of their garments; after they have ſcowered the wool, and the like, that it may take the dye, he ſays, “they take of the blood of Chalſon, which is a fiſh whoſe colour is like the colour of purple, and its blood is black like ink, and it is found in the ſalt ſea,” particularly about Tyre: ſo the huſbandmen in Jer. lii. 16. are interpreted[n], they that catch Chalſon from the ladder of Tyre to Chippah, or the ſhore; the Gloſs explains it, thoſe that ſqueeze and preſs the Chalſon, to fetch out its blood: and with all this agree the modern accounts given of purple, as follow; “purple was much eſteemed among the ancients, eſpecially the Tyrian purple; which underwent more dyes than the reſt, and which was almoſt peculiar to emperors and kings, yet this purple did not exceed that now in uſe.——The ancient purple was tinged, or given with the blood or juice of a precious turbinated teſtaceous ſea-fiſh, called by the Greeks πορφυρα, and by the Latins purpura ——In the ſeas of the Spaniſh Weſt-Indies, about Nicoya, is found a ſhell-fiſh, which perfectly reſembles the ancient purpura, and in all probability is the very ſame——theſe are gathered very plentifully in the ſpring, and by rubbing one againſt another, yield a kind of ſaliva, or thick glair, reſembling ſoft wax; but the purple dye is in the throat of the fiſh, and the fineſt part in a little white vein——the chief riches of Nicoya conſiſt in this fiſh; cloth of Segovia dyed with it, is ſold for twenty crowns the ell.——In the Philoſoph. Tranſact. we have an account of a purple fiſh diſcovered in 1686, by Mr. W. Cole on the coaſts of Somerſetſhire, South-Wales, &c. where it is found in great abundance.——The fiſh is a kind of buccinum, a name given by the ancients to all fiſhes, whoſe ſhell bears any reſemblance to a hunting horn; and it appears from Pliny, that part of the ancient purple was taken from this kind of ſhell-fiſh.——The Caribbee-Iſlands have likewiſe their purple fiſh, it is called burgan, being of the ſize of the end of the finger, and reſembling our periwinkles; its ſhell is of a browniſh azure, its fleſh white, its inteſtines of a very bright red, the colour whereof appears through the body; and it is this that dyes that froth, which it caſts when taken, and which is at firſt of a violet hue, bordering on blue; to oblige them to yield the greater quantity of froth, they lay them on a plate, and ſhake and beat them againſt one another, upon which the plate is immediately covered with the froth, which is received on a linen cloth, and becomes purple, in proportion as it dries[o].” It may be further obſerved, that the fringes which the Jews wore upon their garments, had on them a ribband of blue or purple, Numb. xv. 38. for the word there uſed, is by the Septuagint rendered purple, in Numb. iv. 7. and ſometimes Hyacinth; and the whole fringe was by the Jews called, תכלת, purple:

hence it is ſaid [p], "does not every one that puts on the purple (i. e. the fringes on his garments) in Jeruſalem, make men to wonder? and a little after, the former ſaints, or religious men, when they had wove in it (the garment) three parts, they put on it, תכלת, the purple." And there were perſons who traded in theſe things; and were called, מוכרי תכלת, ſellers of purple [q], as here; that is, for the Tzitzith, or fringes for the borders of the garments, on which the ribband of blue or purple was put, as the Gloſs explains it: the Jews were very curious about the colour, and the dying of it; that it ſhould be a colour that would hold and not change; and that the ribband be dyed on purpoſe for that uſe. Maimonides gives rules for the dying of it [r], and they were no leſs careful of whom they bought it; for they ſay, that the purple was not to be bought, but of an approved perſon, or one that was authorized for that purpoſe [s]; and a ſcruple is raiſed by one, whether he had done right or no, in buying it of the family of a doctor deceaſed [t]: now ſince Lydia might be a Jeweſs, or at leaſt, as appears by what follows, was a proſelyteſs of the Jewiſh religion, this might be her buſineſs to ſell the purple for their fringes, and it may be the fringes themſelves; and if this was her employment, ſhe was thoroughly a religious perſon in their way, ſince we find, that, מוכרי תכלת, ſellers of purple, were free from reading, "hear O Iſrael, &c. Deut. vi. 4. and from prayer, and from the phylacteries, &c. for this reaſon, becauſe he that is employed in the commandment (in any work for it) was free from the commandment [u];" and yet ſhe attended at the place and time of prayer: of the city of Thyatira; which was in Lydia, or as others ſay in Myſia, which was in Aſia Minor; Pliny [w] ſeems to place it in Ionia, by the river Lycus, and ſays it was formerly called Pelopia and Eubippa, and it was alſo called Semiramis; it had its name of Thyatira, from Seleucus Nicanor, who being at war with Lyſimachus near this place, and hearing he had a daughter born, called it Thygateira; though others ſay it was ſo called, becauſe that when the Myſians were about to build a city, enquiring of the gods where they ſhould build it, were told, that they ſhould build it where a hart was ſtruck, and appeared running; and δια το θυειν, becauſe of the ſacrificing of the hart, they called it Thyateira. The Turks now call it Ak biſſar, the white camp. This was Lydia's native place, from which ſhe was now at a great diſtance, being either wholly removed hither, or was here upon buſineſs; for Thyatira was in Aſia, and Philippi, where ſhe now was, was in Europe: which worſhipped God; the true God, the God of Iſrael, and not the gods of the Gentiles, among whom ſhe was; which ſhows, that ſhe was either a Jewiſh woman, who had knowledge of the one true and living God, or at leaſt a proſelyteſs of the Jewiſh religion: heard us; not alone, but with other women; and at firſt only externally, and not ſo as to underſtand and receive what ſhe heard, until the efficacious grace of God was exerted upon her, ſignified in the following clauſe: whoſe heart the Lord opened; which was before ſhut and barred, with the bars of ignorance, hardneſs, and unbelief. The heart of a ſinner before converſion, is like a houſe ſhut up, and wholly in darkneſs; whatever degree of natural or moral light is in it, there is none in ſpiritual things; it is empty of the grace of God, of the fear of him, and love to him; it is without proper inhabitants, without God, Chriſt, and the Spirit; and is the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul ſpirit, who delight in dark and deſolate places; it is bolted and barred with unbelief, and walled up, and even petrified and hardened with ſin, and is guarded and garriſoned by ſatan; and its goods are kept in peace by him: and this had been the caſe of Lydia; but now the Lord opened her underſtanding, and put light into it, which was before darkneſs itſelf, as to ſpiritual things; by which ſhe ſaw her wretched, ſinful, and miſerable ſtate by nature, the inſufficiency of all ways and means, and works, to juſtify and ſave her, and the neceſſity, ſuitableneſs, and fulneſs of grace and ſalvation by Chriſt; which was done by the ſame divine power, that at firſt created light in darkneſs: moreover, the Lord wrought upon her affections, and engaged them to divine and ſpiritual things; creating love in her ſoul to Chriſt, to his people, truths and ordinances; which was done by his almighty hand, taking away the ſtony heart, and giving an heart of fleſh: he alſo removed the bar of unbelief, entered in himſelf, diſpoſſeſſed ſatan, and worked faith in her, to look to him, lay hold on him, and receive him, as her Saviour and Redeemer; making her willing in the day of his power, to be ſaved by him, and to ſerve him: it is a petition the Jews frequently make [x], in their prayers to God, דתפתח לבי, that thou wouldſt open my heart, in thy law; or as ſometimes, open our hearts in the doctrine of thy law: not Lydia herſelf, nor the Apoſtle Paul, but the Lord opened her heart; Jehovah the Father, who commanded light out of darkneſs; Jehovah the Son, who has the key of the houſe of David; Jehovah the Spirit, who convinces of ſin, righteouſneſs, and judgment: that ſhe attended unto the things which were ſpoken of Paul; concerning the perſon and offices of Chriſt, concerning his truths and ordinances, concerning free juſtification by his righteouſneſs, pardon by his blood, and everlaſting ſalvation by him; theſe things ſhe hearkened unto in another manner, than ſhe had done; before ſhe heard, but did not attend to what ſhe heard; but faith coming by hearing, now ſhe hears with the hearing of faith, and underſtands what ſhe hears, and cordially receives and embraces it, and put into practice what ſhe heard, ſubmitting to the ordinance of Chriſt, as follows.

Ver. 15. And when ſhe was baptized, &c.] In water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, according to the commiſſion of Chriſt, by the Apoſtle, or ſome one of his companions; by whom ſhe was inſtructed into the nature and uſe of this ordinance; and very likely it was performed in that river, by the ſide of which the oratory ſtood, where they were aſſembled: and her houſhold; they were baptized alſo, being converted at the ſame time; theſe ſeem to be her menial ſervants, who came along with her from her native place upon buſineſs, and who attended on her; accordingly the Ethiopic verſion renders it, and ſhe was baptized with all her men; and theſe were believers, and are called the brethren, ver. 40. hence this paſſage will by no means ſerve the cauſe of infant baptiſm: whether Lydia was a maid, a wife, or widow, cannot be ſaid; it looks however, as if ſhe had no huſband now, ſince ſhe is mentioned as a trader herſelf; and whether ſhe had any children or no, is not certain, nor can it be concluded from this clauſe, for there are many houſholds that have no children; and if ſhe had young children, it is not likely ſhe ſhould bring them with her to ſuch a diſtant place, whither ſhe was come upon trade and buſineſs: the pleaders for infant baptiſm muſt prove that ſhe had children; that theſe were her houſhold, or part of her houſhold here ſpoken of; and that they were baptized; or this inſtance will be of no ſervice to their cauſe: ſhe beſought us, ſaying, if ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord; this ſhe ſaid, not as doubting whether they had ſo judged of her, but as ſuppoſing it, and taking it for granted, that they had; wherefore ſhe reaſons upon it, and argues from it; and the ſenſe is this, that ſeeing the Apoſtle and his company had judged her to be a believer in Chriſt, by admitting her to the ordinance of baptiſm; and ſhe had ſhown her faithfulneſs to him, by ſubmitting to it, according to his will; therefore ſhe earneſtly intreated them to take up their reſidence at her houſe, whilſt at Philippi: ſaying, come into my houſe, and abide there; her faith ſoon worked by love; and by the fruits of righteouſneſs which followed upon it, it appeared to be true and genuine: and ſhe conſtrained us; Paul and Silas, and Timothy and Luke, and whoever elſe were in company; ſhe not only invited them, but obliged them to go with her; ſhe would take no denial, and by her arguments, intreaties, and importunity, as it were forced them, and prevailed upon them to go with her.

Ver. 16. And it came to paſs as we went to prayer, &c.] That is, to the houſe of prayer, or to the oratory, as they were in the way to it; for this is not to be underſtood of their juſt going to the act, or duty of prayer; for the damſel that now met them, is ſaid to follow them, and to do ſo for many days, one after another; and it was by their going to the prayer-houſe, that ſhe knew what they were; and beſides, the phraſe of going to prayer, as uſed by us, for the act or duty of prayer, is a mere Angliciſm, and unknown to the Eaſtern writers: now this their going to the oratory, was after they had been at Lydia's houſe, and had been entertained and refreſhed there; whether this was on the ſame day that ſhe was converted and baptized, is not certain: however, ſo it was, that a certain damſel poſſeſſed with a ſpirit of divination, met us; in the Greek text it is, the ſpirit of Python; the Alexandrian copy and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, the ſpirit Python; the ſame with Apollo, who was called Pythius, as was his oracle, from the people coming to him, πυνθανεσθαι, to enquire of him and conſult with him, about difficult matters[y]; or rather from the Hebrew word, פתן, which ſignifies a ſerpent; and ſo Apollo is ſaid to have his name Pythius, from his killing the ſerpent Typhon, or Python[z]; hence the city of Delphos, where was the oracle of Apollo, was called Pytho[a]; the propheteſs that ſat upon the golden Tripos, and delivered out the oracles, Pythia; and the feaſts and plays inſtituted to the honour of Apollo, were called the Pythian feaſts and plays, and the place of the oracle Pythium[b]: and ſo this maid, or the ſpirit in her, pretended to divine and foretel things to come; and the Arabic renders it, an unclean ſpirit, foretelling future things: the Jews[c] make this ſpirit of Python, to be the ſame with Ob, which we render a familiar ſpirit, Lev. xx. 27. Deut. xviii. 11. and the Septuagint by Engaſtrimythos, a ventriloquiſt, one that ſeemed to ſpeak out of his belly, and pretended to predict future events; and moſt of the verſions in the Polyglott bible, render it by Python the word here uſed: ſo the Jews ſay[d], that a maſter of Ob (as the woman of Endor is called the miſtreſs of Ob) זה פיתום, this is Pythom: and ſo Jarchi on Deut. xviii. 11. explains the word, and adds, that it is one that ſpeaks out of his arm-holes, as thoſe ſort of people did from ſeveral parts of their bodies, and even from their ſecret parts: the word ſignifies a bottle, and they were called maſters or miſtreſſes of the bottle; either becauſe the place on which they ſat, and from whence they gave forth their oracles, were in the form of one; or they made uſe of a bottle in their divinations; or as Schindler[e] obſerves, being poſſeſſed, they ſwelled and were inflated like bottles; and being interrogated, they gave forth anſwers out of their bellies, concerning things paſt, preſent, and to come: and this ſpeaking out of their bellies might be done, without the poſſeſſion of a real ſpirit, and much leſs was it from God, as Plutarch[f] an heathen himſelf obſerves; "it is "fooliſh and childiſh, to think that God, as the "ventriloquiſts formerly called Eurycleans, and "now Pythoniſts, ſhould hide himſelf in the bodies "of the prophets, uſing their mouths and voices "as inſtruments to ſpeak with, for this was done "by turning their voices down their throats." The firſt of this ſort was one Eurycles, of whom Ariſtophanes[g] makes mention; and the Scholiaſt upon him ſays, that he was a ventriloquiſt, and was ſaid by the Athenians to prophecy by a dæmon that was in him, when it was only an artificial way of ſpeaking; Tertullian affirms he had ſeen ſuch women that were ventriloquiſts, from whoſe ſecret parts a ſmall voice was heard, as they ſate and gave anſwers to things aſked: Cælius Rhodiginus writes, that he often ſaw a woman a ventriloquiſt, at Rhodes, and in a city of Italy his own country; from whoſe ſecrets, he had often heard a very ſlender voice of an unclean ſpirit, but very intelligible, tell ſtrangely of things paſt or preſent, but of things to come, for the moſt part uncertain, and alſo often vain and lying; and Wierus relates of one Peter Brabantius, who as often as he would, could ſpeak from the lower part of his body, his mouth being open, but his lips not moved, whereby he deceived many by this cunning; and there was a man at court in king James the firſt's times here in England, who could act this impoſture in a very lively manner[h]: but now whether the ſpirit that was in this maid was a cheat, an impoſture of this kind, is not ſo eaſy to ſay; it ſeems by the diſpoſſeſſion that follows, that it was a real ſpirit that poſſeſſed her; though ſome think it was no other than a deluding, deviliſh, impoſture: which brought her maſters much gain by ſoothſaying; divining or prophecying; it ſeems ſhe had many maſters, who had a propriety in her, and ſhared the gain ſhe brought; unleſs by them are meant, her maſter and miſtreſs: vaſt treaſures were brought to the temple at Delphos, by perſons that applied to the Pythian oracle there; and great quantities were got by particular perſons, who pretended to ſuch a ſpirit, by which they told fortunes, and what ſhould befal people hereafter, or where their loſt or ſtolen goods were, and ſuch like things; and of ſuch ſort were the magical boys and ſervants, Pignorius [l] makes mention of, out of Apuleius, Porphyry, and others, who either for gain or pleaſure, performed many ſtrange things.

Ver. 17. The ſame followed Paul and us, &c.] Silas, Luke, and Timothy; the Arabic verſion reads, the ſame followed Paul and Silas; as they were going to the oratory: and cried, ſaying, theſe men are the ſervants of the moſt high God; not of Python, or Apollo, as ſhe and her maſters were; or of any of the deities of the Gentiles; nor of ſin, nor of ſatan, nor of men, but of the one only true and living God, one of whoſe titles is, עליון, Elion, the moſt high, Gen. xiv. 22. Pſal. lxxxiii. 18. and theſe men were his ſervants, not merely by right of creation, as all men are, or ſhould be; nor only through the power of divine grace upon their ſouls, bringing them into a willing obedience to him, as all the ſaints are; but by office, being miniſters of the word: wherefore it follows, which ſhew unto us the way of ſalvation; which is not by the works of men; for by them the juſtice of God cannot be ſatisfied, nor his law fulfilled; God has declared againſt this way of ſalvation; it would make void the death of Chriſt, and fruſtrate the deſign of God in it; which is to magnify his grace, and exclude boaſting in man: to which may be added, that the beſt works of men being imperfect, and attended with much ſin, would rather damn than ſave; wherefore it is ſinful, dangerous, and vain, to attempt ſalvation in this way. The only way of ſalvation is by the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom the law is fulfilled, ſatisfaction is made for ſin, peace and pardon are procured, an everlaſting righteouſneſs is brought in, and through whom grace and glory are given: and this is a way of ſalvation, agreeable to all the perfections of God; in which the vileſt ſinner made ſenſible of his ſins, and of his need of this, has no reaſon to deſpair; it is exceeding ſuitable to his caſe, and is a way in which none ever periſh, that are directed to it: and now this way of ſalvation is only ſhewn in the Goſpel, by the miniſters of it; not by the light of nature, for to men who only have that, it is fooliſhneſs; nor by the law of Moſes, for to ſuch who are under that, it is a ſtumbling block; nor by the carnal reaſon of men, it is not of men, nor after men, but by divine revelation; and therefore the natural man receives it not, it is hid from ſuch; and therefore they project various ways of ſalvation, which are pleaſing in their own eyes, but the end of them are the ways of death; the way to life and immortality, is only brought to light in the Goſpel: whether ſhe ſaid this of her own accord, or was obliged to it by divine impulſe; and whether it was through fear of Paul, and in flattery to him, or was with a good or bad deſign, is not eaſy to determine: however, certain it is, what ſhe ſaid was truth; and ſometimes the devil himſelf, the father of lies, is obliged to ſpeak it.

Ver. 18. And this ſhe did many days, &c.] As the Apoſtle and his company paſſed to and from the oratory, being for that time at Lydia's houſe; ſhe followed them, and repeated the above words. This ſhe was ſuffered to do, time after time; not that the Apoſtle and his friends wanted ſuch a teſtimony, or that it was of any uſe to them; but that the expulſion of the evil ſpirit might be more manifeſt, and more taken notice of: but Paul being grieved; at the unhappy condition the maid was in, being poſſeſſed with ſuch a ſpirit; and that the people were ſo impoſed upon and deluded by it; and that it ſhould be thought that there was any combination and agreement between that and him: turned himſelf to her, who was behind him, ſhe following him, as is ſaid in the preceding verſe; this is left out in the Syriac verſion: and ſaid to the ſpirit; or to that ſpirit, as the ſame verſion renders it; to the ſpirit of Python, or Apollo, or of divination, that was in the maid; the Ethiopic verſion reads, and he ſaid, in, or by the Holy Spirit; being under a more than ordinary influence and impulſe of his; but not the ſpirit by which he ſpake, but the ſpirit to which he ſpake, is here meant: I command thee in the name of Jeſus Chriſt to come out of her, and he came out the ſame hour; this is an inſtance of that power which Chriſt gave to his Apoſtles to caſt out devils in his name, Matt. x. 1. Mark xvi. 17.

Ver. 19. And when her maſters ſaw, &c.] As they might by her ſedateneſs and compoſure; ſhe not being wild and frantic, and not having ſuch motions and agitations ſhe had whilſt under the poſſeſſion of the evil ſpirit: that the hope of their gains was gone; the Syriac verſion adds, out of her; namely the evil ſpirit, which was the ground and foundation of all their hope of gains, they expected to acquire for themſelves; that being gone, they had no more work to do, nor tricks to play, nor profit to expect from the maid: wherefore they caught Paul and Silas; they being the chief ſpeakers, and principally concerned in the ejection of the evil ſpirit; they laid hold on them, took them by the collar, or held them by their cloaths, and drew them into the market-place: or rather into the court of judicature, as the word alſo ſignifies; there to accuſe them, and to have them tried, condemned, and puniſhed: unto the rulers; the judges of the court, it may be the Decuriones; for in a Roman colony as Philippi was, they choſe out every tenth man, that was of capacity and ability, to make and eſtabliſh a public council, and who therefore were called by this name.

Ver. 20. And brought them to the magiſtrates, &c.] The ſame as before; wherefore the Syriac verſion omits them there, and reads them both together here, calling them the magiſtrates and chief men of the city; though the word here uſed, properly ſignifies military captains, captains of the Roman militia: but that they were the ſame with the Decuriones, or ten men before-mentioned, appears from what Harpocratian ſays [k], that every year were choſen ten στρατηγοι, magiſtrates, the word here uſed: ſaying, theſe men being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city; they call Paul and Silas Jews, either becauſe they knew them to be ſo, or becauſe they attended at the Jewiſh oratory, or place of worſhip; and it was common with the Romans, to call the chriſtians Jews; they were generally included in the ſame name; and this name of the Jews, was become very odious with the Romans; a little after this, Claudius commanded them, the Jews, to depart from Rome, ch. xviii. 2. they were commonly looked upon as a troubleſome and ſeditious ſort of people, and indeed this was the old charge that was faſtened upon them, Ezra iv. 15. Eſth. iii. 8. So that it was enough to ſay that Paul and Silas were Jews, to prove them to be diſturbers of the public peace: and it is to be obſerved, that their accuſers make no mention of the diſpoſſeſſing of the maid, who was their private property, and which was a private affair; but pretend a concern for the public welfare, and bring a charge of public diſturbance and detriment, to which their malice and revenge prompted them, hoping in this way the better to ſucceed: the Arabic verſion reads, theſe two men trouble our city, and they are both Jews.

Ver. 21. And teach cuſtoms, &c.] The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions, read in the ſingular number, cuſtom or law; referring to the doctrine of ſalvation by Chriſt, in whoſe name the ſpirit of divination was caſt out of the maid, and whom they took for a new deity; and ſo concluded that the Apoſtle and his company were introducing a new religious law or cuſtom, the worſhip of another God: which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to obſerve, being Romans; for the city of Philippi was a Roman colony, and ſo the inhabitants of it called themſelves Romans; or theſe men might be ſtrictly ſuch, who were tranſplanted hither; and with the Romans, it was not lawful to receive, obſerve, and worſhip, a new or ſtrange deity, without the decree of the ſenate [l].

Ver. 22. And the multitude roſe up together againſt them, &c.] The croud of people that were gathered together in the court on this occaſion; being no doubt ſpirited up by the proprietors of the maid, out of whom the ſpirit of divination was caſt, and encouraged by the rulers, and being provoked at the hearing of unlawful cuſtoms being introduced among them: and the magiſtrates rent off their cloaths; not their own cloaths, as did the high-prieſt, Mark xiv. 63. but the cloaths of Paul and Silas; and ſo reads the Arabic verſion, and the rulers rent the garments of both of them; which removes the ambiguity in the words; for at the whipping or beating of malefactors, they did not pluck off their garments, but rent and tore them off, and ſo whipped or beat them naked: this was the cuſtom with the Jews [m]; it is aſked, "how did they whip any one? his hands are bound to a pillar here and there, and the miniſter of the ſynagogue (or the executioner) takes hold of his cloaths; and if they are rent, they are rent, and if they are ripped, they are ripped, (be it as it will) until he has made his breaſt bare, &c." And in like manner the Lictores, or executioners among the Romans, uſed to tear the garments of malefactors, when they beat them; this the magiſtrates themſelves did here, unleſs they may be ſaid to do it, becauſe they ordered it to be done, as follows: and commanded to beat them; that is, with rods: this was one of the three times, the Apoſtle was beat in this manner, 2 Cor. xi. 25. and of this ſhameful treatment at Philippi, he makes mention in 1 Theſſ. ii. 2.

Ver. 23. And when they had laid many ſtripes upon them, &c.] Even above meaſure, as in 2 Cor. xi. 23. They caſt them into priſon; deſigning doubtleſs to inflict ſome greater puniſhment upon them, after they had further examined into their affairs: charging the goaler to keep them ſafely; ſuggeſting, that he muſt be anſwerable for them, ſhould they eſcape, either through his favour or his negligence; and they might rather give this ſtrict charge, becauſe they perceived that they were uncommon men, poſſeſſed of a ſtrange power, which they had exerted in the caſting out of the evil ſpirit, which might come to their knowledge by ſome means or other; they might look upon them to be a ſort of magicians, and therefore were to be narrowly watched, that they did not make uſe of their art to deliver themſelves; however, they judged it neceſſary to uſe all the precautions they could, to ſecure them: ſome have thought this goaler to be the ſame with Stephanas, 1 Cor. i. 16. but this is not certain, nor very probable.

Ver. 24. Who having received ſuch a charge, &c.] So ſtrict an one from the magiſtrates, was doubly careful and diligent: thruſt them into the inner priſon; the innermoſt part of it, the loweſt or furtheſt part of the priſon; ſo that there were the more doors, bolts and bars, to break open, and paſs through, ſhould they attempt to make their eſcape: and made their feet faſt in the ſtocks; or wood, a wooden machine, in which the feet of priſoners were put for ſecurity, and which we call the ſtocks; ſome ſay it was ſuch an one, in which the neck as well as the feet were put, and ſo might be the ſame with our pillory.

Ver. 25. And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, &c.] When others were aſleep, and all things were ſtill and quiet; ſee Pſal. cxix. 62. and they prayed doubtleſs for themſelves, for their deliverance in God's time and way, and for ſupport under their preſent afflictions; and for ſupplies of grace, to enable them to bear them with patience and chearfulneſs, until an iſſue was put to them; and for their enemies, and particularly it may be for the goaler, who had uſed them ſo ill; and for the churches of Chriſt, for all the ſaints, and for the ſpread and ſucceſs of the Goſpel: and ſang praiſes unto God; or ſang an hymn to God, very likely one of David's pſalms, or hymns: for the book of pſalms is a book of hymns, and ſeveral of the pſalms are particularly called hymns; this ſhewed not only that they were chearful, notwithſtanding the ſtripes that were laid upon them, and though their feet were made faſt in the ſtocks, and they were in the innermoſt priſon, in a moſt loathſome and uncomfortable condition; and though they might be in expectation of greater puniſhment, and of death itſelf; but alſo that they were thankful and glorified God, who had counted them worthy to ſuffer for his name ſake: and the priſoners heard them; for it ſeems there were other priſoners beſides them, and who were in the outer priſon: and from hence it appears, that their prayer was not merely mental; nor was their ſinging praiſes, only a making melody in their hearts, but were both vocal; and it might be chiefly for the ſake of the priſoners, that they both prayed and praiſed in this manner, that they might hear and be converted; or at leaſt be convicted of the goodneſs of the cauſe, for which the Apoſtles ſuffered.

Ver. 26. And ſuddenly there was a great earthquake, &c.] An extraordinary and unuſual one; which did not ariſe from natural cauſes, from wind being pent up in the earth, but from the prayers and praiſes of the ſaints, going up to heaven; when God was pleaſed to teſtify his preſence and power this way; and the effects which followed upon this earthquake, ſhew it to be a ſupernatural one: ſo that the foundations of the priſon were ſhaken; not the roof and walls only, as is common in earthquakes, but the very foundation alſo; and yet the edifice was not thrown down, as is uſual when the foundation is ſhaken: and immediately all the doors were opened; both of the outer and inner priſons, which is another unuſual effect of earthquakes: and every one's bands were looſed; not only the bands of Paul and Silas, but of the reſt of the priſoners; tho' the Arabic verſion reads, all the fetters and bands of both were looſed, referring it only to Paul and Silas; this circumſtance ſhows alſo, that the earthquake was miraculous, for when was it ever known that ſuch an effect ever followed one?

Ver. 27. And the keeper of the priſon awaking out of his ſleep, &c.] Not ſo much by the loud voices of Paul and Silas, as by the uncommon motion of the earth, which ſo ſhook him, as thoroughly to awake him: and ſeeing the priſon doors open; which was the firſt thing in his fright he was looking after, and careful of, and which he might perceive, though it was midnight, and though as yet he had no light: he drew out his ſword; from its ſcabbard, which was girt about him; for it may be he had ſlept with his cloaths on, and his ſword girt to him; or if he had put on his cloaths upon awaking, he had alſo girt himſelf with his ſword: and would have killed himſelf, ſuppoſing that the priſoners had been fled; eſpecially Paul and Silas, concerning whom he had received ſuch a ſtrict charge from the magiſtrates; and he knew that according to law, he muſt ſuffer the ſame puniſhment that was deſigned for them; and therefore in fear of the magiſtrates, and what they would inflict upon him, he was juſt going to deſtroy himſelf.

[m] Miſn. Maccot, c. 3. §. 12. & Maimon. Hilchot Sanhedrin,

Ver. 28. But Paul cried with a loud voice, &c.] Knowing by divine revelation, what the gaoler was about to do; though being in the innermoſt priſon, in a dark dungeon, he could not ſee him, unleſs it can be thought, that the opening of the doors had let in light ſufficient; and it may be alſo, that he knew in the ſame way, what deſigns of grace God had towards this man and his family: ſaying, do thyſelf no harm; which is an inſtance of great tenderneſs, humanity, and love, to one that had uſed him and his companion with ſo much ſeverity and cruelty: for we are all here; not only Paul and Silas, but the reſt of the priſoners alſo; who either being ſo intent upon hearing the prayers and praiſes of the Apoſtles, or ſo terrified with the earthquake, that they took no notice of their bands being looſed, and ſo never thought or attempted to make their eſcape; and as for Paul and Silas, all this happened to them, not for their deliverance in this way, as in the caſe of Peter, but to ſhow the power of God, what he could do, and his preſence with his ſervants.

Ver. 29. Then he called for a light, &c.] Or lights; he ordered his ſervants to bring in ſome candles; the Syriac verſion renders it, he lighted a light for himſelf; and the Ethiopic verſion, he brought a light: whilſt he was under the influence of ſatan, and going about a work of darkneſs, namely, to deſtroy himſelf, he was in no concern for a light; but when he was delivered from the temptation and ſnare, he calls for light: and ſprang in; leaped in at once, in all haſte, into the inner priſon: and came trembling; not as before, becauſe of the priſoners and their eſcape; nor merely or ſo much on account of the earthquake, though the terror of that might not be as yet over; but chiefly through the horror of his conſcience, and the dreadful ſenſe he had of himſelf as a ſinner, and of his loſt ſtate and condition by nature; the law had entered into his conſcience, and had worked wrath there; the Spirit of God had convinced him of his ſin and miſery, and there was a fearful looking for of fiery indignation in him: and fell down before Paul and Silas; not in a way of religious adoration, for they would never have admitted that; but in token of civil reſpect unto them, and of his great veneration for them, as was the manner of the eaſtern people: the Syriac verſion renders it, he fell down at their feet, and ſo in Veleſius's readings; at thoſe feet, which he had before made faſt in the ſtocks: a ſtrange change and ſudden alteration this! what is it that almighty power and efficacious grace cannot do?

Ver. 30. And brought them out, &c.] Of the inner priſon, to ſome part of the priſon that was more free and open: and ſaid, Sirs, what muſt I do to be ſaved? he treats them with great reverence now, and addreſſes them under a title and character of honour and reſpect; whom but a few hours ago, he deſpiſed and abhorred, and perhaps knew no name bad enough for them; he now ſaw himſelf loſt and periſhing, and wanted their inſtructions, advice, and aſſiſtance; and as moſt perſons under firſt awakenings are, ſo he was, upon the foot of works; thinking he muſt do ſomething to procure his ſalvation, and deſires to know what it was he muſt do, that he might ſet about it directly; and it may be he had heard what the damſel poſſeſſed with a ſpirit of divination, had frequently ſaid of Paul and Silas, that they were the ſervants of the moſt high God, and ſhewed unto men the way of ſalvation, ver. 17. and therefore he deſires that they would acquaint him with it: his language ſhows he was in earneſt, and expreſſes great eagerneſs, importunity, and haſte.

Ver. 31. And they ſaid, believe in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] Not with a bare hiſtorical faith, as only to believe that he was the Son of God, and the Meſſiah, and that he was come in the fleſh, and had ſuffered, and died, and roſe again, and was now in heaven at the right-hand of God, and would come again to judge both quick and dead, for there may be ſuch a faith and no ſalvation; but ſo as to look unto him alone for life and ſalvation, to rely upon him, and truſt in him; to commit himſelf, and the care of his immortal ſoul unto him, and to expect peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and eternal life from him; the anſwer is much the ſame our Lord returned to the Jews, when they aſked, though not with the ſame affection and ſincerity as this man, what they muſt do to work the works of God, John vi. 28, 29. And thou ſhalt be ſaved; from ſin, and all its miſerable effects and conſequences; from the curſes of the law, from the power of ſatan, from the evil of the world, from the wrath of God, hell and damnation: this is to be underſtood, of a ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation; for it is ſaid, after that the goaler was enquiring about it, being terrified in his conſcience with a ſenſe of ſin and wrath; and between believing in Chriſt, and being ſaved with an everlaſting ſalvation, there is a ſtrict and inſeparable connexion, Mark xvi. 16. though not faith, but Chriſt is the cauſe and author of ſalvation; faith ſpies ſalvation in Chriſt, goes to him for it, receives it from him, and believes unto it: and thy houſe; or family, provided they believe in Chriſt alſo, as they did, ver. 34. or otherwiſe there can be no ſalvation, for he that believeth not ſhall be damned.

Ver. 32. And they ſpake unto him the word of the Lord, &c.] That is, the Goſpel; which comes from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as the author of it; and is concerning him, as the ſubject matter of it, and is what was preached by himſelf when on earth; this is the word, which is called the word of ſalvation, the word of reconciliation and peace, the word of life, the word of righteouſneſs, and the word of faith; becauſe it publiſhes ſalvation by Chriſt, peace and reconciliation by his blood, life by his death, his righteouſneſs for juſtification, and propoſes him as the object of faith, and encourages ſouls to believe in him; and faith comes by it, and it contains things to be believed: and this word Paul and Silas ſpake to the goaler, and opened and explained it to him for his comfort, and for the encouragement of his faith in Chriſt: and to all that were in his houſe; his whole family, who were all alarmed by the earthquake, and were got together into the priſon; for it ſeems as if after this, the gaoler had them into his dwelling-houſe, ver. 34. Theſe appear to be adult perſons, ſuch as were capable of having the word of the Lord ſpoken to them, and of hearing it, ſo as to believe in it, and rejoice at it, for faith came to them by hearing.

Ver. 33. And he took them the ſame hour of the night, &c.] After they had done preaching to him, and to his family: and waſhed their ſtripes; which were very many and heavy, and whereby they were covered with blood; and which by this time began to feſter, and to produce corrupt matter; and all this in a pool, which Grotius ſuppoſes was within the bounds of the priſon, he waſhed off from them: his faith worked by love, and ſhewed itſelf in fruits of charity and righteouſneſs, and in obedience to Chriſt, and ſubmiſſion to his ordinance, as follows: and was baptized, he and all his ſtraightway; by immerſion, that being the only way in which baptiſm was adminiſtered, or can be, ſo as to be called a baptiſm: and which might be adminiſtered, either in the pool, which Grotius ſuppoſes to have been in the priſon; or in the river near the city, where the oratory was, ver. 13. and it is no unreaſonable thought to ſuppoſe, that they might go out of the priſon thither, and adminiſter the ordinance, and return to the priſon again before morning, unobſerved by any; and after that, enter into the gaoler's houſe and be refreſhed, as in the following verſe: and as this inſtance does not at all help the cauſe of ſprinkling, ſo neither the baptiſm of infants; for as the gaoler's family were baptized as well as he, ſo they had the word of the Lord ſpoken to them as well as he, and believed as well as he, and rejoiced as he did; all which cannot be ſaid of infants: and beſides, it muſt be proved that he had infants in his houſe, and that theſe were taken out of their beds in the middle of the night, and baptized by Paul, e'er the inſtance can be thought to be of any ſervice to infant baptiſm.

Ver. 34. And when he had brought them into his houſe, &c.] After he and his family had been baptized, either in the pool in the priſon, or in the river near the city of Philippi: he ſet meat before them; he ſpread a table for them, with proviſions to refreſh them after all their fatigue; partly by ſtripes and impriſonment, partly by the exerciſes of prayer and praiſe, and alſo by the miniſtration of the word, and the adminiſtration of the ordinance of baptiſm to the gaoler and his family: and rejoiced, believing in God with all his houſe; he and his rejoiced at the good news, of peace and pardon, righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation, which the Goſpel brought unto them; they rejoiced in Chriſt Jeſus, in his perſon, offices, grace and righteouſneſs; believing in him who is truly and properly God, they were filled with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory; with a joy that always attends true faith, and which a ſtranger intermeddles not with; and they rejoiced that they were admitted to the ordinance of Chriſt, and were among his baptized followers; ſo the eunuch after baptiſm, went on his way rejoicing, ch. viii. 39.

Ver. 35. And when it was day, &c.] In one copy Beza ſays, theſe words are added, "the magiſtrates came together in one place in the court, "and remembring the earthquake that was made, "they were afraid, and ſent the ſerjeants;" but they ſeem to be no other than a Gloſs, which crept into the text; however, it ſeems reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that in the morning the magiſtrates met together, to conſider what was further to be done with Paul and Silas; when upon cooler thoughts, they judged it beſt to be content with what puniſhment they had inflicted on them, and diſmiſs them; and if they had felt any thing of the earthquake, or had heard of it in the priſon, and of the converts that had been made there, they might be the more induced to let them go: the magiſtrates ſent the ſergeants, ſaying, let theſe men go; the Arabic verſion reads, theſe two men; that is, Paul and Silas: who theſe ſergeants were, is not very certain; they ſeem to be ſo called in the Greek language, from their carrying rods, or little ſtaves in their hands, and were a ſort of apparitors; by theſe the magiſtrates ſent orders, either by word of mouth, or in writing, to the gaoler, to let Paul and Silas out of priſon, and ſet them at liberty, to go where they would; the ſame power that ſhook the foundations of the priſon, and looſed the bands of the priſoners, wrought upon the hearts of the magiſtrates, to let the Apoſtles go free.

Ver. 36. And the keeper of the priſon told this ſaying to Paul, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion adds, and to Silas; this was the ſame perſon with the gaoler, whom Paul had baptized; and indeed, the ſame word is here uſed, though a little differently rendered, who no doubt reported this meſſage to Paul with great joy: the magiſtrates have ſent to let you go; they have ſent an order to let you out of priſon: now therefore depart, and go in peace; which expreſſes the gaoler's pleaſure of mind, and joy of heart, in executing his orders; and his ſincere and hearty wiſhes for peace and proſperity to go along with them wherever they went, who had been inſtrumental of ſo much good to him and his family.

Ver. 37. But Paul ſaid unto them, &c.] The ſergeants, who were preſent when the gaoler reported to Paul the meſſage, they came with from the magiſtrates; though the Syriac verſion reads in the ſingular number, Paul ſaid to him, to the gaoler: they have beaten us openly uncondemned, being Romans, and have caſt us into priſon; what the magiſtrates ordered to be done to them, is reckoned all one as if they had done it themſelves; and which was done openly, before all the people, in the moſt publick manner; to their great reproach, being put to open ſhame, as if they had been the moſt notorious malefactors living; when they were uncondemned, had done nothing worthy of condemnation, being innocent and without fault, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions render the word; nor was their cauſe heard, or they ſuffered to make any defence for themſelves; and what was an aggravation of all this is, that this was done in a Roman colony, and by Roman magiſtrates; and to perſons that were Romans, at leaſt one of them, Paul, who was of the city of Tarſus: for according to the Porcian and Sempronian laws, a Roman citizen might neither be bound nor beaten[n]; but theſe magiſtrates, not content to beat Paul and Silas, without knowing the truth of their caſe, had caſt them into priſon as malefactors, and for further puniſhment: and now do they thruſt us out privily? nay, verily; or ſo it ſhall not be: this ſhows, that the Apoſtle was acquainted with the Roman laws, as well as with the rites and cuſtoms of the Jews; and acted the wiſe and prudent, as well as the honeſt and harmleſs part; and this he did, not ſo much for the honour of the Roman name, as for the honour of the chriſtian name; for he conſidered, that ſhould he and his companion go out of the priſon in ſuch a private manner, it might be taken for granted, that they had been guilty of ſome notorious offence, and had juſtly ſuffered the puniſhment of the law for it, which would have been a reproach to chriſtianity, and a ſcandal to the Goſpel: wherefore the Apoſtle refuſes to go out in this manner, adding, but let them come themſelves, and fetch us out; that by ſo doing, they might own the illegality of their proceedings, and declare the innocence of the Apoſtles.

Ver. 38. And the ſergeants told theſe words unto the magiſtrates, &c.] They returned to them, and acquainted them with what the priſoners ſaid: and they feared when they heard that they were Romans; they were not concerned for the injury they had done them; nor for the injuſtice and cruelty they had been guilty of; nor did they fear the wrath of God, and a future judgment; but they were put into a pannick, when they found the men they had ſo ill uſed were Romans; leſt they ſhould be called to an account by the Roman ſenate, and be found guilty, and have their places taken away from them, and their perſons puniſhed.
